

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

P23.6
S4311 pc

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN AND CO.
ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

no plate

EDITOR'S NOTE

When Dr. Rolfe edited The Poetical Works of Sir Walter Scott, Baronet, in 1867, he made a critical examination of the several texts, with the result of detecting many errors and inconsistencies in the current editions. The text which he established may be regarded as accurate and trustworthy. It has been followed so far as it goes, in the present Cambridge Edition. Dr. Rolfe, however, in preparing a volume which, by calling in the aid of new and faithful illustrations, should appeal through its beauty and choiceness to lovers of Scott who might be supposed to know their author and to desire a fit and convenient edition of his works. He excluded purposely a number of less important poems, and grouped the minor poems in sections following the series of long narrative poems. At the same time he added a body of notes and prefaces, drawn from Scott's own editions, in accordance with the general plan of the Cambridge series, the present editor has undertaken to give the entire body of Sir Walter's poetry and to arrange it in as close an approach to strict chronological order as was possible without injury. He has prefaced each poem or group of poems with notes describing the origin or circumstance of composition, and in these notes has included Scott's introductions, and such references as occur in Lockhart, in Scott's Letters, in his Journal. In this way he has undertaken to separate the history of a poem from the explication of its parts.

In the latter, he has had recourse for the most part in the Notes and Illustrations to the notes written and gathered by Scott for his collective edition. Scott's great interest in everything Scottish led him to great lengths in his annotation, especially to the accumulation of a great deal of antiquarian and sometimes remote material. He forgot his poem and even now and then apparently misquoted itself as he heaped up illustrations. The editor therefore has found it expedient, while retaining Scott's own notes, to omit some of the discursive portions drawn from other writers. The annotation, moreover, is made in one respect more convenient and compact by the explanation of rare and local words in a gloss which is an enlargement of the one accompanying Dr. Rolfe's volume.

In the Biographical Sketch, the Editor has had in view more especially that period of Scott's life which closed with the great poetical period, since it is Scott as poet who is especially under consideration. He was glad to avail himself of the admirable and suggestive interpretation of the poet's life made by Ruskin in Barrikyera.

CAMBRIDGE, March, 1900.

7839C

TABLE OF CONTENTS

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH . . . . .	xi	CANTO FIFTH . . . . .	68
TWO BALLADS FROM THE GERMAN OF BURGER.		CANTO SIXTH . . . . .	74
WILLIAM AND HELEN . . . . .	1	MARMION: A TALE OF FLODDEN FIELD. X
THE WILD HUNTSMAN . . . . .	5	INTRODUCTORY NOTE . . . . .	81
EARLY BALLADS AND LYRICS.		INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FIRST . . . . .	88
THE VIOLET . . . . .	7	CANTO FIRST: THE CASTLE . . . . .	91
TO A LADY WITH FLOWERS FROM A ROMAN WALL . . . . .	8	INTRODUCTION TO CANTO SECOND . . . . .	97
THE ERL-KING, FROM THE GERMAN OF GOETHE . . . . .	8	CANTO SECOND: THE CONVENT . . . . .	100
WAR-SONG OF THE ROYAL EDINBURGH LIGHT DRAGOONS . . . . .	9	INTRODUCTION TO CANTO THIRD . . . . .	106
SONG FROM 'GOETZ VON BERLICH- INGEN' . . . . .	9	CANTO THIRD: THE HOSTEL, OR INN . . . . .	109
SONGS FROM 'THE HOUSE OF ASPEN.'		INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FOURTH . . . . .	115
I. 'JOY TO THE VICTORS, THE SONS OF OLD ASPEN' . . . . .	10	CANTO FOURTH: THE CAMP . . . . .	117
II. 'SWEET SHONE THE SUN ON THE FAIR LAKE OF TORO' . . . . .	10	INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FIFTH . . . . .	124
III. RHEIN-WEIN LIED . . . . .	11	CANTO FIFTH: THE COURT . . . . .	126
GLENFINLAS, OR LORD RONALD'S CORONACH . . . . .	11	INTRODUCTION TO CANTO SIXTH . . . . .	137
X THE EVE OF ST. JOHN . . . . .	14	CANTO SIXTH: THE BATTLE . . . . .	140
THE GRAY BROTHER . . . . .	17	L'ENVOY . . . . .	151
THE FIRE-KING . . . . .	19	THE LADY OF THE LAKE.
BOTHWELL CASTLE . . . . .	22	INTRODUCTORY NOTE . . . . .	152
THE SHEPHERD'S TALE . . . . .	23	CANTO FIRST: THE CHASE . . . . .	156
CHEVIOT . . . . .	25	CANTO SECOND: THE ISLAND . . . . .	164
FREDERICK AND ALICE . . . . .	25	CANTO THIRD: THE GATHERING . . . . .	173
CARTOW CASTLE . . . . .	26	CANTO FOURTH: THE PROPHECY . . . . .	181
THE REIVER'S WEDDING . . . . .	29	CANTO FIFTH: THE COMBAT . . . . .	190
CHRISTIE'S WILL . . . . .	30	CANTO SIXTH: THE GUARD-ROOM . . . . .	199
THOMAS THE RHYMER . . . . .	32	THE VISION OF DON RODERICK.
THE BARD'S INCANTATION . . . . .	37	INTRODUCTORY NOTE . . . . .	208
HELLVELLYN . . . . .	37	INTRODUCTION . . . . .	210
THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.		THE VISION OF DON RODERICK . . . . .	212
INTRODUCTORY NOTE . . . . .	39	CONCLUSION . . . . .	223
INTRODUCTION . . . . .	46	ROKEBY. X
CANTO FIRST . . . . .	47	INTRODUCTORY NOTE . . . . .	226
CANTO SECOND . . . . .	51	CANTO FIRST . . . . .	231
CANTO THIRD . . . . .	57	CANTO SECOND . . . . .	239
CANTO FOURTH . . . . .	61	CANTO THIRD . . . . .	246
		CANTO FOURTH . . . . .	255
		CANTO FIFTH . . . . .	263
		CANTO SIXTH . . . . .	273
		THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMALN.
		INTRODUCTORY NOTE . . . . .	283
		INTRODUCTION . . . . .	287

Walton

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

It is a happy fortune that made the two Scotsmen who stand as the highest spiritual representatives of their race to bear names so significant as Burns and Scott. The little streams that catch the sunlight as they spring down the slopes of the Scottish hills are as free in their nature and as limpid in their depths as are the songs with which Burns has given perennial freshness to Scottish life. And it was singularly fortunate that the man of all men who was to interpret his country to the world should himself have been named Scott. If we could reproduce earlier conditions, philologists in some future era of the world's history might be querying whether the little country of the north was named Scotland from the native poet, Walter Scott, or the poet took his name from the country of which he sang.

Walter Scott was born 15 August, 1771, in his father's house at the head of the College Wynd, Edinburgh. He was of the purest Border race. Walter Scott — Wat of Harden — was the grandfather of his father's grandfather and was married to Mary Scott, the Flower of Yarrow, two personages whom Sir Walter honored with more than one reference in his verse. Wat of Harden's eldest son was Sir William Scott, a stout Jacobite who saved his life when making an unsuccessful foray on the lands of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, by accepting the alternative of marrying the plainest of the daughters of Sir Gideon, a marriage which by no means turned out ill, but seems to have created a genuine alliance between the two houses.

The third son of Sir William was Walter Scott, the first laird of Raeburn. He and his wife were willing converts to the doctrines of George Fox, the Quaker apostle, but the elder brother, a sturdy Jacobite, would have no such nonsense in the family, and caused Walter and his wife to be clapped into prison and their children educated apart from such pestilential associations as the peace-loving, non-resisting Friends. So effective was the procedure that Walter's son Walter finally intrigued in the cause of the exiled Stuarts, lost pretty much all he had in the world, even his head being in great jeopardy, and wore his beard unclipped to the day of his death under vow that no razor should touch it till the return of the Stuarts, and so got the name of Beardie; vows, razors, and beards always appear to have had some occult connection. In the Introduction to the sixth canto of Marmion he half puts on Beardie's coat as he writes to Richard Heber. Beardie was Scott's great-grandfather. His grandfather was Beardie's second son Robert Scott of Sandy-Knowe, and as this ancestor came to have a large part in Scott's early life, it is worth while to attend to Sir Walter's own narrative concerning him.

'My grandfather,' he writes, in the effective bit of autobiography preserved by Lockhart, 'was originally bred to the sea; but, being shipwrecked near Dundee in his trial voyage, he took such a sincere dislike to that element that he could not be persuaded to a second attempt. This occasioned a quarrel between him and his father, who left him to shift for himself. Robert was one of those active spirits to whom this was no misfortune. He turned Whig upon the spot, and fairly abjured his father's politics, and his learned poverty. His chief and relative, Mr. Scott of Harden, gave him a lease of the farm of Sandy-Knowe, comprehending the rocks in the centre of which Smailholm or Sandy-Knowe tower is situated. He took for his shepherd an old man called Hogg, who willingly lent him, out of respect to his family, his whole savings, about £30, to stock the new farm. With this sum, which it seems was at the time sufficient for the purpose, the master and servant set off to purchase a stock of sheep at Whitsun-Tryste, a fair held on a hill near Wooler in Northumberland. The old shepherd went carefully from drove to drove, till he found a hirsle likely to answer their purpose, and then returned to tell his master to come up and conclude the bargain. But what was his surprise to see him galloping a mettled hunter about the race-course, and to find he had expended the whole stock in this extraordinary purchase!—Moses's bargain of green spectacles did not strike more dismay into the Vicar of Wakefield's family than my grandfather's rashness into the poor old shepherd. The thing, however, was irretrievable, and they returned without the sheep. In the course of a few days, however, my grandfather, who was one of the best horsemen of his time, attended John Scott of Harden's hounds on this same horse, and displayed him to such advantage that he sold him for double the original price. The farm was now stocked in earnest; and the rest of my grandfather's career was that of successful industry. He was one of the first who were active in the cattle-trade, afterward carried to such extent between the Highlands of Scotland and the leading counties in England, and by his droving transactions acquired a considerable sum of money. He was a man of middle stature, extremely active, quick, keen, and fiery in his temper, stubbornly honest, and so distinguished for his skill in country matters that he was the general referee in all points of dispute which occurred in the neighborhood. His birth being admitted as gentle, gave him access to the best society in the county, and his dexterity in country sports, particularly hunting, made him an acceptable companion in the field as well as at the table.

This Robert Scott of Sandy-Knowe married Barbara Haliburton, who brought to her husband that part of Dryburgh which included the ruined Abbey. By a misfortune in the family of Barbara Scott, this property was sold, yet the right of burial remained, and was, as we shall see, availed of by Scott himself. The eldest of the large family of Robert and Barbara Scott was Walter the father of Walter. He was educated to the profession of a Writer to the Signet, which is Scots equivalent for attorney. 'He had a zeal for his clients,' writes his son, 'which was almost ludicrous: far from coldly discharging the duties of his employment toward them, he thought for them, felt for their honor as for his own, and rather risked disobliging them than neglecting anything to which he conceived their duty bound them.' For the rest, he was a religious man of the stricter sort, a steady friend to freedom, yet holding fast by the monarchical element, which he thought somewhat jeopardized, a great stickler for etiquette in all the social forms, and a most hearty host. He married Anne, the daughter of Dr. John Rutherford, professor of medicine in the University of Edinburgh.

Such was the inheritance with which Walter Scott came into the world, and at every step one counts a strong strain of that Scottish temper which, twisted and knotted in generations of hardihood, issues in a robust nature, delighting in the hunt and the free coursing over hill and plain, and finding in the stern country a meet nurse for a poetic child. But the conditions of life which developed an inherited power are none the less interesting to observe. His mother could not nurse him, and his first nurse had consumption. One after another of the little family of which he was a member had died in the close air of the wynd, and Walter was snatched from a like end by the wisdom of his father, who moved his household to a meadow district sloping to the south from the old town; but when he was eighteen months old a childish fever cost the boy the full use of his right leg, and all his life long he limped, — a sorry privation to so outdoor a nature; yet as the loss or disability of a member seems to have the effect on resolute persons of making them do the very things for which these members, one would say, were indispensable, making that armless man paint and blind men watch bees, so Scott became mountain climber and bold dragoon.

The enfeeblement which came led Dr. Rutherford, his mother's father, to send the child to his other grandfather's farm at Sandy-Knowe, and there, with some intervals, he lived as a shepherd's child might live for five years, from 1774 to 1779; from three years old, that is, till eight. Here he came into the hands of the housekeeper, old Alison Wilson, whom he has immortalized, even to the name, in his tale of Old Mortality. His grandfather, meanwhile, the rugged cattle-dealer, took him in hand with a treatment which brought the little fellow into very close contact with nature. 'Among the odd remedies recurred to to aid my lameness,' says Scott in his autobiography, 'some one had recommended that so often as a sheep was killed for the use of the family, I should be snipped, and swathed up in the skin, warm as it was flayed from the carcase of the animal. In this Tartar-like habitment I well remember lying upon the floor of the little parlor in the farm-house, while my grandfather, a venerable old man with white hair, used every excitement to make me try to crawl.' Whatever may have been the virtue in this contagion, there can be no hesitation in applauding the brave treatment which later was employed. When he was in his fourth year and it was thought best to try the waters of Bath, Walter had begun to show the results of his life at Sandy-Knowe.

'My health,' he says, 'was by this time a good deal confirmed by the country air, and the influence of that imperceptible and unfatiguing exercise to which the good sense of my grandfather had subjected me; for when the day was fine, I was usually carried out and laid down beside the old shepherd, among the crags or rocks round which he fed his sheep. The impatience of a child soon inclined me to struggle with my infirmity, and I began by degrees to stand, to walk, and to run. Although the limb affected was much shrunk and contracted, my general health, which was of more importance, was much strengthened by being frequently in the open air, and, in a word, I, who in a city had probably been condemned to hopeless and helpless decrepitude, was now a healthy, high-spirited, and, my lameness apart, a sturdy child.' In another place he says that 'he delighted to roll about in the grass all day long in the midst of the flock, and the sort of fellowship he formed with the sheep and lambs impressed his mind with a degree of affectionate feeling towards them which lasted through life.'

The year he spent at Bath left little impression on his mind, save an experience at the theatre when he saw As You Like It, and was so scandalized at the quarrel between Orlando and his brother in the first scene that he screamed, out 'Ain't they brothers?' so sheltered had his little life been thus far from anything which savored of strife in the household. He had a little schooling at Bath, where he was under the watch and ward of his aunt Janet Scott, but at Sandy-Knowe both before his excursion and after his return for three years more, he had a more natural and vital introduction to literature in the tales which he heard from his grandmother, whose own recollections went back to the days of Border raids. Thus he came, in the course of nature, as it were, into possession of an inexhaustible treasury from which later he drew forth things new and old.

The years at Sandy-Knowe were the years of conscious awakening to life, and the early impressions made on his mind were so indelible, that when he first began to put pen to paper it was from the scenes he then had known that the images arose. From these scenes sprang the 'Eve of St. John' and Marmion; near at hand was Dryburgh; the Tweed, which flows through his song like an enchanted stream, flowed with an embracing sweep about Melrose; and the Eildon Hills, the Cheviot range, and the wilderness of Lammermoor all mingled with his childish memories and fancies.

As one reads on in Scott's Autobiography, and in the records and letters which supplement it, the experiences begin to call up scenes in the novels and even familiar names offer themselves. Thus, when in his eighth year he abode for a while with his aunt at Prestonpans, to get the benefit of sea-bathing, he formed a youthful intimacy with an old military veteran, Dalgetty by name, 'who had pitched his tent in that little village, after all his campaigns, subsisting upon an ensign's half-pay, though called by courtesy a Captain. As this old gentleman, who had been in all the German wars, found very few to listen to his tales of military feats, he formed a sort of alliance with me, and I used invariably to attend him for the pleasure of hearing those communications.' At Prestonpans, too, he fell in with George Constable, an old friend of his father, and portrayed him afterward so vividly, while unconscious of it, in the character of Jonathan Oldbuck in The Antiquary as to fix suspicion on himself as the author of the book.

But now, thanks to the generous course of nature-treatment, he was ready for schooling, and a Scottish boy would be a strange lad, indeed, if he were not given over into the hands of the schoolmaster at a tender age; the schoolmaster himself ranking in the social scale with the minister and the doctor. Thanks too to his mother and his aunt Janet, he began his school life with his head well stocked with stories of the real happenings in his own country, and with a portrait gallery of stalwart figures of history and poetry. The boy lived at home in his father's house in Edinburgh, and went to the High School for five years, from 1778 to 1783. Here he learned Latin and tried his own skill at making versified translations of Virgil and Horace, and here he made friendships that lasted through his life. He had, besides, a tutor at home, and he went, as the custom was, to a separate school for writing and arithmetic. At this school young girls also went, and one of them later in life set down in this wise her remembrance of her school-fellow:—

'He attracted the regard and fondness of all his companions, for he was ever rational, fanciful, lively, and possessed of that urbane gentleness of manner which makes its way to the heart. His imagination was constantly at work, and he often so engrossed the attention of those who learnt with him that little could be done—Mr. Morton himself being forced to laugh as much as the little scholars at the odd turns and devices he fell upon; for he did nothing in the ordinary way, but for example, even when he wanted ink to his pen, would get up some ludicrous story about sending his doggie to the mill again. He used also to interest us in a more serious way, by telling us the visions, as he called them, which he had lying alone on the floor or sofa, when kept from going to church on a Sunday by ill health. Child as I was, I could not help being highly delighted with his description of the glories he had seen—his misty and sublime sketches of the regions above, which he had visited in his trances. Recollecting these descriptions, radiant and not gloomy as they were, I have often thought since that there must have been a bias in his mind to superstition—the marvellous seemed to have such power over him, though the mere offspring of his own imagination, that the expression of his face, habitually that of genuine benevolence, mingled with a shrewd innocent humor, changed greatly while he was speaking of these things, and showed a deep intenseness of feeling, as if he were awed even by his own recital. . . . I may add, that in walking he used always to keep his eyes turned downwards as if thinking, but with a pleasing expression:

ance, as if enjoying his thoughts. Having once known him, it was impossible to forget him.'

Familiar as was the boy's intercourse with companions of his own age, Scott himself lays great emphasis on the affectionate relation he held with his elders. After he died at the High School and before he entered college, he lived for a while, and was frequently visited, with his aunt Janet at Kelso. Here he kept up some acquaintance with the village schoolmaster, who appears to have been the original of Dominie Morton, but he also read voraciously in Spenser and Shakespeare, in the older novelists, and he made the acquaintance of Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry. 'I remember the records in later life, 'the spot where I read these volumes for the first time, beneath a huge platanus-tree, in the ruins of what had been intended for an old-fashioned arbor in the garden. The summer-day sped onward so fast, that notwithstanding the sharp appetite of thirteen, I forgot the hour of dinner, was sought for with difficulty, and was found still entranced in my intellectual banquet. To read and to remember in this instance the same thing, and henceforth I overwhelmed my school-fellows, who would hearken to me with tragical recitations from the ballads of Bishop

Among these school-fellows was James Ballantyne, so closely identified with his fortunes. 'He soon discovered,' says Ballantyne in a reminiscence, 'that I was as fond of listening as he himself was of relating; and I remembered it was a thing of daily occurrence, that after he had made himself master of his own lesson, I, alas! being still to seek in mine, he used to whisper to me: "come, slink over beside me, Jamie, I'll tell you a story."' And stories in abundance he afterward told to the listening

Sandy-Knowe nature had stolen into his mind, as well as sent her healing messages to his body, at Kelso he entered upon that hearty, enthusiastic love of natural beauty, especially of the mingling of man's deeds with nature's elements, which glows through his poems and his novels. 'The meeting,' there, he says, 'of two superb rivers, the Tweed and the Teviot, both renowned in song — the ruins of an ancient Abbey — the distant vestiges of Roxburgh Castle — the modern mansion of Fleurs, which is so calculated to combine the ideas of ancient baronial grandeur with those of modern taste in themselves objects of the first class; yet are so mixed, united, and melted among each other beauties of a less prominent description, that they harmonize into one picture, and please rather by unison than by concord. I believe I have written abundantly upon this subject, but it is fitter for the pencil than the pen. The romantic character, which I have described as predominating in any mind, naturally rested upon and identified themselves with these grand features of the landscape around me; and the real incidents, or traditional legends connected with many of them, gave to my imagination a sort of intense impression of reverence, which at times made my heart feel for its bosom. From this time the love of natural beauty, more especially when connected with ancient ruins, or remains of our fathers' piety or splendor, became with me an insatiable passion, which if circumstances had permitted, I would willingly have indulged by travelling over half the globe.'

In 1783, when he was twelve years old, he entered college at Edinburgh, after the manner of Scottish boys, and had three years of college life, such as it was, for he let himself sink out of knowledge, kept up a smattering only of Latin, heard a little philosophy from Dugald Stewart, and attended a class in history. His health was not confined, but he had recourse more than once to the healing of Kelso, and by the time he was sixteen and had done with college, he was poorly enough equipped with learning. But the flame of poetry and romance which had been kindled burned steadily within him and was fed with large draughts from literature, with delightfully free renderings amongst his chosen friends, and with now and then little exercises with his pen. It is, however, noticeable throughout the formative period of Scott's life, how little he was affected with the cacoethes scribendi. He had the healthier appetite which is appeased though never satiated with literature, and the natural gift which finds expression in improvised storytelling, or the free recital of what one has read. A friend recalling the delightful Saturday excursions to Salisbury Crags, Arthur's Seat, or Blackford Hill, when they carried books from the circulating library to read on the rocks in the intervals of hardy climbing, adds: 'After we had continued this practice of reading for two years or more together, he proposed that we should recite to each other alternately such adventures of knight-errants as we could ourselves contrive; and we continued to do so a long while. He found no difficulty in it, and used to recite for half an hour or more at a time, while I seldom continued half that space. The stories we told were, as Sir Walter has said, interminable — for we were unwilling to have any of our favorite knights killed. Our passion for romance led us to learn Italian together; after a time we could both read it with fluency, and we then copied such tales as we had met with in that language, being a continued succession of battles and enchantments. He began early to collect old ballads, and as my mother could repeat a great many, he used to come and learn those she could recite to him. He used to get all the copies of these ballads he could, and select the best.' Scott himself, never given to subjective analysis, repeatedly stood off and looked at himself, boy and man, to sketch the figure in some of one of his characters, and thus he has portrayed with great accuracy in the person of Waverley the course of voluntary study which he had followed up to this time.

He had read, and stored in a memory of uncommon tenacity, much curious, though ill-arranged and miscellaneous information. In English literature he was master of Shakespeare and Milton, of our earlier dramatic authors, of many picturesque and interesting passages from our old historical chronicles, and was particularly well acquainted with Spenser, Drayton, and other poets, who have exercised themselves on romantic fiction, — of all themes the most fascinating to a youthful imagination, before the passions have roused themselves, and demand poetry of a more sentimental description.

In 1786 Scott was apprenticed to his father, and for five years he served his time; five more years were spent in the scanty practice of the law, before the first volume appeared of that long row which, compress it as we may, must always take up a great deal of shelf-room with the complete writings of Sir Walter Scott. These ten years witnessed the strengthening of a nature which, with all the early promise to be traced in the outlines we have drawn, had nothing in it of the forced ripening of a stimulated brain. Scott was twenty-five years old when he printed the thin volume of translations from the German; he was over thirty when he edited the Border Minstrelsy with the first essays into his own field of romantic verse, and he had entered upon the second of man's generations before he wrote The Lay of the Last Minstrel. There is nothing of the prodigy in this. Scott's industry was great. His productiveness was notable, especially when one takes into account the great body of letters and journal-writing, and remembers how popular he was in society; but before he entered on his career as an author, he was simply a full-blooded young Scotsman, delighting in excursions, with a capacious memory in which he stored and assimilated the records in prose and verse of Scottish achievements, an omnivorous reader, and a hearty companion. He was not even regarded as a leading figure in the literary society affected by the ingenious youth of Edinburgh. His essays in literature were not very effective. As he himself humorously puts it, 'I never attempted them unless compelled to do so by the regulations of the society, and then I was like the Lord of Castle Rackrent, who was obliged to cut down a tree to get a few fagots to boil the kettle; for the quantity of ponderous and miscellaneous knowledge which I really possessed on many subjects was not easily condensed, or brought to bear upon the object I wished particularly to become master of. Yet there occurred opportunities when this odd lumber of my brain, especially that which was connected with the recondite parts of history, did me, as Hamlet says, "yeoman's service." My memory of events was like one of the large, old-fashioned stone-cannons of the Turks, — very difficult to load well and discharge, but making a powerful effect when by good chance any object did come within range of its shot.'

It was at the beginning of this period that Scott caught a glimpse of that other great Scotsman, Burns, with whom, though he did not know it, he was to share the bench which Scotland owns on the slope of Parnassus. Quite as notable was the acquaintance which he first made about the same time with the Highlands. Though business for his father took him into this region, his delight in the scenery and the people took precedence of his occupation with affairs, and long after he had forgotten the trivial errands in the interest of the law, he remembered the tales he had heard, and his imagination built upon his experience those characters and scenes which live in the lines of The Lady of the Lake and in the pages of Rob Roy.

The record of Scott's life during the ten years of his legal training and early practice is delightfully varied with narratives of these excursions. The ardor of the young Scotsman carried him into the midst of scenes which were to prove the unfailing quarry from which he was to draw the material for his work of romance and fiction; and when one looks back upon his years of adolescence from the vantage ground of a full knowledge of his career, it would seem as if never did a writer qualify himself for his work of creation in so thorough and direct a fashion. Yet happily this preparation was unpremeditated and unconscious, for the naturalness which is the supreme characteristic of Sir Walter's verse and prose was due to the integrity and simplicity of his nature expending itself during these years of preparation upon occupations and interests which were ends in themselves. His healthy spirit found outlet in this hearty enjoyment of nature and history and human life, with apparently no thought of what use he should put his acquisitions to; it was enough for the time that he should share his enjoyment with his cherished friends, or at the most shape his knowledge into some amateur essay for his literary club.

In the midst of this active, wholesome life he entered upon an experience which made a deep furrow in his soul. It is witness to the sincerity of his first real passion — we may pass over the youthful excitement which gave him a constancy of affection for a girl when he was in his twentieth year — that it should have found expression in the earliest of his own poems, 'The Violet,' have risen into view more than once in direct and indirect reference in poems and novels, and even late in life should have called out a deep note of yearning regret in his journal. The tale of his disappointment in love has been spread before the world recently with sufficient detail in Mr. Adam Scott's book<sup>1</sup> and in Miss Skene's magazine article. As we have intimated, it was an experience of no idle sort, but the outcome is another tribute, if one were needed, to the wholesomeness and freedom from morbid self-love which make Scott in these latter days so eminently the friend in literature of the young and whole hearted. It is a comment on the absence of bitterness in his nature that he did not disengage himself from his kind, but threw himself into the affairs of the hour and organized the Edinburgh Light-horse, of which he became quartermaster, writing a spirited war song, and using his pen thus as an instrument of service, before he was regarded as a man of the pen at all.

<sup>1</sup> The Story of Sir Walter Scott's First Love, with illustrative passages from his Life and Works, and portraits of Sir Walter and Lady Scott, and of Sir William and Lady Forbes. By Adam Scott. Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace, 1896.

There is something very consonant with our largest knowledge of Scott's temper in the incidents which led up to his marriage. The story in its beginning shall be told by Lockhart. 'Riding one day with Fergusson, they met, some miles from Gilsland, a young lady taking the air on horseback, whom neither of them had previously remarked, and whose appearance instantly struck both so much, that they kept her in view until they had satisfied themselves that she also was one of the party at Gilsland [the watering-place where they had halted]. The same evening there was a ball, at which Captain [John] Scott produced himself in his regimentals, and Fergusson also thought proper to be equipped in the uniform of the Edinburgh Volunteers. There was no little rivalry among the young travellers as to who should first get presented to the unknown beauty of the morning's ride; but though both the gentlemen in scarlet had the advantage of being dancing partners, their friend succeeded in handing the fair stranger to supper — and such was his first introduction to Charlotte Margaret Carpenter.

'Without the features of a regular beauty, she was rich in personal attractions; "a form that was fashioned as light as a fay's;" a complexion of the clearest and lightest olive; eyes large, deep-set and dazzling, of the finest Italian brown; and a profusion of silken tresses, black as the raven's wing; her address hovering between the reserve of a pretty young English woman who has not mingled largely in general society, and a certain natural archness and gaiety that suited well with the accompaniment of a French accent. A lovelier vision, as all who remember her in the bloom of her days have assured me, could hardly have been imagined; and from that hour the fate of the young poet was fixed.' The lady was a daughter of a French royalist who had died at the beginning of the revolution, but who had foreseen the approaching perils and had secured a moderate sum in English securities, so that his widow and her family at once fled across the channel and made their home in London. Miss Carpenter at the time was making a summer tour under the direction of a Scotswoman who had been her governess.

Here was a young fellow just emerging from a bitter disappointment, who falls head over ears in love with a sane, piquant girl whose letters, after the acquaintance had ripened swiftly into passion, disclose a capricious, teasing nature. Scott could write to his mother and to Lord Downshire, who was a sort of guardian of Miss Carpenter, in a reasonable manner, but it is clear from his impetuous love-making and the eagerness he showed to bring matters to a head, that he was swept away by his zeal and impatience of all obstacles. It is just possible that in all this there was something of a reaction from the hurt he had suffered, and that Miss Carpenter's winsomeness and little imperious ways blinded him to all considerations of a prudent sort. He was ready at any time to throw aside all other considerations and take his bride to one of the colonies, there to win a place by the sheer force of energy in a new land. But his impetuosity shows the gay spirit with which he threw himself into all his enterprises, and the ardor with which he pursued an end which he thought he must attain. He removed one difficulty after another, and the sudden encounter in July was followed by marriage on the eve of Christmas, 1797. Lady Scott bore Sir Walter four children, who lived and grew to maturity, two sons and two daughters. It is not easy to escape the impression that though she was lively and volatile, there was a certain lack of profound sympathy between husband and wife ; that with all her love of society, Lady Scott was not able to bring to her husband the kind of appreciation of his genius which he found in such friends as Lady Louisa Stuart, the Duchess of Buccleuch, and the Marchioness of Abercorn. But it would be a mistake to infer that there was any lack of loyalty and tenderness on the part of either ; and when Scott, broken in his fortunes, is obliged also to see his wife pass out of his life, the pathos of his utterance shows how intimately their interests had been blended. Yet Scott's own frank expression of the relation between them (see below, p. 152) must stand as indicating the limitations of their union.

The young couple at first set up their home in Edinburgh not far from the residence of Scott's mother and father, who were now feeble and soon to leave them. Scott was shortly appointed sheriff of Selkirk, an office which carried no very heavy duties and a moderate salary. With this and such other property as he and his wife enjoyed, they were able to live modestly and cheerfully, and Scott let slip the practice of his profession, never very congenial to him, and turned with zest to the semi-literary occupations which had begun to engross his attention.

For shortly before his marriage he had made a little venture in the field of books by publishing his translation of a couple of German ballads that were then highly popular, and not a great while after his marriage, he made a similar effort in the same direction by translating Goethe's drama of Goetz von Berlichingen ; but his more zealous pursuit was in the collection of Scottish ballads, and by a natural sequence in patching these where they were broken, and by making very good imitations. Thus, stimulated also by a group of similar collectors, he published in 1802 and 1803 the three volumes of Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, and by the most natural transition took up a theme suggested by his ballad studies and wrought with great celerity The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

The Introductory Note to that poem, including as it does Scott's own Introduction, describes in some detail the origin of the poem and the motives which led Scott to undertake it. With the frankness always characteristic of him in his addresses to the public and his letters to his friends, he spoke as if he was moved chiefly by the need to better his circumstances, and the same confession is very openly made in connection with the writing of Rokeby, when he was full of the notion of realizing his dreams in the establishment of Abbotsford. But it is given to us with our large knowledge of Scott's career to place motives in a more just relation ; and though it is entirely true that Scott wanted money and found his want an incentive to the writing of poems and novels, it is equally true that the whole course of his life up to the time of writing The Lay of the Last Minstrel was a direct preparation for this form of expression, and that his generous enthusiasm and warm imagination found this outlet with a simplicity and directness which explain how truly this writer, though a deliberate maker of books, had yet always that delightful quality which we recognize most surely in the improvisatore. It was his nature to write just such poetry as the free, swinging lines of his long poems.

Before the Lay was completed and published, Scott moved with his little family to Abbotsford, a country farm seven miles from the small town of Selkirk, and having a beautiful setting on the Tweedside with green hills all about. Here he lived as a tenant of the Buccleuch estate for seven of the happiest years of his life. It was here that he wrote the poems preceding Rokeby and here that he began the Waverley, and toned the fragment aside. His income, which, at the beginning of his poetical career, was from all sources about £1000 a year, enabled him to live at ease, and the successive productions gradually augmented his property. Mr. Morritt, one of his closest friends, visited him at

Ashestiel in 1808, and an extract from a memorandum which he gave Lockhart gives a most agreeable picture of the poet in his home.

'There he was the cherished friend and kind neighbor of every middling Selkirkshire yeoman, just as easily as in Edinburgh he was the companion of clever youth and narrative old age in refined society. He carried us one day to Melrose Abbey or Newark; another, to course with mountain greyhounds by Yarrow braes or St. Mary's loch, repeating every ballad or legendary tale connected with the scenery; and on a third, we must all go to a farmer's kirn, or harvest home, to dance with Border lasses on a barn floor, drink whiskey punch, and enter with him into all the gossip and good fellowship of his neighbors, on a complete footing of unrestrained conviviality, equality, and mutual respect. His wife and happy young family were clustered round him, and the cordiality of his reception would have unbent a misanthrope. At this period his conversation was more equal and animated than any man's that I ever knew. It was most characterized by the extreme felicity and fun of his illustrations, drawn from the whole encyclopædia of life and nature, in a style somewhat too exuberant for written narrative, but which to him was natural and spontaneous. A hundred stories, always apposite and often interesting to the mind by strong pathos, or eminently ludicrous, were daily told, which, with many more, have since been transplanted, almost in the same language, into the Waverley Novels and his other writings. These and his recitations of poetry, which can never be forgotten by those who knew him, made up the charm that his boundless memory enabled him to exert to the wonder of the gaping lover of wonders. But equally impressive and powerful was the language of his warm heart, and equally wonderful were the conclusions of his vigorous understanding, to those who could return or appreciate either. Among a number of such recollections, I have seen many of the thoughts which then passed through his mind embodied in the delightful prefaces annexed late in life to his poetry and novels.'

Shortly after the publication of The Lay of the Last Minstrel, and when he was pleasantly established at Ashestiel, James Ballantyne, who had already been helped by Scott with a loan, applied to his old school friend and the now successful author for further aid in his business. Scott took the opportunity to make an investment in Ballantyne's printing business. He became a silent partner with a third interest. It seemed a most reasonable move. He had practically retired from the bar, though he was making an effort to secure a salaried position as a clerk of the court. He had a fair income, but his real capital he perceived was in his fertile brain, and by allying himself with a printing-office he would be in a position to get far more than an author's ordinary share in the productions of his pen. There was not the same wide gulf in Edinburgh between trade and profession which existed in London; and though Scott, with the natural pride of an author, did not make public his connection with Ballantyne, he was doubtless led to keep his engagement private quite as much by the advantage which privacy gave him in the influence he could use to turn business into Ballantyne's hands. It is possible that if the Ballantynes had been better business men and cooler headed, — for James Ballantyne's brother John shortly set up as a publisher, and after that the affairs of author, printer, and publisher became inextricably interdependent, — the venture might not have turned out ill, but all the men engaged were of a speculative turn of mind, and Scott's marvellous fecundity and versatility seemed to promise an inexhaustible spring from which the currents of manufacture and trade would flow clearly and steadily. All sorts of enterprises were projected and carried out, beyond and beside Scott's creative work. Editions of standard works, magazines, collections of poetry, rushed forth, and capital was shortly locked up, so that an early bankruptcy would have been inevitable, except for the sudden discovery of a new source of wealth. This lay in the invention of the Waverley Novels, at first anonymous, which swept the reading world like a freshet swelling into a flood and seeming for a while to be almost a new force in nature. The Waverley Novels for a while saved this mad combination of author, printer, and publisher from going to pieces, and there might possibly have been no catastrophe had not a new element come into action.

Scott, when he formed the partnership with James Ballantyne, took the money which he contributed from a fund with which he had intended buying Broadmeadows, a small estate on the northern bank of the Yarrow. He abandoned at the time this design, but the strong passion which could not fail to possess a man with Scott's deep love of the soil, and his imagination ever busy with historic traditions, still held him; and when the opportunity came, with the rising tide of his own fortunes, to buy a farm a few miles from Ashestiel, he seized it with alacrity. Nor was his venture an unwise one. He was tenant at will at Ashestiel, and had the natural desire of a man with a growing family to establish himself in a permanent home. 'The farm,' says Lockhart, 'consisted of a rich meadow or haugh along the banks of the river, and about a hundred acres of undulated ground behind, all in a neglected state, undrained, wretchedly enclosed, much of it covered with nothing better than the native heath. The farm-house itself was small and poor, with a common kail-yard on one flank, and a staring barn on the other, while in front appeared a filthy pond covered with ducks and duckweed, from which the whole tenement had derived the unharmonious designation of Clarty Hole. But the Tweed was everything to him — a beautiful river, flowing broad and bright over a bed of milk-white pebbles, unless here and there where it darkened into a deep pool, overhung as yet only by the birches and alders which had survived the statelier growth of the primitive forest; and the first hour that he took possession he claimed for his farm the name of the adjoining fjord, situated just above the influx of the classical tributary Gala. As might be guessed from the name of Abbotsford, these lands had all belonged of old to the great Abbey of Melrose.'

Abbotsford was in the heart of a country already dear to Scott by reason of its teeming historic memories, and here he began and continued through his working days to enrich a creation which was the embodiment in stone and wood and forest and field of the imagination which at the same time was finding vent in poem and novel and history and essay. The characteristics of the estate which he thus formed were the characteristics of his work as an author also. There is the free nature, the trees planted with a fine sense of landscape effect; there is the reproduction in miniature of the life of a bygone age, and there is the suggestion of the stage with its pasteboard properties, its structures all front, and its men and women acting a part.

Roskin has said with penetrating criticism: 'Scott's work is always epic, and it is contrary to his very nature to treat any subject dramatically.' In explication of this dictum, Roskin defines dramatic poetry as 'the expression by the poet of other people's feelings, in own not being told,' and epic poetry as an 'account given by the poet of other people's external circumstances, and of events happening to them, with only such expression either of their feelings, or his own, as he thinks may be conveniently added.' We must not confound the dramatic with the theatrical. To Scott, who never wrote a successful play, his figures were nevertheless quite distinctly theatrical. That is to say, he placed them before his readers not only vividly, but with the make-up which would bring into conspicuous light rather the outward show than the inward reality. Not that his persons had not clearly conceived characters, and not that he merely missed the modern analytic proresentation, but his persons interested him chiefly by their doing things, and these things were the incidents and accidents of life rather than the inevitable consequences of their nature, the irresistible effects of causes lying deep in their constitution. Hence the delight which he takes in battle and adventure of all sorts, and the emphasis which he lays upon the common, elemental qualities of human nature, male and female, rather than upon the individual and eccentric. There is no destiny in his poems or novels, no inevitable drawing to a climax of forces which are moving beyond the power of restraint which the author may in his own mind exercise.

It is not to be wondered at that Scott, breathing the fresh air of the ballads of the border, should make his first leap into the saddle of verse and ride heartily down his short, bounding lines. It is quite as natural that, as his material grew more and more historical in its character, and greater complexities crept in, he should find the narrative of verse too simple, and should resort to the greater range and diversity of prose; and that once having found his power in novel writing, he should have abandoned poetry as a vehicle for epic narrative, contenting himself thenceforth with lyric snatches, and with brief flights of verse. Moreover, in poetry, though he had a delighted audience, and never has failed since to draw a large following entirely satisfied with his form, he shared at the time the throne with that mightier, more dramatic artist, Byron, and knew also that men were beginning to turn their eyes toward Wordsworth and Coleridge. But in fiction he held quite undisputed sway. The fashion in fiction changes perhaps more quickly than in poetry; its representation of the manner of the day, even when it is consciously antiquarian and historic, renders it largely dependent on contemporaneous interest. In Scott's day, Fielding, Smollett, and Richardson were read more because they had not been supplanted than because they appealed strongly to the reader of the time. A more genuine attention was given to Miss Edgeworth, Miss Ferrier, Mackenzie and Galt. But these became at once minor writers when Scott took the field, and he called into existence a great multitude of readers of fiction, establishing thereby a habit of novel reading which was of the greatest service to the later novelists, like Dickens and Thackeray, when they came in with newer appeal to the changing taste of a newer generation.

To all these considerations must be added the incessant demands made upon Scott's brain by the need of keeping on its base the commercial house of cards which he had helped to build and in which he was living, and of carrying farther and farther into reality the dream of a baronial estate which was Rokeby done in plaster. Thus the years went by, full of active occupation, with brilliant pageant indeed, and with social excitement. It is a pleasure, in the midst of it all, to see the real Scott, Sir Walter to the world of display but the genuine master to Tom Purdie and Will Laidlaw, to note the wholesome pride of the firm-footed treader on his own acres, the generous care of others, the absence of cant, religious or social. And when the supreme test came, the test of overwhelming misfortune, the genuineness of this great nature was made plain in the high courage with which he set about the task of paying his creditors, in the toil of year after year, and in those moving passages in his diary when he sat in his loneliness and looked fortune in the face. Listen to the entry in his diary under date December 18, 1825.

- Ballantyne called on me this morning. Venit illa suprema dies. My extremity ~~near~~. Cadell has received letters from London which all but positively announce the failure of Hurst and Robinson, so that Constable & Co. must follow, and I must go with James Ballantyne for company. I suppose it will involve my all. But if the me £500, I can still make it £1000 or £1200 a year. And if they take my salaries of £1000 and £300, they cannot but give me something out of them. I have been rash in anticipating funds to buy land, but then I made from £5000 to £10,000 a year, and that was my temptation. I think nobody can lose a penny — that is one comfort. Men will think pride has had a fall. Let them indulge their own pride in thinking that my fall makes them higher, or seems so at least. I have the satisfaction to recollect that my prosperity has been of advantage to many, and that some at least will forgive my transient wealth on account of the innocence of my intentions, and my real wish to do good to the poor. The news will make sad hearts at Darwick, and in the cottages at Abbotsford, which I do not nourish the least hope of preserving. It has been my Delilah, and so I have often termed it; and now the recollection of the extensive woods I planted, and the walks I have formed, from which strangers must derive both the pleasure and the profit, will excite feelings likely to sober my gayest moments. I have not resolved never to see the place again. How could I tread my hall with such a diminished crest? How live a poor indebted man where I was once the wealthy, the honored? My children are provided; thank God for that. I was to have gone there on Saturday in joy and prosperity to receive my friends. My dogs will wait for me in vain. It is foolish — but the thoughts of parting from these dumb creatures have moved me more than any of the painful reflections I have put down. Poor things, I must get them kind masters; there may be yet those who loving me may love my dog because it has been mine. I must end this, or I shall lose the tone of mind with which men should meet distress.

'I find my dogs' feet on my knees. I hear them whining and seeking me everywhere — this is nonsense, but it is what they would do could they know how things are. Poor Will Laidlaw! poor Tom Purdie! this will be news to wring your heart, and many a poor fellow's besides to whom my prosperity was daily bread. . . . For myself the magic wand of the Unknown is shivered in his grasp. He must henceforth be termed the Too-well-known. The feast of fancy is over with the feeling of independence. I can no longer have the delight of waking in the morning with bright ideas in my mind, haste to commit them to paper, and count them monthly, as the means of planting such groves, and purchasing such wastes; replacing my dreams of fiction by other prospective visions of walks by —

"Fountain heads, and pathless groves, Places which pale passion loves."

This cannot be; but I may work substantial husbandry, work history, and such concerns. They will not be received with the same enthusiasm. . . . To save Abbotsford I would attempt all that was possible. My heart clings to the place I have created. There is scarce a tree on it that does not owe its being to me, and the pain of leaving it is greater than I can tell.'

Here we close our study of Scott's career. Thenceforth his energy was devoted to a painful clearing away of the ruins of his fortune. With patience and with many gleams of his sunny temperament, he labored on. In the end the debts were settled, Abbotsford was saved to his family, and there on the 21st of September, 1832, Scott died. 'It was a beautiful day,' says Lockhart, 'so warm, that every window was wide open — and so perfectly still, that the sound of all others most delicious to his ear, the gentle ripple of the Tweed over its pebbles, was distinctly audible as we knelt around the bed, and his eldest son kissed and closed his eyes.'

H. E. S.

TWO BALLADS FROM THE GERMAN OF BÜRGER

The first publication by Scott was a translation or imitation of two German ballads, and under the following title-page: 'THE CHASE and WILLIAM AND HELEN. Two Ballads from the German of Gottfried Augustus Bürger. Edinburgh. Printed by Mundell and Son, Royal Bank Close, for Manners and Miller, Parliament Square; and sold by T. Cadell, junr, and W. Davies, in the Strand, London, 1793.' It was a thin quarto, and, as seen, did not bear the name of the translator. Scott owed his copy of Bürger's works to the daughter of the Baron Ambassador at the court of St James, who had married his kinsman, Mr. Scott of Harden. She interested herself in his German studies and lent him aid in correcting his version. But the immediate occasion of his translating Bürger was the interest excited in the autumn of 1795 by the reading of William Taylor's unpublished version of Bürger's Letter, at a party at Dugald Stewart's, by Mrs. Harbould, then on a visit to Edinburgh. Scott was not present at the reading, but one of his friends who heard it, told him the story, and repeated the chorus,—

'Tramp! tramp! across the land they speed,
 Splash! splash! across the sea,
 Hurray! the dead can ride space!
 Dost fear to ride with me?'

Scott eagerly laid hold of the original and beginning the task after supper did not go to bed till he had finished it, a good illustration of the impetuosity of his literary labor his life long.

The ballad of The Wild Huntsman (Wilde Jäger) Scott appears to have written to accompany the other ballad for the little volume. The book attracted some attention in Edinburgh, where the author was known, but his friends were disappointed that it received slight notice in London, but translations of Lenore, which had caught the public ear, were abundant enough to keep in tolerable obscurity any single one of them. 'My adventure,' Scott wrote thirty-six years later, when he was famous, 'where so many pushed off to sea, proved a dead loss, and a great part of the edition was condemned to the service of the trunk-maker. This failure did not operate in any unpleasant degree either on my feelings or spirits. I was coldly received by strangers, but my reputation began rather to increase among my own friends, and on the whole I was more bent to show the world that it had neglected something worth notice, than to be affronted by its indifference; or rather, to speak candidly, I found pleasure in the literary labors in which I had almost by accident become engaged, and labored less in the hope of pleasing others, though certainly without despair of doing so, than in a pursuit of a new and agreeable amusement to myself.' And this may be taken as the most significant element in Scott's first literary venture, made when he was twenty-five years of age, and fairly started in the practice of law. One other interesting fact connected with the little volume is that James Ballantyne, with whom Scott was to have such momentous relations, reprinted it, at Scott's suggestion, a little enlarged, three years later, in order to show Edinburgh society how well he could print.

WILLIAM AND HELEN

From heavy dreams fair Helen rose,
 And eyed the dawning red:
 'Alas, my love, thou tarriest long!
 O art thou false or dead?'

With gallant Frederick's princely power
 He sought the bold Crusade,

But not a word from Judah's wars
 Told Helen how he sped.

With Paynim and with Saracen
 At length a truce was made,
 And every knight returned to dry
 The tears his love had shed.

Our gallant host was homeward bound
 With many a song of joy;

TWO BALLADS FROM THE GERMAN OF BÜRGER

Green waved the laurel in each plume,
The badge of victory.

And old and young, and sire and son,
To meet them crowd the way,
With shouts and mirth and melody,
The debt of love to pay.

Full many a maid her true-love met,
And sobbed in his embrace,
And fluttering joy in tears and smiles
Arrayed full many a face.

Nor joy nor smile for Helen sad,
She sought the host in vain;
For none could tell her William's fate,
If faithless or if slain.

The martial band is past and gone;
She rends her raven hair,
And in distraction's bitter mood
She weeps with wild despair.

'O, rise, my child,' her mother said,
'Nor sorrow thus in vain;
A perjured lover's fleeting heart
No tears recall again.'

'O mother, what is gone is gone,
What's lost forever lost;
Death, death alone can comfort me;
O had I ne'er been born!

'O, break, my heart, O, break at once!
Drunk my life-blood, Despair!
No joy remains on earth for me,
For me in heaven no share.'

'O enter not in judgment, Lord!
The pious mother prays;
'Impute not guilt to thy frail child!
She knows not what she says.

'O was the pious-mother child?
'O turn to dust and grave!
For a life that turned the life to bale
O'erhangs the tale of bliss.'

'O mother, mother, what is done?
'O mother, what is done?
My William's life was heaven on earth
My heart's a desert dry.'

My heart's a desert dry, as William's heaven
Now my heart's a desert dry.

I only prayed for William's sake,
And all my prayers were vain.'

'O, take the sacrament, my child,
And check these tears that flow;
By resignation's humble prayer,
O, hallowed be thy woe!

'No sacrament can quench this fire,
Or slake this scorching pain;
No sacrament can bid the dead
Arise and live again.

'O, break, my heart, O, break at once!
Be thou my god, Despair!
Heaven's heaviest blow has fallen on me,
And vain each fruitless prayer.'

'O, enter not in judgment, Lord,
With thy frail child of clay!
She knows not what her tongue has spelt
Impute it not, I pray!

'Forbear, my child, this desperate woe,
And turn to God and grace;
Well can devotion's heavenly glow
Convert thy bale to bliss.'

'O mother, mother, what is bliss?
O mother, what is bale?
Without my William what were heaven,
Or with him what were hell?'

Wild she arraigns the eternal doom,
Upbraids each sacred power,
Till, spent, she sought her silent room,
All in the lonely tower.

She beat her breast, she wrung her hand
Till sun and day were o'er,
And through the glimmering lattices she
The twinkling of the star.

Then crash! the heavy drawbridge fell
That o'er the moat was hung;
And clatter! clatter! on its boards
The host of courser rung.

The clank of ringing steel was heard
As all the ranks descended;
And swift on the winding stair
A heavy company descended.

And hark! and hark! a knock—tap! tap!
A knocking, rattling noise;—

Door-latch and tinkling staples ring ; —
At length a whispering voice.

'Awake, awake, arise, my love !
How, Helen, dost thou fare ?
Wak'st thou, or asleep'st ? laugh'st thou, or weep'st ?
Hast thought on me, my fair ?'

'My love ! my love ! — so late by night ! —
I waked, I wept for thee :
Mach have I borne since dawn of morn ;
Where, William, couldst thou be ?'

'We saddle late — from Hungary
I rode since darkness fell ;
And to its bourne we both return
Before the matin-bell.'

'O, rest this night within my arms,
And warm thee in their fold !
Chill howls through hawthorn bush the wind : —
My love is deadly cold.'

'Let the wind howl through hawthorn bush !
This night we must away ;
The steed is wight, the spur is bright ;
I cannot stay till day.

'Buck, buck, and boune ! Thou mount'st behind
Upon my black barb steed :
O'er stock and stile, a hundred miles,
We haste to bridal bed.'

'To-night — to-night a hundred miles ! —
O dearest William, stay !
The bell strikes twelve — dark, dismal hour !
O, wait, my love, till day !'

'Look here, look here — the moon shines clear —
Full fast I ween we ride ;
Mount and away ! for ere the day
We reach our bridal bed.

'The black barb snorts, the bridle rings ;
Haste, buck, and boune, and seat thee !
The feast is made, the chamber spread,
The bridal guests await thee.'

Strong love prevailed : she bucks, she bounces,
She mounts the barb behind,

And round her darling William's waist
Her lily arms she twined.

And, hurry ! hurry ! off they rode,
As fast as fast might be ;
Spurned from the courser's thundering heels
The flashing pebbles flee.

And on the right and on the left,
Ere they could snatch a view,
Fast, fast each mountain, mead, and plain,
And cot and castle flew.

'Sit fast — dost fear ? — The moon shines
clear —
Fleet goes my barb — keep hold !
Fear'st thou ? — 'O no !' she faintly
said ;
'But why so stern and cold ?

'What yonder rings ? what yonder sings ?
Why shrieks the owlet gray ?'
'T is death-bells' clang, 't is funeral song,
The body to the clay.

'With song and clang at morrow's dawn
Ye may inter the dead :
To-night I ride with my young bride
To deck our bridal bed.

'Come with thy choir, thou coffined guest,
To swell our nuptial song !
Come, priest, to bless our marriage feast !
Come all, come all along !'

Ceased clang and song ; down sunk the
bier ;
The shrouded corpse arose :
And hurry ! hurry ! all the train
The thundering steed pursues.

And forward ! forward ! on they go ;
High snorts the straining steed ;
Thick pants the rider's laboring breath,
As headlong on they speed.

'O William, why this savage haste ?
And where thy bridal bed ?'
'T is distant far, low, damp, and chill,
And narrow, trustless maid.'

'No room for me ?' — 'Enough for both ; —
Speed, speed, my barb, thy course !'

O'er thundering bridge, through boiling surge,
He drove the furious horse.

Tramp ! tramp ! along the land they rode,
Splash ! splash ! along the sea ;
The scourge is wight, the spur is bright,
The flashing pebbles flee.

Fled past on right and left how fast
Each forest, grove, and bower ! 190
On right and left fled past how fast
Each city, town, and tower !

'Dost fear ? dost fear ? The moon shines
clear,
Dost fear to ride with me ? —
Hurrah ! hurrah ! the dead can ride !' —
'O William, let them be ! —

'See there, see there ! What yonder swings
And creaks mid whistling rain ?' —
'Gibbet and steel, the accursed wheel ;
A murderer in his chain. — 200

'Hollo ! thou felon, follow here :
To bridal bed we ride ;
And thou shalt prance a fetter dance
Before me and my bride.'

And, hurry ! hurry ! clash, clash, clash !
The wasted form descends ;
And fleet as wind through hazel bush
The wild career attends.

Tramp ! tramp ! along the land they rode,
Splash ! splash ! along the sea ; 210
The scourge is red, the spur drops blood,
The flashing pebbles flee.

How fled what moonshine faintly showed !
How fled what darkness hid !
How fled the earth beneath their feet,
The heaven above their head !

'Dost fear ? dost fear ? The moon shines
clear,
And well the dead can ride :
Dost faithful Helen fear for them ?' —
'O leave in peace the dead !' — 220

'Barb ! Barb ! methinks I hear the cock ;
The sand will soon be run :

Barb ! Barb ! I smell the morning air ;
The race is well-nigh done.'

Tramp ! tramp ! along the land they rode,
Splash ! splash ! along the sea ;
The scourge is red, the spur drops blood,
The flashing pebbles flee.

'Hurrah ! hurrah ! well ride the dead ;
The bride, the bride is come ; 230
And soon we reach the bridal bed,
For, Helen, here 's my home.'

Reluctant on its rusty hinge
Revolved an iron door,
And by the pale moon's setting beam
Were seen a church and tower.

With many a shriek and cry whiz round
The birds of midnight scared ;
And rustling like autumnal leaves
Unhallowed ghosts were heard. 240

O'er many a tomb and tombstone pale
He spurred the fiery horse,
Till sudden at an open grave
He checked the wondrous course.

The falling gauntlet quits the rein,
Down drops the casque of steel,
The cuirass leaves his shrinking side,
The spur his gory heel.

The eyes desert the naked skull,
The mouldering flesh the bone, 250
Till Helen's lily arm 's atwined
A ghastly skeleton.

The furious barb snorts fire and foam,
And with a fearful bound
Dissolves at once in empty air,
And leaves her on the ground.

Half seen by fits, by fits half heard,
Pale spectres flit along,
Wheel round the maid in dismal dance,
And howl the funeral song ; 260

'E'en when the heart's with anguish
cleft
Revere the doom of Heaven,
Her soul is from her body reft ;
Her spirit be forgiven !'

THE WILD HUNTSMAN

THE Wildgrave winds his bugle-horn,
To horse, to horse ! halloo, halloo !
His fiery courser snuffs the morn,
And thronging serfs their lord pursue.

The eager pack from couples freed Dash through the bush, the brier, the brake ;
While answering hound and horn and steed
The mountain echoes startling wake.

The beams of God's own hallowed day
Had painted yonder spire with gold, 10
And, calling sinful man to pray,
Loud, long, and deep the bell had tolled ;

But still the Wildgrave onward rides ;
Holloo, halloo ! and, hark again !
When, spurring from opposing sides,
Two stranger horsemen join the train.

Who was each stranger, left and right,
Well may I guess, but dare not tell ; 5
The right-hand steed was silver white,
The left the swarthy hue of hell. 20

The right-hand horseman, young and fair,
His smile was like the morn of May ;
The left from eye of tawny glare
Shot midnight lightning's lurid ray.

He waved his huntsman's cap on high,
Cried, ' Welcome, welcome, noble lord !
What sport canst thou or sea, or sky,
To match the priest's chase, afford ? '

' Cease thy loud bugle's changing knell,' Cried the fair youth with silver voice ; 30
' And for devotion's choral swell
Exchange the rude unhallowed noise.

day the ill-omened chase forbear,
In bell yet summons to the fane ;
ay the Warning Spirit hear,
-morrow thou mayst mourn in vain.'

ay, and sweep the glades along !'
The sable hunter hoarse replies ; 40
The muttering monks leave matin-song
And bells and books and mysteries.

The Wildgrave spurred his ardent steed,
And, launching forward with a bound,

' Who, for thy drowsy priestlike rede,
Would leave the jovial horn and bound ?

' Hence, if our manly sport offend !
With pious fools go chant and pray : —
Well hast thou spoke, my dark-browed friend ;
(Halloo, halloo ! and hark away !'

The Wildgrave spurred his courser light,
O'er moss and moor, o'erholt and holl ; 5
And on the left and on the right,
Each stranger horseman followed still.

Up springs from yonder tangled thorn
A stag more white than mountain snow ;
And louder rung the Wildgrave's horn,
' Hark forward, forward ! holla, ho !'

A heedless wretch has crossed the way ;
He gasps the thundering hoofs below ; — 15
But live who can, or die who may,
Still, ' Forward, forward ! ' on they go. 20

See, where yon simple fences meet,
A field with autumn's blessings crowned ;
See, prostrate at the Wildgrave's feet,
A husbandman with toil embrowned :

' O mercy, mercy, noble lord !
Spare the poor's pittance,' was his cry,
' Earned by the sweat these brows have poured
In scorching hour of fierce July.'

Earnest the right-hand stranger pleads,
The left still cheering to the prey ; 30
The impetuous Earl no warning heeds,
But furious holds the onward way.

' Away, thou hound so basely born,
Or dread the scourge's echoing blow !'
Then loudly rung his bugle-horn,
' Hark forward, forward ! holla, ho !'

So said, so done : — A single bound
Clears the poor laborer's humble pale ; 40
Wild follows man and horse and hound,
Like dark December's stormy gale.

And man and horse, and hound and horn,
Destructive sweep the field along ;
While, jaying o'er the wasted corn,
Fell Famine marks the maddening throng.

Again uproused the timorous prey
 Scours moss and moor, and holt and hill ;
 Hard run, he feels his strength decay,
 And trusts for life his simple skill.

Too dangerous solitude appeared ;
 He seeks the shelter of the crowd ; 90
 Amid the flock's domestic herd
 His harmless head he hopes to shroud.

O'er moss and moor, and holt and hill,
 His track the steady blood-hounds trace ;
 O'er ~~moss and moor~~, unwearied still,
 The furious Earl pursues the chase.

Full lowly did the herdsman fall :
 'O spare, thou noble baron, spare
 These herds, a widow's little all ;
 These flocks, an orphan's fleecy care !' 100

Earnest the right-hand stranger pleads,
 The left still cheering to the prey ;
 The Earl nor prayer nor pity heeds,
 But furious keeps the onward way.

'Unmannered dog ! To stop my sport
 Vain were thy cant and beggar whine,
 Though human spirits of thy sort
 Were tenants of these carrion kine !'

Again he winds his bugle-horn,
 'Hark forward, forward, holla, ho !' 110
 And through the herd in ruthless scorn
 He cheers his furious hounds to go.

In heaps the throttled victims fall ;
 Down sinks their mangled herdsman
 near ;
 The murderous cries the stag appall, —
 Again he starts, new-nerved by fear.

With blood besmeared and white with foam,
 While big the tears of anguish pour,
 He seeks amid the forest's gloom
 The humble hermit's hallowed bower. 120

But man and horse, and horn and hound,
 Fast rattling on his traces go ;
 The sacred chapel rung around
 With, 'Hark away ! and, holla, ho !'

All mild, amid the rout profane,
 The holy hermit poured his prayer ;
 'Forbear with blood God's house to stain ;
 Revere His altar and forbear !'

'The meanest brute has rights to plead,
 Which, wronged by cruelty or pride, 130
 Draw vengeance on the ruthless head : —
 Be warned at length and turn aside.'

Still the fair horseman anxious pleads ;
 The black, wild whooping, points the prey : —
 Alas ! the Earl no warning heeds,
 But frantic keeps the forward way.

'Holy or not, or right or wrong,
 Thy altar and its rites I spurn ; 3
 Not sainted martyrs' sacred song,
 Not God himself shall make me turn !' 140

He spurs his horse, he winds his horn, —
 'Hark forward, forward, holla, ho !'
 But off, on whirlwind's pinions borne,
 The stag, the hut, the hermit, go.

And horse and man, and horn and hound,
 And clamor of the chase, was gone ;
 For hoofs and howls and bugle-sound,
 A deadly silence reigned alone.

Wild gazed the affrighted Earl around ;
 He strove in vain to wake his horn, 150
 In vain to call ; for not a sound
 Could from his anxious lips be borne.

He listens for his trusty hounds,
 No distant baying reached his ears ;
 His courser, rooted to the ground,
 The quickening spur unmindful bears.

Still dark and darker frown the shades,
 Dark as the darkness of the grave ;
 And not a sound the still invades,
 Save what a distant torrent gave. 160

High o'er the sinner's humbled head
 At length the solemn silence broke ;
 And from a cloud of swarthy red
 The awful voice of thunder spoke.

'Oppressor of creation fair !
 Apostate Spirits' hardened tool !
 Scourner of God ! Scourge of the poor !
 The measure of thy cup is full.

'Be chased forever through the wood
 Forever roam the affrighted wild ;
 And let thy fate instruct the proud,
 God's meanest creature is His child !'

was hushed :— One flash of sombre glare

With yellow tinged the forests brown ;
 The Wildgrave's bristling hair,
 And horror chilled each nerve and bone.

It poured the sweat in freezing rill ;
 The rising wind began to sing,
 Louder, louder, louder still, <sup>179</sup>
 Till a mighty storm and tempest on its wing.

It heard the call ;— her entrails rend ;
 Her yawning rifts, with many a yell,
 And with sulphureous flames, ascend
 The misbegotten dogs of hell.

A ghastly huntsman next arose
 Whom I may guess, but dare not tell ;
 His eye like midnight lightning glows,
 And his steed the swarthy hue of hell.

The Wildgrave flies o'er bush and thorn
 With many a shriek of helpless woe ; <sup>180</sup>

Behind him hound and horse and horn,
 And, 'Hark away, and holla, ho !'

With wild despair's reverted eye,
 Close, close behind, he marks the throng,
 With bloody fangs and eager cry ;
 In frantic fear he scours along. —

Still, still shall last the dreadful chase
 Till time itself shall have an end ;
 By day they scour earth's caverned space,
 At midnight's witching hour ascend. <sup>181</sup>

This is the horn and hound and horse
 That oft the lated peasant hears ;
 Appalled he signs the frequent cross,
 When the wild din invades his ears.

The wakeful priest oft drops a tear
 For human pride, for human woe,
 When at his midnight mass he hears
 The infernal cry of 'Holla, ho !'

EARLY BALLADS AND LYRICS

He followed his translations from Bürger in other efforts in the same direction. The book, indeed, which bore his name, was a rendering of Goethe's tragedy of Goetz von Berlichingen, published in 1799, and he translated, at about the same time, but did not publish till many years later, the House of Aspen, a free version of Der Heilige Veit, by a pseudonymous German author of the day. The German influence was curiously blended with an American zeal which had an early birth and sent him eagerly abroad among Scottish ballads and half-mythical tales for subjects. Over, he was drawn into the service of J. Lewis, who persuaded him to contribute to a collection of Tales of Wonder, then touched with the prevailing temper of the imported freely from Germany. The most substantial result of his labor in these experimental years was the publication in 1802 and 1803 of the three volumes of Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border. Scott had now become so enamored of the native legends, so skilful as an imitator, and, much more, so informed with the spirit of the old ballads, that his own contributions harmonized with the antiquities he had gathered, and these showed in every line, as well as in the rich apparatus of notes with which they were illustrated, a mastery of the ballad literature, and a mind thoroughly at home in material which was soon to be the quarry for the author and editor's most noble edifices in verse.

The present group contains, in as nearly exact chronological order as is practicable, Scott's experiments and performances in original verse, with scattered translations and imitations, before he leaped into fame with The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

THE VIOLET

These slight verses have an interest derived from the fact that they were written by Scott in connection with that suppressed letter from Williamina Stuart which never found direct expression to her, but remained in the poet's heart long after her marriage to Sir William Forbes, and Scott's to Miss Carpenter, so that thirty years later Scott could write in his Journal, just after waiting on Lady Jane Stuart, the aged mother of Williamina: "I went to make another visit, and fairly softened myself like an old fool, with recalling old stories, till I was fit for nothing but shedding tears and repeating verses for the whole night. This is sad work. The very grave gives up its dead, and time rolls back thirty years to add to my perplexities. I don't care. Yet what a romance to tell, and told I fear it will one day be. And then my three years of dreaming and my two years of wakening will be chronicled, doubtless. But the dead will feel no pain.' The story of this disappointment is told without names in the eighth chapter of Lockhart's Life, and has recently been repeated with greater explicitness by Miss Skene in The Century for July, 1890.

THE violet in her green-wood bower,
Where birchen boughs with hazels mingle,
May boast itself the fairest flower
In glen or copse or forest dingle.

Though fair her gems of azure hue,
Beneath the dewdrop's weight reclining;
I've seen an eye of lovelier blue,
More sweet through watery lustre shining.

The summer sun that dew shall dry
Ere yet the day be past its morrow,
Nor longer in my false love's eye
Remained the tear of parting sorrow.

TO A LADY

WITH FLOWERS FROM A ROMAN WALL

1797

TAKE these flowers which, purple waving,
On the ruined rampart grew,
Where, the sons of freedom braving,
Rome's imperial standards flew.

Warriors from the breach of danger
Pluck no longer laurels there;
They but yield the passing stranger
Wild-flower wreaths for Beauty's hair.

THE ERL-KING

FROM THE GERMAN OF GOETHE

Scott, in sending this in a letter to a friend, makes the comment: 'The Erl-King is a goblin that haunts the Black Forest in Thuringia. — To be read by a candle particularly long in the snuff.' The translation was made in 1797.

O, WHO rides by night thro' the woodland so wild?

It is the fond father embracing his child;
And close the boy nestles within his loved arm,

To hold himself fast and to keep himself
warm.

'O father, see yonder! see yonder!' he says;

'My boy, upon what dost thou fearfully gaze?' —

'O, 'tis the Erl-King with his crown and his shroud.' —

'No, my son, it is but a dark wreath of the cloud.'

THE ERL-KING SPEAKS

'O, come and go with me, thou loveliest
child;

By many a gay sport shall thy time be beguiled;

My mother keeps for thee full many a fair
toy,

And many a fine flower shall she pluck for my boy.'

'O father, my father, and did you not hear

The Erl-King whisper so low in my ear?' —

'Be still, my heart's darling — my child, be at ease;

It was but the wild blast as it sung thro'
the trees.'

ERL-KING

'O, wilt thou go with me, thou loveliest boy?

My daughter shall tend thee with care and
with joy;

She shall bear thee so lightly thro' wet
and thro' wild,

And press thee and kiss thee and sing to my child.'

'O father, my father, and saw you not plain,

The Erl-King's pale daughter glide past through the rain?' —

'O yes, my loved treasure, I knew it full
soon;

It was the gray willow that danced to the moon.'

ERL-KING

'O, come and go with me, no longer delay,
Or else, silly child, I will drag thee
away.' —
'O father ! O father ! now, now keep your bold,
The Erl-King has seized me — his grasp is so cold !'

Sore trembled the father ; he spurred thro'
the wild,
Clasping close to his bosom his shuddering
child ;
He reaches his dwelling in doubt and in dread,
But, clasped to his bosom, the infant was dead !

WAR-SONG

OF THE ROYAL EDINBURGH LIGHT DRAGOONS

In 1707 Scott's ardor led to the formation of the Royal Edinburgh Light Dragoons, and he served in it as quartermaster. In 1798, when a French invasion was threatened, Mr. Skene was one day reciting the German Kriegslied
'Der Abschied's Tag ist Da,' and the next morning Scott showed the following piece which was adopted as the troop-song.

To horse ! to horse ! the standard flies,
The bugles sound the call ;
The Gallic navy stems the seas,
The voice of battle's on the breeze,
Arouse ye, one and all !

From high Dunedin's towers we come,
A band of brothers true ;
Our casques the leopard's spoils surround,
With Scotland's hardy thistle crowned ;
We boast the red and blue.

Though tamely crouch to Gallia's frown
Dull Holland's tardy train ;
Their ravished toys though Romans mourn ;
Though gallant Switzers vainly spurn,
And, foaming, gnaw the chain ;

Oh ! had they marked the avenging call
Their brethren's murder gave,
Disunion ne'er their ranks had mown,

Nor patriot valor, desperate grown,
Sought freedom in the grave !

Shall we, too, bend the stubborn head,
In Freedom's temple born,
Dress our pale cheek in timid smile,
To hail a master in our isle,
Or brook a victor's scorn ?

No ! though destruction o'er the land
Come pouring as a flood,
The sun, that sees our falling day,
Shall mark our sabres' deadly sway,
And set that night in blood.

For gold let Gallia's legions fight,
Or plunder's bloody gain ;
Unbribed, unbought, our swords we draw,
To guard our king, to fence our law,
Nor shall their edge be vain.

If ever breath of British gale
Shall fan the tri-color,
Or footstep of invader rude,
With rapine foul, and red with blood,
Pollute our happy shore, —

Then farewell home ! and farewell friends !
Adieu each tender tie !
Resolved, we mingle in the tide,
Where charging squadrons furious ride,
To conquer or to die.

To horse ! to horse ! the sabres gleam ;
High sounds our bugle call ;
Combined by honor's sacred tie,
Our word is Laus and Liberty !
March forward, one and all !

SONG

FROM GOETZ VON BERLICHINGEN

It was a little naughty page,
Ha ! ha !
Would catch a bird was closed in cage.
Sa ! sa !
Ha ! ha !
Sa ! sa !
He seized the cage, the latch did draw,
Ha ! ha !
And in he thrust his knavish paw.
Sa ! sa !
Ha ! ha !
Sa ! sa !

The bird dashed out, and gained the thorn,
 Ha ! ha !
 And laughed the silly fool to scorn !
 Sa ! sa !
 Ha ! ha !
 Sa ! sa !

SONGS

FROM THE HOUSE OF ASPEN

Lockhart calls attention to the fact that the first of these lyrics has the metre, and not a little of the spirit, of the boat-song of Roderick Dhu and Clan Alpin; and that the second is the first draft of 'The Maid of Toro.'

I

Joy to the victors, the sons of old Aspen !
 Joy to the race of the battle and scar !
 Glory's proud garland triumphantly grasping,
 Generous in peace, and victorious in war.
 Honor acquiring,
 Valor inspiring,
 Bursting, resistless, through foemen they go ;
 War-axes wielding,
 Broken ranks yielding,
 Till from the battle proud Roderic retires,
 Yields in wild rout the fair palm to his foe.
 Joy to each warrior, true follower of Aspen !
 Joy to the heroes that gained the bold day !
 Health to our wounded, in agony gasping ;
 Peace to our brethren that fell in the fray !
 Boldly this morning,
 Roderic's power scorning,
 Well for their chieftain their blades did they wield :
 Joy blest them dying,
 As Maltingen flying,
 Low laid his banners, our conquest adorning,
 Their death-clouded eye-balls desoried on the field !
 Now to our home, the proud mansion of Aspen
 Bend we, gay victors, triumphant away.

There each fond damsel, her gallant youth clasping,
 Shall wipe from his forehead the stains of the fray.
 Listening the prancing
 Of horses advancing ;
 E'en now on the turrets our maidens appear.
 Love our hearts warming,
 Songs the night charming,
 Round goes the grape in the goblet gay dancing ;
 Love, wine, and song, our blithe evening shall cheer !

II

Sweet shone the sun on the fair lake of Toro,
 Weak were the whispers that waved the dark wood,
 As a fair maiden, bewildered in sorrow,
 Sighed to the breezes and wept to the flood. —
 'Saints, from the mansion of bliss lowly bending,
 Virgin, that hear'st the poor suppliant's cry,
 Grant my petition, in anguish ascending,
 My Frederick restore, or let Eleanor die.'
 Distant and faint were the sounds of the battle ;
 With the breezes they rise, with the breezes they fall,
 Till the shout, and the groan, and the conflict's dread rattle,
 And the chase's wild clamor came loading the gale.
 Breathless she gazed through the woodland so dreary,
 Slowly approaching, a warrior was seen ;
 Life's ebbing tide marked his footsteps so weary,
 Cleft was his helmet, and woe was his mien.
 'Save thee, fair maid, for our armies are flying ;
 Save thee, fair maid, for thy guardian is low ;
 Cold on you heath thy bold Frederick is lying,
 Fast through the woodland approaches the foe.'

111

RHEIN-WEIN LIED

What makes the troopers' frozen courage muster?

The grapes of juice divine.
Upon the Rhine, upon the Rhine they cluster:

Oh, blessed be the Rhine!

Let fringe and furs, and many a rabbit skin, sirs,

Bedeck your Saracen; He'll freeze without what warms our heart within, sirs,

When the night-frost crusts the fen.

But on the Rhine, but on the Rhine they cluster,

The grapes of juice divine,
That makes our troopers' frozen courage
muster:

Oh, blessed be the Rhine!

GLENFINLAS;

OR

LORD RONALD'S CORONACH

This ballad, written in the summer of 1700, and first published in Monk Lewis's Tales of Wonder, was provided by Scott with a preface which is here reproduced because of the suggestion that Scott, in making thus his first use of native, Scottish material, was affected by his German studies and translations. The prose preface, it has been held, where he speaks in his natural voice, 'is more affecting than the lofty and sonorous stanzas themselves; that the vague tenor of the original dream loses, instead of gaining, by the expanded elaboration of the detail.' Be that as it may, here is Scott's preface:—

The simple tradition, upon which the following stanzas are founded, runs thus: While two Highland hunters were passing the night in a solitary buthy, (a hut, built for the purpose of hunting,) and making merry over their venison and whiskey, one of them expressed a wish that they had pretty lasses to complete their party. The words were scarcely uttered, when two beautiful young women, habited in green, entered the hut, dancing and singing. One of the hunters was seduced by the siren who attached herself particularly to him, to leave the hut: the other remained, and, suspicious of the fair seducers, continued to play upon a trumpet, or Jew's harp, some strain, consecrated to the Virgin Mary. Day at length came, and the temptress vanished. Searching in the forest, he found the bones of his unfortunate friend, who had been torn to pieces and devoured by the fiend into whose toils he had fallen. The place was from thence called the Glen of the Green Women.

*Glenfinlas is a tract of forest-ground, lying in the Highlands of Perthshire, not far from Callender, in Menteith. It was formerly a royal forest, and now belongs to the Earl of Moray. This country, as well as the adjacent district of Balquidder, was, in times of yore, chiefly inhabited by the Macgregors. To the west of the Forest of Glenfinlas lies Loch Katrine, and its romantic avenue, called the Troshachs. Benledi, Benmore, and Benvoirlich, are mountains in the same district, and at no great distance from Glenfinlas. The River Teith passes Callender and the Castle of Doune, and joins the Forth near Stirling. The Pass of Lenny is immediately above Callender, and is the principal access to the Highlands, from that town. Glenartney is a forest, near Benvoirlich. The whole forms a sublime tract of Alpine scenery.'

It may be observed that the scenery of the ballad reappears in The Lady of the Lake, as also in Waverley and Rob Roy.

For them the viewless forms of air obey,
Their bidding heed, and at their beck repair;
They know what spirit brews the stormful day,
And heartless off, like moody madness stare,
To see the phantom train their secret work prepare.
COLLINS.

'O HONE a rie! O hone a rie!
The pride of Albin's line is o'er,
And fallen Glenartney's stateliest tree;
We ne'er shall see Lord Ronald more!

O! sprung from great Macgilliganore,
The chief that never feared a foe,
How matchless was thy broad claymore,
How deadly thine unerring bow!

Well can the Saxon widows tell
How on the Teith's resounding shore
The boldest Lowland warriors fell,
As down from Lenny's pass you bore.

But o'er his hills in festal day
How blazed Lord Ronald's beltane-tree,
While youths and maids the light strathspey
So nimbly danced with Highland glee!

Cheered by the strength of Ronald's shell,
 E'en age forgot his tresses hoar;
 But now the loud lament we swell,
 O, ne'er to see Lord Ronald more! 30

From distant isles a chieftain came
 The joys of Ronald's halls to find,
 And chase with him the dark-brown game
 That bounds o'er Albin's hills of wind.

'T was Moy; whom in Columba's isle
 The seer's prophetic spirit found,
 As, with a minstrel's fire the while,
 He waked his harp's harmonious sound.

Full many a spell to him was known
 Which wandering spirits shrink to hear;
 And many a lay of potent tone 31
 Was never meant for mortal ear.

For there, 't is said, in mystic mood
 High converse with the dead they hold,
 And oft espy the fated shroud
 That shall the future corpse enfold.

O, so it fell that on a day,
 To rouse the red deer from their den,
 The chiefs have ta'en their distant way,
 And scoured the deep Glengfinlas glen.

No vassals wait their sports to aid, 41
 To watch their safety, deck their board;
 Their simple dress the Highland plaid,
 Their trusty guard the Highland sword.

Three summer days through brake and dell
 Their whistling shafts successively flew;
 And still when dewy evening fell
 The quarry to their hut they drew.

In gray Glengfinlas' deepest nook
 The solitary cabin stood, 50
 Fast by Moneira's sullen brook,
 Which murmurs through that lonely wood.

Soft fell the night, the sky was calm,
 When three successive days had flown;
 And summer mist in dewy balm
 Steeped heathy bank and mossy stone.

The moon, half-hid in silvery flakes,
 Afar her dubious radiance shed,
 Quivering on Katrine's distant lakes,
 And resting on Benedi's head. 60

Now in their hut in social guise
 Their sylvan fare the chiefs enjoy;
 And pleasure laughs in Ronald's eyes,
 As many a pledge he quaffs to Moy.

'What lack we here to crown our bliss,
 While thus the pulse of joy beats high,
 What but fair woman's yielding kiss,
 Her panting breath and melting eye?

'To chase the deer of yonder shades,
 This morning left their father's pile
 The fairest of our mountain maids,
 The daughters of the proud Glengyle.

'Long have I sought sweet Mary's heart,
 And dropped the tear and heaved the sigh:
 But vain the lover's wily art
 Beneath a sister's watchful eye.

'But thou mayst teach that guardian fair,
 While far with Mary I am flown,
 Of other hearts to cease her care,
 And find it hard to guard her own.

'Touch but thy harp, thou soon shalt see
 The lovely Flora of Glengyle,
 Unmindful of her charge and me,
 Hang on thy notes 'twixt tear and smile.

'Or, if she choose a melting tale,
 All underneath the greenwood bough,
 Will good Saint Oran's rule prevail,
 Stern huntsman of the rigid brow?'

'Since Enrick's fight, since Morna's death
 No more on me shall rapture rise,
 Responsive to the panting breath,
 Or yielding kiss or melting eyes.

'E'en then, when o'er the beath of woe
 Where sunk my hopes of love and fame
 I bade my harp's wild wailings flow,
 On me the Seer's sad spirit came.

'The last dread curse of angry heaven,
 With ghastly sights and sounds of woe
 To dash each glimpse of joy was given—
 The gift the future ill to know.

'The bark thou saw'st, yon summer morn
 So gayly part from Oban's bay,
 My eye beheld her dashed and torn Far on the rocky Colonsay.

'Thy Fergus too — thy sister's son, Thou saw'st with pride the gallant's power.

As marching 'gainst the Lord of Downe
He left the skirts of huge Benmore.

'Thou only saw'st their tartans wave 109
As down Benvoirlich's side they wound,
Heard'st but the pibroch answering brave
To many a target clanking round.

'I heard the groans, I marked the tears,
I saw the wound his bosom bore,
When on the serried Saxon spears
He poured his clan's resistless roar.

'And thou, who bidst me think of bliss,
And bidst my heart awake to glee,
And court like thee the wanton kiss —
That heart, O Ronald, bleeds for thee ! 120

'I see the death-damps chill thy brow :
I hear thy Warning Spirit cry ;
The corpse-lights dance — they're gone,
and now —
No more is given to gifted eye !'

'Alone enjoy thy dreary dreams,
Sad prophet of the evil hour !
Saw, should we scorn joy's transient beams
Because to-morrow's storm may lour ?

'Or false or sooth thy words of woe, 129
Giangillian's Chieftain ne'er shall fear ;
His blood shall bound at rapture's glow,
Though doomed to stain the Saxon spear.

'E'en now, to meet me in yon dell,
My Mary's buskins brush the dew.'
He spoke, nor bade the chief farewell,
But called his dogs and gay withdrew.

Within an hour returned each hound,
In rushed the rousers of the deer ;
They howled in melancholy sound,
Then closely couched beside the Seer. 140

No Ronald yet, though midnight came,
And sad were Moy's prophetic dreams,
As, bending o'er the dying flame,
He fed the watch-fire's quivering gleams.

Sudden the hounds erect their ears,
And sudden cease their moaning howl,

Close pressed to Moy, they mark their fears
By shivering limbs and stilled growl.

Untouched the harp began to ring
As softly, slowly, oped the door ; 150
And shook responsive every string
As light a footstep pressed the floor.

And by the watch-fire's glimmering light
Close by the minstrel's side was seen
An huntress maid, in beauty bright,
All dropping wet her robes of green.

All dropping wet her garments seem ;
Chilled was her cheek, her bosom bare,
As, bending o'er the dying gleam,
She wrung the moisture from her hair. 160

With maiden blush she softly said,
'O gentle huntsman, hast thou seen,
In deep Glenfinlas' moonlight glade,
A lovely maid in vest of green :

'With her a chief in Highland pride ;
His shoulders bear the hunter's bow,
The mountain dirk adorns his side,
Far on the wind his tartans flow ?' —

'And who art thou ? and who are they ?'
All ghastly gazing, Moy replied : 170
'And why, beneath the moon's pale ray, Dare ye thus roam Glenfinlas' side ?'

'Where wild Loch Katrine pours her tide,
Blue, dark, and deep, round many an isle,
Our father's towers o'erhang her side,
The castle of the bold Glengyle.

'To chase the dun Glenfinlas deer
Our woodland course this morn we bore,
And haply met while wandering here
The son of great Macgillanore. 180

'O, aid me then to seek the pair,
Whom, loitering in the woods, I lost ;
Alone I dare not venture there,
Where walks, they say, the shrieking ghost.'

'Yes, many a shrieking ghost walks there ;
Then first, my own sad vow to keep,
Here will I pour my midnight prayer,
Which still must rise when mortals
sleep.'

'O, first, for pity's gentle sake,
Guide a lone wanderer on her way ! 190
For I must cross the haunted brake,
And reach my father's towers ere day.'

'First, three times tell each Ave-bead,
And thrice a Pater-noster say ;
Then kiss with me the holy rede ;
So shall we safely wend our way.'

'O, shame to knighthood, strange and foul !
Go, doff the bonnet from thy brow,
And shroud thee in the monkish cowl,
Which best befits thy sullen vow. 200

'Not so, by high Dunlathmon's fire,
Thy heart was froze to love and joy,
When gayly rung thy raptured lyre
To wanton Morna's melting eye.'

Wild stared the minstrel's eyes of flame
And high his sable locks arose,
And quick his color went and came
As fear and rage alternate rose.

'And thou ! when by the blazing oak
I lay, to her and love resigned, 210
Say, rode ye on the eddying smoke,
Or sailed ye on the midnight wind ?

'Not thine a race of mortal blood,
Nor old Glengyle's pretended line ;
Thy dame, the Lady of the Flood —
Thy sire, the Monarch of the Mine.'

He muttered thrice Saint Oran's rhyme,
And thrice Saint Fillan's powerful
prayer ;
Then turned him to the eastern clime,
And sternly shook his coal-black hair. 220

And, bending o'er his harp, he flung
His wildest witch-notes on the wind ;
And loud and high and strange they rung,
As many a magic change they find.

Tall waxed the Spirit's altering form,
Till to the roof her stature grew ;
Then, mingling with the rising storm,
With one wild yell away she flew.

Rain beats, hail rattles, whirlwinds tear :
The slender hut in fragments flew ; 230
But not a lock of Moy's loose hair
Was waved by wind or wet by dew.

Wild mingling with the howling gale,
Loud bursts of ghastly laughter rise ;
High o'er the minstrel's head they sail
And die amid the northern skies.

The voice of thunder shook the wood,
As ceased the more than mortal yell ;
And spattering foul a shower of blood
Upon the hissing firebrands fell. 240

Next dropped from high a mangled arm ;
The fingers strained an half-drawn blade :
And last, the life-blood streaming warm,
Torn from the trunk, a gasping head.

Oft o'er that head in battling field
Streamed the proud crest of high Ben-
more ;
That arm the broad claymore could wield
Which dyed the Teith with Saxon gore.

Woe to Moneira's sullen rills !
Woe to Glenfinlas' dreary glen ! 250
There never son of Albin's hills
Shall draw the hunter's shaft agen !

E'en the tired pilgrim's burning feet
At noon shall shun that sheltering den,
Lest, journeying in their rage, he meet
The wayward Ladies of the Glen.

And we — behind the chieftain's shield
No more shall we in safety dwell ;
None leads the people to the field —
And we the loud lament must swell. 260

O hone a rie' ! O hone a rie' !
The pride of Albin's line is o'er !
And fallen Glenartney's stateliest tree ;
We ne'er shall see Lord Ronald more !

THE EVE OF SAINT JOHN

This ballad was written in the autumn of 1799 at Mertoun House, and was first published in Monk Lewis's Tales of Wonder. Lockhart points out that it is the first of Scott's original pieces in which he uses the measure of his own favorite minstrels. The ballad was written at the playful request of Scott of Harden, who was the owner of the tower of Smailholm, when Walter Scott begged him not to destroy it.

THE Baron of Smaylho'me rose with day,
He spurred his courser on,

Without the lady stay, down the rocky way,
That led to his Brotherstone.

He went on with the bold Buccleuch
His banner broad to rear;
He went not 'gainst the English yew
To lift the Scottish spear.

Yet his plate-jack was braced and his helmet was laced,
And his vaunt-brace of proof he wore; so
At his saddle-gerthe was a good steel sperthe,
Full ten pound weight and more.

The baron returned in three days' space,
And his looks were sad and sour;
And weary was his courser's pace
As he reached his rocky tower.

He came not from where Ancram Moor
Ran red with English blood;
~~From the Douglas and the bold~~ ~~Baron~~
~~James Douglas and his friend,~~ 20

Yet was his helmet hacked and hewed,
His action pierced and tore.
His axe and his dagger with blood imbrued,—
But it was not English gore.

He fought at the Chapellage,
He held him close and still;
And he whistled thrice for his little foot-
page,
His name was English Will.

'Come thou hither, my little foot-page,
Come hither to my knee; 30
Though thou art young and tender of age.
I think thou art true to me.

'Come, tell me all that thou hast seen,
And look thou tell me true!
Since I from Smaytho'me tower have been,
What did thy lady do?'

'My lady, each night, sought the lonely
light
That burns on the wild Watchfold;
For from height to height the beacons
bright
Of the English foemen told. 40

'The bittern clamored from the moss,
Th' wind blew loud and shrill;
Yet the craggy pathway she did cross
To the airy Beacon Hill.

'I watched her steps, and silent came
Where she sat her on a stone;—
No watchman stood by the dreary flame,
It burn'd all alone.

'The second night I kept her in sight
Till to the fire she came, 50
And, by Mary's might, an armed knight
Stood by the lonely flame.

'And many a word that warlike lord
Did speak to my lady there;
But the rain fell fast and loud blew the blast,
And I heard not what they were.

'The third night there the sky was fair,
And the mountain-blast was still,
As again I watched the secret pair
On the lonesome Beacon Hill. 60

'And I heard her name the midnight hour,
And name this holy eve;
And say, "Come this night to thy lady's bower;
Ask no bold baron's leave.

"He lifts his spear with the bold Buccleuch;
His lady is all alone;
The door she'll undo to her knight so true
On the eve of good Saint John."

"I cannot come; I must not come;
I dare not come to thee; 70
On the eve of Saint John I must wander alone:
In thy bower I may not be."

"Now, out on thee, faint-hearted knight!
Thou shouldst not say me nay;
For the eve is sweet, and when lovers
meet
Is worth the whole summer's day.

"And I'll chain the blood-bound, and the
warder shall not sound,
And rushes shall be strewed on the stair;

So, by the Mark cross-stone and by holy Saint John,
I conjure thee, my love, to be there!"

"Though the blood-hound be mute and the rush beneath my foot,
And the wassler his tongue should not blow,

Yet there sleepeth a priest in the chamber to the east,
And my lordship he would know."

"O, fear not the priest who sleepeth to the east,
For to Dryburgh the way he has taken;
And there in any mass, till three days do
pass,
For the soul of a knight that is slain."

He turned him around and grimly he frowned;
Then he laughed right scornfully —
"He who says the mass-rite for the soul of that knight
May as well say mass for me!"

"At the hour midnight hour when back spirits have power
In the chamber will I be."
With that he was gone and my lady left
alone,
And no more did I see."

Then changed I twice was that bold
baron's baron
From the dark to the blood-red high;
Now, tell me the woe of the knight then last seen,
For, my Mary, he shall die!"

"His error should fall bright in the heaven's red light;
His place it was marked and done;
He has should see a heart in a silver leaf
bound,
And his crest was a branch of the yew."

"Then Hiss, then Hiss, then Hiss! Fast-nags,
I am down then lie to me!
For that knight is cold and low laid in the mud,
At under the Eldon-tree."

Yet hear but my <sup>howling</sup>
For I heard her <sup>laughte</sup> lord!
And that lady bright <sup>and the</sup> knight <sup>skilled the</sup>
Sir Richard of Coldingham

The bold baron's brow then changed, I trow,
From high blood-red to pale —
The grave is deep and dark — and the corpse is stiff and stark —
So I may not trust thy tale.

"Where fair Tweed flows round holy Melrose,
And Eldon slopes to the plain,
Full three nights ago by some secret foe
That gay gallant was slain."

"The varying light deceived thy sight,
And the wild winds drowned the name;
For the Dryburgh bells ring and the white monks do sing
For Sir Richard of Coldingham!"

He passed the court-gate and he oped the tower-gate,
And he mounted the narrow stair
To the bartizan-seat where, with maids that on her wait,
He found his lady fair.

That lady sat in mournful mood;
Looked over hill and vale;
There Terrell's fair Soul and Mertoun's
wood,
And all down Tervodale.

"Now had you bail, then lady bright!"
"Now had, then have true!"
"What news, what news, from Ancrum fight?"
"What news from the bold Buccleuch?"

"The Ancrum man is red with gore,
For many a Southern fell;
And Buccleuch has charged us evermore
To watch our houses well."

The lady blushed red, but nothing she
said
Nor added the tower a word.
Then she stepped down the stair to her chamber fair,
And as she sat, her mouth lay

In sleep the lady mourned, and the baron tossed and turned,
And oft to himself he said, —
'The worms around him creep, and his bloody grave is deep —
It cannot give up the dead !'

It was near the ringing of matin-bell,
The night was well-nigh done, 150
When a heavy sleep on that baron fell,
On the eve of good Saint John.

The lady looked through the chamber fair,
By the light of a dying flame;
And she was aware of a knight stood
— there — 160
Sir Richard of Coldingham!

'Alas ! away, away !' she cried,
'For the holy Virgin's sake !'
'Lady, I know who sleeps by thy side ;
But, lady, he will not awake. 160

'By Eildon-tree for long nights three
In bloody grave have I lain ;
The mass and the death-prayer are said
for me,
But, lady, they are said in vain.

'By the baron's brand, near Tweed's fair
strand,
Most foully slain I fell ;
And my restless sprite on the beacon's height
For a space is doomed to dwell.

'At our trysting-place, for a certain space,
I must wander to and fro ; 170
But I had not had power to come to thy
bower
Hadst thou not conjured me so.'

Love mastered fear — her brow she crossed ;
'How, Richard, hast thou sped ?
And art thou saved or art thou lost ?' 180
The vision shook his head !

'Who spilleth life shall forfeit life ;
So bid thy lord believe :
That lawless love is guilt above,
This awful sign receive. 180

He laid his left palm on an oaken beam,
His right upon her hand ;

The lady ahrunk and fainting sunk,
For it scorched like a fiery brand.

The sable score of fingers four
Remains on that board impressed ;
And forevermore that lady wore
A covering on her wrist.

There is a nun in Dryburgh bower
Ne'er looks upon the sun ; 190
There is a monk in Melrose tower
He speaketh word to none.

That nun who ne'er beholds the day,
That monk who speaks to none —
That nun was Smaylhome's lady gay,
That monk the bold baron.

THE GRAY BROTHER

A fragment written in 1799. 'The tradition,' says Scott, 'upon which the tale is founded, regards a house upon the barony of Gilmerton, near Lasswade, in Mid-lothian. This building, now called Gilmerton Grange, was originally named Burndale, from the following tragic adventure. The barony of Gilmerton belonged, of yore, to a gentleman named Heron, who had one beautiful daughter. This young lady was seduced by the Abbot of Newbattle, a richly endowed abbey upon the banks of the South Esk, now a seat of the Marquis of Lothian. Heron came to the knowledge of this circumstance, and learned also that the lovers carried on their guilty intercourse by the connivance of the lady's nurse, who lived at this house of Gilmerton Grange, or Burndale. He formed a resolution of bloody vengeance, undeterred by the supposed sanctity of the clerical character or by the stronger claims of natural affection. Choosing, therefore, a dark and windy night, when the objects of his vengeance were engaged in a stolen interview, he set fire to a stack of dried thorns, and other combustibles, which he had caused to be piled against the house, and reduced to a pile of glowing ashes the dwelling, with all its inmates.'

THE Pope he was saying the high, high mass
All on Saint Peter's day.
With the power to him given by the saints in heaven
To wash men's sins away.

The Pope he was saying the blessed mass,
And the people kneeled around,
And from each man's soul his sins did pass,
As he kissed the holy ground.

And all among the crowded throng
Was still, both limb and tongue,
While through vaulted roof and aisles aloof
The holy accents rung.

At the holiest word he quivered for fear,
And faltered in the sound —
And when he would the chalice rear
He dropped it to the ground.

'The breath of one of evil deed
Pollutes our sacred day;
He has no portion in our creed,
No part in what I say.

'A being whom no blessed word
To ghostly peace can bring.
A wretch at whose approach abhorred
Revered each holy thing.

'Up, up, unhappy! haste, arise!
My admiration fear!
I charge thee not to stop my voice,
Nor longer tarry here!'

Amid them all a pilgrim kneeled
In gown of sackcloth gray;
Far purveying from his native field,
He first saw Rome that day.

For forty days and nights so drear
I ween he had not spoke,
And, save with bread and water clear,
His fast he ne'er had broke.

Amid the penitential flock,
Secured none more bent to pray;
But when the Holy Father spoke
He rose and went his way.

Again unto his native land
His weary course he drew,
To Lothian's fair and fertile strand,
And Peggibank's mountains blue.

His noblest feet his native soil
Mid Esk's fair woods regain.
Through woods more fair no stream more sweet
Rolls to the eastern main.

And lords to meet the pilgrim came,
And vassals bent the knee;
For all mid Scotland's chiefs of fame
Was none more famed than he.

And boldly for his country still
In battle he had stood,
Ay, even when on the banks of Till
Her noblest poured their blood.

Sweet are the paths, O passing sweet!
By Eke's fair streams that run,
O'er airy steep through copsewood deep,
Impervious to the sun.

There the rapt poet's step may rove,
And yield the muse the day;
There Beauty, led by timid Love,
May shun the telltale ray;

From that fair dome where suit is paid
By blast of bugle free,
'To Auchendinny's hazel glade,
And haunted Woodhouselee.

Who knows not Melville's beechy grove
And Roslin's rocky glen,
Dalkeith, which all the virtues love,
And classic Hawthornden?

Yet never a path from day to day
The pilgrim's footsteps range,
Save but the solitary way
To Burnside's ruined grange.

A woful place was that, I ween,
As sorrow could desire;
For nodding to the fall was each crumbling
wall,
And the roof was swathed with fire.

It fell upon a summer's eve,
While on Carnegy's head
The last faint gleams of the sun's low beams
Had streaked the gray with red.

And the convent bell did vespers toll
Newbattle's oaks among,
And mingled with the solemn knell
Our Lady's evening song;

The heavy knell, the choir's faint swell,
Came slowly down the wind,

And on the pilgrim's ear they fell,
As his wonted path he did find.

Deep sunk in thought, I ween, he was,
Nor ever raised his eye,
Until he came to that dreary place
Which did all in ruins lie.

He gazed on the walls, so scathed with fire,
With many a bitter groan —
And there was aware of a Gray Friar <sup>75</sup> Resting him on a stone. <sub>100</sub>

'Now, Christ thee save!' said the Gray
Brother;
'Some pilgrim thou seemest to be.'
But in sore amaze did Lord Albert gaze,
Nor answer again made he.

'O, come ye from east or come ye from west,
Or bring reliques from over the sea;
Or come ye from the shrine of Saint James
the divine,
Or Saint John of Beverley?'

'I come not from the shrine of Saint James
the divine,
Nor bring reliques from over the sea; <sup>110</sup>
I bring but a curse from our father, the Pope,
Which forever will cling to me.'

'Now, woful pilgrim, say not so!
But kneel thee down to me,
And shrive thee so clean of thy deadly sin
That absolved thou mayst be.'

'And who art thou, thou Gray Brother,
That I should shrive to thee, <sup>120</sup>
When He to whom are given the keys of earth and heaven
Has no power to pardon me?'

'O, I am sent from a distant clime,
Five thousand miles away,
And all to absolve a foul, foul crime,
Done here 'twixt night and day.'

The pilgrim kneeled him on the sand,
And thus began his saye —
When on his neck an ice-cold hand
Did that Gray Brother laye.

THE FIRE-KING

The blessings of the evil Genil, which are curses, were upon him. — Eastern Tale.

This ballad, written in 1700, was published in Tales of Wonder. 'The story,' Scott says,
'is partly historical, for it is recorded that, during the struggles of the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem, a Knight Templar called Saint-Alban deserted to the Saracens, and defeated the Christians in many combats, till he was finally routed and slain in a conflict with King Baldwin, under the walls of Jerusalem.'

BOLD knights and fair dames, to my harp give an ear,
Of love and of war and of wonder to hear;
And you haply may sigh in the midst of your glee
At the tale of Count Albert and fair Rosalie.

O, see you that castle, so strong and so
high?
And see you that lady, the tear in her eye?
And see you that palmer from Palestine's
land,
The shell on his bat and the staff in his
hand? —

'Now, palmer, gray palmer, O, tell unto me,
What news bring you home from the Holy <sup>10</sup>
Countrie?
And how goes the warfare by Galilee's
strand?
And how fare our nobles, the flower of the
land?'

'O, well goes the warfare by Galilee's
wave,
For Gilend and Nablous and Ramah we have;
And well fare our nobles by Mount Lebanon,
For the heathen have lost and the Christians have won.'

A fair chain of gold mid her ringlets there
hung;
O'er the palmer's gray looks the fair chain
has she flung:
'O palmer, gray palmer, this chain be thy fee
For the news thou hast brought from the Holy Countrie. <sub>20</sub>

'And, palmer, good palmer, by Galilee's
wave,
O, saw ye Count Albert, the gentle and
brave ?

When the Crescent went back and the Redcross rushed on,

O, saw ye him foremost on Mount Lebanon ?

'O lady, fair lady, the tree green it grows ;
O lady, fair lady, the stream pure it flows ;
Your castle stands strong and your hopes near on high,

But, lady, fair lady, all blossoms to die.

'The green boughs they wither, the thunderbolt falls,

It leaves of your castle but levin-scorched walls :

The pure stream runs muddy ; the gay
hope is gone ;

Count Albert is prisoner on Mount Lebanon.

O, she 'a ta'en a horse should be fleet as her speed ;

And she 'a ta'en a sword should be sharp
at her need ;

And she has ta'en shipping for Palestine's
land.

To ransom Count Albert from Soldanrie's
hand.

Small thought had Count Albert on fair
Rouche,

Small thought on his faith or his knighthood had he

A heathenish damsel his light heart had
won,

The Soltan's fair daughter of Mount Lebanon.

'O Christian, brave Christian, my love wouldst thou be

Three things must thou do ere I mark thee to thee

One law and one worship on thou shalt then take :

And thou shalt first do for Zulema's
sake.

'And meet, in the cavern where darkness dwells

The mystical flame which the Christians adore.

Alone and in silence three nights shalt thou wake ;
And this thou shalt next do for Zulema's
sake.

'And last, thou shalt aid us with counsel
and hand,

To drive the Frank robber from Palestine's
land ;

For my lord and my love then Count
Albert I'll take,

When all this is accomplished for Zulema's
sake.'

He has thrown by his helmet and cross-
handled sword,

Renouncing his knighthood, denying his
Lord ;

He has ta'en the green caftan, and turban put on,

For the love of the maiden of fair Lebanon.

And in the dread cavern, deep deep under ground,

Which fifty steel gates and steel portals surround,

He has watched until daybreak, but sight
saw he none,

Save the flame burning bright on its altar of stone.

Amazed was the Princess, the Soldan amazed,

Soe murmured the priests as on Albert
they gazed :

They searched all his garments, and under his weeds

They found and took from him his rosary beads.

Again in the cavern, deep deep under
ground,

He watched the lone night, while the winds whistled round.

For all was that unnumbered of came and went nigh,

The flame burned unnumbered and unnumbered
what did he see.

And unnumbered the prayers and unnumbered was the long

While every dead spirit of those wildernesses threw up

They unnumbered Albert's name, and he " in his house."

Was the sign of the Cross by his father impressed.

The priests they erase it with care and
with pain,
And the recreant returned to the cavern
again;
But as he descended a whisper there fell :
It was his good angel, who bade him farewell !

High bristled his hair, his heart fluttered and beat,
And he turned him five steps, half resolved to retreat ;
But his heart it was hardened, his purpose
was gone,
When he thought of the maiden of fair
Lebanon. 85

Scarce passed he the archway, the threshold scarce trode,
When the winds from the four points of heaven were abroad,
They made each steel portal to rattle and
ring,
And borne on the blast came the dread
Fire-King.

Fall sore rocked the cavern whene'er he drew nigh,
The fire on the altar blazed bickering and
high ;
In volcanic explosions the mountains proclaim
The dreadful approach of the Monarch of Flame.

Unmeasured in height, undistinguished in form,
His breath it was lightning, his voice it was
storm ; 90
I ween the stout heart of Count Albert was tame,
When he saw in his terrors the Monarch of Flame.

In his hand a broad falchion blue-glim-mered through smoke,
And Mount Lebanon shook as the monarch
he spoke:
' With this brand shalt thou conquer, thus long and no more,
Till thou bend to the Cross and the Virgin
adore.'

The cloud-shrouded arm gives the weapon;
and see !

The recreant receives the charmed gift on his knee:

The thunders growl distant and faint
gleam the fires,
As, borne on the whirlwind, the phantom retires. 100

Count Albert has armed him the Paynim among,
Though his heart it was false, yet his arm
it was strong ;
And the Red-cross waxed faint and the Crescent came on,
From the day he commanded on Mount
Lebanon.

From Lebanon's forests to Galilee's wave,
The sands of Samsoor drank the blood of the brave ;
Till the Knights of the Temple and Knights of Saint John,
With Salem's King Baldwin, against him came on.

The war-cymbals clattered, the trumpets
replied,
The lances were couched, and they closed on each side ; 110
And horseman and horses Count Albert
o'erthrew,
Till he pierced the thick tumult King
Baldwin unto.

Against the charmed blade which Count
Albert did wield,
The fence had been vain of the king's Red-
cross shield ;
But a page thrust him forward the monarch before,
And cleft the proud turban the renegade
wore.

So fell was the dint that Count Albert stooped low
Before the crossed shield to his steel saddlebow ;
And scarce had he bent to the Red-cross his head, —
' Bonne Grace, Notre Dame ! ' he unwittingly said. 120

Sore sighed the charmed sword, for its virtue was o'er,

It sprung from his grasp and was never seen more;
But true men have said that the light-ning's red wing
Did waft back the brand to the dread Fire-
King.

He clenched his set teeth and his gaunt-
leted hand;
He stretched with one buffet that page on
the strand;
As back from the stripling the broken
casque rolled,
You might see the blue eyes and the ringlets of gold.

Short time had Count Albert in horror to stare
On those death-swimming eyeballs and blood-clotted hair; 130
For down came the Templars, like Cedron
in flood,
And dyed their long lances in Saracen
blood.

The Saracens, Curdmans, and Ishmaelites
yield
To the scallop, the saltier, and crossleted
shield;
And the eagles were gorged with the infidel dead
From Bethsaida's fountains to Naphthali's bead.

The battle is over on Bethsaida's plain. — O, who is yon Paynim lies stretched mid the slain?
And who is yon page lying cold at his knee? —
O, who but Count Albert and fair Rosa-
lio? 140

The lady was buried in Salem's blest
bound,
The count he was left to the vulture and
hound:
Her soul to high mercy Our Lady did
bring;
His went on the blast to the dread Fire-
King.

Yet many a minstrel in harping can tell
How the Red-cross it conquered, the Crescent it fell:

And lords and gay ladies have sighed mid their glee
At the tale of Count Albert and fair Rosa-
lio.

BOTHWELL CASTLE

A FRAGMENT

1799

WHEN fruitful Clydesdale's apple-bowers
Are mellowing in the noon;
When sighs round Pembroke's ruined
towers
The sultry breath of June;

When Clyde, despite his sheltering wood,
Must leave his channel dry,
And vainly o'er the limpid flood
The angler guides his fly;

If chance by Bothwell's lovely braes
A wanderer thou hast been,
Or hid thee from the summer's blaze
In Blantyre's bowers of green,

Full where the copsewood opens wild
Thy pilgrim step hath staid,
Where Bothwell's towers in ruin piled O'erlook the verdant glade;

And many a tale of love and fear
Hath mingled with the scene —
Of Bothwell's banks that bloomed so dear,
And Bothwell's bonny Jean.

O, if with rugged minstrel lays Unsated be thy ear,
And thou of deeds of other days
Another tale wilt hear, —

Then all beneath the spreading beech,
Flung careless on the lea,
The Gothic muse the tale shall teach
Of Bothwell's sisters three.

Wight Wallace stood on Deekmont head,
He blew his bugle round,
Till the wild bull in Cadyow wood
Has started at the sound.

Saint George's cross, o'er Bothwell hung,
Was waving far and wide,

from the lofty turret flung
A crimson blaze on Clyde ;

Rising at the bugle blast
That marked the Scottish foe,
England's yeomen mustered fast,
And bent the Norman bow.

In the midst Sir Aylmer rose, Proud Pembroke's Earl was he --
He -- . . . . .

THE SHEPHERD'S TALE

A FRAGMENT

1799

Ne'er but once, my son, he says,
In yon sad cavern trod,
Execution's iron days
On the land was left by God.

Bewlie bog with slaughter red
The wanderer hither drew,
When he stopt and turned his head,
The fit the night wind blew ;

Sampling round by Cheviot edge
He heard the troopers keen, 10
Requent from the Whitelaw ridge
A death-shot flashed between.

Moonbeams through the misty shower
In yon dark cavern fell ;
Though the cloudy night the snow gleamed
So white,
The sunbeam ne'er could quell.

The cavern dark is rough and rude, 15
And cold its jaws of snow ;
More rough and rude are the men of
Blood
That hunt my life below ! 20

A spell-bound den, as the aged tell,
Is hewn by demon's hands ;
And loud woe with the fiends of Hell
Is with Clavers and his band.

Heard the deep-mouthed bloodhound
Bark,
Heard the horses neigh,

He plunged him in the cavern dark,
And downward sped his way.

Now faintly down the winding path
Came the cry of the faulting hound, 30
And the muttered oath of balked wrath
Was lost in hollow sound.

He threw him on the flinted floor,
And held his breath for fear ;
He rose and bitter cursed his foes,
As the sounds died on his ear.

'O, bare thine arm, thou battling Lord,
For Scotland's wandering band ;
Dash from the oppressor's grasp the sword, 40
And sweep him from the land !

'Forget not thou thy people's groans
From dark Dunnotter's tower,
Mixed with the sea-fowl's shrilly moans
And ocean's bursting roar !

'O, in fell Clavers' hour of pride,
Even in his mightiest day,
As bold he strides through conquest's tide,
O, stretch him on the clay !

'His widow and his little ones,
O, may their tower of trust 50
Remove its strong foundation stones,
And crush them in the dust !'

'Sweet prayers to me,' a voice replied,
'Thrice welcome, guest of mine !'
And glimmering on the cavern side
A light was seen to shine.

An aged man in amice brown 55
Stood by the wanderer's side,
By powerful charm a dead man's arm
The torch's light supplied. 60

From each stiff finger stretched upright
Arose a ghastly flame,
That waved not in the blast of night
Which through the cavern came.

O, deadly blue was that taper's hue
That flamed the cavern o'er,
But more deadly blue was the ghastly hue
Of his eyes who the taper bore.

He laid on his head a hand like lead,
As heavy, pale, and cold — 70

• Vengeance be thine, thou guest of mine,
If thy heart be firm and bold.

• But if faint thy heart, and caitiff fear
Thy recreant sinews know,
The mountain crone thy heart shall tear,
Thy nerves the hooded crow.'

The wanderer raised him undismayed :
' My soul, by dangers steeled,
Is stubborn as my Border blade,
Which never knew to yield.

• And if thy power can speed the hour
Of vengeance on my foes,
Thou'rt be the fate from bridge and gate
To feed the hooded crows.

The hownig looked him in the face,
And his color fled with speed —
• I fear me,' quoth he, 'neath it will be
To watch thy word and deed.

• In ancient days when English hands
Sore ravaged Scotland fair,
The sword and shield of Scottish land
Was valiant Halbert Kerr.

• A carlack loved the warrior well,
No Maiden's Scout by name,
And he sought for her sake a spell to make,
Should the Southern women tame.

" Look thou," he said, " from Cragford
Is it

As the hills are clefts low,
And where glimmering white on Cheviot's
Is it

" How shall we a wreath of snow,
The south a summer which shall bring to
Is it

The daughter's name be."

And when a maid wrought the wound here
Is it

Is it the maid who was poor and in July's
Is it

Is it the maid who was poor and in July's
Is it

Is it the maid who was poor and in July's
Is it

Is it the maid who was poor and in July's
Is it

• But me and my brethren in this cell
His mighty charms retain, —
And he that can quell the powerful spell
Shall o'er broad Scotland reign.'

He led him through an iron door
And up a winding stair,
And in wild amaze did the wanderer gaze
On the sight which opened there.

Through the gloomy night flashed ruddy
light,
A thousand torches glow ;
The cave rose high, like the vaulted sky,
O'er stalls in double row.

In every stall of that endless hall
Stood a steed in barding bright ;
At the foot of each steed, all armed save
the head,
Lay stretched a stalwart knight.

In each mailed hand was a naked brand ;
As they lay on the black bull's hide, in Each visage stern did upwards turn
With eyeballs fixed and wide.

A lancegay strong, full twelve ells long,
By every warrior hung ;
At each pommel there for battle yare
A Jedwood are was slung.

The casque hung near each cavalier ;
The plumes waved mournfully
At every tread which the wanderer made
Through the hall of gramarye.

The radi's beam of the torches' gleam,
That gazed the warriors on,
Seduced light from armor bright,
In mountain splendor shone.

And around were in lustre shewn,
Still long, leaning on the sight,
Through the boundless hall stouid steeds
And to each lay a sable knight.

Still to the dead lay each horseman drea
And round were still the tongue ;
That was still as an earthfast cl
Nec had we trade rang.

No words through all the spacious hall
The dimly seen shewn,

late where echoes aloof from the vaulted roof
To the wanderer's step replied.

At length before his wondering eyes,
On an iron column borne,
Of antique shape and giant size
Appeared a sword and horn. 160

'Now choose thee here,' quoth his leader,
'Thy venturous fortune try;
Thy woe and weal, thy boot and bale,
In yon brand and bugle lie.'

To the fatal brand he mounted his hand,
But his soul did quiver and quail:
The life-blood did start to his shuddering
heart,
And left him wan and pale.

The brand he forsook, and the horn he took
To 'say a gentle sound; 170
But so wild a blast from the bugle brast
That the Cheviot rocked around.

From Forth to Tees, from seas to seas,
The awful bugle rung;
On Carlisle wall and Berwick withal
To arms the warders sprung.

With clank and clang the cavern rang,
The steeds did stamp and neigh;
And loud was the yell as each warrior
fell
Sterte up with whoop and cry. 180

'Woe, woe,' they cried, 'thou caitiff coward,
That ever thou wert born!
Why drew ye not the knightly sword
Before ye blew the horn?'

The morning on the mountain shone
And on the bloody ground,
Hurled from the cave with shivered bone,
The mangled wretch was found.

And still beneath the cavern dread
Among the glidders gray, 190
A shapeless stone with lichens spread
Marks where the wanderer lay.

CHEVIOT

A FRAGMENT

1799

Go sit old Cheviot's crest below,
And pensive mark the lingering snow
In all his scours abide,
And slow dissolving from the hill
In many a sightless, soundless rill,
Feed sparkling Bowmont's tide.

Fair shines the stream by bank and lea,
As wimpling to the eastern sea
She seeks Till's sullen bed,
Indenting deep the fatal plain
Where Scotland's noblest, brave in vain,
Around their monarch bled.

And westward hills on hills you see,
Even as old Ocean's mightiest sea
Heaves high her waves of foam,
Dark and snow-ridged from Cutsfeld's
wold
To the proud foot of Cheviot rolled,
Earth's mountain billows come.

FREDERICK AND ALICE

This tale, written in 1801, and published in Tales of Wonder, is imitated, rather than translated, says Scott, 'from a fragment introduced in Goethe's "Claudina von Villa Bella," where it is sung by a member of a gang of banditti, to engage the attention of the family, while his companions break into the castle.'

FREDERICK leaves the land of France,
Homeward hastes his steps to measure,
Careless casts the parting glance
On the scene of former pleasure.

Joying in his prancing steed,
Keen to prove his untried blade,
Hope's gay dreams the soldier lead
Over mountain, moor, and glade.

Helpless, ruined, left forlorn,
Lovely Alice wept alone, 20
Mourned o'er love's fond contract torn,
Hope, and peace, and honor flown.

Mark her breast's convulsive throbs !
 See, the tear of anguish flows ! —
 Mingling soon with bursting sobs,
 Loud the laugh of frenzy rose.

Wild she cursed, and wild she prayed ;
 Seven long days and nights are o'er ;
 Death in pity brought his aid,
 As the village bell struck four.

Far from her, and far from France,
 Faithless Frederick onward rides ;
 Marking blithe the morning's glance
 Mantling o'er the mountains' sides.

Heard ye not the boding sound,
 As the tongue of yonder tower,
 Slowly to the hills around
 Told the fourth, the fated hour ?

Starts the steed and snuffs the air,
 Yet no cause of dread appears ;
 Bristles high the rider's hair,
 Struck with strange mysterious fears.

Desperate, as his terrors rise,
 In the steed the spur he hides ;
 From himself in vain he flies ;
 Anxious, restless, on he rides.

Seven long days and seven long nights,
 Wild he wandered, woe the while !
 Ceaseless care and causeless fright
 Urge his footsteps many a mile.

Dark the seventh sad night descends ;
 Rivers swell and rain-streams pour,
 While the deafening thunder lends
 All the terrors of its roar.

Weary, wet, and spent with toil,
 Where his head shall Frederick hide ?
 Where, but in yon ruined aisle,
 By the lightning's flash descried.

To the portal, dank and low,
 Fast his steed the wanderer bound :
 Down a ruined staircase slow,
 Next his darling way he wound.

Long drear vaults before him lie !
 Glimmering lights are seen to glide ! —
 'Blessed Mary, hear my cry !
 Deign a sinner's steps to guide !'

Often lost their quivering beam,
 Still the lights move slow before,
 Till they rest their ghastly gleam
 Right against an iron door.

Thundering voices from within,
 Mixed with peals of laughter, rose ;
 As they fell, a solemn strain
 Lent its wild and wondrous close !

Midst the din he seemed to hear
 Voice of friends, by death removed ; —
 Well he knew that solemn air,
 'T was the lay that Alice loved. —

Hark ! for now a solemn knell
 Four times on the still night broke ;
 Four times at its deaden'd swell,
 Echoes from the ruins spoke.

As the lengthened clangors die,
 Slowly opes the iron door !
 Straight a banquet met his eye,
 But a funeral's form it wore !

Coffins for the seats extend ;
 All with black the board was spread ;
 Girt by parent, brother, friend,
 Long since number'd with the dead !

Alice, in her grave-clothes bound,
 Ghastly smiling, points a seat ;
 All arose with thundering sound ;
 All the expected stranger greet.

High their meagre arms they wave,
 Wild their notes of welcome swell ; —
 'Welcome, traitor, to the grave !
 Perjured, bid the light farewell !'

CADYOW CASTLE

ADDRESSED TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE
 LADY ANNE HAMILTON

This ballad was written in 1801 and included in the third volume of Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

WHEN princely Hamilton's abode
 Ennobled Cadyow's Gothic towers,
 The song went round, the goblet flowed,
 And revel sped the laughing hours.

Then, thrilling to the harp's gay sound,
So sweetly rung each vaulted wall,
And schooled light the dancer's bound.
As mirth and music cheered the hall.

But Cadyow's towers in ruins laid,
And vaults by ivy mantled o'er, 10
Thrill to the music of the shade,
Or echo Evan's hoarser roar.

Yet still of Cadyow's faded fame
You bid me tell a minstrel tale,
And tune my harp of Border frame
On the wild banks of Evandale.

For thou, from scenes of courtly pride,
From pleasure's lighter scenes, canst 20
turn.

To draw oblivion's pall aside
And mark the long-forgotten urn. 30

Thou, noble maid ! at thy command
Again the crumbled halls shall rise ;
Let as on Evan's banks we stand,
The past returns — the present flies.

Where with the rock's wood-covered side
Were blended late the ruins green,
Rise turrets in fantastic pride
And feudal banners flaunt between :

Where the rude torrent's brawling course
Was shagged with thorn and tangling 35
sloe,

The ashler buttress braves its force
And ramparts frown in battled row.

Tis night — the shade of keep and spire
Obscurely dance on Evan's stream ;
And on the wave the warder's fire
Is checkering the moonlight beam.

Fades slow their light ; the east is gray ;
The weary warder leaves his tower ;
Sceods snort, uncoupled stag-hounds bay,
And merry hunters quit the bower. 40

The drawbridge falls — they hurry out —
Clatters each plank and swinging chain,
As, dashing o'er, the jovial rout
Urge the shy steed and slack the rein.

First of his troop, the chief rode on ;
His shouting merry-men throng behind ;

The steed of princely Hamilton
Was fleetest than the mountain wind.

From the thick copse the roebucks bound,
The startled red-deer scuds the plain, 50
For the hoarse bugle's warrior-sound
Has roused their mountain haunts again.

Through the hage oaks of Evandale,
Whose limbs a thousand years have worn,
What sullen roar comes down the gale
And drowns the hunter's pealing horn ?

Mightiest of all the beasts of chase
That roam in woody Caledon,
Crashing the forest in his race, 55
The Mountain Bull comes thundering on.

Fierce on the hunter's quivered band
He rolls his eyes of swarthy glow,
Spurs with black hoof and horn the sand,
And tosses high his mane of snow.

Aimed well the chieftain's lance has flown ;
Struggling in blood the savage lies ;
His roar is sunk in hollow groan —
Sound, merry huntsmen ! sound the 60
pryse !

'Tis noon — against the knotted oak
The hunters rest the idle spear ; 70
Curls through the trees the slender smoke,
Where yeomen dight the woodland cheer.

Proudly the chieftain marked his clan,
On greenwood lap all careless thrown,
Yet missed his eye the boldest man
That bore the name of Hamilton.

' Why fills not Bothwellhaugh his place,
Still wont our weal and woe to share ?
Why comes he not our sport to grace ?
Why shares he not our hunter's fare ?' 80

Stern Claud replied with darkening face —
Gray Paisley's haughty lord was he —
' At merry feast or buxom chase
No more the warrior wilt thou see.

' Few suns have set since Woodhouselee Saw Bothwellhaugh's bright goblets 85
foam,
When to his hearths in social glee
The war-worn soldier turned him home.

'There, wan from her maternal throes,
His Margaret, beautiful and mild, 90
Sate in her bower, a pallid rose,
And peaceful nursed her new-born child.

'O change accursed ! past are those days ;
False Murray's ruthless spoilers came,
And, for the hearth's domestic blaze,
Ascends destruction's volumed flame.

'What sheeted phantom wanders wild
Where mountain Eake through woodland flows,
Her arms enfold a shadowy child —
O ! is it she, the pallid rose ? 100

'The wildered traveller sees her glide,
And hears her feeble voice with awe —
"Revenge," she cries, "on Murray's pride !
And woe for injured Bothwellhaugh !"

He ceased — and cries of rage and grief
Burst mingling from the kindred band,
And half arose the kindling chief,
And half unsheathed his Arran brand.

But who o'er bush, o'er stream and rock,
Rides headlong with resistless speed, 110
Whose bloody poniard's frantic stroke
Drives to the leap his jaded steed ;

Whose cheek is pale, whose eyeballs glare,
As one some visioned sight that saw,
Whose hands are bloody, loose his hair ? —
'T is he ! 't is he ! 't is Bothwellhaugh.

From gory selle and reeling steed
Sprung the fierce horseman with a bound,
And, reeking from the recent deed,
He dashed his carbine on the ground. 120

Sternly he spoke — 'T is sweet to hear
In good greenwood the hugh blown,
But sweeter to Revenge's ear
To drink a tyrant's dying groan.

'Your slaughtered quarry proudly trode
At dawning morn o'er dale and down,
But prouder base-born Murray rode Through old Linlithgow's crowded town.

'From the wild Border's humbled side,
In haughty triumph marched he, 130
While Knox relaxed his bigot pride
And smiled the traitorous pomp to see.

'But can stern Power, with all his vaunt,
Or Pomp, with all her courtly glare,
The settled heart of Vengeance daunt,
Or change the purpose of Despair ?

'With hackbut bent, my secret stand,
Dark as the purposed deed, I chose,
And marked where mingling in his band
Trooped Scottish pipes and English bows. 140

'Dark Morton, girt with many a spear, Murder's foul minion, led the van ;
And clashed their broadswords in the rear
The wild Macfarlanes' plaided clan.

'Glencairn and stout Parkhead were nigh,
Obsequious at their Regent's rein,
And haggard Lippesay's iron eye,
That saw fair Mary weep in vain.

'Mid pennoned spears, a steely grove, 150
Proud Murray's plumage floated high ;
Scarce could his trampling charger move,
So close the minions crowded nigh.

'From the raised vizor's shade his eye,
Dark-rolling, glanced the ranks along,
And his steel truncheon, waved on high,
Seemed marshalling the iron throng.

'But yet his saddened brow confessed
A passing shade of doubt and awe ;
Some fiend was whispering in his breast,
"Beware of injured Bothwellhaugh !"

'The death - shot parts ! the charge
springs ;
Wild rises tumult's startling roar !
And Murray's plumed helmet rings —
Rings on the ground to rise no more.

'What joy the raptured youth can feel,
To hear her love the loved one tell —
Or he who broaches on his steel
The wolf by whom his infant fell !

'But dearer to my injured eye
To see in dust proud Murray roll ; 160
And mine was ten times trebled joy
To hear him groan his felon soul.

'My Margaret's spectre glided near,
With pride her bleeding victim saw,

And shrieked in his death-deafened ear,
 'Remember injured Bothwellhaugh!'

'Then speed thee, noble Chatterault!
 Spread to the wind thy bannered tree!
 Each warrior bend his Clydesdale bow! —
 Murray is fallen and Scotland free!' 180

Vaults every warrior to his steed;
 Loud bugles join their wild acclaim —
 'Murray is fallen and Scotland freed!
 Couch, Arran, couch thy spear of flame!'

But see! the minstrel vision fails —
 The glimmering spears are seen no
 more;
 The shouts of war die on the gales,
 Or sink in Evan's lonely roar.

For the loud bugle pealing high,
 The blackbird whistles down the vale, 190
 And sunk in ivied ruins lie
 The bannered towers of Evandale.

For chiefs intent on bloody deed,
 And Vengeance shouting o'er the slain,
 Lo! high-born Beauty rules the steed,
 Or graceful guides the silken rein.

And long may Peace and Pleasure own
 The maids who list the minstrel's tale;
 Nor e'er a ruder guest be known
 On the fair banks of Evandale! 200

THE REIVER'S WEDDING

A FRAGMENT

1802

O, WILL ye hear a mirthful boud?
 Or will ye hear of courtesie?
 Or will ye hear how a gallant lord
 Was wedded to a gny ladye?

'Ca' out the kye,' quo' the village herd,
 As he stood on the knowe,
 'Ca' this ane's nine and that ane's ten,
 And bauld Lord William's cow.'

'Ab! by my sooth,' quoth William then,
 'And stands it that way now, 10
 When knave and churl have nine and ten,
 That the lord has but his cow?

'I swear by the light of the Michaelmas
 moon,
 And the night of Mary high,
 And by the edge of my bradsword brown,
 They shall soon say Harden's kye.'

He took a bugle frae his side,
 With names carved o'er and o'er —
 Full many a chief of meikle pride
 That Border bugle bore — 20

He blew a note baith sharp and hie
 Till rock and water ran around —
 Threescore of moss-troopers and three
 Have mounted at that bugle sound.

The Michaelmas moon had entered then,
 And ere she wan the full Ye might see by her light in Harden
 glen
 A bow o' kye and a bassened bull.

And loud and loud in Harden tower
 The quagh gaed round wi' meikle glee;
 For the English beef was brought in
 bower 30
 And the English ale flowed merrilie.

And mony a guest from Teyriotside
 And Yarrow's braes was there;
 Was never a lord in Scotland wide
 That made more dainty fare.

They ate, they laughed, they sang and
 quaffed,
 Till naught on board was seen,
 When knight and squire were bounne to
 dine,
 But a spur of silver sheen. 40

Lord William has ta'en his berry-brown
 steed —
 A sore shent man was he;
 'Wait ye, my guests, a little speed —
 Weel feasted ye shall be.'

He rode him down by Falsehope burn,
 His cousin dear to see,
 With him to take a riding turn —
 Wat-draw-the-Sword was he.

And when he came to Falsehope glen,
 Beneath the trysting-tree, 50
 On the smooth green was carved plain,
 'To Lochwood bound are we.'

'O, if they be gane to dark Lochwood
To drive the Warden's gear,
Betwixt our mines, I woen, there's feud;
I'll go and have my share:

'For little rock I for Johnstone's feud,
'The Warden though he be,'
So Lord William is away to dark Loch-
wood
With riders barely three.

The Warden's daughters in Lochwood sate,
Were all both fair and gay,
All save the Lady Margaret,
And she was wan and wae.

The sister Jean had a full fair skin,
And Grace was bauld and braw;
But the lout-fast heart her breast within
It woe was worth them a'.

Her father's pranked her sisters twa
With mickle joy and pride;
But Margaret mann seek Dundrennan's wa
She no'er can be a bride.

On spear and casque by gallants gent
Her sisters' scarfs were burne,
But never at tilt or tournament
Were Margaret's colors worn.

Her sisters rode to Thirstane bower,
But she was left at hame
To wander round the gloomy tower,
And sigh young Harvie's name.

'Am all the knights, the knight most fair
From Yarrow to the Tyne,
Soft sighs the maid, 'o Harvie's heir,
But ne'er can he be mine,

'Am all the maids, the fairest maid
From Yarrow to the Tyne,
Soft sighing said, that fair said,
'Can ne'er young Harvie's be'

She looked up the tower gleam,
And up the many stream,
And she saw a woe of her father's men
Bound to the Jedburgh green.

'I hear and see this downy side spread
The snow and heave away,

And in the midst the troopers led
A shackled knight along.

CHRISTIE'S WILL

The origin of this ballad is thus delivered by Scott: 'In the reign of Charles I., when the moss-trooping practices were not entirely discontinued, the tower of Gilnockie, in the parish of Cannoby, was occupied by William Armstrong, called, for distinction's sake, Christie's Will, a lineal descendant of the famous John Armstrong, of Gilnockie, executed by James V. The hereditary love of plunder had descended to this person with the family mansion; and upon some marauding party, he was seized, and imprisoned in the tolbooth of Jedburgh. The Earl of Traquair, Lord High Treasurer, happening to visit Jedburgh, and knowing Christie's Will, inquired the cause of his confinement. Will replied, he was imprisoned for stealing two telthers (halters); but, upon being more closely interrogated, acknowledged that there were two delicate colts at the end of them. The joke, such as it was, amused the Earl, who exerted his interest, and succeeded in releasing Christie's Will from bondage. Some time afterwards, a lawsuit, of importance to Lord Traquair, was to be decided in the Court of Session; and there was every reason to believe that the judgment would turn upon the voice of the presiding judge, who has a casting vote, in case of an equal division among his brethren. The opinion of the president was unfavourable to Lord Traquair, and the point was therefore, to keep him out of the way when the question should be tried. In this dilemma, the Earl had recourse to Christie's Will, who at once, offered his service to kidnap the president. Upon due reflection, he found it was the judge's practice frequently to take the air on horseback, in the hands of Smith without an attendant. In one of those excursions, Christie's Will, who had long watched his opportunity, ventured to accost the president, and engage him in conversation. His address and language were so winning, that he decoyed the president into an unsequented and turn common called the Fugate Whing, where, rising suddenly up to him, he pulled him from his horse, thrust him in a large cloak which he had prepared, and rode off with the luckless judge pressed up behind him. Will crossed the country with great expedition, he quitted Knowe Hill in possession of his discomfited, and deposited his victim and marched forward to an old castle, in Annandale called the Tower of Graham. The judge's horse being found it was concluded he had thrown his rider into the sea; his friends went into mourning, and a successor was appointed to his office. Meanwhile, the poor president spent a heavy time in the vault of the castle. He was imprisoned, and solitary; receiving his food through an aperture in the wall, and never hearing the sound of a human voice, save when a shepherd called his dog, by the name of Betty, and when a female domestic called upon Maudie, the cat. These, he concluded, were invocations of spirits; for he held himself to be in the dungeon of a sorcerer. At length, after three months had elapsed, the lawsuit was decided in favor of Lord Traquair; and Will was directed to set the president at liberty. Accordingly, he entered the vault at dead of night, seized the president, muffled him once more in the cloak, without speaking a single word, and, using the same mode of transportation, conveyed him to Leith sands, and set down the astonished judge on the very spot where he had taken him up. The joy of his friends, and the less agreeable surprise of his successor, may be easily conceived, when he appeared in court, to reclaim his office and honors. All embraced his own persuasion, that he had been spirited away by witchcraft; nor could he himself be convinced of the contrary, until, many years afterwards, happening to travel in Annandale, his ears were saluted once more with the sounds of Maudie and Betty — the only notes which had solaced his long confinement. This led to a discovery of the whole story; but, in those disorderly times, it was only laughed at, as a fair ruse de guerre.

Wild and strange as this tradition may seem, there is little doubt of its foundation in fact. The judge, upon whose person this extraordinary stratagem was practised, was Sir Alexander Gibson, Lord Durie, collector of the reports, well known in the Scottish law, under the title of Durie's Decisions. He was advanced to the station of an ordinary Lord of Session, 10th July, 1621, and died, at his own house of Durie, July, 1646. Betwixt these periods this whimsical adventure must have happened; a date which corresponds with that of the tradition.

The ballad thus patched and embroidered was included by Scott in that section of Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, which was given to modern imitations. The date may be set down as 1802.

TRAQUAIR has ridden up Chapelhope,
And sae has he down by the Grey Mare's
Tail;
He never stinted the light gallop,
Until he speered for Christie's Will.

Now Christie's Will peeped frae the tower,
And out at the shot-hole keeked he;
'And ever unlucky,' quo' he, 'is the hour,
That the Warden comes to speer for
me!'

'Good Christie's Will, now, have nae fear!
Nae harm, good Will, shall hap to thee:
I saved thy life at the Jeddart air,
At the Jeddart air frae the justice tree.

'Bethink how ye sware, by the salt and the bread,
By the lightning, the wind, and the rain,
That if ever of Christie's Will I had need,
He would pay me my service again.'

'Gramercy, my lord,' quo' Christie's Will,
'Gramercy, my lord, for your grace to
me!

When I turn my cheek, and claw my neck,
I think of Traquair and the Jeddart
tree.' 20

And he has opened the fair tower yate,
To Traquair and a' his companie;
The spule o' the deer on the board he has set,
The fattest that ran on the Hutton Lee.

'Now, wherefore sit ye sad, my lord?
And wherefore sit ye mournfullie?
And why eat ye not of the venison I shot,
At the dead of night on Hutton Lee?'

'O weel may I stint of feast and sport,
And in my mind be vexed sair! 30
A vote of the canker'd Session Court,
Of land and living will make me bare.

'But if auld Durie to heaven were flown,
Or if auld Durie to hell were gane,
Or . . . if he could be but ten days
stoun . . .
My bonny braid lands would still be my ain.'

'O, mony a time, my lord,' he said,
'I've stoun the horse frae the sleeping loon;
But for you I'll steal a beast as braid,
For I'll steal Lord Durie frae Edinburgh
toun.' 40

'O, mony a time, my lord,' he said,
 'I've stown a kiss frae a sleeping wench;
 But for you I'll do as kittle a deed,
 For I'll steal an auld lurdane aff the bench.'

And Christie's Will is to Edinburgh gane;
 At the Borough Muir then entered he;
 And as he passed the gallow-stane,
 He crossed his brow and he bent his knee.

He lighted at Lord Durie's door, 49
 And there he knocked most manfullie;
 And up and spake Lord Durie sae stour,
 'What tidings, thou stalward groom, to me?'

'The fairest lady in Teviotdale
 Has sent, maist reverent sir, for thee;
 She pleas at the Session for her land, a' bail,
 And fain she wad plead her cause to thee.'

'But how can I to that lady ride,
 With saving of my dignitie?'
 'O a curch and mantle ye may wear,
 And in my cloak ye sall muffled be.' 60

Wi' curch on head, and cloak ower face,
 He mounted the judge on a palfrey fyne;
 He rode away, a right round pace,
 And Christie's Will held the bridle reyn.

The Lothian Edge they were not o'er,
 When they heard bugles bauldly ring,
 And, hunting over Middleton Moor,
 They met, I ween, our noble King.

When Willie looked upon our King, 70
 I wot a frightened man was he!
 But ever auld Durie was startled mair,
 For tyning of his dignitie.

The King he crossed himself, iwis,
 When as the pair came riding bye —
 'An uglier crone, and a sturdier loon,
 I think, were never seen with eye!'

Willie has bied to the tower of Grame,
 He took auld Durie on his back,
 He shot him down to the dungeon deep,
 Which garred his auld banes gie mony a crack. 80

For nineteen days, and nineteen nights,
 Of sun, or moon, or midnight stern,
 Auld Durie never saw a blink,
 The lodging was sae dark and dern.

He thought the warlocks o' the rosy cross,
 Had fanged him in their nets sae fast;
 Or that the gipsies' glamour'd gang
 Had laired his learning at the last.

'Hey! Batty, lad! far yaud! far yaud!'
 These were the morning sounds heard
 he;
 And ever 'Alack!' auld Durie cried,
 'The de'il is hounding his tykes on me!' —

And whiles a voice on Baudrons cried,
 With sound uncouth, and sharp, and hie;
 'I have tar-barrelled mony a witch,
 But now, I think, they'll clear scores wi' me!'

The King has caused a bill be wrote,
 And he has set it on the Tron, —
 'He that will bring Lord Durie hack, 99
 Shall have five hundred merks and one.'

Traquair has written a privie letter,
 And he has sealed it wi' his seal, —
 'Ye may let the auld brock out o' the poke;
 The land's my ain, and a's gane weel.'

O Will has mounted his bonny black,
 And to the tower of Grame did trudge,
 And once again, on his sturdy back,
 Has he hente up the weary judge.

He brought him to the conneil stairs,
 And there full loudly shouted he, 110
 'Gie me my guerdon, my sovereign liege,
 And take ye back your auld Durie!'

THOMAS THE RHYMER

When Scott was engaged upon the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, he had a long and animated correspondence with the antiquarians Leyden and Ellis, over the productions of Thomas of Ercildoune, known by the appellation of The Rhymer. He purposed, at first, including the ballad of Sir Tristrem in the Minstrelsy, but the material illustrative and interpretative of it swelled to such dimensions that be finally issued in 1804, after the Minstrelsy had been completed, The Metrical Romance of Sir Tristram. Meanwhile, he had included in the Minstrelsy the following ballads under the general head of Thomas the Rhymer. Although the third only is wholly Scott's, it seems best to print in their sequence Part First, which is a traditional version, Part Second, which is altered from ancient prophecies, and Part Third, which is modern and Scott's own.

PART FIRST
TRADITIONAL VERSION

TRUE Thomas lay on Huntlie bank;
A ferlie he spied wi' his ee;
And there he saw a ladye bright,
Come riding down by the Eildon Tree.

Her shirt was o' the grass-green silk,
Her mantle o' the velvet fyne;
At ilka tett of her horse's mane,
Hung fifty siller bells and nine.

True Thomas, he pulled aff his cap,
And louted low down to his knee, 10
'All hail, thon mighty Queen of Heaven!
For thy peer on earth I never did see.' —

'O no, O no, Thomas,' she said,
'That name does not belang to me;
I am but the queen of fair Elfland,
That am hither come to visit thee.

'Harp and carp, Thomas,' she said;
'Harp and carp along wi' me;
And if ye dare to kiss my lips,
Sure of your bodie I will be.' — 20

'Betide me weal, betide me woe,
That weird shall never daunt me.' —
Syne he has kissed her rosy lips,
All underneath the Eildon Tree.

'Now, ye maun go wi' me,' she said;
'True Thomas, ye maun go wi' me;
And ye maun serve me seven years,
Thro' weal or woe as may chance to be.'

She mounted on her milk-white steed;
She's ta'en true Thomas up behind: 30
And aye, whene'er her bridle rung,
The steed flew swifter than the wind.

O they rade on, and farther on;
The steed gaed swifter than the wind;
Until they reached a desert wide,
And living land was left behind.

'Light down, light down, now, true
Thomas,
And lean your head upon my knee;
Abide and rest a little space,
And I will shew you ferlies three. 40

'O see ye not yon narrow road,
So thick beset with thorns and briers?
That is the path of righteousness,
Though after it but few enquires.

'And see ye not that braid braid road,
That lies across that lily leven?
That is the path of wickedness,
Though some call it the road to heaven.

'And see not ye that bonny road,
That winds about the fernie brae? 50
That is the road to fair Elfland,
Where thou and I this night maun gae.

'But, Thomas, ye maun hold your tongue,
Whatever ye may hear or see;
For, if you speak word in Elflin land,
Ye'll ne'er get back to your ain coun-trie.'

O they rade on, and farther on,
And they waded through rivers aboon
the knee,
And they saw neither sun nor moon,
But they heard the roaring of the sea. 60

It was mirk mirk night, and there was nae
stern light,
And they waded through red blude to
the knee;
For a' the blude that's shed on earth
Rins through the springs o' that countrie.

Syne they came on to a garden green,
And she pu'd an apple frae a tree —
'Take this for thy wages, true Thomas;
It will give thee the tongue that can never lie.'

'My tongue is mine ain,' true Thomas said;
'A gudely gift ye wad gie to me! 70
I neither dought to buy nor sell,
At fair or tryst where I may be.

'I dought neither speak to prince or peer,
Nor ask of grace from fair ladye.'
'Now hold thy peace!' the lady said,
'For as I say, so must it be.'

He has gotten a coat of the even cloth,
And a pair of shoes of velvet green;
And till seven years were gane and past,
True Thomas on earth was never seen. 80

PART SECOND

ALTERED FROM ANCIENT PROPHECIES

When seven years were come and gane,
The sun blinked fair on pool and stream;
And Thomas lay on Huntlie bank,
Like one awakened from a dream.

He heard the trampling of a steed,
He saw the flash of armor flee,
And he beheld a gallant knight
Come riding down by the Eildon-Tree.

He was a stalwart knight, and strong;
Of giant make he 'peared to be: 10
He stirred his horse, as he were wode,
Wi' gilded spurs, of faushion free.

Says — 'Well met, well met, true Thomas!
Some uncouth ferlies show to me.'
Says — 'Christ thee save, Corspatrick
brave
Thrice welcome, good Dunbar, to me!

'Light down, light down, Corspatrick
brave!
And I will show thee curses three,
Shall gar fair Scotland greet and grane,
And change the green to the black livery. 20

'A storm shall roar this very hour,
From Ross's Hills to Solway sea;
'Ye lied, ye lied, ye warlock hoar!
For the sun shines sweet on fauld and
lea.'

He put his hand on the Earlie's head;
He showed him a rock beside the sea,
Where a king lay stiff beneath his steed,
And steel-dight nobles wiped their ee.

'The neist curse lights on Branxton hills
By Flodden's high and heathery side,
Shall wave a banner red as blude,
And chieftains throng wi' meikle pride.

'A Scottish King shall come full keen,
The ruddy lion beareth he;
A feathered arrow sharp, I ween,
Shall make him wink and warre to see.

'When he is bloody, and all to bledde,
Thus to his men he still shall say —
"For God's sake, turn ye back again,
And give yon southern folk a fray!
Why should I lose the right is mine?
My doom is not to die this day."

'Yet turn ye to the eastern hand,
And woe and wonder ye sall see;
How forty thousand spearmen stand,
Where yon rank river meets the sea.

'There shall the lion lose the gylte,
And the libbards bear it clean away;
At Pinkyn Clench there shall be spilt
Much gentil bluid that day.'

'Enough, enough, of curse and ban;
Some blessings show thou now to me.
Or, by the faith o' my bodie,' Corspatrick
said,
'Ye shall rue the day ye e'er saw me!

'The first of blessings I shall thee show,
Is by a burn, that's called of bread,
Where Saxon men shall tine the bow,
And find their arrows lack the head.

'Beside that brigg, out ower that burn,
Where the water bickereth bright and sheen
Shall many a falling courser spurn,
And knights shall die in battle keen.

'Beside a headless cross of stone,
The libbards there shall lose the green;
The raven shall come, the erne shall go,
And drink the Saxon bluid sae free.
The cross of stone they shall not know,
So thick the corsees there shall be.'

'But tell me now,' said brave Dunbar,
'True Thomas, tell now unto me, at man shall rule the isle Britain, ven from the north to the southern sea ?'

French Queen shall bear the son, shall rule all Britain to the sea;
 of the Bruce's blood shall come,
 as near as in the ninth degree.

he waters worship shall his race;
 likewise the waves of the farthest
 sea;

they shall ride over ocean wide, 70
 With hempen bridles, and horse of tree.'

PART THIRD

an seven years more were come and
 gone,
 Was war through Scotland spread,
 I Ruberslaw showed high Danyon ✓
 His beacon blazing red.

an all by bonny Caldingknow, pitched pallions took their room,
 I crested helms, and spears a-rowe, blanced gaily through the broom.

le Leader, rolling to the Tweel, besmoke the enzenzie; 10
 by roused the deer from Caddenhead, to distant Torwoodlee.

feast was spread in Ereildoune,
 in Leatmont's high and ancient hall:
 there were knights of great renown,
 And ladies, laced in pall.

lacked they, while they sat at dine,
 The music nor the tale,
 goblets of the blood-red wine,
 For mantling quighs of ale. 20

Thomas rose, with harp in hand,
 When as the feast was done:
 minstrel strife, in Fairy Land,
 The elth harp he won.)

shed were the throng, both limb and tongue,
 And harpers for envy pale;
 I armed lords leanned on their swords,
 And hearkened to the tale.

In numbers high, the witching tale
 The prophet poured along; 30
 No after bard might e'er avail
 Those numbers to prolong.

Yet fragments of the lofty strain
 Float down the tide of years,
 As, buoyant on the stormy main,
 A parted wreck appears.

He sung King Arthur's Table Round:
 The Warrior of the Lake; 10
 How courteous Gawaine met the wound,
 And bled for ladies' sake. 40

But chief, in gentle Tristrem's praise,
 The notes melodious swell;
 Was none excelled in Arthur's days,
 The knight of Lionelle.

For Marke, his cowardly uncle's right,
 A venom'd wound he bore;
 When fierce Morhold'slew in fight,
 Upon the Irish shore.

No art the poison might withstand;
 No medicine could be found, 50
 Till lovely Isolde's hly hand
 Had probed the rankling wound.

With gentle hand and soothing tongue
 She bore the leech's part;
 And, while she o'er his sick-bed hung,
 He paid her with his heart.

O fatal was the gift, I ween !
 For, doomed in evil tide, 15
 The maid must be rude Cornwall's queen,
 His cowardly uncle's bride. 60

Their loves, their woes, the gifted bard
 In fairy tissue wove;
 Where lords, and knights, and ladies
 bright,
 In gay confusion strove.

The Garde Joyeuse, amid the tale,
 High reared its glittering head;
 And Avalon's enchanted vale
 In all its wonders spread.

Brangvain was there, and Sogramore,
 And fiend-born Merlin's gramarye; 70
 Of that famed wizard's mighty lore,
 O who could sing but he ?

Through many a maze the winning song
In changeeful passion led,
Till bent at length the listening throng
O'er Tristrem's dying bed.

His ancient wounds their scars expand,
With agony his heart is wrung:
O where is Isolde's lily hand,
And where her soothing tongue? 80

She comes! she comes! — like flash of
flame
Can lovers' footsteps fly:
She comes! she comes! — she only came
To see her Tristrem die.

She saw him die; her latest sigh
Joined in a kiss his parting breath;
The gentlest pair, that Britain bare,
United are in death.

There paused the harp: its lingering sound
Died slowly on the ear; 90
The silent guests still bent around,
For still they seemed to hear.

Then woe broke forth in murmurs weak,
Nor ladies heaved alone the sigh;
But, half ashamed, the rugged cheek
Did many a gauntlet dry.

On Leader's stream, and Learmont's tower,
The mists of evening close;
In camp, in castle, or in bower,
Each warrior sought repose. 100

Lord Douglas, in his lofty tent,
Dreamed o'er the woful tale;
When footsteps light, across the bent,
The warrior's ear assail.

He starts, he wakes; — 'What, Richard, ho!
Arise, my page, arise!
What venturous night, at dead of night,
Dare step where Douglas lies!' —

Then forth they rushed: by Leader's tide,
A reveling sight they see — 110
A hart and hind pace side by side,
As white as snow on Farnahie.

Beneath the moon, with gesture proud,
They stately move and slow;

Nor scare they at the gathering crowd,
Who marvel as they go.

To Learmont's tower a message sped,
As fast as page might run;
And Thomas started from his bed,
And soon his clothes did on.

First he woxe pale, and then woxe red;
Never a word he spake but three; —
'My sand is run; my thread is spun;
This sign regardeth me.'

The elfin harp his neck around,
In minstrel guise, he hung;
And on the wind, in doleful sound,
Its dying accents rung.

Then forth he went; yet turned him oft
To view his ancient hall:
On the grey tower, in lustre soft,
The autumn moonbeams fall;

And Leader's waves, like silver sheen,
Danced shimmering in the ray;
In deepening mass, at distance seen,
Broad Soltra's mountains lay.

'Farewell, my father's ancient tower!
A long farewell,' said he:
'The scene of pleasure, pomp, or power,
Thou never more shalt be.'

'To Learmont's name no foot of earth
Shall here again belong,
And, on thy hospitable hearth,
The hare shall leave her young.'

'Adieu! adieu!' again he cried,
All as he turned him roun' —
'Farewell to Leader's silver tide!
Farewell to Ercildoune!'

The hart and hind approached the place,
As lingering yet he stood;
And there, before Lord Douglas' face,
With them he crossed the flood.

Lord Douglas leaped on his ~~berry-hay~~
steed
And spurred him the Leader o'er;
But, though he rode with lightning speed,
He never saw them more.

Some said to hill, and some to glen,
Their wondrous course had been;
But ne'er in haunts of living men
Again was Thomas seen.

160

THE BARD'S INCANTATION

In the autumn of 1804, Scott was with his wife at Gilsland, where they had first met, when he received intelligence which led him to believe that a French force was about to land in Scotland. He at once rode, within twenty-four hours, a hundred miles to Dalkeith, where his troop was to rendezvous, and it was on this ride that he composed the following poem.

The forest of Glenmore is drear,
It is all of black pine and the dark oak-tree;
And the midnight wind to the mountain deer
Is whistling the forest lullaby:
The moon looks through the drifting storm,
But the troubled lake reflects not her form,
For the waves roll whitening to the land,
And dash against the shelvy strand.

There is a voice among the trees
That mingles with the groaning oak —
That mingles with the stormy breeze,
And the lake-waves dashing against the rock; —
There is a voice within the wood,
The voice of the bard in fitful mood;
His song was louder than the blast,
As the bard of Glenmore through the forest past.

'Wake ye from your sleep of death,
Minstrels and bards of other days!
For the midnight wind is on the heath,
And the midnight meteors dimly blaze:
The Spectre with his Bloody Hand
Is wandering through the wild wood-land;
The owl and the raven are mute for dread,
And the time is meet to awake the dead!

'Souls of the mighty, wake and say
To what high strain your harps were strung,
When Lochlin ploughed her billowy way

And on your shores her Norsemen flung?
Her Norsemen trained to spoil and blood,
Skilled to prepare the raven's food,
All by your harpings doomed to die
On bloody Largs and Luncarty.

'Mute are ye all? No murmurs strange
Upon the midnight breeze sail by,
Nor through the pines with whistling change
Mimic the harp's wild harmony!
Mute are ye now? — Ye ne'er were mute
When Murder with his bloody foot,
And Rapine with his iron hand,
Were hovering near yon mountain strand.

'O, yet awake the strain to tell,
By every deed in song enrolled,
By every chief who fought or fell,
For Albion's weal in battle bold: —
From Coilgach, first who rolled his car
Through the deep ranks of Roman war,
To him of veteran memory dear
Who victor died on Aboukir.

'By all their swords, by all their scars,
By all their names, a mighty spell!
By all their wounds, by all their wars,
Arise, the mighty strain to tell!
For fiercer than fierce Hengist's strain,
More impious than the heathen Dane,
More grasping than all-grasping Rome,
Gaul's ravening legions hither come!

The wind is hushed and still the lake —
Strange murmurs fill my tinkling ears,
Bristles my hair, my sinews quake,
At the dread voice of other years —
'When targets clashed and bugles rung,
And blades round warriors' heads were flung,
The foremost of the band were we
And hymned the joys of Liberty!

HELLVELLYN

'In the spring of 1805,' says Scott, 'a young gentleman of talents, and of a most amiable disposition, perished by losing his way on the mountain Hellvellyn. His remains were not discovered till three months afterwards, when they were found guarded by a faithful terrier-bitch, his constant attendant during frequent solitary rambles through the wilds of Cumberland and Westmoreland.' The poem was written at the time.

I CLIMBED the dark brow of the mighty
 Hellvellyn,
 Lakes and mountains beneath me
 gleamed misty and wide;
 All was still save by fits, when the eagle
 was yelling,
 And starting around me the echoes replied.
 On the right, Striden-edge round the Redtarn was bending,
 And Catchedicam its left verge was defending,
 One huge nameless rock in the front was ascending,
 When I marked the sad spot where the wanderer had died.

Dark green was that spot mid the brown
 mountain heather,
 Where the Pilgrim of Nature lay stretched in decay,
 Like the corpse of an outcast abandoned to weather
 Till the mountain-winds wasted the ten-antless clay.
 Nor yet quite deserted, though lonely extended,
 For, faithful in death, his mute favorite attended,
 The much-loved remains of her master
 defended,
 And chased the hill-fox and the raven
 away.

How long didst thou think that his silence was slumber?
 When the wind waved his garment, how oft didst thou start?
 How many long days and long weeks didst
 thou number,

Ere he faded before thee, the friend of thy heart?
 And O, was it meet that — no requiem
 read o'er him,
 No mother to weep and no friend to deplore him,
 And thou, little guardian, alone stretched before him —
 Unhonored the Pilgrim from life should depart?

When a prince to the fate of the peasant
 has yielded,
 The tapestry waves dark round the dim-
 lighted hall;
 With scutcheons of silver the coffin is shielded,
 And pages stand mute by the canopied
 pall:
 Through the courts at deep midnight the torches are gleaming;
 In the proudly arched chapel the banners
 are beaming;
 Far adown the long aisle sacred music is streaming,
 Lamenting a chief of the people should fall.

But meeter for thee, gentle lover of nature,
 To lay down thy head like the meek
 mountain lamb,
 When wildered he drops from some cliff
 huge in stature,
 And draws his last sob by the side of his dam.

And more stately thy couch by this desert lake lying,
 Thy obsequies sung by the gray plover fly-
 ing,
 With one faithful friend but to witness thy dying
 In the arms of Hellvellyn and Catchedicam.

THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

When Scott was collecting material for the third volume of The Border Minstrelsy, he wrote to Miss Seward that he meant to include in it a 'sort of Romance of Border chivalry and Enchantment,' and when giving the same information to Mr. George Ellis, he adds that it 'is in a light-horseman sort of stanza.' In his Introduction which follows below, Scott gives an account of the genesis of the poem and the circumstances of attending the first trial. He was wont to speak lightly of his verse, and it was with no affectation of modesty that he wrote to Miss Seward: 'Was all the time I wasted upon the Lay put together, — for it was laid aside for long intervals, — I am sure it would not exceed six weeks.' The last canto was written in three forenoons when I was living in quarters with our yeomanry. I leave it with yourself to guess how little I can have in my most distant imagination to place myself upon a level with the great Barls you have mentioned, the very latches of whose shoes neither Southey nor I are worthy to unlatch.' As the first considerable poem of Scott's own composition, it has a further interest, often attaching to first productions, from the veiled autobiographic element, for Lockhart says that it distinctly refers to a secret attachment which Scott cherished 'from almost the dawn of the passion.' 'This — (however he may have disguised the story by mixing it up with the Quaker adventure of the damsel in the green mantle) — this was the early and transient affection to which we owe the tenderest notes, not only of Redgauntlet, but of The Lay of the Last Minstrel, and of Rivky, and which found its first poetic expression in the little poem 'The Violet.' In all of these works the heroine has certain distinctive features, lower than one and the same haunting dream of the maiden's adolescence.' A more explicit reference will be found in the head-note to The Minstrel, page 7.

In the Introduction Scott treats the poem as a part of the literary history. He wrote the poem a quarter of a century after the publication of the poem, and it is a pleasure to read and compare with it the more familiar composition of the Lay, which he sends at the time of its publication to the freedom of correspondence to Miss Seward.

'EDINBURGH, 21st March, 1805.

'MY DEAR MISS SEWARD, — I am truly happy that you found any amusement in The Lay of the Last Minstrel. It has great faults, of which no one can be more sensible than I am myself. Above all, it is deficient in that sort of continuity which a story ought to have, and which, were it to write again, I would endeavour to give it. But I began and wandered forward, like one in a pleasant country, getting to the top of one hill to see a prospect, and to the bottom of another to enjoy a shade, and what wonder if my course has been deviant and desultory, and many of my excursions altogether unprofitable to the advance of my journey? The Dwarf Page is also an excursive, and I plead guilty to all the censures concerning him. The truth is he has a history, and it is this: The story of Gylfin Hornet was told by an old gentleman to Lady Dalkeith, and she, much diverted with his act, really believing so grotesque a tale, insisted that I should make it into a Border ballad. I don't know if ever you saw my lovely chieftainess — if you have, you must be aware that it is impossible for any one to refuse her request, as she has more of the angel in face and temper than any one alive; so that if she had asked me to write a ballad on a broomstick, I must have attempted it. I began a few verses to be called "The Goblin Page," and they lay long by me, till the applause of some friends whose judgment I valued induced me to resume the poem; so on I wrote, knowing no more than the man in the moon how I was to end. At length the story appeared so unsmooth, that I was fain to put it into the mouth of my old Minstrel — but the nature of it should be misunderstood, and I should be suspected of setting up a new school of poetry, instead of a feeble attempt to imitate the old. In the process of the romance, the page, intended to be a principal person in the work, contrived (from the baseness of his natural propensities, I suppose) to sink down stairs into the kitchen, and now he must abide there.

'I mention these circumstances to you, and to any one whose applause I value, because I am unwilling you should suspect me of trifling with the public in malice propense. As to the hard of critics, it is impossible for me to pay much attention to them, for, as they do not understand what I call poetry, we talk in a foreign language to each other. Indeed, many of these gentlemen appear to me to be a sort of Bishops, who unable to make pots and pans, set up for menders of them, and, God knows, often make two holes in patching one. The sixth canto is altogether redundant; for the poem should certainly have closed with the union of the lovers, when the interest, if any, was at an end. But what could I do? I had my book and my page still in my hands and must get rid of them at all events. Manage them as I would, those catastrophe must have been insufficient to occupy an entire canto; so I was fain to chuck it out with the songs of the minstrels. I will now descend from the confessional, which I think I have occupied long enough for the purposes of my fair confessor. I am happy you are disposed to give me absolution, notwithstanding all my sins' . . .

Scott refers in his Introduction to the immediate success of his venture, and Lockhart supplies details which substantiate his statement that 'in the history of British Poetry nothing had ever equalled the demand for The Lay of the Last Minstrel.' The success unquestionably confirmed Scott in his resolution to devote himself to the literary life, yet it is interesting to note how persistently he held to his theoretical doctrine that literature should be a subsidiary means of support, as he so puts it, a staff and not a crutch. It was while urging again this doctrine in a letter to Crabbe in 1812 that he lets fall the fact, nowhere else referred to by him, that he wrote The Lay of the Last Minstrel for the purpose of buying a new house for the Valentin Cavalier.

When first published early in January, 1805, the poem was introduced by the following Preface —

INTRODUCTION

A poem of nearly thirty years' standing may be supposed hardly to need an Introduction; since, without one, it has been able to keep itself afloat through the best part of a generation. Nevertheless, as in the edition of the Waverley Novels was in course of publication, 1830, I have imposed on myself the task of saying something concerning the purposes and history of such a little work. I am conscious that the Poem, for which I have received some thanks in the press, have should also be accompanied with such scraps of other literary

In this page, written in the 1830 edition of the Waverley Novels, Scott gives an account of the circumstances attending the writing of The Lay of the Last Minstrel.

'The poem, now offered to the Public, is intended to illustrate the customs and manners which anciently prevailed on the Borders of England and Scotland. The inhabitants living in a state partly pastoral and partly warlike, and combining habits of constant depredation with the influence of a rude spirit of chivalry, were often engaged in scenes highly susceptible of poetical ornament. As the description of scenery and manners was more the object of the Author than a combined and regular narrative, the plan of the Ancient Metrical Romance was adopted, which allows greater latitude, in this respect, than would be consistent with the dignity of a regular Poem. The same model offered other facilities, as it permits an occasional alteration of measure, which, in some degree, authorizes the change of rhythm in the text. The machinery, also, adopted from popular belief, would have seemed puerile in a Poem which did not partake of the rudeness of the old Ballad, or Metrical Romance.

For these reasons, the Poem was put into the mouth of an ancient Minstrel, the last of the race, who, as he is supposed to have survived the Revolution, might have caught somewhat of the refinement of modern poetry, without losing the simplicity of his original model. The date of the Tale itself is about the middle of the sixteenth century, when most of the personages actually flourished. The time occupied by the action is Three Nights and Three Days.

When Cadell took hold of the publication of Sir Walter's writings, he projected that reissue in uniform style of the prose and poetry, with introductions by the author, which resulted in the extraordinary sale, by which Scott's debts were paid and the fortunes of the author put on a firm foundation. It was for this edition of 1830 that Scott furnished the following — history as may be supposed to carry interest along with them. Even if I should be mistaken in thinking that the secret history of what was done so popular may still attract public attention and curiosity, it seems to me not without its use to reveal the manner and circumstances under which the present, and other Poems on the same plan, attained for a season an extensive reputation.

I must reserve the story of my literary labors at the period at which I break off in the History of the Introduction of Popular Poetry.

For the Waverley Novels and The Lay of the Last Minstrel brought me in 1805 under the title of Waverley, Scott drew a great sum to the publishers, at an enormous valuation of when I had enjoyed the first gleam of public favor, by the success of the first edition of the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border. The second edition of that work, published in 1803, proved, in the language of the trade, rather a heavy concern. The demand in Scotland had been supplied by the first edition, and the curiosity of the English was not much awakened by poems in the rude garb of antiquity, accompanied with notes referring to the obscure legends of barbarous climes, of whose very names civilized history was ignorant. It was, on the whole, one of those books which are more prized than they are read.

At this time I stood personally in a different position from that which I occupied when I first dipped my desperate pen in ink for other purposes than those of my profession. In 1796, when I first published the translations from Burger, I was an insulated individual, with only my own wants to provide for, and having, in a great measure, my own inclinations alone to consult. In 1803, when the second edition of the Minstrelsy appeared, I had arrived at a period of life when men, however thoughtless, encounter duties and circumstances which press consideration and plans of life upon the most careless minds. I had been for some time married, — was the father of a rising family, and, though fully enabled to meet the consequent demands upon me, it was my duty and desire to place myself in a situation which would enable me to make honorable provision against the various contingencies of life.

It may be readily supposed that the attempts which I had made in literature had been unfavorable to my success at the bar. The goddess Themis is, at Edinburgh, and I suppose everywhere else, of a peculiarly jealous disposition. She will not readily consent to share her authority, and sternly demands from her votaries, not only that real duty be carefully attended to and discharged, but that a certain air of business shall be observed even in the midst of total idleness. It is prudent, if not absolutely necessary, in a young barrister, to appear completely engrossed by his profession: however leisure of employment he may in reality be at night to preserve, if possible, the appearance of full occupation. He should, therefore, even perpetually engaged among his law-papers, tugging them, as it were, and, as André always tugs.

* Si audire est pariter, tacere cuncto militem.

Perhaps such activity of attention is more especially required, considering the great number of counsellors who are called to the bar, and how very small a proportion of them are finally disposed, or find encouragement, to follow the law as a profession. Hence the number of deserters is so great that the least lingering look behind occasions a young novice to be set down as one of the intending fugitives. Certain it is, that the Scottish Themis was at this time peculiarly jealous of any flirtation with the Muses, on the part of those who had ranged themselves under her banners. This was probably owing to her consciousness of the superior attractions of her rivals. Of late, however, she has relaxed in some instances in this particular, an eminent example of which has been shown in the case of my friend Mr. Jeffrey, who, after long conducting one of the most influential literary periodicals of the age with unquestionable ability, has been, by the general consent of his brethren, recently elected to be their Dean of Faculty, or President, — being the highest acknowledgment of his professional talents which they had it in their power to offer.<sup>2</sup> But this is an incident much beyond the ideas of a period of thirty years' distance, when a barrister who really possessed any turn for lighter literature was at as much pains to conceal it as if it had in reality been something to be ashamed of; and I could mention more than one instance in which literature and anxiety have suffered much loss that jurisprudence might be enriched.

Such, however, was not my case; for the reader will not wonder that my open interference with matters of light literature diminished my employment in the weightier matters of the law. Nor did the adherents, upon whose choice the counsel takes rank in his profession, do me less than justice, by regarding others among my contemporaries as fitter to discharge the duty due to their clients, than a young man who was taken up with running after ballads, whether Teutonic or national. My profession and I, therefore, came to stand nearly upon the footing which honest Slender consoling himself on having established with Mistress Anne Page. 'There was no great love between us at the beginning, and it pleased Heaven to decrease it on farther acquaintance.' I became sensible that the time was come when I must either buckle myself resolutely to the 'coil by law, the lamp by night,' consuming all the Delilahs of my imagination or adorning to the profession of the law, and hold another course.

<sup>1</sup> 'If that be none, yet brush that none away.'

<sup>2</sup> Jeffrey conducted the Edinburgh Review between 1807 and 1810. He retired to the law before 1810, and was elected Dean of the Faculty of Advocates.

under certain circumstances, of his first attempts at ballad poetry. Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, printed in 1803, under the name of Border Minstrelsy, and of his first journey across a low Minstrelsy of the

W. J. B.

I confess my own inclination revolted from the more severe choice, which might have been deemed by many the wiser alternative. As my transgressions had been numerous, my repentance must have been signalized by unusual sacrifices. I ought to have mentioned that since my fourteenth or fifteenth year my health, originally delicate, had become extremely robust. From infancy I had labored under the infirmity of a severe lameness; but, as I believe is usually the case with men of spirit who suffer under personal inconveniences of this nature, I had, since the improvement of my health, in defiance of this incapacitating circumstance, distinguished myself by the endurance of toil on foot or horseback, having often walked thirty miles a day, and rode upwards of a hundred, without resting. In this manner I made many pleasant journeys through parts of the country then not very accessible, gaining more amusement and instruction than I have been able to acquire since I have travelled in a more commodious manner. I practised most sylvan sports also, with some success and with great delight. But these pleasures must have been all resigned, or used with great moderation, had I determined to regain my station at the bar. It was even doubtful whether I could, with perfect character as a juriconsult, retain a situation in a volunteer corps of cavalry, which I then held. The threats of invasion were at this time instant and menacing; the call by Britain on her children was universal, and was answered by some, who like myself, consulted rather their desire than their ability to bear arms. My services, however, were found useful in assisting to maintain the discipline of the corps, being the point on which their constitution rendered them most amenable to military criticism. In other respects the squadron was a fine one, consisting chiefly of handsome men, well mounted and armed at their own expense. My attention to the corps took up a good deal of time; and while it occupied many of the happiest hours of my life, it furnished an additional reason for my reluctance again to encounter the severe course of study indispensable to success in the juridical profession.

On the other hand, my father, whose feelings might have been hurt by my quitting the bar, had been for two or three years dead, so that I had no control to thwart my own inclination; and my income being equal to all the comforts, and some of the elegancies, of life, I was not pressed to an irksome labor by necessity, that most powerful of motives; consequently, I was the more easily seduced to choose the employment which was most agreeable to me. This was yet the easier, that in 1800 I had obtained the preferment of Sheriff of Selkirkshire, about £300 a year in value, and which was the more agreeable to me as in that county I had several friends and relations. But I did not abandon the profession to which I had been educated without certain prudential resolutions, which, at the risk of some egotism, I will here mention; not without the hope that they may be useful to young persons who may stand in circumstances similar to those in which I then stood.

In the first place, upon considering the lives and fortunes of persons who had given themselves up to literature, or to the task of pleasing the public, it seemed to me that the circumstances which chiefly affected their happiness and character were those from which Horace has bestowed upon authors the epithet of the Irritable Race. It requires no depth of philosophic reflection to perceive that the petty warfare of Pope with the Dunces of his period could not have been carried on without his suffering the most acute torture, such as a man must endure from mosquitoes, by whose stings he suffers agony, although he can crush them in his grasp by myriads. Nor is it necessary to call to memory the many humiliating instances in which men of the greatest genius have, to avenge some pitiful quarrel, made themselves ridiculous during their lives, to become the still more degraded objects of pity to future times.

Upon the whole, as I had no pretension to the genius of the distinguished persons who had fallen into such errors, I concluded there could be no occasion for imitating them in their mistakes, or what I considered as such; and, in adopting literary pursuits as the principal occupation of my future life, I resolved, if possible, to avoid those weaknesses of temper which seemed to have most easily beset my more celebrated predecessors.

With this view, it was my first resolution to keep as far as was in my power abreast of society, continuing to maintain my place in general company, without yielding to the very natural temptation of narrowing myself to what is called literary society. By doing so, I imagined I should escape the besetting sin of listening to language which, from one motive or other, is apt to ascribe a very undue degree of consequence to literary pursuits, as if they were, indeed, the business, rather than the amusement, of life. The opposite course can only be compared to the injudicious conduct of one who pampers himself with cordial and luscious draughts, until he is unable to endure wholesome bitters. Like Gil Blas, therefore, I resolved to stick by the society of my commis, instead of seeking that of a more literary cast, and to maintain my general interest in what was going on around me, reserving the man of letters for the desk and the library.

AUTHOR'S INTRODUCTION

My second resolution was a corollary from the first. I determined that, without shutting my ears to the voice of true criticism, I would pay no regard to that which assumes the form of satire. I therefore resolved to arm myself with that triple brass of Horace, of which those of my profession are seldom held deficient, against all the raving warfare of satire, parody, and sarcasm; to laugh if the jest was a good one, or, if otherwise, to let it hum and buzz itself to sleep.

It is to the observance of these rules (according to my best belief) that, after a life of thirty years engaged in literary labors of various kinds, I attribute my never having been entangled in any literary quarrel or controversy; and, which is a still more pleasing result, that I have been distinguished by the personal friendship of my most approved contemporaries of all parties.

I adopted, at the same time, another resolution, on which it may doubtless be remarked that it was well for me that I had it in my power to do so, and that, therefore, it is a line of conduct which, depending upon accident, can be less generally applicable in other cases. Yet I fail not to record this part of my plan, convinced that, though it may not be in every one's power to adopt exactly the same resolution, he may nevertheless, by his own exertions, in some shape or other, attain the object on which it was founded, namely, to secure the means of subsistence, without relying exclusively on literary talents. In this respect, I determined that literature should be my staff, but not my crutch, and that the profits of my literary labor, however convenient otherwise, should not if I could help it, become necessary to my ordinary expenses. With this purpose I resolved, if the interest of my friends could so far favor me, to retire upon any of the respectable offices of the law, in which persons of that profession are glad to take refuge, when they feel themselves, or are judged by others, incompetent to aspire to its higher honors. Upon such a post an author might hope to retreat, without any perceptible alteration of circumstances, whenever the time should arrive that the public grew weary of his endeavors to please, or he himself should tire of the pen. At this period of my life, I possessed so many friends capable of assisting me in this object of ambition, that I could hardly overrate my own prospects of obtaining the preferment to which I limited my wishes; and, in fact, I obtained, in no long period, the conversion of a situation which was completely met them.

Thus far all was well, and the Author had been guilty, perhaps, of no great imprudence, when he relinquished his forensic practice, the hope of making some figure in the belles-lettres. But an established character in the public, in my new capacity, still remains to be acquired. I have noticed that the late satirical Bürger had been unsuccessful in his original poetry which appeared under the auspices of Mr. Lewis, in the Tales of the Werder, in any great degree raised my reputation. It is true, I had private friends disposed to second me in my efforts to obtain popularity. But I was sportman enough to know that if the greyhound does not run well, hallooos of his patrons will not obtain the prize for him.

Neither was I ignorant that the practical ballad-writing was for the present out of fashion, and that any attempt to revive it, would found a poetical character upon it, would certainly fail of success. The ballad measure, which was once listened to as to an enchanter's melody, had become hackneyed and sickened from its being the accompaniment of a grinding hand-organ; and besides, a long line in quatrains, whether those of the common ballad, or such as are termed elegiac, has an effect upon the mind like that of the besotted Procrustes upon the human body; for, it must be both awkward and difficult to draw on a long sentence from one stanza to another; it follows that the meaning of each poem must be comprehended within four lines, equally so that it must be extended as to fill that space. The alternate dilation and contraction thus rendered necessary is extremely unfavorable to narrative composition, and the 'Gondibert' of Sir William Dromont, though containing many striking passages, has never become popular, owing only to its being told in this species of elegiac verse.

In the dilemma occasioned by this objection, the idea occurred to the Author of a measured short line, which forms the staple of so much minstrel poetry, that it may properly termed the Romantic stanza, by way of distinction; and which appears as new to our language, that the very best of our poets have not been able to extract it into the properly called Heroic, without the use of the thets which are, to say the least, unnecessary. But, on the other hand, the extreme facility of the short couplet, which seems congenial to language, and was, doubtless for that reason two syllables forming a superfluous word in each line, as may be observed by attending to each word as printed in Italics.

'Achilles' wrath, to Greece the direst spring
Of woes unnumber'd: his Army grievous sent;
That wrath which sent to Hector's funeral pyre;
The arms of mighty heroes in the funeral pyre.
Which heroes gathered in the funeral pyre.
Dooming dogs and beasts to share the pyre.

It has been often remarked, that, in the opening of Pope's translation of the Iliad, there are as popular with our old minstrels, is, for the same reason, apt to prove a strain to the composer who uses it in more modern days, by encouraging him in a habit of slovenly composition. The necessity of occasional pauses often forces the young poet to pay more attention to sense, as the lay's line rises highest when the vein is loaded by a due counterpoise. The Author was therefore intimidated by what Byron calls the 'fatal facility' of the octosyllabic verse, which was otherwise better adapted to his purpose of imitating the more ancient poetry.

I was not less at a loss for a subject which might admit of being treated with the simplicity and wildness of the ancient ballad. But accident directed both a theme and measure which decided the subject as well as the structure of the poem.

The lovely young Countess of Dalkeith, afterwards Marquisa Duchess of Buccleuch, had come to the land of her husband with the desire of making herself acquainted with its traditions and customs, as well as its manners and history. All who remember this lady will agree that the intellectual character of her extreme beauty, the simplicity and courtesy of her manners, the soundness of her understanding, and her unbounded benevolence, gave more the idea of an angelic visitant than of a being belonging to this mortal world, and such a thought was but too consistent with the short space she was permitted to tarry among us. The Countess, whose all made it a pride and pleasure to gratify her wishes, who soon heard enough of Border lore; among others, an aged gentleman of property, whose long hair was interwoven to her bosom, the story of Gilpin Hower, a tradition in which the narrative and many scenes of that country were then believed. The young Countess much delighted with the legend, and the gravity and full confidence with which it was told, carried on her as a cord to everyone's belief up the subject. Of course, to have one so early, and then the goddess story adopted by so several critics as an excuse for what the poem was, in fact, the occasion of its being written.

A chance similar to that which directed the author gave me also the hint of a new mode of treating it. We had, at that time, the house of a transient stranger near Larnoch, in the mountainous heights of the hills, to which we returned when the vacations of the Court permitted me so much leisure. Here I had the pleasure to receive a visit from Mr. Stoddart (now Sir John Stoddart, Judge-Advocate at Malta), who was at that time collecting the particulars which he afterwards embodied in his Remarks on Local Scenery in Scotland. I was of some use to him in procuring the information which he desired, and guiding him to the scenes which he wished to see. In return, he made me better acquainted than I had hitherto been with the poetic effusions which have since made the Lakes of Westmoreland, and the authors by whom they have been sung, so famous wherever the English tongue is spoken.

I was already acquainted with the 'Joan of Arc,' the 'Thalaba,' and the 'Metrical Ballads' of Mr. Southey, which had found their way to Scotland, and were generally admired. But Mr. Stoddart, who had the advantage of personal friendship with the authors, and who possessed a strong memory with an excellent taste, was able to repeat to me many long specimens of their poetry, which had not yet appeared in print. Amongst others, was the striking fragment called 'Christabel,' by Mr. Coleridge, which, from the singularly irregular structure of the stanzas, and the liberty which it allowed the author to adapt the sound to the sense, seemed to be exactly suited to such an extravaganza as I meditated on the subject of Gilpin Hower. As applied to coarse and humorous poetry, this modicum of measures had been already used by Anthony Hall, Anstey, Dr. Warton, and others, but it was in 'Christabel' that I first found it used in serious poetry, and it is to Mr. Coleridge that I am bound to make the acknowledgment due from the pupil to his master. I observe that Lord Byron is indebted for obligations to Mr. Coleridge, which I have been always more ready to acknowledge, expressed, or was understood to express, a hope that I did not write an unfavourable review on Mr. Coleridge's productions. On this subject I have only to say that I do not even know the review which is alluded to, and were I ever to take the undecaying freedom of commenting a man of Mr. Coleridge's extraordinary talents, it would be on account of the caprice and influence with which he has thrown himself in a more successful than unfinished series of poems, which, like the Tome of un-

<sup>1</sup> The Duchess of Buccleuch had a happy idea of this and Mr. Stoddart of Edinburgh was then very young, and a great deal of the poem was written by him. It is now in the hands of the Countess of Dalkeith, and she is a great admirer of it. The Countess of Dalkeith was then a young lady, and she was very much interested in the poem. She was very much interested in the poem, and she was very much interested in the poem.

finished poems, which, like the Tome of unfinished poems, which, like the Tome of unfinished poems, which, like the Tome of un-

AUTHOR'S INTRODUCTION

tiquity, defy the skill of his poetical brethren to complete them. The charming fragments which the author abandons to their fate, are rarely too valuable to be treated like the proofs of careless engravers, the sweepings of whose studios often make the fortune of some pains-taking collector.

I did not immediately proceed upon my projected labor, though I was now furnished with a subject, and with a structure of verse which might have the effect of novelty to the public ear, and afford the Author an opportunity of varying his measure with the variations of a romantic theme. On the contrary, it was, to the best of my recollection, more than a year after Mr. Stoddart's visit, that, by way of experiment, I composed the first two or three stanzas of The Lay of the Last Minstrel. I was shortly afterwards visited by two intimate friends, one of whom still survives. They were men whose talents might have raised them to the highest station in literature, had they not preferred exerting them in their own profession of the law, in which they attained equal pre-eminence. I was in the habit of consulting them on my attempts at composition, having equal confidence in their sound taste and friendly animosity. In this specimen I had, in the person of the Highland servant, packed all that was my own at least, for I had also introduced a line of invocation, a little softened, from Coleridge—

‘Mary, mother, shield us well.’

As neither of my friends said much to me on the subject of the stanzas I showed them before their departure, I had no doubt that their disgust had been greater than their good-nature chose to express. Looking upon them, therefore, as a failure, I threw the manuscript into the fire, and thought as little more as I could of the matter. Some time afterwards I met one of my two counsellors, who inquired, with considerable appearance of interest, about the progress of the romance I had commenced, and was greatly surprised at learning its fate. He confessed that neither he nor our mutual friend had been at first able to give a precise opinion on a poem so pitched out of the common road; but that as they talked some together at the city, they had talked much on the subject, and the result was an earnest desire that I should proceed with the composition. He also added, that some sort of antipathy might be necessary to please the mind of the hearers in the situation to understand and enjoy the poem, and recommended the adoption of such quaint mottoes as Spenser has used to announce contents of the chapters of the Fairy Que such as—‘Babe’s bloody hands may not be cleansed.

The face of golden Meen;
Her sisters two, Extremities,
Strive her to banish clean.’

I entirely agreed with my friendly critic the necessity of having some sort of pitch-which might make readers aware of the obj or rather the tone, of the publication. By doubted whether, in assuming the exact style of Spenser’s mottoes, the interper might not be censured as the harder to understood of the two. I therefore introdu the Old Minstrel, as an appropriate prelo by whom the lay might be sung or spoken, the introduction of whom betwixt the cat might remind the reader at intervals of time, place, and circumstances of the recital. This species of cadre, or frame, afterwards forded the poem its name of The Lay of Last Minstrel.

The work was subsequently shown to of friends during its progress, and received imprimatur of Mr. Francis Jeffrey, who been already for some time distinguished his critical talent.

The poem, being once licensed by the cel as fit for the market, was soon finished, prom ing at about the rate of a canto per w. There was, indeed, little occasion for pum hesitation, when a troublesome rhyme ed be accommodated by an alteration of stanza, or where an incorrect measure might remedied by a variation of the rhyme. It finally published in 1805, and may be regas as the first work in which the writer, who been since so voluminous, laid his claim a considered as an original author.

The book was published by Longman Company, and Archibald Constable and O pany. The principal of the latter firm then commencing that course of bold and eral industry which was of so much advan to his country, and might have been so to I self, but for causes which it is needless to d into here. The work brought out on the a terms of division of profits between the w and publishers, was not long after purchas them for £500 to which Messrs. Longman Company afterwards added £2000 in their unsolicited kindness in consequence of the common success of the work. It was hi somely given to supply the loss of a line he which broke down suddenly while the Au was riding with one of the weekly publish

It would be great affectation not to

<sup>1</sup> One of these, William Erskine son Lord Kinross, was a great collector of antiquities, and through I may ascribe to himself the credit of the name of the other, yet I cannot but state that the second a Ch Chalmers, and now a senator of the College of Ju by the title of Lord Carnarvon.

frankly, that the Author expected some success from The Lay of the Last Minstrel. The attempt to return to a more simple and natural style of poetry was likely to be welcomed, at a time when the public had become tired of heroic hexameters, with all the buckram and binding which belong to them of later days. But whatever might have been his expectations, whether moderate or unreasonable, the result left them far behind, for among those who smiled on the adventurous Minstrel were numbered the great names of William Pitt and Charles Fox. Neither was the extent of the sale inferior to the character of the judges who received the poem with approbation. Upwards of thirty thousand copies of the Lay were disposed of by the trade; and the Author had to perform a task difficult to human vanity, when called upon to make the necessary deductions from his own merits, in a calm attempt to account for his popularity.

A few additional remarks on the Author's literary attempts after this period, will be found in the Introduction to the Poem of Marmion.

ABBOTSFORD, April, 1830.

THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL

*Dum relego, scripsisse pudet : quia plurima cerno,
Me quoque qui feci iudice, digna lini.*

TO THE

RIGHT HONORABLE

CHARLES, EARL OF DALKEITH,

THIS POEM IS INSCRIBED BY

THE AUTHOR

INTRODUCTION

THE way was long, the wind was cold,
The Minstrel was infirm and old;
His withered cheek and tresses gray
Seemed to have known a better day;
The harp, his sole remaining joy,
Was carried by an orphan boy.
The last of all the bards was he,
Who sung of Border chivalry;
For, well-a-day ! their date was fled,
His tuneful brethren all were dead;
And he, neglected and oppressed,
Wished to be with them and at rest.
No more on prancing palfrey borne,
He carolled, light as lark at morn;
No longer courted and caressed,
High placed in hall, a welcome guest,
He poured, to lord and lady gay,
The unpremeditated lay.
Old times were changed, old manners gone;
A stranger filled the StUARTS' throne;
The legions of the iron time
Had called his harmless art a crime.
A wandering harper, scorned and poor,

He begged his bread from door to door,
And tuned, to please a peasant's ear,
The harp a king had loved to hear.
He passed where Newark's stately tower
Looks out from Yarrow's birchen bower:
The Minstrel gazed with wishful eye—
No humbler resting-place was nigh. 30
With hesitating step at last
The embattled portal arch he passed,
Whose ponderous grate and mussy bar
Had oft rolled back the tide of war,
But never closed the iron door
Against the desolate and poor.
The Duchess marked his weary pace,
His timid mien, and reverend face,
And bade her page the menials tell
That they should tend the old man well: 40
For she had known adversity,
Though born in such a high degree;
In pride of power, in beauty's bloom,
Had wept o'er Monmouth's bloody tomb !

When kindness had his wants supplied,
And the old man was gratified,
Began to rise his minstrel pride;

And he began to talk anon
Of good Earl Francis, dead and gone,
And of Earl Walter, rest him God ! 50
A braver ne'er to battle rode;
And how full many a tale he knew
Of the old warriors of Buccleuch:
And, would the noble Duchess deign
To listen to an old man's strain,
Though stiff his hand, his voice though weak,
He thought even yet, the sooth to speak,
That, if she loved the harp to hear,
He could make music to her ear.

The humble boon was soon obtained; 60
The aged Minstrel audience gained.
But when he reached the room of state
Where she with all her ladies sate,
Perchance he wished his boon denied:
For, when to tune his harp he tried,
His trembling hand had lost the ease
Which marks security to please;
And scenes, long past, of joy and pain
Came wildering o'er his aged brain —
He tried to tune his harp in vain. 70
The pitying Duchess praised its chime,
And gave him heart, and gave him time,
Till every string's according glee
Was blended into harmony.
And then, he said, he would full fain
He could recall an ancient strain
He never thought to sing again.
It was not framed for village churls,
But for high dames and mighty earls;
He had played it to King Charles the
Good 80

When he kept court in Holyrood:
And much he wished, yet feared, to try
The long-forgotten melody.
And the strings his fingers strayed,
And as he certain warbling made,
And of his own back his heavy head.
He was caught the measure wild,
Till he was in a trance and smiled;
Till he was up his faded eye
Was all a glow of ecstasy ! 90
In every strain the old is strong,
He caught the old, the future lot.
The present was the future lot,
He saw, he saw, the future lot.
The future lot was all forgot,
The future lot was all forgot.
The future lot was all forgot,
The future lot was all forgot.
The future lot was all forgot,
The future lot was all forgot.
The future lot was all forgot,
The future lot was all forgot.
The future lot was all forgot,
The future lot was all forgot.

CANTO FIRST

I

THE feast was over in Branksome tower,
And the Ladye had gone to her secret
bower,
Her bower that was guarded by word and
by spell,
Deadly to hear, and deadly to tell —
Jesu Maria, shield us well !
No living wight, save the Ladye alone,
Had dared to cross the threshold stone.

II

The tables were drawn, it was idleness
all;
Knight and page and household squire
Loitered through the lofty hall,
Or crowded round the ample fire:
The stag-hounds, weary with the chase,
Lay stretched upon the rushy floor,
And urged in dreams the forest race,
From Teviot-stone to Eskdale-moor.

III

Nine-and-twenty knights of fame
Hung their shields in Branksome Hall;
Nine-and-twenty squires of name Brought them their steeds to bowers from stall;
Nine-and-twenty yeomen tall
Waited dutious on them all
They were all knights of mettle true,
Known to the bold Buccleuch.

IV

Ten of them were sheathed in steel,
With belted sword and spur on heel;
They quitted not their harness bright,
Neither by day nor yet by night.
They lay down to rest,
With corselets laced,
Pillowed on buckler cold and hard;
They earned at the meal
With gloves of steel.
And they drank the red wine through the belmes barred

V

Ten squires, ten yeomen, trust-and-trust,
Waited the back of the warlike ten;
Their steeds, their horses and their dogs,
Sawd and snuffed in stable day and night,
Eating and drinking of straw and hay,
And with bedward ease at candle-time;

A hundred more fed free in stall:—
Such was the custom of Branksome Hall. 40

VI

Why do these steeds stand ready dight?
Why watch these warriors armed by night?
They watch to hear the bloodhound bay-
ing;
They watch to hear the war-born bray-
ing;
To see Saint George's red cross stream-
ing,
To see the midnight beacon gleaming;
They watch against Southern force and guile,
Lest Scroop or Howard or Percy's pow-

Threaten Branksome's lordly towers, 50
From Warkworth or Naworth or merry Carlisle.

VII

Such is the custom of Branksome Hall.

Many a valiant knight is here;
But he, the chieftain of them all,
His sword hangs rusting on the wall
Beside his broken spear.
Bards long shall tell
How Lord Walter fell!
When startled burghers fled afar
The furies of the Border war, 60
When the streets of high Dunedin
Saw lances gleam and falchions redden,
And heard the slogan's deadly yell,—
Then the Chief of Branksome fell.

VIII

Can piety the discord heal,
Or stanch the death-feud's enmity?
Can Christian lore, can patriot zeal,
Can love of blessed charity?
No! vainly to each holy shrine,
In mutual pilgrimage they drew, 70
Implored in vain the grace divine
For chiefs their own red falchions slew.
While Cessford owns the rule of Carr,
While Ettrick boasts the line of Scott,
The slaughtered chiefs, the mortal jar,
The havoc of the feudal war,
Shall never, never be forgot!

IX

In sorrow o'er Lord Walter's bier
The warlike foresters had bent,

And many a flower and many a tear
Old Teviot's maids and matrons lent,
But o'er her warrior's bloody bier
The Ladye dropped nor flower nor tear!
Vengeance, deep-brooding o'er the slain,
Had locked the source of softer weep.
And burning pride and high disdain
Forbade the rising tear to flow;
Until, amid his sorrowing clan,
Her son lisped from the nurse's knee,
'And if I live to be a man,
My father's death revenged shall be!
Then fast the mother's tears did seek
To dew the infant's kindling cheek.

X

All loose her negligent attire,
All loose her golden hair,
Hung Margaret o'er her slaughtered son
And wept in wild despair.
But not alone the bitter tear
Had filial grief supplied,
For hopeless love and anxious fear
Had lent their mingled tide;
Nor in her mother's altered eye
Dared she to look for sympathy.
Her lover 'gainst her father's clan
With Carr in arms had stood,
When Mathouse-burn to Melrose ran
All purple with their blood;
And well she knew her mother dread,
Before Lord Cranstoun she should wed,
Would see her on her dying bed.

XI

Of noble race the Ladye came;
Her father was a clerk of fame
Of Bethune's line of Picardie:
He learned the art that none may
In Padua, far beyond the seas,
Men said he changed his mortgagings,
By feat of magic mystery; 75
For when in studious mood he Saint Andrew's cloistered
His form no darkening shadow
Upon the sunny wall! and far

XII

And of his skill, as bardship,
He taught that Ladye high de-
Till to her bidding she came's b-
The viewless forms of's blood
And now she sits in secre-
In old Lord David's west-
ified,
A pride;

And listens to a heavy sound
That means the mossy turrets round.
Is it the roar of Teviot's tide, <sup>130</sup>
That chafes against the scaur's red side?
Is it the wind, that swings the oaks?
Is it the echo from the rocks?
What may it be, the heavy sound,
That moans old Branksome's turrets round?

XIII

At the sullen, moaning sound
The ban-dogs bay and howl,
And from the turrets round
Loud whoops the startled owl.
In the hall, both aquire and knight <sup>140</sup>
Swore that a storm was near,
And looked forth to view the night;
But the night was still and clear!

XIV

From the sound of Teviot's tide,
Chafing with the mountain's side,
From the groan of the wind-swung oak,
From the sullen echo of the rock,
From the voice of the coming storm,
The Ladye knew it well!
It was the Spirit of the Flood that spoke, <sup>150</sup>
And he called on the Spirit of the Fell.

XV

RIVER SPIRIT

'Sleep'st thou, brother?'

MOUNTAIN SPIRIT

'Brother, nay—

On my hills the moonbeams play,
From Craik-cross to Skelhill-pen,
By every rill, in every glen,
Merry elves their morris pacing,
To aerial minstrelay,
Emerald rings on brown heath tracing,
Trip it dext and merrily.
Up, and mark their nimble feet! <sup>160</sup>
Up, and list their music sweet!

XVI

RIVER SPIRIT

'Tears of an imprisoned maiden
Mix with my polluted stream;
Margaret of Branksome, sorrow-laden,
Mourns beneath the moon's pale beam.
Tell me, thou who view'st the stars,
When shall cease these feudal jars?

What shall be the maiden's fate?
Who shall be the maiden's mate?'

XVII

MOUNTAIN SPIRIT

'Arthur's slow wain his course doth roll <sup>170</sup>
In utter darkness round the pole;
The Northern Bear lowers black and grim,
Orion's studded belt is dim;
Twinkling faint, and distant far,
Shimmers through mist each planet star;
Ill may I read their high decree:
But no kind influence deign they shower
On Teviot's tide and Branksome's tower
Till pride be quelled and love be free.'

XVIII

The unearthly voices ceased, <sup>180</sup>
And the heavy sound was still;
It died on the river's breast,
It died on the side of the hill.
But round Lord David's tower
The sound still floated near;
For it rung in the Ladye's bower,
And it rung in the Ladye's ear.
She raised her stately head,
And her heart throbbed high with pride:
'Your mountains shall bend <sup>190</sup>
And your streams ascend,
Ere Margaret be our foeman's bride!'

XIX

The Ladye sought the lofty hall,
Where many a bold retainer lay,
And with jocund din among them all
Her son pursued his infant play.
A fancied moss-trooper, the boy
The truncheon of a spear bestrode,
And round the hall right merrily
In mimic foray rode. <sup>200</sup>
Even bearded knights, in arms grown old,
Share in his frolic gambles bore,
Albeit their hearts of rugged mold
Were stubborn as the steel they wore.
For the gray warriors prophesied
How the brave boy in future war
Should tame the Unicorn's pride,
Exalt the Crescents and the Star.

XX

The Ladye forgot her purple high
One moment and no more, <sup>210</sup>
One moment gazed with a mother's eye
As she paused at the arched door;

Then from amid the armed train
She called to her William of Deloraine.

XXI

A stark moss-trooping Scott was he
As e'er couched Border lance by knee:
Through Solway Sands, through Tarras
Moss,
Blindfold he knew the paths to cross;
By wily turns, by desperate bounds,
Had baffled Percy's best bloodhounds; 220
In Eske or Liddel fords were none
But he would ride them, one by one;
Alike to him was time or tide,
December's snow or July's pride;
Alike to him was tide or time,
Moonless midnight or matin prime:
Steady of heart and stout of hand
As ever drove prey from Cumberland;
Five times outlawed had he been 225
By England's king and Scotland's queen.

XXII

'Sir William of Deloraine, good at need,
Mount thee on the wightest steed;
Spare not to spur nor stint to ride
< Until thou come to fair Tweedside;
< And in Melrose's holy pile
< Seek thou the Monk of Saint Mary's aisle.
Greet the father well from me;
Say that the fated hour is come,
And to-night he shall watch with thee,
To win the treasure of the tomb: 230
< For this will be Saint Michael's night,
And though stars be dim the moon is bright,
And the cross of bloody red
Will point to the grave of the mighty dead.

XXIII

'What he gives thee, see thou keep;
Stay not thou for food or sleep:
Be it scroll or be it book,
Into it, knight, thou must not look;
< If thou readest, thou art lorn!
Better hadst thou ne'er been born!' 235

XXIV

'O swiftly can speed my dapple-gray steed,
Which drinks of the Teviot clear;
Ere break of day,' the warrior gan say,
'Again will I be here:
And safer by none may thy errand be done
Than, noble dame, by me;

Letter nor line know I never one,
Were't my neck-verse at Hairibee.'

XXV

Soon in his saddle sate he fast,
And soon the steep descent he passed, 240
Soon crossed the sounding barbrican,
And soon the Teviot side he won.
Eastward the wooded path he rode,
Green hazels o'er his basnet nod;
He passed the Peel of Goldiland,
And crossed old Borthwick's roaring
strand;
Dimly he viewed the Moat-hill's mound,
Where Druid shades still fitted round:
In Hawick twinkled many a light;
Behind him soon they set in night; 270
And soon he spurred his courser keen
Beneath the tower of Hazeldean.

XXVI

The clattering hoofs the watchmen mark:
'Stand, ho! thou courier of the dark.'
'For Branksome, ho!' the knight rejoined,
And left the friendly tower behind.
He turned him now from Teviotside,
And, guided by the tinkling rill,
Northward the dark ascent did ride,
And gained the moor at Horseliehill; 280
Broad on the left before him lay
For many a mile the Roman way.

XXVII

A moment now he slack'd his speed,
A moment breathed his panting steed,
Drew saddle-girth and corselet-band,
And loosened in the sheath his brand.
On Minto-crags the moonbeams glint,
Where Barnhill bewed his bed of flint,
Who flung his outlawed limbs to rest
Where falcons hang their giddy nest 290
Mid cliffs from whence his eagle eye
For many a league his prey could spy;
Cliffs doubling, on their echoes borne,
The terrors of the robber's horn;
Cliffs which for many a later year
The warbling Doric reed shall hear,
When some sad swain shall teach the grove
Ambition is no cure for love.

XXVIII

Unchallenged, thence passed Deloraine
To ancient Riddel's fair domain, 300
Where Aill, from mountains freed,

Down from the lakes did raving come;
Each wave was crested with tawny foam,
Like the mane of a chestnut steed.
In vain! no torrent, deep or broad,
Might bar the bold, moss-trooper's road.

XXIX

At the first plunge the horse sunk low,
And the water broke o'er the saddle-bow:
Above the foaming tide, I ween, 309
Scarce half the charger's neck was seen;
For he was barded from counter to tail,
And the rider was armed complete in mail;
Never heavier man and horse
Stemmed a midnight torrent's force.
The warrior's very plume, I say, 1
Was daggled by the dashing spray;
Yet, through good heart and Our Ladye's
grace,

At length he gained the landing-place.

XXX

Now Bowden Moor the march-man won,
And sternly shook his plumed head, 320
As glanced his eye o'er Halidon;
For on his soul the slaughter red
Of that unhallowed morn arose,
When first the Scott and Carr were foes;
When royal James beheld the fray,
Prize to the victor of the day;
When Home and Douglas in the van
Bore down Buccleuch's retiring clan,
Till gallant Cessford's heart-blood dear
Reeked on dark Elliot's Border spear. 330

XXXI

In bitter mood he spurred fast,
And soon the hated heath was past;
And far beneath, in lustre wan,
Old Melros' rose and fair Tweed ran:
Like some tall rock with lichens gray,
Seemed, dimly huge, the dark Abbaye.
When Hawick he passed had curfew rung,
Now midnight lauds were in Melrose sung.
The sound upon the fitful gale
In solemn wise did rise and fall, 340
Like that wild harp whose magic tone
Is wakened by the winds alone.
But when Melrose he reached 't was silence
all;
He meety stabled his steed in stall,
And sought the convent's lonely wall.

HERE paused the harp; and with its swell
The Master's fire and courage fell:
Dejectedly and low he bowed,
And, gazing timid on the crowd,
He seemed to seek in every eye 350
If they approved his minstrelsy;
And, diffident of present praise,
Somewhat he spoke of former days,
And how old age and wandering long
Had done his band and harp some wrong.
The Duchess, and her daughters fair,
And every gentle lady there,
Each after each, in due degree,
Gave praises to his melody;
His hand was true, his voice was clear, 360
And much they longed the rest to hear.
Encouraged thus, the aged man
After meet rest again began.

CANTO SECOND

I

If thou wouldst view fair Melrose aright,
Go visit it by the pale moonlight;
For the gay beams of lightsome day
Gild but to flout the ruins gray.
When the broken arches are black in
night,
And each shafted oriel glimmers white;
When the cold light's uncertain shower
Streams on the ruined central tower;
When buttress and buttress, alternately,
Seem framed of ebony and ivory; 10
When silver edges the imagery,
And the scrolls that teach thee to live and die;
When distant Tweed is heard to rave,
And the owlet to hoot o'er the dead man's grave,
Then go — but go alone the while —
Then view Saint David's ruined pile;
And, home returning, soothly swear
Was never scene so sad and fair!

II

Short halt did Deloraine make there;
Little reeked he of the scene so fair: 20
With dagger's hilt on the wicket strong
He struck full load, and struck full long.
The porter hurried to the gate:
'Who knocks so loud, and knocks so late?'
'From Branksome I,' the warrior cried;
And straight the wicket opened wide:

For Branksome's chiefs had in battle stood
To fence the rights of fair Melrose;
And lands and livings, many a rood,
Had gifted the shrine for their souls' repose. 30

III

Bold Deloraine his errand said;
The porter bent his humble head;
With torch in hand, and feet unshod,
And noiseless step, the path he trod:
The arched cloister, far and wide,
Rang to the warrior's clanking stride,
Till, stooping low his lofty crest,
He entered the cell of the ancient priest,
And lifted his barred aventayle
To hail the Monk of Saint Mary's aisle. 40

IV

'The Ladye of Branksome greets thee by
me,
Says that the fated hour is come,
And that to-night I shall watch with thee,
To win the treasure of the tomb.'
From sackcloth couch the monk arose,
With toil his stiffened limbs he reared;
A hundred years had flung their snows
On his thin locks and floating beard.

V

And strangely on the knight looked he,
And his blue eyes gleamed wild and wide: 50
'And darrest thou, warrior, seek to see
What heaven and hell alike would hide?
My breast in belt of iron pent,
With shirt of hair and scourge of thorn,
For threescore years, in penance spent,
My knees those flinty stones have worn;
Yet all too little to atone
For knowing what should ne'er be known.
Wouldst thou thy every future year
In ceaseless prayer and penance drie, 60
Yet wait thy latter end with fear —
Then, daring warrior, follow me!'

VI

'Penance, father, will I none;
Prayer know I hardly one;
For mass or prayer can I rarely tarry,
Save to patter an Ave Mary,
When I ride on a Border foray.
Other prayer can I none;
So speed me my errand, and let me be gone.'

VII

Again on the knight looked the churchman
old, 70
And again he sighed heavily;
For he had himself been a warrior bold,
And fought in Spain and Italy.
And he thought on the days that were long since by,
When his limbs were strong and his courage was high:
Now, slow and faint, he led the way
Where, cloistered round, the garden lay;
The pillared arches were over their head,
And beneath their feet were the bones of the dead.

VIII

Spreading herbs and flowerets bright
Glistened with the dew of night;
Nor herb nor floweret glistened there
But was carved in the cloister-arches as fair.
The monk gazed long on the lovely moon,
Then into the night he looked forth;
And red and bright the streamers light
Were dancing in the glowing north.
So had he seen, in fair Castile,
The youth in glittering squadrons start,
Sudden the flying jennet wheel, 90
And hurl the unexpected dart.
He knew, by the streamers that shot so
bright,
That spirits were riding the northern light.

IX

By a steel-clenched postern door
They entered now the chancel tall;
The darkened roof rose high aloof
On pillars lofty and light and small:
The keystone that looked each ribbed aisle
Was a fleur-de-lys or a quatre-feuille;
The corbels were carved grotesque and grim; 100
And the pillars, with clustered shafts so trim,
With base and with capital flourished
around,
Seemed bundles of lances which garlands had bound.

X

Full many a scutcheon and banner riven
Shook to the cold night-wind of heaven,
Around the screened altar's pale;

And there the dying lamps did burn
Before thy low and lonely urn,
O gallant Chief of Otterburne !
And thine, dark Knight of Liddes-
dale ! 120
O fading honors of the dead !
O high ambition lowly laid !

The moon on the east oriel shone
Through slender shafts of shapely stone,
By foliated tracery combined;
Thou wouldst have thought some fairy's
hand
'Twixt poplars straight the osier wand
In many a freakish knot had twined,
Then framed a spell when the work was done,
And changed the willow wreaths to
stone. 120
The silver light, so pale and faint,
Showed many a prophet and many a saint,
Whose image on the glass was dyed;
Full in the midst, his cross of red
Triumphant Michael brandished,
And trampled the Apostate's pride.
The moonbeam kissed the holy pane,
And threw on the pavement a bloody stain.

XII

They sate them down on a marble stone —
A Scottish monarch slept below; 130
Thus spoke the monk in solemn tone:
'I was not always a man of woe;
For Paynim countries I have trod,
And fought beneath the Cross of God:
Now, strange to my eyes thine arms appear,
And their iron clang sounds strange to my ear.

XIII

'In these far climes it was my lot
To meet the wondrous Michael Scott;
A wizard of such dreaded fame
That when, in Salamanca's cave, 140
Horn listed his magic wand to wave,
The bells would ring in Notre Dame !
Some of his skill he taught to me;
And, warrior, I could say to thee
The words that cleft Eildon Hills in three,
And bridled the Tweed with a curb of
stone:
But to speak them were a deadly sin,

And for having but thought them my heart within
A treble penance must be done.

XIV

'When Michael lay on his dying bed, 150
His conscience was awakened;
He bethought him of his sinful deed,
And he gave me a sign to come with speed:
I was in Spain when the morning rose,
But I stood by his bed ere evening close.
The words may not again be said
That he spoke to me, on death-bed laid;
They would rend this Abbaye's massy nave,
And pile it in heaps above his grave.

XV

'I swore to bury his Mighty Book, 160
That never mortal might therein look;
And never to tell where it was hid,
Save at his Chief of Branksome's need;
And when that need was past and o'er,
Again the volume to restore.
I buried him on Saint Michael's night,
When the bell tolled one and the moon
was bright.
And I dug his chamber among the dead,
When the floor of the chancel was stained red,
That his patron's cross might over him
wave, 170
And scare the fiends from the wizard's grave.

XVI

'It was a night of woe and dread
When Michael in the tomb I laid;
Strange sounds along the chancel passed,
The banners waved without a blast' —
Still spoke the monk, when the bell tolled one ! —
I tell you, that a braver man
Than William of Deloraine, good at need,
Against a foe ne'er spurred a steed;
Yet somewhat was he chilled with
dread, 180
And his hair did bristle upon his head.

XVII

'Lo, warrior ! now, the cross of red
Points to the grave of the mighty dead:
Within it burns a wondrous light,
To chase the spirits that love the night;
That lamp shall burn unquenchably,
Until the eternal doom shall be.'

Slow moved the monk to the broad flag-
stone
Which the bloody cross was traced upon:
He pointed to a secret nook; 190
An iron bar the warrior took;
And the monk made a sign with his withered hand,
The grave's huge portal to expand.

XVIII

With beating heart to the task he went,
His sinewy frame o'er the gravestone
bent,
With bar of iron heaved amain
Till the toil-drops fell from his brows like rain.
It was by dint of passing strength
That he moved the massy stone at length.
I would you had been there to see 200
How the light broke forth so gloriously,
Streamed upward to the chancel roof,
And through the galleries far aloof!
No earthly flame blazed e'er so bright;
It shone like heaven's own blessed light,
And, issuing from the tomb,
Showed the monk's cowl and visage pale,
Danced on the dark-browed warrior's mail,
And kissed his waving plume.

XIX

Before their eyes the wizard lay, 210
As if he had not been dead a day.
His hoary beard in silver rolled,
He seemed some seventy winters old;
A palmer's amice wrapped him round,
With a wrought Spanish baldric bound,
Like a pilgrim from beyond the sea:
His left hand held his Book of Might,
A silver cross was in his right;
The lamp was placed beside his knee.
High and majestic was his look, 220
At which the fellest fiends had shook,
And all unruffled was his face:
They trusted his soul had gotten grace.

XX

Often had William of Deloraine
Rode through the battle's bloody plain,
And trampled down the warriors slain,
And neither known remorse nor awe,
Yet now remorse and awe he owned;
His breath came thick, his head swam
round,
When this strange scene of death he
saw. 230

Bewildered and unnerved he stood,
And the priest prayed fervently and loud:
With eyes averted prayed he;
He might not endure the sight to see
Of the man he had loved so brotherly.

XXI

And when the priest his death-prayer had prayed,
Thus unto Deloraine he said:
'Now, speed thee what thou hast to do,
Or, warrior, we may dearly rue;
For those thou mayst not look upon 240
Are gathering fast round the yawning
stone!
Then Deloraine in terror took
From the cold hand the Mighty Book,
With iron clasped and with iron bound:
He thought, as he took it, the dead man
frowned;
But the glare of the sepulchral light
Perchance had dazzled the warrior's sight.

XXII

When the huge stone sunk o'er the tomb,
The night returned in double gloom,
For the moon had gone down and the stars
were few; 250
And as the knight and priest withdrew,
With wavering steps and dizzy brain,
They hardly might the postern gain.
'T is said, as through the aisles they passed,
They heard strange noises on the blast;
And through the cloister-galleries small,
Which at mid-height thread the chancel
wall,
Loud sobs, and laughter louder, ran,
And voices unlike the voice of man,
As if the fiends kept holiday 260
Because these spells were brought to-day.
I cannot tell how the truth may be;
I say the tale as 't was said to me.

XXIII

'Now, hie thee hence,' the father said,
'And when we are on death-bed laid,
O may our dear Ladye and sweet Saint
John
Forgive our souls for the deed we have done!'
The monk returned him to his call,
And many a prayer and penance sped;
When the convent met at the noontide
bell, 270

The Monk of Saint Mary's aisle was
dead!
Before the cross was the body laid,
With hands clasped fast, as if still he prayed.

XXIV

The knight breathed free in the morning
wind,
And strove his hardihood to find:
He was glad when he passed the tombstones gray
Which girdle round the fair Abbaye;
For the mystic book, to his bosom pressed,
Felt like a load upon his breast,
And his joints, with nerves of iron twined, 280
Shook like the aspen-leaves in wind.
Full fain was he when the dawn of day
Began to brighten Cheviot gray;
He joyed to see the cheerful light,
And he said Ave Mary as well as he might.

XXV

The sun had brightened Cheviot gray,
The sun had brightened the Carter's
side;
And soon beneath the rising day
Smiled Branksome towers and Teviot's
tide.
The wild birds told their warbling tale, 290
And wakened every flower that blows;
And peeped forth the violet pale,
And spread her breast the mountain
rose.
And lovelier than the rose so red,
Yet paler than the violet pale,
She early left her sleepless bed,
The fairest maid of Teviotdale.

XXVI

Why does fair Margaret so early awake,
And don her kirtle so hastily;
And the silken knots, which in hurry she would make, 300
Why tremble her slender fingers to tie?
Why does she stop and look often around,
As she glides down the secret stair;
And why does she pat the shaggy blood-
hound,
As he rouses him up from his lair;
And, though she passes the postern alone,
Why is not the watchman's bugle blown?

XXVII

The ladye steps in doubt and dread
Lest her watchful mother hear her tread;
The ladye caresses the rough bloodhound
Lest his voice should waken the castle
round; 310
The watchman's bugle is not blown,
For he was her foster father's son;
And she glides through the greenwood at dawn of light
To meet Baron Henry, her own true knight.

XXVIII

The knight and ladye fair are met,
And under the hawthorn's boughs are
set.
A fairer pair were never seen
To meet beneath the hawthorn green.
He was stately and young and tall, 320
Dreaded in battle and loved in hall;
And she, when love, scarce told, scarce
hid,
Lent to her cheek a livelier red,
When the half sigh her swelling breast
Against the silken ribbon pressed,
When her blue eyes their secret told,
Though shaded by her locks of gold —
Where would you find the peerless fair
With Margaret of Branksome might compare!

XXIX

And now, fair dames, methinks I see 330
You listen to my minstrelsy;
Your waving locks ye backward throw,
And sidelong bend your necks of snow.
Ye ween to hear a melting tale
Of two true lovers in a dale;
And how the knight, with tender fire,
To paint his faithful passion strove,
Swore he might at her feet expire,
But never, never cease to love;
And how she blushed, and how she
sighed, 340
And, half consenting, half denied,
And said that she would die a maid; —
Yet, might the bloody feud be stayed,
Henry of Cranstoun, and only he,
Margaret of Branksome's choice should be.

XXX

Alas! fair dames, your hopes are vain!
My harp has lost the enchanting strain;
Its lightness would my age reprove;
My hairs are gray, my limbs are old.

My heart is dead, my veins are cold: 350
I may not, must not, sing of love.

XXXI

Beneath an oak, mossed o'er by eld,
The Baron's dwarf his courser held,
And held his crested helm and spear:
That dwarf was scarce an earthly man,
If the tales were true that of him ran Through all the Border far and near.
'T was said, when the Baron a-hunting
rode

Through Reedsdale's glens, but rarely trod,
He heard a voice cry, 'Lost! lost!
lost!'

And, like tennis-ball by racket tossed, 360
A leap of thirty feet and three
Made from the gorse this elfin shape,
Distorted like some dwarfish ape,

And lighted at Lord Cranstoun's knee.
Lord Cranstoun was some whit dismayed;
'T is said that five good miles he rode,
To rid him of his company;

But where he rode one mile, the dwarf ran
four, 369

And the dwarf was first at the castle door.

XXXII

Use lessens marvel, it is said:
This elfish dwarf with the Baron staid;
Little he ate, and less he spoke,
Nor mingled with the menial flock;
And oft apart his arms he tossed,
And often muttered, 'Lost! lost! lost!'

He was waspish, arch, and litherlie,
But well Lord Cranstoun served he:
And he of his service was full fain;
For once he had been ta'en or slain, 380
An it had not been for his ministry.

All between Home and Hermitage
Talked of Lord Cranstoun's Goblin Page.

XXXIII

For the Baron went on pilgrimage,
And took with him this elfish page,
To Mary's Chapel of the Lowes;
For there, beside Our Lady's lake,
An offering he had sworn to make,
And he would pay his vows.

But the Ladye of Branksome gathered a band 390

Of the best that would ride at her command;

The trysting-place was Newark Lee.

Wat of Harden came thither amain,
And thither came John of Thirlestane,
And thither came William of Deloraine;
They were three hundred spears and three.

Through Douglas-burn, up Yarrow stream,
Their horses prance, their lances gleam.
They came to Saint Mary's lake ere day,
But the chapel was void and the Baron
away. 400

They burned the chapel for very rage,
And cursed Lord Cranstoun's Goblin Page.

XXXIV

And now, in Branksome's good green-
wood,

As under the aged oak he stood,
The Baron's courser pricks his ears,
As if a distant noise he hears.

The dwarf waves his long lean arm on
high,

And signs to the lovers to part and fly;
No time was then to vow or sigh.

Fair Margaret through the hazel-grove 410
Flew like the startled cushat-dove:

The dwarf the stirrup held and rein;
Vaulted the knight on his steed amain,
And, pondering deep that morning's scene,
Rode eastward through the hawthorns
green.

WHILE thus he poured the lengthened
tale,

The Minstrel's voice began to fail.
Full slyly smiled the observant page,
And gave the withered hand of age
A goblet, crowned with mighty wine, 430
The blood of Velez' scorched vine.

He raised the silver cup on high,
And, while the big drop filled his eye,
Prayed God to bless the Duchess long,
And all who cheered a son of song.

The attending maidens smiled to see
How long, how deep, how zealously,
The precious juice the Minstrel quaffed;
And he, emboldened by the draught,
Looked gaily back to them and laughed.

The cordial nectar of the bowl 431
Swelled his old veins and cheered his soul;

A lighter, livelier prelude ran,
Ere thus his tale again began.

CANTO THIRD

And said I that my limbs were old,
And said I that my blood was cold,
And that my kindly fire was flint,
And my poor withered heart was dead,
And that I might not sing of love? —
How could I to the dearest theme
That ever warmed a minstrel's dream,
So foul, so false a recreant prove?
How could I name love's very name,
Nor wake my heart to notes of flame?

In peace, Love tunes the shepherd's reed;
In war, he mounts the warrior's steed;
In halls, in gay attire is seen;
In hamlets, dances on the green.
Love rules the court, the camp, the grove,
And men below, and saints above;
For love is heaven, and heaven is love.

So thought Lord Cranston, as I ween,
While pondering deep the wonder scene,
He rode through Cranborne's lawlawn
green.
But the page shouted wild and shrill,
And scarce his helmet could be don,
When hurled from the study hall
A stone single came pouring in.
The warrior stood, a dapple-grey,
His coat with scars and spangled with
green.

He wears red with many a stain;
He smokes a pipe, a weary sign;
He is that, under the burning light;
But he was William of Des Moines.

[illegible]

In rapid round the Reason bent,
He sighed a sigh and breathed a prayer,
The prayer was to his patron saint,
The sigh was to his father's fate.
Stout Debraum met staid old Jeremy,
Nor saint nor sinner failed to sigh,
But he stamped his heel, and smothered his sneer,
And spurred his steed to full career.
The meeting of these champions proud
Seemed like the beating thumbs and.

Stern was the first the Indians met
 The stately Heron back within back,
 Bent backwards to his breast's tail,
 And his plumage went contracting in the gale;
 The tough ash quene, we meet not here,
 But a thousand thrushes there
 And Connecticut's lark, of more avail,
 Flashed through, like still, the bluebird's
 mail,
 Through shrub and jack and cedar pressed,
 Deep in his thicket, hawk at last
 Held out the waters swiftly bent,
 Till, stumbling in the velvet shrub,
 Down went the hawk, the pretty lizard,
 Fleeted on a heap of moss and fern
 The hawk quivered forward his wings,
 No hawk as pretty as the hawk
 Was the hawk as pretty as the hawk

[illegible]

1. Die erste Gruppe ist die der "Kleinrentner".
 2. Die zweite Gruppe ist die der "Mittelrentner".
 3. Die dritte Gruppe ist die der "Großrentner".
 4. Die vierte Gruppe ist die der "Superrentner".

As the minstrel off he took,
The dwarf espied the Mighty Bank !
Much he marvelled a knight of pride
Like a monk-bosomed priest should ride :
He thought not to search or staunch the wound
Until the secret he had found.

IX

The iron band, the iron clasp,
Resisted long the elfin grasp,
For when the first he had undone,
It closed as he the next began.
Those iron clasps, that iron band,
Would not yield to unchristened hand
Till he opened the cover o'er
With the Borderer's curled gore ;
A moment then the volume spread,
And one short spell therein he read.
It had much of glamour might,
Could make a lady seem a knight,
The cubweb in a dungeon wall
Seem tapestry in lordly hall,
A nutshell seem a gilded barge,
A sheelung seem a palace large,
And youth seem age, and age seem youth —
All was delusion, nought was truth.

X

He had not read another spell,
When on his cheek a buffet fell,
So fierce, it stretched him on the plain
Beside the wounded Beloraine.
From the ground he rose chafed,
And shook his huge and matted head ;
One word he muttered and no more,
' Man of ages, thou amitest sore !'
No more the elfin page durst try
Into the wondrous book to pry ;
The clasps, though encased with Christian
gore.

Shut faster than they were before,
He hid it underneath his cloak —
Now, if you ask who gave the stroke,
I cannot tell, no more I thrive ;
It was not given by man alive.

XI

Unwillingly himself he addressed
To do his master's high behest :
He lifted up the living corpse,
And laid it on the wicker bier ;
He led his wife Beuknome Hall
Before the herds of the wadden all,

And each did after swear and say
There only passed a wain of hay.
He took him to Lord David's tower,
Even to the Ladye's secret bower ;
And, but that stronger spells were spread,
And the door might not be opened,
He had laid him on her very bed.
Whate'er he did of gramarye
Was always done maliciously ;
He flung the warrior on the ground,
And the blood welled freshly from the wound.

XII

As he repassed the outer court,
He spied the fair young child at sport :
He thought to train him to the wood ;
For, at a word, he it understood,
He was always for ill, and never for good.
Seemed to the boy some comrade gay
Led him forth to the woods to play ;
On the drawbridge the warders stout
Saw a terrier and lurcher passing out.

XIII

He led the boy o'er bank and fell,
Until they came to a woodland brook ;
The running stream dissolved the spell,
And his own elfish shape he took.
Could he have had his pleasure rilde,
He had crippled the joints of the noble child,
Or, with his fingers long and lean,
Had strangled him in fiendish spleen :
But his awful mother he had in dread,
And also his power was limited ;
So he but scowled on the startled child,
And darted through the forest wild ;
The woodland brook he bounding crossed,
And laughed, and shouted, ' Lost ! lost !
lost !'

XIV

Full sore amazed at the wondrous change,
And frightened, as a child might be,
At the wild yell and visage strange,
And the dark words of gramarye,
The child amidst the forest bower,
Stood rooted like a lily flower ;
And when at length, with trembling pace,
He sought to find where Beuknome lay,
He feared to see that grisly face
Glare from some thicket on his way.
Thus, starting oft, he journeyed on,
And despoil in the wood is gone, —

CANTO THIRD

For aye the more he sought his way,
The farther still he went astray, — 180
Until he heard the mountains round
Ring to the baying of a hound.

XV

And hark ! and hark ! the deep-mouthed
bark

Comes nigher still and nigher;
Bursts on the path a dark bloodhound,
His tawny muzzle tracked the ground,
And his red eye shot fire.
Soon as the wildered child saw he,
He flew at him right furiously.
I ween you would have seen with joy 190
The bearing of the gallant boy,
When, worthy of his noble sire,
His wet cheek glowed 'twixt fear and ire !
He faced the bloodhound manfully,
And beld his little bat on high;
So fierce he struck, the dog, afraid,
At cautious distance hoarsely bayed,
But still in act to spring;
When dashed an archer through the glade,
And when he saw the hound was stayed, 200
He drew his tough bowstring;
But a rough voice cried, 'Shoot not, boy !
Ho ! shoot not, Edward, — 't is a boy !'

XVI

The speaker issued from the wood,
And checked his fellow's surly mood,
And quelled the bad-dog's ire —
He was an English yeoman good
And born in Lancashire.
Well could he hit a fallow-deer
Five hundred feet him far 210
With hand more true and eye more clear
No archer bended bow.
His coal-black hair, thorn round and close,
Set off his sun-burnt face;
Old England's sign, Saint George's cross,
His barbet-cap did grace;
His eagle-eyes hung in no idle,
All in a wolf-skin tattered coat;
And his short, frowning, dirty and dour,
Had pierced the throat of many a deer. 220

XVII

His kirtle, made of forest green,
Reached scantily to his knee;
And, at his belt, of arrow leech
A farbusket thrust into the
He became scarce in a twinkling space,
No longer furred and so.

He never counted him a man
Would strike below the
His slackened bow was in his
And the leash that was in band.

XVIII

He would not do the fair el
But held him with his power
That he might neither fight
For when the red cross spile
The boy strove long and vie
'Now, by Saint George,' th
'Edward, methinks we have
This boy's fair face and eos
Show he is come of high de

XIX

'Yes ! I am come of high
For I am the heir of bold
And, if thou dost not set me
False Southron, thou shalt
For Walter of Harden at speed,
And William of Deloraine,
And every Scot from Esk to
And, if thou dost not let me
Despite thy arrows and thy
I'll have thee hanged to day

XX

'Gentlemy for thy good-will
My mind was never set on it
But if thou art chief of such
And art the son of such a man
And ever comest to thy own
Our warriors had need order.

My bow is gone to a hundred Thou'lt make them of Barbar !
Meantime, be pleased to see
For good Lord, these shall !
I think my words is well say
When we have taken thy fall

XXI

Although the child was left
In Scotland still he went Far in the desert he part of
And in the shape of that go
He sought he could much
The comrades of the young
He pushed and beat and on Nay, none of them is with.

He tore Dame Maudlin's silken tire, 270
 And, as Sym Hall stood by the fire,
 He lighted the match of his bandelier,
 And wofully scorched the hackbuteer.
 It may be hardly thought or said,
 The mischief that the urchin made,
 Till many of the castle guessed
 That the young baron was possessed !

XXII

Well I ween the charm he held
 The noble Ladye had soon dispelled,
 But she was deeply busied then 280
 To tend the wounded Deloraine.
 Much she wondered to find him lie
 On the stone threshold stretched along:
 She thought some spirit of the sky
 Had done the bold moss-trooper wrong,
 Because, despite her precept dread,
 Perchance he in the book had read;
 But the broken lance in his bosom stood,
 And it was earthly steel and wood.

XXIII

She drew the splinter from the wound, 290
 And with a charm she stanch'd the blood.
 She bade the gash be cleansed and bound:
 No longer by his couch she stood;
 But she has ta'en the broken lance,
 And washed it from the clotted gore,
 And salv'd the splinter o'er and o'er.
 William of Deloraine, in trance,
 Whene'er she turned it round and round,
 Twisted as if she galled his wound.
 Then to her maidens she did say, 300
 That he should be whole man and sound
 Within the course of a night and day.
 Full long she toiled, for she did rue
 Mishap to friend so stout and true.

XXIV

So passed the day — the evening fell,
 'T was near the time of curfew bell;
 The air was mild, the wind was calm,
 The stream was smooth, the dew was balm;
 E'en the rude watchman on the tower
 Enjoyed and blessed the lovely hour. 310
 Far more fair Margaret loved and blessed
 The hour of silence and of rest.
 On the high turret sitting lone,
 She waked at times the lute's soft tone,
 Touched a wild note, and all between
 Thought of the bower of hawthorns green.

Her golden hair streamed free from band,
 Her fair cheek rested on her hand,
 Her blue eyes sought the west afar,
 For lovers love the western star. 320

XXV

Is yon the star, o'er Penchryst Pen,
 That rises slowly to her ken,
 And, spreading broad its wavering light,
 Shakes its loose tresses on the night ?
 Is yon red glare the western star ? —
 O, 't is the beacon-blaze of war !
 Scarce could she draw her tightened
 breath,
 For well she knew the fire of death !

XXVI

The warder viewed it blazing strong,
 And blew his war-note loud and long, 330
 Till, at the high and haughty sound,
 Rock, wood, and river rung around.
 The blast alarmed the festal hall,
 And startled forth the warriors all;
 Far downward in the castle-yard
 Full many a torch and cresset glared;
 And helms and plumes, confusedly tossed,
 Were in the blaze half seen, half lost;
 And spears in wild disorder shook,
 Like reeds beside a frozen brook. 340

XXVII

The seneschal, whose silver hair
 Was reddened by the torches' glare,
 Stood in the midst, with gesture proud,
 And issued forth his mandates loud:
 'On Penchryst glows a bale of fire,
 And three are kindling on Priesthanghs-wire;

Ride out, ride out,
 The foe to scout !

Mount, mount for Branksome, every man !
 Thou, Todrig, warn the Johnstone clan, 350
 That ever are true and stout.

Ye need not send to Liddesdale,
 For when they see the blazing bale
 Elliots and Armstrongs never fail. —
 Ride, Alton, ride, for death and life,
 And warn the warden of the strife ! —
 Young Gilbert, let our beacon blaze,
 Our kin and clan and friends to raise !

XXVIII

Fair Margaret from the turret head
 Heard far below the coursers' tread, 360

While loud the harness rung,
 As to their seats with clamor dread
 The ready horsemen sprung:
 And trampling hoofs, and iron coats,
 And loaders' voices, mingled notes,
 And out! and out!
 In hasty rout,
 The horsemen galloped forth;
 Dispersing to the south to scout,
 And east, and west, and north, 370
 To view their coming enemies,
 And warn their vassals and allies.

XXIX

The ready page with hurried hand
 Awaked the need-fire's slumbering brand,
 And ruddy blushed the heaven;
 For a sheet of flame from the turret high
 Waved like a blood-flag on the sky,
 All flaring and uneven.
 And soon a score of fires, I ween, 379
 From height and hill and cliff were seen,
 Each with warlike tidings fraught;
 Each from each the signal caught;
 Each after each they glanced to sight,
 As stars arise upon the night.
 They gleamed on many a dusky tarn,
 Haunted by the lonely earn;
 On many a cairn's gray pyramid,
 Where urns of mighty chiefs lie hid;
 Till high Dunedin the blazes saw
 From Soltra and Dumperder Law, 390
 And Lothian heard the Regent's order
 That all should bowne them for the Border.

XXX

The livelong night in Branksome rang
 The ceaseless sound of steel;
 The castle-bell with backward clang
 Sent forth the larum peal.
 Was frequent heard the heavy jar,
 Where massy stone and iron bar
 Were piled on echoing keep and tower,
 To whelm the foe with deadly shower; 400
 Was frequent heard the changing guard,
 And watchword from the sleepless ward;
 While, wearied by the endless din,
 Bloodhound and ban-dog yelled within.

XXXI

The noble dame, amid the broil,
 Shared the gray seneschal's high toil,
 And spoke of danger with a smile,
 Cheered the young knights, and council
 ze

Held with the chiefs of riper age.
 No tidings of the foe were brought, 410
 Nor of his numbers knew they aught,
 Nor what in time of truce he sought.
 Some said that there were thousands
 ten;
 And others weened that it was nought
 But Leven Clans or Tynedale men,
 Who came to gather in black-mail;
 And Liddesdale, with small avail,
 Might drive them lightly back agen.
 So passed the anxious night away,
 And welcome was the peep of day. 420

CEASED the high sound—the listening
 throng
 Applaud the Master of the Song;
 And marvel much, in helpless age,
 So hard should be his pilgrimage.
 Had he no friend — no daughter dear,
 His wandering toil to share and cheer?
 No son to be his father's stay,
 And guide him on the rugged way?
 'Ay, once he had — but he was dead!' —
 Upon the harp he stooped his head, 430
 And busied himself the strings withal,
 To hide the tear that fain would fall.
 In solemn measure, soft and slow,
 Arose a father's notes of woe.

CANTO FOURTH

I

SWEET Teviot! on thy silver tide
 The glaring bale-fires blaze no more;
 No longer steel-clad warriors ride
 Along thy wild and willowed shore;
 Where'er thou wind'st by dale or hill,
 All, all is peaceful, all is still,
 As if thy waves, since time was born,
 Since first they rolled upon the Tweed,
 Had only heard the shepherd's reed,
 Nor startled at the bugle-horn. 10

II

Unlike the tide of human time,
 Which, though it change in ceaseless
 flow,
 Retains each grief, retains each crime,
 Its earliest course was doomed to know,
 And, darker as it downward bears,

Is stained with past and present tears.
 Low as that tide has ebb'd with me,
 It still reflects to memory's eye
 The hour my brave, my only boy
 Fell by the side of great Dundee. 30
 Why, when the volleying musket played
 Against the bloody Highland blade,
 Why was not I beside him laid? —
 Enough — he died the death of fame;
 Enough — he died with conquering Grème.

III

Now over Border dale and fell
 Full wide and far was terror spread;
 For pathless marsh and mountain cell
 The peasant left his lowly shed.
 The frightened flocks and herds were pent 30
 Beneath the peel's rude battlement;
 And maids and matrons dropped the tear,
 While ready warriors seized the spear.
 From Branksome's towers the watchman's
 eye
 Dun wreaths of distant smoke can spy,
 Which, curling in the rising sun,
 Showed Southern ravage was begun.

IV

Now loud the heedful gate-ward cried:
 'Prepare ye all for blows and blood!
 Watt Tinlinn, from the Liddel-side, 40
 Comes wading through the flood.
 Full oft the Tynedale snatchers knock
 At his lone gate and prove the lock;
 It was but last Saint Barnabright
 They sieged him a whole summer night,
 But fled at morning; well they knew,
 In vain he never twanged the yew.
 Right sharp has been the evening shower
 That drove him from his Liddel tower;
 And, by my faith,' the gate-ward said, 50
 'I think 't will prove a Warden-raid.'

V

While thus he spoke, the bold yeoman
 Entered the echoing barbican.
 He led a small and shaggy nag,
 That through a bog, from hag to hag,
 Could bound like any Billhope stag.
 It bore his wife and children twain;
 A half-clothed serf was all their train:
 His wife, stout, ruddy, and dark-browed,
 Of silver brooch and bracelet proud, 60
 Laughed to her friends among the crowd.
 He was of stature passing tall,
 But sparely formed and lean withal:

A battered morion on his brow;
 A leathern jack, as fence enow,
 On his broad shoulders loosely hung;
 A Border axe behind was slung;
 His spear, six Scottish ells in length,
 Seemed newly dyed with gore;
 His shafts and bow, of wondrous strength, 70
 His hardy partner bore.

VI

Thus to the Ladye did Tinlinn show
 The tidings of the English foe:
 'Belted Will Howard is marching here,
 And hot Lord Dacre, with many a spear,
 And all the German hackbut-men
 Who have long lain at Askerten.
 They crossed the Liddel at curfew hour,
 And burned my little lonely tower — 80
 The fiend receive their souls therefor!
 It had not been burnt this year and more.
 Barnyard and dwelling, blazing bright,
 Served to guide me on my flight,
 But I was chased the livelong night.
 Black John of Akeshaw and Fergus
 Grème

Fast upon my traces came,
 Until I turned at Priestthaugh Scrogg,
 And shot their horses in the bog,
 Slew Fergus with my lance outright — 90
 I had him long at high despite;
 He drove my cows last Fastern's night.'

VII

Now weary scouts from Liddesdale,
 Fast hurrying in, confirmed the tale;
 As far as they could judge by ken,
 Three hours would bring to Teviot's
 strand
 Three thousand armed Englishmen.
 Meanwhile, full many a warlike band,
 From Teviot, Aill, and Ettrick shade,
 Came in, their chief's defence to aid.
 There was saddling and mounting in haste, 100
 There was pricking o'er moor and lea;
 He that was last at the trysting-place
 Was but lightly held of his gay ladye.

VIII

From fair Saint Mary's silver wave,
 From dreary Gamescleuch's dusky
 height,
 His ready lances Thirlestane brave
 Arrayed beneath a banner bright.

The tressured fleur-de-luce he claims
To wreathe his shield, since royal James,
Encamped by Fala's mossy wave, 110
The proud distinction grateful gave
For faith mid feudal jars;
What time, save Thirlestane alone,
Of Scotland's stubborn barons none
Would march to southern wars;
And hence, in fair remembrance worn,
Yon sheaf of spears his crest has borne;
Hence his high motto shines revealed,
'Ready, aye ready,' for the field.

IX

An aged knight, to danger steeled, 120
With many a moss-trooper, came on;
And, azure in a golden field,
The stars and crescent graced his shield,
Without the bend of Murdieston.
Wide lay his lands round Oakwood Tower,
And wide round baunted Castle-Ower;
High over Borthwick's mountain flood
His wood-embosomed mansion stood;
In the dark glen, so deep below,
The herds of plundered England low, 130
His bold retainers' daily food,
And bought with danger, blows, and blood.
Marauding chief! his sole delight
The moonlight raid, the morning fight;
Not even the Flower of Yarrow's charms
In youth might tame his rage for arms;
And still in age he spurned at rest,
And still his brows the helmet pressed,
Albeit the blanched locks below
Were white as Diulay's spotless snow. 140
Five stately warriors drew the sword
Before their father's band;
A braver knight than Harden's lord
Ne'er bolted on a brand.

X

Scotts of Eskdale, a stalwart band,
Came trooping down the Todshawhill;
By the sword they won their land,
And by the sword they hold it still.
Hearken, Ladye, to the tale
How thy sires won fair Eskdale. 150
Earl Morton was lord of that valley fair,
The Beattisons were his vassals there.
The earl was gentle and mild of mood,
The vassals were warlike and fierce and
rude;
High of heart and baughty of word,
Little they recked of a tame liege-lord.
The earl into fair Eskdale came,

Homage and seigniorship to claim:
Of Gilbert the Galliard a heriot he sought,
Saying, 'Give thy best steed, as a vassal
ought.' 160

'Dear to me is my bonny white steed,
Oft has he helped me at pinch of need;
Lord and earl though thou be, I trow,
I can rein Bucksfoot better than thou.'
Word on word gave fuel to fire,
Till so high blazed the Beattison's ire,
But that the earl the flight had ta'en,
The vassals there their lord had slain.
Sore he plied both whip and spur,
As he urged his steed through Eskdale
muir; 170
And it fell down a weary weight,
Just on the threshold of Branksome gate.

XI

The earl was a wrathful man to see,
Full fain avenged would he be.
In haste to Branksome's lord he spoke,
Saying, 'Take these traitors to thy yoke;
For a cast of hawks, and a purse of gold,
All Eskdale I'll sell thee, to have and
hold:

Beshrew thy heart, of the Beattisons' clan
If thou leavest on Eske a landed man! 180
But spare Woodkerriek's lands alone,
For he lent me his horse to escape upon.'
A glad man then was Branksome bold,
Down he flung him the purse of gold;
To Eskdale soon he spurred again,
And with him five hundred riders has
ta'en.

He left his merry men in the midst of the hill,
And bade them hold them close and still;
And alone he wended to the plain,
To meet with the Galliard and all his train. 190

To Gilbert the Galliard thus he said:
'Know thou me for thy liege-lord and
head;

Deal not with me as with Morton tame,
For Scotts play best at the roughest game.
Give me in peace my heriot due,
Thy bonny white steed, or thou shalt rue.
If my horn I three times wind, Eskdale shall long have the sound in mind.'

XII

Loudly the Beattison laughed in scorn;
'Little care we for thy winded horn. 200

Ne'er shall it be the Galliard's lot
To yield his steed to a haughty Scott.
Wend thou to Branksome back on foot,
With rusty spur and miry boot.
He blew his bugle so loud and hoarse
That the dun deer started at far Craik-cross;

He blew again so loud and clear,
Through the gray mountain-mist there did lances appear;

And the third blast rang with such a din

That the echoes answered from Pentounlinn, 210

And all his riders came lightly in.
Then had you seen a gallant shock,
When saddles were emptied and lances
broke!

For each scornful word the Galliard had
said

A Beattison on the field was laid.
His own good sword the chieftain drew,
And he bore the Gailliard through and through;

Where the Beattisons' blood mixed with the rill,

The Galliard's Haugh men call it still.
The Scotts have scattered the Beattison
clan, 220

In Eskdale they left but one landed man.
The valley of Eske, from the mouth to the source,

Was lost and won for that bonny white horse.

XIII

Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw
came,

And warriors more than I may name;
From Yarrow-cleugh to Hindhaugh-swaire,
From Woodhouselie to Chester-glen,
Trooped man and horse, and bow and
spear;

Their gathering word was Bellen-den.
And better hearts o'er Border sod 230
To siege or rescue never rode.

The Ladye marked the aids come in,
And high her heart of pride arose;

She bade her youthful son attend,
That he might know his Father's friend,
And learn to face his foes:

'The boy is ripe to look on war;
I saw him draw a cross-bow stiff,
And his true arrow struck afar
The raven's nest upon the cliff; 240

The red cross on a Southern breast
Is broader than the raven's nest:
Thou, Whitslade, shall teach him his weapon to wield,
And o'er him hold his father's shield.'

XIV

Well may you think the wily page
Cared not to face the Ladye sage.
He counterfeited childish fear,
And shrieked, and shed full many a tear,
And moaned, and plained in manner wild.

The attendants to the Ladye told, 250
Some fairy, sure, had changed the child,

That wot to be so free and bold.
Then wrathful was the noble dame;
She blushed blood-red for very shame:

'Hence! ere the clan his faintness view;
Hence with the weakling to Buccleugh! —
Watt Tinlinn, thou shalt be his guide
To Rangleburn's lonely side. —

Sure, some fell fiend has cursed our line,
That coward should e'er be son of mine! 260

XV

A heavy task Watt Tinlinn had,
To guide the counterfeited lad.
Soon as the palfrey felt the weight
Of that ill-omened elfish freight,
He bolted, sprung, and reared amain,
Nor heeded bit nor curb nor rein.

It cost Watt Tinlinn mickle toil
To drive him but a Scottish mile;

But as a shallow brook they crossed,
The elf, amid the running stream, 270

His figure changed, like form in dream,
And fled, and shouted, 'Lost! lost!
lost!'

Full fast the urchin ran and laughed,
But faster still a cloth-yard shaft
Whistled from startled Tinlinn's yew,
And pierced his shoulder through and through.

Although the imp might not be slain,
And though the wound soon healed again,
Yet, as he ran, he yelled for pain;
And Watt of Tinlinn, much aghast, 280
Rode back to Branksome fiery fast.

XVI

Soon on the hill's steep verge he stood,
That looks o'er Branksome's towers and
wood;

And martial murmurs from below
 Proclaimed the approaching Southern foe.
 Through the dark wood, in mingled tone,
 Were border pipes and bugles blown;
 The coursers' neighing he could ken,
 A measured tread of marching men;
 While broke at times the solemn hum, 290
 The Almayn's sullen kettle-drum;
 And banners tall, of crimson sheen,
 Above the copse appear;
 And, glistening through the hawthorns
 green,
 Shine helm and shield and spear.

XVII

Light forayers first, to view the ground,
 Spurred their fleet coursers loosely round;
 Behind, in close array, and fast,
 The Kendal archers, all in green,
 Obedient to the bugle blast, 300
 Advancing from the wood were seen.
 To back and guard the archer band,
 Lord Dacre's billmen were at hand:
 A hardy race, on Irthing bred,
 With kirtles white and crosses red,
 Arrayed beneath the banner tall
 That streamed o'er Acre's conquered wall;
 And minstrels, as they marched in order,
 Played, 'Noble Lord Dacre, he dwells on the Border.'

XVIII

Behind the English bill and bow 310
 The mercenaries, firm and slow,
 Moved on to fight in dark array,
 By Conrad led of Wolfenstein,
 Who brought the band from distant Rhine,
 And sold their blood for foreign pay.
 The camp their home, their law the sword,
 They knew no country, owned no lord:
 They were not armed like England's sons,
 But bore the levin-darting guns;
 Buff coats, all frounced and broidered
 o'er, 320
 And morning-borns and scarfs they wore;
 Even better knee was bared, to aid
 The warriors in the escalade;
 All as they marched, in rugged tongue
 Songs of Teutonic feuds they sung.

XIX

But louder still the clamor grew,
 And louder still the minstrels blew,
 From beneath the greenwood tree,
 Back forth Lord Howard's chivalry;

His men-at-arms, with glaive and spear, 330
 Brought up the battle's glittering rear.
 There many a youthful knight, full keen
 To gain his spurs, in arms was seen,
 With favor in his crest, or glove,
 Memorial of his lady-love.
 So rode they forth in fair array,
 Till full their lengthened lines display;
 Then called a halt, and made a stand,
 And cried, 'Saint George for merry England!'

XX

Now every English eye intent 340
 On Branksome's armed towers was bent;
 So near they were that they might know
 The straining harsh of each cross-bow;
 On battlement and bartizan
 Gleamed axe and spear and partisan;
 Falcon and culver on each tower
 Stood prompt their deadly hail to shower;
 And flashing armor frequent broke
 From eddying whirls of sable smoke,
 Where upon tower and turret head 350
 The seething pitch and molten lead
 Reeked like a witch's caldron red.
 While yet they gaze, the bridges fall,
 The wicket open, and from the wall
 Rides forth the hoary seneschal.

XXI

Armed he rode, all save the head,
 His white beard o'er his breastplate spread;
 Unbroke by age, erect his seat,
 He ruled his eager courser's gait,
 Forced him with chastened fire to prance, 360
 And, high curvetting, slow advance:
 In sign of truce, his better hand
 Displayed a peeled willow wand;
 His squire, attending in the rear,
 Bore high a gauntlet on his spear.
 When they espied him riding out,
 Lord Howard and Lord Dacre stout
 Sped to the front of their array,
 To hear what this old knight should say.

XXII

'Ye English warden lords, of you 370
 Demands the ladye of Buceleuch,
 Why, 'gainst the truce of Border tide,
 In hostile guise ye dare to ride,
 With Kendal bow and Gilsland brand,
 And all yon mercenary band,
 Upon the bounds of fair Scotland?'

My Ladye reads you swith return;
 And, if but one poor straw you burn,
 Or do our towers so much molest
 As scare one swallow from her nest, 180
 Saint Mary ! but we'll light a brand Shall warm your hearths in Cumberland.' —

XXIII

A wrathful man was Daere's lord,
 But calmer Howard took the word:
 'May't please thy dame, Sir Seneschal,
 To seek the castle's outward wall,
 Our pursuivant-at-arms shall show
 Both why we came and when we go.'
 The message sped, the noble dame
 To the wall's outward circle came; 190
 Each chief around leaned on his spear,
 To see the pursuivant appear.
 All in Lord Howard's livery dressed,
 The lion argent decked his breast;
 He led a boy of blooming hue —
 Ought to meet a mother's view !
 It was the heir of great Bunsleugh,
 Obsequence meet the herald made,
 And thus his master's will he said:

XXIV

'It irks, high dame, my noble lords, 400
 'Gainst ladye fair to draw their swords;
 But yet they may not tamely see,
 All through the Western Warleury,
 Your law-contemning kinsmen ride,
 And burn and spoil the Border-side;
 And ill beseems your rank and birth
 To make your towers a hemens-firch.
 We claim from thee William of Delo-raine,
 That he may suffer march-treason pain.
 It was but last Saint Cuthbert's even 410
 He pricked to Stapleton on Leven.
 Harried the lands of Richard Musgrave,
 And slew his brother by dint of glaive.
 Then, since a lone and widowed dame
 These restless riders may not tame,
 Either receive within thy towers
 Two hundred of my master's powers,
 Or straight they sound their warrison,
 And storm and spoil thy garrison;
 And this fair boy, to London led, 420
 Shall good King Edward's page be bred.'

XXV

He ceased — and loud the boy did cry,
 And stretched his little arms on high,

Implored for aid each well-known face,
 And strove to seek the dame's embrace.
 A moment changed that Ladye's cheer,
 Gushed to her eye the unbidden tear;
 She gazed upon the leaders round,
 And dark and sad each warrior frowned;
 Then deep within her sobbing breast 430
 She locked the struggling sigh to rest,
 Unaltered and collected stood,
 And thus replied in dauntless mood:

XXVI

'Say to your lords of high emprise
 Who war on women and on boys,
 That either William of Deloraine
 Will cleanse him by oath of march-treason stain,
 Or else he will the combat take
 'Gainst Musgrave for his honor's sake.
 No knight in Cumberland so good 440
 But William may count with him kin and
 blood.
 Knighthood he took of Douglas sword,
 When English blood swelled Ancram ford;
 And but Lord Daere's steed was wight,
 And bare him ably in the flight,
 Himself had seen him dubbed a knight.
 For the young heir of Branksome's line,
 God be his aid, and God be mine !
 Through me no friend shall meet his doom;
 Here, while I live, no foe finds room. 450
 Then, if thy lords their purpose urge,
 Take our defiance loud and high;
 Our slogan is their lyke-wake dirge,
 Our moat the grave where they shall lie.'

XXVII

Proud she looked round, applause to claim —
 Then lightened Thirlestane's eye of flame;
 His bugle Wat of Harden blew;
 Pensils and pennons wide were flung,
 To heaven the Border slogan rung. 459
 'Saint Mary for the young Bunsleugh !'
 The English war-cry answered wide,
 And forward bent each Southern spear;
 Each Kendal archer made a stride,
 And drew the bowstring to his ear;
 Each minstrel's war-note loud was blown; —
 But, ere a gray-goose shaft had flown,
 A horseman galloped from the rear.

XXVIII

'Ah ! noble lords !' he breathless said.
 'What treason has your march betrayed ?

What make you here from aid so far, 470
 Before you walls, around you war?
 Your foemen triumph in the thought
 That in the toils the lion's caught.
 Already on dark Ruberlaw
 The Douglas holds his weapon-schaw;
 The lances, waving in his train,
 Clothe the dun heath like autumn grain;
 And on the Liddel's northern strand,
 To bar retreat to Cumberland, 479
 Lord Maxwell ranks his merry-men good
 Beneath the eagle and the rood;
 And Jedwood, Eke, and Teriotdale,
 Have to proud Angus come;
 And all the Merse and Lauderdale
 Have risen with haughty Home.
 An exile from Northumberland,
 In Liddesdale I've wandered long,
 But still my heart was with merry Eng-
 land,

And cannot brook my country's wrong;
 And hard I've spurred all night, to show 492
 The mustering of the coming foe.'

XXIX

'And let them come!' fierce Dacre cried;
 'For soon you crest, my father's pride,
 That swept the shores of Judah's sea,
 And waved in gales of Galilee,
 From Branksome's highest towers displayed,
 Shall mark the rescue's lingering aid!—
 Level eacharquebuss on row;
 Draw, merry archers, draw the bow;
 Up,兵men, to the walls, and cry, 500
 Dacre for England, win or die!'—

XXX

'Yet hear,' quoth Howard, 'calmly hear,
 Nor deem my words the words of fear:
 For who, in field or foray slack,
 Saw the Blanche Lion e'er fall back?
 But thus to risk our Border flower
 In strife against a kingdom's power,
 Ten thousand Scots 'gainst thousands three,
 Certain, were desperate policy.
 Nay, take the terms the Ladye made 510
 For consensus of the advancing aid:
 Let Musgrave meet fierce Deloraine
 In single fight, and if he gain,
 He gains for us; but if he's crossed,
 'Tis but a single warrior lost:
 For rest retreating as they came,
 Avoid defeat and death and shame.'

XXXI

Ill could the haughty Dacre brook
 His brother warden's sage rebuke;
 And yet his forward step he stayed, 520
 And slow and sullenly obeyed.
 But ne'er again the Border side
 Did these two lords in friendship ride;
 And this slight discontent, men say,
 Cost blood upon another day.

XXXII

The pursuivant-at-arms again
 Before the castle took his stand;
 His trumpet called with parleying strain
 The leaders of the Scottish band;
 And he defied, in Musgrave's right, 530
 Stout Deloraine to single fight.
 A gauntlet at their feet he laid,
 And thus the terms of fight he said:
 'If in the lists good Musgrave's sword
 Vanquish the Knight of Deloraine,
 Your youthful chieftain, Branksome's lord,
 Shall hostage for his clan remain;
 If Deloraine foil good Musgrave,
 The boy his liberty shall have.
 Howe'er it falls, the English band, 540
 Unharming Scots, by Scots unharmed,
 In peaceful march, like men unarmed,
 Shall straight retreat to Cumberland.'

XXXIII

Unconscious of the near relief.
 The proffer pleased each Scottish chief.
 Though much the Ladye sage gain-
 said;
 For though their hearts were brave and
 true,
 From Jedwood's recent sack they knew
 How tardy was the Regent's aid:
 And you may guess the noble dame 550
 Durst not the secret prescience own,
 Sprung from the art she might not name,
 By which the coming help was known.
 Closed was the compact, and agreed
 That lists should be enclosed with speed
 Beneath the castle on a lawn:
 They fixed the morrow for the strife,
 On foot, with Scottish axe and knife,
 At the fourth hour from peep of dawn;
 When Deloraine, from sickness freed, 560
 Or else a champion in his stead,
 Should for himself and chieftain stand
 Against stout Musgrave, hand to hand.

XXXIV

I know right well that in their lay
 Full many minstrels sing and say
 Such combat should be made on horse,
 On foaming steed, in full career,
 With brand to aid, whenas the spear
 Should shiver in the course:
 But ho, the jovial harper, taught 570
 Me, yet a youth, how it was fought,
 In guise which now I say;
 He knew each ordinance and clause
 Of Black Lord Archibald's battle-laws,
 In the old Douglas' day.
 He brooked not, he, that scoffing tongue
 Should tax his minstrelsy with wrong,
 Or call his song untrue:
 For this, when they the goblet plied,
 And such rude taunt had chafed his 580
 pride,
 The bard of Reull he slow.
 On Teviot's side in fight they stood,
 And tuneful hands were stained with
 blood,
 Where still the thorn's white branches
 wave,
 Memorial o'er his rival's grave.

XXXV

Why should I tell the rigid doom
 That dragged my master to his tomb;
 How Ousenam's maidens tore their
 hair,
 Wept till their eyes were dead and dim,
 And wrung their hands for love of him 590
 Who died at Jedwood Air?
 He died! — his scholars, one by one,
 To the cold silent grave are gone;
 And I, alas! survive alone,
 To muse o'er rivalries of yore,
 And grieve that I shall hear no more
 The strains, with envy heard before;
 For, with my minstrel brethren fled,
 My jealousy of song is dead.

He paused: the listening dames again 600
 Applaud the hoary Minstrel's strain.
 With many a word of kindly cheer, —
 In pity half, and half sincere, —
 Marvelled the Duchess how so well
 His legendary song could tell
 Of ancient deeds, so long forgot;
 Of feuds, whose memory was not;

Of forests, now laid waste and bare;
 Of towers, which harbor now the hare;
 Of manners, long since changed and
 gone; 610

Of chiefs, who under their gray stone
 So long had slept that sickle Fame
 Had blotted from her rolls their name,
 And twined round some new minion's head
 The fading wreath for which they bled:
 In sooth, 't was strange this old man's verse
 Could call them from their marble hearse.

The harper smiled, well pleased; for ne'er
 Was flattery lost on poet's ear.
 A simple race! they waste their toil 620
 For the vain tributes of a smile;
 E'en when in age their flame expires,
 Her dulcet breath can fan its fires:
 Their drooping faucy wakes at praise,
 And strives to trim the short-lived blaze.

Smiled then, well pleased, the aged man,
 And thus his tale continued ran.

CANTO FIFTH

I

CALL it not vain: — they do not err,
 Who say that when the poet dies
 Mute Nature mourns her worshipper
 And celebrates his obsequies;
 Who say tall cliff and cavern lone
 For the departed bard make moan;
 That mountains weep in crystal rill;
 That flowers in tears of balm distil;
 Through his loved groves that breezes 630
 sigh,
 And oaks in deeper groan reply,
 And rivers teach their rushing wave
 To murmur dirges round his grave.

II

Not that, in sooth, o'er mortal urn
 Those things inanimate can mourn,
 But that the stream, the wood, the gale,
 Is vocal with the plaintive wail
 Of those who, else forgotten long,
 Lived in the poet's faithful song,
 And, with the poet's parting breath,
 Whose memory feels a second death. 640
 The maid's pale shade, who waits her lot,
 That love, true love, should be forgot,
 From rose and hawthorn shakes the tear
 Upon the gentle minstrel's bier:

The phantom knight, his glory fled,
Mourns o'er the field he heaped with dead,
Mounts the wild blast that sweeps amain
And shrieks along the battle-plain;
The chief, whose antique crownlet long
Still sparkled in the feudal song, 30
Now, from the mountain's misty throne,
Sees, in the thanedom once his own,
His ashes undistinguished lie,
His place, his power, his memory die;
His groans the lonely caverns fill,
His tears of rage impel the rill;
All mourn the minstrel's harp unstrung,
Their name unknown, their praise unsung.

III

Scarcely the hot assault was stayed,
The terms of truce were scarcely made, 40
When they could spy, from Branksome's
towers,

The advancing march of martial powers.
Thick clouds of dust afar appeared,
And trampling steeds were faintly heard;
Bright spears above the columns dun
Glanced momentary to the sun;
And feudal banners fair displayed
The bands that moved to Branksome's aid.

IV

Vails not to tell each hardy clan,
From the fair Middle Marches came; 50
The Bloody Heart blazed in the van,
Announcing Douglas, dreaded name!
Vails not to tell what steeds did spurn,
Where the Seven Spears of Wedderburne
Their men in battle-order set,
And Swinton laid the lance in rest
That tanned of yore the sparkling crest
Of Clarence's Plantagenet.
Nor list I say what hundreds more,
From the rich Merse and Lammermore, 60
And Tweed's fair borders, to the war,
Beneath the cres of old Dunbar
And Hapburn's mingled banners, come
Down the steep mountain glittering far,
And shouting still, 'A Home! a Home!'

V

Now squire and knight, from Branksome
sent,
On many a courteous message went:
To every chief and lord they paid
Most thanks for prompt and powerful aid,
And told them how a truce was made, 70

And how a day of fight was ta'en
'Twixt Musgrave and stout Deloraine;
And how the Ladye prayed them dear
That all would stay the fight to see,
And deign, in love and courtesy,
To taste of Branksome cheer.
Nor, while they bade to feast each Scot,
Were England's noble lords forgot.
Himself, the hoary seneschal,
Rode forth, in seemly terms to call 80
Those gallant foes to Branksome Hall.
Accepted Howard, than whom knight
Was never dubbed, more bold in fight,
Nor, when from war and armor free,
More famed for stately courtesy;
But angry Dacre rather chose
In his pavilion to repose.

VI

Now, noble dame, perchance you ask
How these two hostile armies met,
Deeming it were no easy task 90
To keep the truce which here was set;
Where martial spirits, all on fire,
Breathed only blood and mortal ire.
By mutual inroads, mutual blows,
By habit, and by nation, foes,
They met on Teviot's strand;
They met and sate them mingled down,
Without a threat, without a frown,
As brothers meet in foreign land:
The hands, the spear that lately grasped, 100
Still in the mailed gauntlet clasped,
Were interchanged in greeting dear;
Visors were raised and faces shown,
And many a friend, to friend made known,
Partook of social cheer.
Some drove the jolly bowl about;
With dice and draughts some chased the
day;
And some, with many a merry shout,
In riot, revelry, and rout,
Pursued the football play. 110

VII

Yet, be it known, had bugles blown
Or sign of war been seen,
Those hands, so fair together ranged,
Those hands, so frankly interchanged,
Had dyed with gore the green:
The merry shout by Teviot-side
Had sunk in war-cries wild and wide,
And in the groan of death;
And whingers, now in friendship bare.

The social meal to part and share, 120
 Had found a bloody sheath.
 'Twixt truce and war, such sudden change
 Was not infrequent, nor held strange,
 In the old Border-day;
 But yet on Branksome's towers and town,
 In peaceful merriment, sunk down
 The sun's declining ray.

VIII

The blithesome signs of wassail gay
 Decayed not with the dying day;
 Soon through the latticed windows tall 130
 Of lofty Branksome's lordly hall,
 Divided square by shafts of stone,
 Huge flakes of ruddy lustre shone;
 Nor less the gilded rafters rang
 With merry harp and beakers' clang;
 And frequent, on the darkening plain,
 Loud holla, whoop, or whistle ran,
 As bands, their stragglers to regain,
 Gave the shrill watchword of their clan;
 And revellers, o'er their bowls, proclaim 140
 Douglas' or Dacre's conquering name.

IX

Less frequent heard, and fainter still,
 At length the various clamors died,
 And you might hear from Branksome hill
 No sound but Teviot's rushing tide;
 Save when the changing sentinel
 The challenge of his watch could tell;
 And save where, through the dark profound,
 The clanging axe and hammer's sound
 Rang from the nether lawn; 150
 For many a busy hand toiled there,
 Strong pales to shape and beams to square,
 The lists' dread barriers to prepare
 Against the morrow's dawn.

X

Margaret from hall did soon retreat,
 Despite the dame's reproving eye;
 Nor marked she, as she left her seat,
 Full many a stifled sigh:
 For many a noble warrior strove
 To win the Flower of Teviot's love, 160
 And many a bold ally
 With throbbing heart and ardent heart,
 At her door hourly bowed apart,
 In broken sleep she lay
 By turns, from sleep and wake she rose;
 While yet the dawned not hours repast,
 She viewed the dawning day.

Of all the hundreds sunk to rest,
 First woke the loveliest and the best.

XI

She gazed upon the inner court,
 Which in the tower's tall shadow lay,
 Where coursers' clang and stamp and snarl
 Had rung the livelong yesterday:
 Now still as death; till stalking slow, —
 The jingling spurs announced the tread, —
 A stately warrior passed below;
 But when he raised his plumed head —
 Blessed Mary! can it be? — Secure, as if in Ouseburn bowers,
 He walks through Branksome's hostile
 towers,
 With fearless step and free.
 She dared not sign, she dared not speak —
 O, if one page's slumbers break,
 His blood the price must pay!
 Not all the pearls Queen Mary wears,
 Not Margaret's yet more precious tears,
 Shall buy his life a day.

XII

Yet was his hazard small; for well
 You may bethink you of the spell
 Of that sly urchin page:
 This to his lord he did impart,
 And made him seem, by glamour art,
 A knight from Hermitage.
 Unchallenged, thus, the warder's post,
 The court, unchallenged, thus he cruised,
 For all the vassalage;
 But O, what magic's quaint disguise
 Could blind fair Margaret's azure eyes!
 She started from her seat;
 While with surprise and fear she strove,
 And both could scarcely master love —
 Lord Henry's at her feet.

XIII

Oft have I mused what purpose bad
 That foul malicious urchin had
 To bring this meeting round,
 For happy love's a heavenly sight,
 And by a vile malignant sprite
 It ead no joy is found;
 And oft I've deemed, perchance thought
 Their coming passion might have wrought
 Scorn and sin and shame,
 And death to Cranston's gallant Knight.

CANTO FIFTH

And to the gentle Ladye bright
Disgrace and loss of fame.
But earthly spirit could not tell
The heart of them that loved so well.
True love 's the gift which God has given
To man alone beneath the heaven:
It is not fantasy's hot fire,

Whose wishes soon as granted fly; 220
It liveth not in fierce desire,
With dead desire it doth not die;
It is the secret sympathy,
The silver link, the silken tie,
Which heart to heart, and mind to mind,
In body and in soul can bind. —
Now leave we Margaret and her knight,
To tell you of the approaching fight.

XIV

Their warning blasts the bugles blew,
The pipe's shrill port aroused each 230
clan;
In haste the deadly strife to view,
The trooping warriors eager ran:
Thick round the lists their lances stood,
Like blasted pines in Ettrick wood;
To Branksome many a look they threw,
The combatants' approach to view,
And banded many a word of boast
About the knight each favored most.

XV

Meantime full anxious was the dame;
For now arose disputed claim 240
Of who should fight for Deloraine,
'Twixt Harden and 'twixt Thirlestane.
They gan to reckon kin and rent,
And frowning brow on brow was bent;
But yet not long the strife — for, lo!
Himself, the Knight of Deloraine,
Strong, as it seemed, and free from pain,
In armor sheathed from top to toe,
Appeared and craved the combat due.
The dame her charm successful knew, 250
And the fierce chiefs their claims withdrew.

XVI

When for the lists they sought the plain,
The stately Ladye's silken rein
Did noble Howard hold;
Unarmed by her side he walked,
And much in courteous phrase they talked
Of feats of arms of old.
Costly his garb — his Flemish ruff
Fell o'er his doublet, shaped of buff,
With satin slashed and lined; 260

Tawny his boot, and gold his spur,
His cloak was all of Poland fur,
His hose with silver twined;
His Bilboa blade, by Marchmen felt,
Hung in a broad and studded belt;
Hence, in rude phrase, the Borderers st
Called noble Howard Belted Will.

XVII

Behind Lord Howard and the dame
Fair Margaret on her palfrey came,
Whose footcloth swept the ground;
White was her wimple and her veil,
And her loose locks a chaplet pale
Of whitest roses bound;
The lordly Angus, by her side,
In courtesy to cheer her tried;
Without his aid, her hand in vain
Had strove to guide her broidered rein.
He deemed she shuddered at the sight
Of warriors met for mortal fight;
But cause of terror, all unguessed,
Was fluttering in her gentle breast,
When, in their chairs of crimson placed,
The dame and she the barriers graced.

XVIII

Prize of the field, the young Buccleuch
An English knight led forth to view;
Scaree rued the boy his present plight,
So much he longed to see the fight.
Within the lists in knightly pride
High Home and haughty Dacre ride;
Their leading staffs of steel they wield,
As marshals of the mortal field,
While to each knight their care assigned
Like vantage of the sun and wind.
Then heralds hoarse did loud proclaim,
In King and Queen and Warden's name
That none, while lasts the strife,
Should dare, by look or sign or word,
Aid to a champion to afford,
On peril of his life;
And not a breath the silence broke
Till thus the alternate heralds spoke: —

XIX

ENGLISH HERALD

' Here standeth Richard of Musgrave,
Good knight and true, and freely born
Amends from Deloraine to crave,
For foul despiteous scathe and scorn.
He sayeth that William of Deloraine
Is traitor false by Border laws;

'This with his sword he will maintain,
So help him God and his good cause!'

XX

SCOTTISH HERALD

'Here standeth William of Deloraine, 310
Good knight and true, of noble strain,
Who smyth that foul treason's stain,
Since he bore arms ne'er soiled his coat;
And that, so help him God above!
He will on Musgrave's body prove
He lies most foully in his throat.'

LORD BARR

'Forward, brave champions, to the fight!
Sound trumpets!'

LORD HOME

'God defend the right!' —
Then, Tervint, how thine echoes rang,
When bugle-sound and trumpet-clang 320
Let loose the martial fang,
And in mid-list, with shield pulsed high,
And measured step and wary eye,
The combatants did close!

XXI

Ill would it suit your gentle ear,
Ye lovely listeners, to hear
How to the axe the helms did sound,
And blood poured down from many a wound;
For desperate was the strife and long,
And other warrior fierce and strong. 330
But, were each dame a listening knight,
I well could tell how warriors fight,
For I have seen war's lightning flashing,
Seen the claymore with bayonet clashing,
Seen through red blood the war-horse
dashing,
And scorned, amid the reeling strife,
To yield a step for death or life

XXII

'Tis done, 'tis done! that fatal blow
Has stretched him on the bloody plain;
He strives to rise — brave Musgrave,
no!
Thou never shalt thou rise again!
Do shake it blood — some friendly hand
Under the victor's barred band,
Unfix the garter's iron clasp,
And give him room for life to gasp! —

O, bootless aid! — haste, holy friar,
Haste, ere the sinner shall expire!
(Of all his guilt let him be shaven,
And smooch his path from earth to heaven!)

XXIII

In haste the holy friar sped; — 325
His naked foot was dyed with red,
As through the lists he ran;
Unmindful of the shouts on high
That hailed the conqueror's victory,
He raised the dying man;
Loose waved his silver beard and hair,
As o'er him he kneeled down in prayer;
And still the crucifix on high
He holds before his darkening eye;
And still he bends an anxious ear, 360
His faltering penitence to hear;
Still props him from the bloody sod,
Still, even when soul and body part,
Pours ghostly comfort on his heart,
And bids him trust in God!
Unheard he prays; — the death-pang's
o'er!
Richard of Musgrave breathes no more.

XXIV

As if exhausted in the fight,
Or musing o'er the piteous sight,
The silent victor stands; 370
His leaver did he not unclasp,
Marked not the shouts, felt not the grasp
Of gratulating hands.
When lo! strange cries of wild surprise,
Mingled with seeming terror, rise
Among the Scottish bands;
And all, amid the thronged array,
In panic haste gave o'er way
To a half-naked ghastly man,
Who downward from the castle ran: 380
He crossed the barriers at a bound
And wild and haggard looked around,
As dizzy and in pain;
And all upon the armed ground
Knew William of Deloraine!
Each lady sprung from seat with speed;
Vaulted each marshal train his steed,
'And who art thou?' they cried
'Who hast this battle fought and won?'
His plumed helm was soon undone — 390
'Crusader of Tervint-side'
For this fair prize I've fought and won. —
And to the lady led her son.

XXV

Full oft the rescued boy she kissed,
 And often pressed him to her breast,
 For, under all her dauntless show,
 Her heart had throbb'd at every blow;
 Yet not Lord Cranstoun deigned she greet,
 Though low he kneeled at her feet.
 Me lists not tell what words were made, <sup>400</sup>
 What Douglas, Home, and Howard said —
 For Howard was a generous foe —
 And how the clan united pray'd
 The Ladye would the feud forego,
 And deign to bless the nuptial hour
 Of Cranstoun's lord and Teviot's Flower.

XXVI

She look'd to river, look'd to hill,
 Thought on the Spirit's prophecy,
 Then broke her silence stern and still: <sup>409</sup>
 'Not you, but Fate, has vanquish'd
 me;
 Their influence kindly stars may shower
 On Teviot's tide and Branksome's tower,
 For pride is quell'd and love is free.'
 She took fair Margaret by the hand,
 Who, breathless, trembling, scarce might
 stand;
 That hand to Cranstoun's lord gave she:
 'As I am true to thee and thine,
 Do thou be true to me and mine!
 This clasp of love our bond shall be,
 For this is your betrothing day, <sup>430</sup>
 And all these noble lords shall stay,
 To grace it with their company.'

XXVII

All as they left the listed plain,
 Much of the story she did gain:
 How Cranstoun fought with Deloraine,
 And of his page, and of the book
 Which from the wounded knight he took;
 And how he sought her castle high,
 That morn, by help of gramarye;
 How, in Sir William's armor dight, <sup>430</sup>
 Stolen by his page, while slept the knight,
 He took on him the single fight.
 But half his tale he left unsaid,
 And hangered till he join'd the maid. —
 Care'd not the Ladye to betray
 Her mystic arts in view of day;
 But well she thought, ere midnight came,
 Of that strange page the pride to tame,
 From his foul hands the book to save,
 And send it back to Michael's grave. — <sup>440</sup>

Needs not to tell each tender word
 'Twixt Margaret and 'twixt Cranstoun's
 lord;
 Nor how she told of former woes,
 And how her bosom fell and rose
 While he and Musgrave bandied blows. —
 Needs not these lovers' joys to tell;
 One day, fair maids, you'll know them
 well.

XXVIII

William of Deloraine some chance
 Had wakened from his deathlike trance,
 And taught that in the listed plain <sup>450</sup>
 Another, in his arms and shield,
 Against fierce Musgrave axe did wield,
 Under the name of Deloraine.
 Hence to the field unarmed he ran,
 And hence his presence scared the clan,
 Who held him for some fleeting wraith,
 And not a man of blood and breath.
 Not much this new ally he loved,
 Yet, when he saw what hap had proved,
 He greeted him right heartilie: <sup>460</sup>
 He would not waken old debate,
 For he was void of rancorous hate,
 Though rude and scant of courtesy;
 In raids he spilt but seldom blood,
 Unless when men-at-arms withstood,
 Or, as was meet, for deadly feud.
 He ne'er bore grudge for stalwart blow,
 Ta'en in fair fight from gallant foe.
 And so 't was seen of him e'en now,
 When on dead Musgrave he looked down: <sup>470</sup>
 Grief darkened on his rugged brow,
 Though half disguis'd with a frown;
 And thus, while sorrow bent his head,
 His foeman's epitaph he made:

XXIX

'Now, Richard Musgrave, liest thou here,
 I ween, my deadly enemy;
 For, if I slew thy brother dear,
 Thou slew'st a sister's son to me;
 And when I lay in dungeon dark
 Of Naworth Castle long months three, <sup>480</sup>
 Till ransomed for a thousand mark,
 Dark Musgrave, it was long of thee.
 And, Musgrave, could our fight be tried,
 And thou wert now alive, as I,
 No mortal man should us divide,
 Till one, or both of us, did die:
 Yet rest thee God! for well I know
 I ne'er shall find a nobler foe.

In all the northern counties here,
Whose word is Snaffle, spur, and spear, 490
Thou wert the best to follow gear.
'T was pleasure, as we looked behind,
To see how thou the chase couldst wind,
Cheer the dark bloodhound on his way,
And with the bugle rouse the fray !
I'd give the lands of Deloraine,
Dark Musgrave were alive again.'

XXX

So mourned he till Lord Dacre's band
Were bowing back to Cumberland.
They raised brave Musgrave from the 500
field
And laid him on his bloody shield;
On levelled lances, four and four,
By turns, the noble burden bore.
Before, at times, upon the gale
Was heard the Minstrel's plaintive wail;
Behind, four priests in sable stole
Sung requiem for the warrior's soul;
Around, the horsemen slowly rode;
With trailing pikes the spearmen trode;
And thus the gallant knight they bore 510
Through Liddesdale to Leven's shore,
Thence to Holme Coltrame's lofty nave,
And laid him in his father's grave.

THE harp's wild notes, though hushed the
song,

The mimic march of death prolong;
Now seems it far, and now a-near,
Now meets, and now eludes the ear,
Now seems some mountain side to sweep,
Now faintly dies in valley deep,
Seems now as if the Minstrel's wail, 520
Now the sad requiem, loads the gale;
Last, o'er the warrior's closing grave,
Rang the full choir in choral stave.

After due pause, they bade him tell
Why he, who touched the harp so well,
Should thus, with ill-rewarded toil,
Wander a poor and thankless soil,
When the more generous Southern Land
Would well requite his skilful hand.

The aged harper, howsoe'er 530
His only friend, his harp, was dear,
Liked not to bear it ranked so high
Above his flowing poetry:

Less liked he still that scornful jeer
Misprized the land he loved so dear;
High was the sound as thus again
The bard resumed his minstrel strain.

CANTO SIXTH

(1)

BREATHES there the man, with soul so
dead,
Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land ?
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burned,
As home his footsteps he hath turned
From wandering on a foreign strand ?
If such there breathe, go, mark him well;
For him no minstrel raptures swell;
High though his titles, proud his name, 9
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim, —
Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
The wretch, concentrated all in self,
Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
And, doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust from whence he sprang,
Unwept, unhonored, and unsung.

11

O Caledonia, stern and wild,
Meet nurse for a poetic child !
Land of brown heath and shaggy wood,
Land of the mountain and the flood, 20
Land of my sires ! what mortal hand
Can e'er untie the filial band
That knits me to thy rugged strand !
Still, as I view each well-known scene,
Think what is now and what hath been,
Seems as to me, of all bereft,
Sole friends thy woods and streams were left;

And thus I love them better still,
Even in extremity of ill.
By Yarrow's stream still let me stray, 30
Though none should guide my feeble way;
Still feel the breeze down Ettrick break,
Although it chill my withered cheek;
Still lay my head by Teviot-stone,
Though there, forgotten and alone,
The bard may draw his parting groan.

111

Not scorned like me, to Branksome Hall
The minstrels came at festive call;
Trooping they came from near and far,

The jovial priests of mirth and war; 40
 Alike for feast and fight prepared,
 Battle and banquet both they shared.
 Of late, before each martial clan
 They blew their death-note in the van,
 But now for every merry mate
 Rose the portcullis' iron grate;
 They sound the pipe, they strike the string,
 They dance, they revel, and they sing,
 Till the rude turrets shake and ring.

IV

Me lists not at this tide declare 50
 The splendor of the spousal rite,
 How mustered in the chapel fair
 Both maid and matron, squire and
 knight;
 Me lists not tell of owches rare,
 Of mantles green, and braided hair,
 And kirtles furred with miniver;
 What plumage waved the altar round,
 How spurs and ringing chainlets sound:
 And hard it were for bard to speak
 The changeful hue of Margaret's cheek, 60
 That lovely hue which comes and flies,
 As awe and shame alternate rise!

V

Some bards have sung, the Ladye high
 Chapel or altar came not nigh,
 Nor durst the rites of spousal grace,
 So much she feared each holy place.
 False slanders these: — I trust right well,
 She wrought not by forbidden spell,
 For mighty words and signs have power
 O'er sprites in planetary hour; 70
 Yet scarce I praise their venturous part
 Who tamper with such dangerous art.
 But this for faithful truth I say, —
 The Ladye by the altar stood,
 Of sable velvet her array,
 And on her head a crimson hood,
 With pearls embroidered and entwined,
 Guarded with gold, with ermine lined;
 A merlin sat upon her wrist,
 Held by a leash of silken twist. 80

VI

The spousal rites were ended soon;
 'T was now the merry hour of noon,
 And in the lofty arched hall
 Was spread the gorgeous festival.
 Steward and squire, with herdful haste,
 Marched the rank of every guest;

Pages, with ready blade, were there,
 The mighty meal to carve and share:
 O'er capon, heron-shew, and crane,
 And princely peacock's gilded train, 90
 And o'er the boar-head, garnished brave,
 And cygnet from Saint Mary's wave,
 O'er ptarmigan and venison,
 The priest had spoke his benison.
 Then rose the riot and the din,
 Above, beneath, without, within!
 For, from the lofty balcony,
 Rang trumpet, shalm, and psaltery:
 Their clanging bowls old warriors quaffed,
 Loudly they spoke and loudly laughed; 100
 Whispered young knights, in tone more mild,
 To ladies fair, and ladies smiled.
 The hooded hawks, high perched on beam,
 The clamor joined with whistling scream,
 And flapped their wings and shook bells,
 In concert with the stag-hounds' yells.
 Round go the flasks of ruddy wine,
 From Bordeaux, Orleans, or the Rhine;
 Their tasks the busy sewers ply
 And all is mirth and revelry 110

VII

The Goblin Page, omitting still
 No opportunity of ill,
 Strove now, while blood ran hot and high,
 To rouse debate and jealousy;
 Till Conrad, Lord of Wolfenstein,
 By nature fierce, and warm with wine,
 And now in humor highly crossed
 About some steeds his hand had lost,
 High words to words succeeding still,
 Smote with his gauntlet stout Hunthill, 120
 A hot and hardy Rutherford,
 Whom men called Dickon Draw-the-Sword.
 He took it on the page's saye,
 Hunthill had driven these steeds away.
 Then Howard, Home, and Douglas rose,
 The kindling discord to compose;
 Stern Rutherford right little said,
 But bit his glove and shook his head.
 A fortnight thence, in Inglewood, 120
 Stout Conrad, cold, and drenched in blood,
 His bosom gored with many a wound,
 Was by a woodman's lyme-dog found:
 Unknown the manner of his death,
 Gone was his brand, both sword and sheath;
 But ever from that time, 't was said,
 That Dickon wore a Cologne blade.

VIII

The dwarf, who feared his master's eye
Might his foul treachery espie,
Now sought the castle buttery,
Where many a yeoman, bold and free, 140
Revell'd as merrily and well
As those that sat in lordly selle.
Watt Tinnin there did frankly raise
The pledge to Arthur Fire-the-Braes;
And he, as by his breeding bound,
To Howard's merry-men sent it round.
To quit them, on the English side,
Red Roland Forster loudly cried,
'A deep carouse to yon fair bride!'
At every pledge, from vat and pail, 150
Foamed forth in floods the nut-brown ale,
While shout the riders every one;
Such day of mirth ne'er cheered their
clan,
Since old Buccleuch the name did gain,
When in the clouch the buck was ta'en.

IX

The wily page, with vengeful thought,
Remembered him of Tinnin's yew,
And swore it should be dearly bought
That over he the arrow drew.
First, he the yeoman did molest 160
With bitter gibe and taunting jest;
Told how he fled at Solway strife,
And how Hob Armstrong cheered his wife;
Then, shunning still his powerful arm,
At unawares he wrought him harm;
From treacher stole his choicest cheer,
Dashed from his lips his can of beer;
Then, to his knee sly creeping on,
With bodkin pierced him to the bone:
The venom'd wound and festering joint 170
Long after rued that bodkin's point.
The startled yeoman swore and spurned,
And beard and flagons overturned.
Riot and clamor wild begun;
Back to the hall the urchin ran,
Took in a darkling nook his post,
And grinned, and muttered, 'Lost! lost!
lost!'

X

By this, the dame, lest farther fray
Should mar the concord of the day,
Had bid the minstrels tune their lay. 180
And first stepped forth old Albert Græme,
The minstrel of that ancient name:

Was none who struck the harp so well
Within the Land Debatable;
Well friended too, his hardy kin,
Whoever lost, were sure to win;
They sought the beeves that made their broth
In Scotland and in England both.
In homely guise, as nature bade,
His simple song the Borderer said. 190

XI

ALBERT GRÆME

It was an English ladye bright,
(The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall)
And she would marry a Scottish knight,
For Love will still be lord of all.

Blithely they saw the rising sun,
When he shone fair on Carlisle wall;
But they were sad ere day was done,
Though Love was still the lord of all.

Her sire gave brooch and jewel fine,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle
wall; 200
Her brother gave but a flask of wine,
For ire that Love was lord of all.

For she had lands both meadow and lea,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle
wall;
And he swore her death, ere he would
A Scottish knight the lord of all!

XII

That wine she had not tasted well,
(The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall)
When dead, in her true love's arms, she
fell,
For Love was still the lord of all. 210

He pierced her brother to the heart,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle
wall;—
So perish all would true love part,
That Love may still be lord of all!

And then he took the cross divine,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle
wall,
And died for her sake in Palestine,
So Love was still the lord of all.

Now all ye lovers, that faithful prove,
 (The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall) <sup>220</sup>
 Pray for their souls who died for love,
 For Love shall still be lord of all!

XIII

As ended Albert's simple lay,
 Arose a bard of loftier port,
 For sonnet, rhyme, and roundelay
 Renowned in haughty Henry's court:
 There rung thy harp, unrivalled long,
 Fitztraver of the silver song!
 The gentle Surrey loved his lyre — <sup>220</sup>
 Who has not heard of Surrey's fame?
 His was the hero's soul of fire,
 And his the bard's immortal name,
 And his was love, exalted high
 By all the glow of chivalry.

XIV

They sought together climes afar,
 And oft, within some olive grove,
 When even came with twinkling star,
 They sung of Surrey's absent love.
 His step the Italian peasant stayed, <sup>230</sup>
 And deemed that spirits from on high,
 Round where some hermit saint was laid,
 Were breathing heavenly melody;
 So sweet did harp and voice combine
 To praise the name of Geraldine.

XV

Fitztraver, O, what tongue may say
 The pangs thy faithful bosom knew,
 When Surrey of the deathless lay
 Ungrateful Tudor's sentence slew?
 Regardless of the tyrant's frown,
 His harp called wrath and vengeance
 down. <sup>250</sup>
 He left, for Naworth's iron towers,
 Windsor's green glades and courtly bowers,
 And, faithful to his patron's name,
 With Howard still Fitztraver came;
 Lord William's foremost favorite he,
 And chief of all his minstrelsy.

XVI

FITZTRAVER

'T was All-souls' eve, and Surrey's heart beat high;
 He heard the midnight bell with anxious start,
 Which told the mystic hour, approaching
 nigh,

When wise Cornelius promised by his art <sup>260</sup>
 To show to him the ladye of his heart,
 Albeit betwixt them roared the ocean
 grim;
 Yet so the sage had hight to play his
 part,
 That he should see her form in life and limb,
 And mark if still she loved and still she thought of him.

XVII

Dark was the vaulted room of gramaryne,
 To which the wizard led the gallant
 knight,
 Save that before a mirror, huge and
 high,
 A hallowed taper shed a glimmering
 light
 On mystic implements of magic might, <sup>270</sup>
 On cross, and character, and talisman,
 And almagest, and altar, nothing
 bright;
 For fitful was the lustre, pale and wan,
 As watch-light by the bed of some departing man.

XVIII

But soon, within that mirror huge and
 high,
 Was seen a self-emitted light to
 gleam;
 And forms upon its breast the earl 'gan
 spy,
 Cloudy and indistinct as feverish
 dream;
 Till, slow arranging and defined, they seem
 To form a lordly and a lofty room, <sup>280</sup>
 Part lighted by a lamp with silver
 beam,
 Placed by a couch of Agra's silken loom,
 And part by moonshine pale, and part was hid in gloom.

XIX

Fair all the pageant — but how passing
 fair
 The slender form which lay on couch of Ind!
 O'er her white bosom strayed her hazel
 hair,

Pale her dear cheek, as if for love she pined;
 All in her night-robe loose she lay reclined,
 And pensive read from tablet eburnine
 Some strain that seemed her inmost soul to find: 290
 That favored strain was Surrey's rap-
 tured line,
 That fair and lovely form the Lady Geraldine.

XX

Slow rolled the clouds upon the lovely
 form,
 And swept the goodly vision all
 away —
 So royal envy rolled the murky storm
 O'er my beloved Master's glorious
 day.
 Thou jealous, ruthless tyrant! Heaven repay
 On thee, and on thy children's latest
 line,
 The wild caprice of thy despotic sway,
 The gory bridal bed, the plundered shrine, 300
 The murdered Surrey's blood, the tears of Geraldine!

XXI

Both Scots and Southern chiefs prolong
 Applauses of Fitztraver's song;
 These hated Henry's name as death,
 And those still held the ancient faith.
 Then from his seat with lofty air
 Rose Harold, bard of brave Saint Clair, —
 Saint Clair, who, feasting high at Home,
 Had with that lord to battle come.
 Harold was born where restless seas 310
 Howl round the storm-swept Orades;
 Where erst Saint Clairs held princely sway
 O'er isle and islet, strait and bay; —
 Still nods their palace to its fall,
 Thy pride and sorrow, fair Kirkwall! —
 Thence oft he marked fierce Pentland rave,
 As if grim Odin rode her wave,
 And watched the whilst, with visage pale
 And throbbing heart, the struggling sail;
 For all of wonderful and wild 320
 Had rapture for the lonely child.

XXII

And much of wild and wonderful
 In these rude isles might Fancy cull;

For thither came in times afar
 Stern Lochlin's sons of roving war,
 The Norsemen, trained to spoil and blood,
 Skilled to prepare the raven's food,
 Kings of the main their leaders brave,
 Their barks the dragons of the wave;
 And there, in many a stormy vale, 330
 The Scald had told his wondrous tale,
 And many a Runic column high
 Had witnessed grim idolatry.
 And thus had Harold in his youth
 Learned many a Saga's rhyme uncouth, —
 Of that Sea-Snake, tremendous curled,
 Whose monstrous circle girds the world;
 Of those dread Maids whose hideous yell
 Maddens the battle's bloody swell;
 Of chiefs who, guided through the gloom 340
 By the pale death-lights of the tomb,
 Ransacked the graves of warriors old,
 Their falcions wrenched from corpses'
 hold,
 Waked the deaf tomb with war's alarms,
 And bade the dead arise to arms!
 With war and wonder all on flame,
 To Roslin's bowers young Harold came,
 Where, by sweet glen and greenwood tree,
 He learned a milder minstrelsy;
 Yet something of the Northern spell 350
 Mixed with the softer numbers well.

XXIII

HAROLD

O, listen, listen, ladies gay!
 No haughty feat of arms I tell;
 Soft is the note, and sad the lay,
 That mourns the lovely Rosabelle.
 'Moor, moor the barge, ye gallant crew!
 And, gentle ladye, deign to stay!
 Rest thee in Castle Ravenshouch,
 Nor tempt the stormy firth to-day.
 'The blackening wave is edged with white; 360
 To inch and rock the sea-mews fly;
 The fishers have heard the Water Sprite, Whose screams forebode that wreck is
 nigh.
 'Last night the gifted Seer did view
 A wet shroud swathed round ladye gay;
 Then stay thee, fair, in Ravenshouch
 Why cross the gloomy firth to-day?

'T is not because Lord Lindesay's heir
To-night at Roslin leads the ball,
But that my ladye-mother there
Sits lonely in her castle-hall. 370

'T is not because the ring they ride,
And Lindesay at the ring rides well,
But that my sire the wine will chide,
If 't is not filled by Rosabelle.'

O'er Roslin all that dreary night
A wondrous blaze was seen to gleam;
'T was broader than the watch-fire light,
And redder than the bright moonbeam.

It glared on Roslin's castled rock, 380
It ruddied all the copsewood glen;
'T was seen from Dreyden's groves of oak,
And seen from caverned Hawthornden.'

Seemed all on fire that chapel proud
Where Roslin's chiefs uncloined lie,
Each baron, for a sable shroud,
Sheathed in his iron panoply.

Seemed all on fire within, around,
Deep sacristy and altar's pale;
Shone every pillar foliage-bound, 390
And glimmered all the dead men's mail.

Blazed battlement and pinnet high,
Blazed every rose-carved buttress fair —
So still they blaze when fate is nigh
The lordly line of high Saint Clair.

There are twenty of Roslin's barons bold
Lie buried within that proud chapelle;
Each one the holy vault doth hold —
But the sea holds lovely Rosabelle !

And each Saint Clair was buried there, 400
With candle, with book, and with knell;
But the sea-caves rung and the wild winds sang
The dirge of lovely Rosabelle.

XXIV

So sweet was Harold's piteous lay,
Scarce marked the guests the darkened
hall,
Though, long before the sinking day,
A wondrous shade involved them all.
It was not eddying mist or fog,
Drained by the sun from fen or bog;
Of no eclipse had sages told; 410

And yet, as it came on apace,
Each one could scarce his neighbor's face,
Could scarce his own stretched hand be-
hold.

A secret horror checked the feast,
And chilled the soul of every guest;
Even the high dame stood half aghast,
She knew some evil on the blast;
The elfish page fell to the ground,
And, shuddering, muttered, 'Found !
found ! found !'

XXV

Then sudden through the darkened air 420
A flash of lightning came;
So broad, so bright, so red the glare,
The castle seemed on flame.
Glanced every rafter of the hall,
Glanced every shield upon the wall:
Each trophied beam, each sculptured stone,
Were instant seen and instant gone;
Full through the guests' bedazzled band
Resistless flashed the levin-brand,
And filled the hall with smouldering
smoke. 430

As on the elfish page it broke.
It broke with thunder long and loud,
Dismayed the brave, appalled the proud, —
From sea to sea the larum rung;
On Berwick wall, and at Carlisle withal,
To arms the startled warders sprung.
When ended was the dreadful roar,
The elfish dwarf was seen no more !

XXVI

Some heard a voice in Branksome Hall,
Some saw a sight, not seen by all; 440
That dreadful voice was heard by some Cry, with loud summons, 'GYLBIN, COME !'
And on the spot where burst the brand,
Just where the page had flung him down,
Some saw an arm, and some a hand,
And some the waving of a gown.
The guests in silence prayed and shook,
And terror dimmed each lofty look.
But none of all the astonished train
Was so dismayed as Deloraine: 450
His blood did freeze, his brain did burn,
'T was feared his mind would ne'er return;
For he was speechless, ghastly, wan,
Like him of whom the story ran,
Who spoke the spectre-bound in Man.
At length by fits he darkly told,
With broken hint and shuddering cold,
That he had seen right certainly

*A shape with amice wrapped around,
With a wrought Spanish baldric bound, 460
Like pilgrim from beyond the sea;
And knew — but how it mattered not —
It was the wizard, Michael Scott.*

XXVII

The anxious crowd, with horror pale,
All trembling heard the wondrous tale:
No sound was made, no word was spoke,
Till noble Angus silence broke;
And he a solemn sacred plight
Did to Saint Bride of Douglas make,
That he a pilgrimage would take 470
To Melrose Abbey, for the sake
Of Michael's restless sprite.
Then each, to ease his troubled breast,
To some blest saint his prayers addressed:
Some to Saint Modan made their vows,
Some to Saint Mary of the Lowes,
Some to the Holy Rood of Lisle,
Some to Our Lady of the Isle;
Each did his patron witness make
That he such pilgrimage would take, 480
And monks should sing and bells should toll,
All for the weal of Michael's soul.
While vows were ta'en and prayers were
prayed,
'T is said the noble dame, dismayed,
Renounced for aye dark magic's aid.

XXVIII

Nought of the bridal will I tell,
Which after in short space befell;
Nor how brave sons and daughters fair
Blessed Teviot's Flower and Cranstoun's heir:

After such dreadful scene 't were vain 490
To wake the note of mirth again.
More meet it were to mark the day
Of penitence and prayer divine,
When pilgrim-chiefs, in sad array,
Sought Melrose' holy shrine.

XXIX

With naked foot, and sackcloth vest,
And arms enfolded on his breast,
Did every pilgrim go;
The standers-by might hear uneth
Footstep, or voice, or high-drawn breath, 500
Through all the lengthened row:
No lordly look nor martial stride,
Gone was their glory, sunk their pride,
Forgotten their renown;
Silent and slow, like ghosts, they glide

To the high altar's hallowed side,
And there they knelt them down.
Above the suppliant chieftains wave
The banners of departed brave;
Beneath the lettered stones were laid 510
The ashes of their fathers dead;
From many a garnished niche around
Stern saints and tortured martyrs frowned.

XXX

And slow up the dim aisle afar,
With sable cowl and scapular,
And snow-white stoles, in order due,
The holy fathers, two and two,
In long procession came;
Taper and host and book they bare,
And holy banner, flourished fair 520
With the Redeemer's name.
Above the prostrate pilgrim band
The mitred abbot stretched his hand,
And blessed them as they kneeled;
With holy cross he signed them all,
And prayed they might be sage in hall
And fortunate in field.
Then mass was sung, and prayers were
said,
And solemn requiem for the dead;
And bells tolled out their mighty peal 530
For the departed spirit's weal;
And ever in the office close
The hymn of intercession rose;
And far the echoing aisles prolong
The awful burden of the song,
DIES IRE, DIES ILLA,
SOLVET SECLUM IN FAVILLA,
While the pealing organ rung.
Were it meet with sacred strain
To close my lay, so light and vain, 540
Thus the holy fathers sung:

HYMN FOR THE DEAD

That day of wrath, that dreadful day,
When heaven and earth shall pass away,
What power shall be the sinner's stay?
How shall he meet that dreadful day?

When, shrivelling like a parched scroll,
The flaming heavens together roll,
When louder yet, and yet more dread,
Swells the high trump that wakes the dead!

O, on that day, that wrathful day, 550
When man to judgment wakes from clay,

Be THOU the trembling sinner's stay,
Though heaven and earth shall pass away !

HUSHED is the harp — the Minstrel gone.
And did he wander forth alone ?
Alone, in indigence and age,
To linger out his pilgrimage ?
Not close beneath proud Newark's tower
Arose the Minstrel's lowly bower,
A simple hut; but there was seen 560
The little garden hedged with green,
The cheerful hearth, and lattice clean.
There sheltered wanderers, by the blaze,
Oft heard the tale of other days;
For much he loved to ope his door,

And give the aid he begged before.
So passed the winter's day; but still,
When summer smiled on sweet Bowhill,
And July's eve, with balmy breath,
Waved the blue-bells on Newark heath, 570
When throistles sung in Harehead-shaw,
And corn was green on Carterhaugh,
And flourished, broad, Blackandro's oak,
The aged harper's soul awoke !
Then would he sing achievements high
And circumstance of chivalry,
Till the rapt traveller would stay,
Forgetful of the closing day;
And noble youths, the strain to hear,
Forsook the hunting of the deer; 580
And Yarrow, as he rolled along,
Bore burden to the Minstrel's song.

MARMION

A TALE OF FLODDEN FIELD

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

In August, 1701, when Scott was twenty years of age, and shortly before he was called to the bar, he made an excursion to Northumberland, ostensibly for fishing; but with the keen scent for things and places historical which possessed him from his earliest years, he revelled especially in the associations which rose to mind in all the neighborhood. 'We are amidst places,' he writes to his friend Clerk, 'renowned by the feats of former days; each hill is crowned with a tower or camp, or cairn, and in no situation can you be near more fields of battle: Flodden, Otterburn, Chevy Chase, Ford Castle, Chillingham Castle, Copland Castle, and many another scene of blood are within the compass of a forenoon's ride. . . . Often as I have wished for your company, I never did it more earnestly than when I rode over Flodden Edge. I knew your taste for these things, and could have undertaken to demonstrate, that never was an affair more completely bungled than that day's work was. Suppose one army posted upon the face of a hill, and secured by high grounds projecting on each flank, with the river Till in front, a deep and still river, winding through a very extensive valley called Milfield Plain, and the only passage over it by a narrow bridge, which the Scots artillery, from the hill, could in a moment have demolished. Add, that the English must have hazarded a battle while their ranks, which were tumultuously levied, remained together; and that the Scots, behind whom the country was opened to Scotland, had nothing to do but to wait for the attack as they were posted. Yet, did two thirds of the army, actuated by the perfervidum ingenium Scotorum, rush down and give an opportunity to Stanley to occupy the ground they had quitted, by coming over the shoulder of the hill, while the other third, under Lord Home, kept their ground, and having seen their king and about 10,000 of their countrymen cut to pieces, retired into Scotland without loss. For the reason of the bridge not being destroyed while the English passed, I refer you to Pittacottie, who narrates at large, and to whom I give credit for a most accurate and clear description, agreeing perfectly with the ground.'

Seventeen years later Scott availed himself of this visit to make the battle on Flodden Field the culminating scene of the second great poem which he gave the public. As he states in his Introduction, printed below, he had retired from his profession, and since the publication of The Lay of the Last Minstrel had been engaged in editing Dryden. But he was also now the quarry at which the publishers were flying, and Constable especially was spreading his wings for that large enterprise in which Scott was to play so prominent a part. As Scott further states in his Introduction, Constable made him a munificent offer of a thousand guineas for the as yet unfinished poem of Marmion, and the offer came just as Scott was in special need of money to aid his brother Thomas, then withdrawing from his profession as Writer to the Signet.

The first reference which Scott makes to his poem is in a letter to Miss Seward dated Edinburgh, 20 February, 1807: 'I have at length fixed on the title of my new poem, which is to be christened, from the principal character, Marmion, or A Tale of Flodden Field. There are to be six Cantos, and an introductory Epistle to each, in the style of that which I send to you as a specimen. In the legendary part of the work, "Knights, Squires and Steeds shall enter on the stage." I am not at all afraid of my patriotism being a sufferer in the course of the tale. It is very true that my friend Leyden has said:—

"Alas! that Scottish maid should sing
The combat where her lover fell,
That Scottish Bard should wake the string
The triumph of our foes to tell."

But we may say with Francis I. "that at Flodden all was lost but our honor,"—an exception which includes everything that is desirable for a poet.

The difficulties into which his brother Thomas had fallen were connected with the business affairs of the Marquis of Abercorn, for whom Thomas Scott had been manager. 'The consequence of my brother's failure,' Scott wrote later to Miss Seward, 'was that the whole affairs of these extensive estates were thrown upon my hands in a state of unutterable confusion, so that to save myself from ruin [he was security for his brother] I was obliged to lend my constant and unremitting attention to their reestablishment.' All this, however, though it delayed his poem, produced no estrangement from Lord and Lady Abercorn, and on 10 September, 1807, he writes to the latter from Ashiestiel, 'I have deferred writing from day to day, my dear Lady Abercorn, until I should be able to make good my promise of sending you the first two cantos of Marmion;' and on 22 January, 1808, he writes to the same, 'I have finished Marmion, and your Ladyship will do me the honor, I hope, to accept a copy very soon. In the sixth and last canto I have succeeded better than I had ventured to hope, for I had a battle to fight, and I dread hard blows almost as much in poetry as in common life.' He had thought of asking Lord Abercorn to let him dedicate Marmion to him, but was deterred by hearing him express his general dislike to dedications.

Lockhart points out that Scott was doubtless indebted for the death scene in Marmion to Goethe's Goetz von Berlichingen of the Iron Hand, which Scott had translated ten years before; but Scott himself, as was his wont, made but few allusions to the origin of any parts of the poem. He did, indeed, in a letter to Miss Seward, 23 November, 1807, give a slight explanation of one point, when he wrote, 'My reason for transporting Marmion from Lichfield was to make good the minstrel prophecy of Constance's song. Why I should ever have taken him there I cannot very well say. Attachment to the place, its locality with respect to Tamworth, the ancient seat of the Marmions, partly, perhaps, the whim of taking a slap at Lord Brooke en passant, joined in suggesting the idea which I had not time to bring out or finish.' And in a letter to Lady Louisa Stuart from Edinburgh, 3 March, 1808, he writes this unusually full explanation of one passage in the poem:—

'I have thought on your reading about the death of Constance, and with all the respect which (sans phrase) I entertain for everything you honor me with, I have not made up my mind to the alteration, and here are my reasons. Clare has no wish to embitter Marmion's last moments, and is only induced to mention the death of Constance because she observes that the wounded man's anxiety for her deliverance prevents his attending to his own spiritual affairs. It seems natural, however, that knowing by the Abbess, or however you please, the share which Marmion had in the fate of Constance, she should pronounce the line assigned to her in such a manner as perfectly conveyed to his conscience the whole truth, although her gentleness avoided conveying it in direct terms. We are to consider, too, that Marmion had from various workings of his own mind been led to suspect the fate of Constance, so that, the train being ready laid, the slightest hint of her fate communicated the whole tale of terror to his conviction. Were I to read the passage, I would hesitate a little, like one endeavoring to seek a soft mode of conveying painful intelligence:—

"In vain for Constance is your zeal;
She—died at Holy Isle."

Perhaps after all this is too fine spun, and requires more from my gentle readers to fill up my sketch than I am entitled to exact. But I would rather put in an explanatory couplet describing Clare's manner of speaking the words, than make her communication more full and specific.' But the couplet he did not add.

Lockhart in his Life throws a little further light on the construction of Marmion by quoting from a narrative by Mr. Guthrie Wright, who had succeeded Thomas Scott in the charge of the Abercorn estate. 'In the summer of 1807,' he writes, 'I had the pleasure of making a trip with Sir Walter to Dumfries, for the purpose of meeting the late Lord Abercorn on his way with his family to Ireland. His Lordship did not arrive for two or three days after we reached Dumfries, and we employed the interval in visiting Sweetheart Abbey, Cuellaverock Castle, and some other ancient buildings in the neighborhood. . . . [Sir Walter] recited poetry and old legends from morn till night, and in short it is impossible that anything could be more delightful than his society; but what I particularly allude to is the circumstance, that at that time he was writing Marmion, the three or four first cantos of which he had with him, and which he was so good as to read to me. It is unnecessary to say how much I was enchanted with them; but as he good-naturedly asked me to state any observations that occurred to me, I said in joke that it appeared to me he had brought his hero by a very strange route into Scotland. "Why," says I, "did ever mortal coming from England to Edinburgh go by Gifford, Crichton Castle, Borthwick Castle, and over the top of Blackford Hill? Not only is it a circuitous détour, but there never was a road that way since the world was created!" "That is a most irrelevant objection," said Sir Walter; "it was my good pleasure to bring Marmion by that route, for the purpose of describing the places you have mentioned, and the view from Blackford Hill — it was his business to find his road and pick his steps the best way he could. But, pray, how would you have me bring him? Not by the post-road, surely, as if he had been travelling in a mail-coach?" "No," I replied; "there were neither post-roads nor mail-coaches in those days; but I think you might have brought him with a less chance of getting into a swamp, by allowing him to travel the natural route by Dunbar and the sea-coast; and then he might have tarried for a space with the famous Earl of Angus, surnamed Bell-the-Cat, at his favorite residence of Tantallon Castle, by which means you would have had not only that fortress with all his feudal followers, but the Castle of Dunbar, the Bass, and all the beautiful scenery of the Forth, to describe." This observation seemed to strike him much, and after a pause he exclaimed — "By Jove, you are right! I ought to have brought him that way;" and he added, "but before he and I part, depend upon it he shall visit Tantallon." He then asked me if I had ever been there, and upon saying I had frequently, he desired me to describe it, which I did, and I verily believe it is from what I then said, that the accurate description contained in the fifth canto was given — at least I never heard him say he had afterwards gone to visit the castle; and when the poem was published, I remember he laughed, and asked me how I liked Tantallon.

The dating of the several poetical Introductions gives a hint of Scott's rhodes when he was engaged upon Marmion. The first four are from Ashestiel, and the scenes about that spot became identified in his mind with the composition of the poem. 'I well remember his saying,' writes Lockhart, 'as I rode with him across the hills from Ashestiel to Newark one day in his declining years — "Oh, man, I had many a grand gallop among these braes when I was thinking of Marmion, but a trotting canny pony must serve me now." His friend, Mr. Skene, however, informs me that many of the more energetic descriptions, and particularly that of the battle of Flodden, were struck out while he was in quarters again with his cavalry, in the autumn of 1807. "In the intervals of drilling," he says, "Scott used to delight in walking his powerful black steed up and down by himself upon the Portobello sands, within the beating of the surge; and now and then you would see him plunge in his spurs, and go off as if at the charge, with the spray dashing about him. As we rode back to Musselburgh, he often came and placed himself beside me, to repeat the verses that he had been composing during these pauses of our exercise."'

It was a year after he began the poem that he wrote the Introductory Epistle for Canto IV. at Ashestiel. The next month he wrote the fifth introduction in Edinburgh; the last was written during the Christmas festivities of Merton house, where, as Lockhart says, 'from the first days of his ballad-rhyming, down to the close of his life, he, like his bearded ancestor, usually spent that season with the immediate head of the race.'

These epistles, it should be remarked, were not designed in the first instance to be inwoven with the romance. They were, in fact, announced early in 1807 in an advertisement as Six Epistles from Ettrick Forest, and were to have been published in an independent volume. It is perhaps a happier fortune for readers of this day than for the first readers of Marmion that the epistles were thus inwoven, since they serve so emphatically to connect Scott's friendships with his poetry; the personal side of authorship in Scott's case is written thus indelibly in the poem.

Marmion was published February 23, 1808, and was seized with avidity by Scott's personal friends, and by the public, which called for new editions in rapid succession. Every one naturally compared it with The Lay of the Last Minstrel. Southey wrote frankly: 'The story is made of better materials than the Lay, yet they are not so well fitted together. As a whole, it has not pleased me so much—in parts, it has pleased me more. There is nothing so finely conceived in your former poem as the death of Marmion: there is nothing finer in its conception anywhere. The introductory epistles I did not wish away, because, as poems, they gave me great pleasure; but I wished them at the end of the volume, or at the beginning—anywhere except where they were. My taste is perhaps peculiar in disliking all interruptions in narrative poetry.

Wordsworth, too, wrote with the freedom of an accepted friend, and the frankness of these brother poets implies the candor also of Scott's nature. I think your end has been attained. That it is not the end which I should wish you to propose to yourself, you will be well aware, from what you know of my notions of composition, both as to matter and manner. In the circle of my acquaintance, it seems as well liked as the Lay, though I have heard that in the world it is not so. Had the poem been much better than the Lay, it could scarcely have satisfied the public, which has too much of the monster, the moral monster, in its composition.

Mr. George Ellis, the accomplished antiquarian scholar who had made the acquaintance of Scott in the days of the Roderick Random, also wrote at length, reflecting in his leisure letters the best judgment of the men of letters of the day. After balancing the opinions of critics respecting the two poems, he concludes:

My own opinion is, that both the productions are equally good in their different ways; yet, upon the whole, I had rather be the author of Marmion than of the Lay, because I think its species of excellence of much more difficult attainment. What degree of bulk may be essentially necessary to the corporeal part of an Epic poem, I know not—but were I one that the story of Marmion might have furnished twelve books as easily as six—that the masterly character of Constance would not have been less bewitching had it been much more minutely painted—and that DeWinton might have been dilated with great ease, and even to considerable advantage,—in short, that had it been your intention merely to exhibit a spirited romantic story instead of making that story subservient to the delineation of the manners which prevailed at a certain period of our history, the number and variety of your characters would have suited any scale of painting.

Scott himself in a letter to Sartorius, who had offered him the subject of Prince Charlie, says:

When you have read over Marmion, which has more individuality of character than the Lay, although it wants a sort of tenderness which the personage of the old minstrel gave to my first born romance, you will be a better judge whether I should undertake a work which will depend less on incident and description than on the power of distinguishing and marking the dramatic personae. And it is a commentary on the confusion of literature and politics so characteristic of the day, that we find him writing to Lady Abercorn: 'All the Whigs here (in Edinburgh) are in arms against Marmion. If I had authorized Fox, they could have borne it, but a secondary place for the god of their idolatry puts them beyond the slender degree of patience which displaced patriots usually possess. I make them welcome to cry till they are hoarse against both the book and author, as they are not in the habit of having majorities upon their side. I suppose the crossed critics of Holland House will take the same tone in your Metropolis.' The allusion, of course, is to the lines in the Introduction to Canto I., beginning with line 126. In illustration of the asperity of politics at the time, Scott writes to the same correspondent: 'The Morning Chronicle of the 20th March [1808] has made a pretty story of the cancel of page 10th of Marmion which your Ladyship cannot but recollect was reprinted for the sole purpose of inserting the lines suggested so kindly by the Marquis:—

"For talents mourn, untimely lost,
When best employed and wanted most; "

I suppose from the carelessness of those who arranged the book for binding, this sheet may not in a copy or two have been right placed, and the worthy Editor affirms kindly that this was done that I might have copies to send to Mr. Pitt's friends in which these lines do not occur!!! My publishers here, who forwarded the books, have written in great wrath to contradict the story, and were surprised to find I had more inclination to laugh at it. This is a punishment for appropriating my neighbor's goods. I suppose it would surprise Mr. Morning Chronicle considerably to know that the couplet in question was written by so distinguished a friend of Mr. Pitt as Lord Abercorn.

We noted how Scott's youthful excursion into the Cheviot Hills found expression later in Marmion. It is pleasant to recall that later journey made with his family when Marmion had made Flodden Field famous. 'Haling at Flodden, is Lockhart's narrative, "to expound the field of battle to his young folks, he found that Marmion had as might have been expected, benefited the keeper of the public house there very largely, and the village landlord, overflowing with gratitude, expressed his anxiety to have a Scott's Head for his sign-post.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

The poet demurred to this proposal, and assured mine host that nothing could be more appropriate than the portraiture of a foaming tankard, which already surmounted his doorway. "Why, the painter-man has not made an ill job," said the landlord, "but I would fain have something more connected with the book that has brought me so much good custom." He produced a well-thumbed copy, and handing it to the author, begged he would at least suggest a motto from the tale of Flodden Field. Scott opened the book at the death scene of the hero, and his eye was immediately caught by the "inscription" in black letter—

"Drink, weary pilgrim, drink, and pray
For the kind soul of Sirly Grey," etc.

"Well, my friend," said he, "what more would you have? You need but strike out one letter in the first of these lines, and make your painter-man, the next time he comes this way, print between the jolly tankard and your own name—

"Drink, weary pilgrim, drink and pay."

Scott was delighted to find, on his return, that this suggestion had been adopted, and for aught I know, the romantic legend may still be viable.

The poem when first published was prefaced by the following

ADVERTISEMENT

"It is hardly to be expected that so slender a volume as the present hasse honored with some degree of applause should not be again a trespasser on their kindness. Yet the author of Mary, Queen of Scots must be supposed to feel some anxiety respecting its success, since he is sensible that to be candid, in the second instance, any repetition within his first poem may have produced here. The present story turns upon the private adventures of a domestic character, but entitled a Tale of Flodden Field, requires the hero's fate to be connected with that memorable battle and the causes which led to it. The design of the author was, if possible, to express his sentiment in the interest of the date of his story, and to prepare them for the minutiae of the age, in which it is set. But historical narrative, for more or less, is a compromise, and I am persuaded his part of a romantic tale, nor to have been permitted to have been the popularity of The Lay of the Last Minstrel, has an attempt to paint the manners of the feudal in a broader scale, and in the course of an interesting story, will not be unavailing to the public.

'The poem opens about the commencement of August, and concludes with the Flodden, 9th September, 1513.

'Aberdeen, 1808.'

The poem, as Scott wrote to Lady in consequence of an unexampled dash hurried through the press again and edition was quickly issued, but as editions in those days were not recommissions from the same type or from the author had an opportunity to make corrections. Scott heeded Lady Abercorn's on the speech of Constance, but of consideration placed a single dash in as it now stands (page 105, line 322), her confusion. A few weeks after, could look back deliberately on a poem, he wrote his friend from 19 June, 1808: "No one is so sensible of what deficiencies occur in my poem as the want of judicious criticism and above all from the extreme hurry it has hitherto been composed. That I take the poet at the things my they are finished, and I fear I shall be able to master up the courage to revise Mary as he should be revising if I ever write another poem. I am glad to make every single couplet of it as my uttermost care and attention to my effect. In order to secure the success of these good resolutions, I will the whole story in historical prose, and to make it as interesting as I can begin to write it out in verse, and the have at least the satisfaction to have seen going my narrative having been much upon the point of doing so, and having made my story. I will poem with all tenderness and care for a while for a year at least, and perhaps I would be most happy to afford a woman a fair estimate of the Mary, who has the best of all consideration of my person of great extensive acquaintance with literature. I have seen but the 2 more with me in taste at all the power of apprehending the history of

When Minstrel was reissued in the edition of 1830, it carried the following

INTRODUCTION

What I have to say respecting this poem may be briefly told. In the Introduction to the Lay of the Last Minstrel I have mentioned the circumstances, so far as my literary life is concerned, which induced me to resign the active pursuit of an honorable profession for the more precarious resources of literature. My appointment to the Sheriffdom of Selkirk called for a change of residence. I left, therefore, the pleasant cottage I had upon the side of the Esk, for the 'pleasanter banks of the Tweed,' in order to comply with the law, which requires that the sheriff shall be resident, at least during a certain number of months, within his jurisdiction. We found a delightful retirement, by my becoming the tenant of my intimate friend and cousin-german, Colonel Russel, in his mansion of Ashiestiel, which was unoccupied during his absence on military service in India. The house was adequate to our accommodation and the exercise of a limited hospitality. The situation is uncommonly beautiful, by the side of a fine river whose streams are there very favorable for angling, surrounded by the remains of natural woods, and by hills abounding in game. In point of society, according to the heartfelt phrase of Scripture, we dwelt 'amongst our own people;' and as the distance from the metropolis was only thirty miles, we were not out of reach of our Edinburgh friends, in which city we spent the terms of the summer and winter sessions of the court, that is, five or six months in the year.

An important circumstance had, about the same time, taken place in my life. Hopes had been held out to me from an influential quarter, of a nature to relieve me from the anxiety which I must have otherwise felt, as one upon the precarious tenure of whose own life rested the principal prospects of his family, and especially as one who had necessarily some dependence upon the favor of the public, which is proverbially capricious; though it is but justice to add that in my own case I have not found it so. Mr. Pitt had expressed a wish to my personal friend, the Right Honorable William Dundas, now Lord Clerk Register of Scotland, that some fitting opportunity should be taken to be of service to me; and as my views and wishes pointed to a future rather than an immediate provision, an opportunity of accomplishing this was soon found. One of the Principal Clerks of Session, as they are called (official persons who occupy an important and responsible situation, and enjoy a considerable income), who had served upwards of thirty years, felt himself, from age and the infirmity of deafness with which it was accompanied, desirous of retiring from his official situation. As the law then stood, such official persons were entitled to bargain with their successors, either for a sum of money, which was usually a considerable one, or for an interest in the emoluments of the office during their life. My predecessor, whose services had been unusually meritorious, stipulated for the emoluments of his office during his life, while I should enjoy the survivorship on the condition that I discharged the duties of the office in the meantime. Mr. Pitt, however, having died in the interval, his administration was dissolved, and was succeeded by that known by the name of the Fox and Grenville Ministry. My affair was so far completed that my commission lay in the office subscribed by his Majesty; but, from hurry or mistake, the interest of my predecessor was not expressed in it, as had been usual in such cases. Although, therefore, it only required payment of the fees, I could not in honor take out the commission in the present state, since, in the event of my dying before him, the gentleman whom I succeeded must have lost the vested interest which he had stipulated to retain. I had the honor of an interview with Earl Spencer on the subject, and he, in the most handsome manner, gave directions that the commission should issue as originally intended; adding, that the matter having received the royal assent, he regarded only as a claim of justice what he would have willingly done as an act of favor. I never saw Mr. Fox on this or on any other occasion, and never made any application to him, conceiving that in doing so I might have been supposed to express political opinions contrary to those which I had always professed. In his private capacity, there is no man to whom I would have been more proud to owe an obligation, had I been so distinguished.

By this arrangement I obtained the survivorship of an office the emoluments of which were fully adequate to my wishes; and as the law respecting the mode of providing for superannuated officers was, about five or six years after, altered from that which admitted the arrangement of assistant and successor, my colleague very handsomely took the opportunity of the alteration to accept of the retiring annuity provided in such cases, and admitted me to the full benefit of the office.

But although the certainty of succeeding to a considerable income, at the time I obtained it, seemed to assure me of a quiet harbor in my old age, I did not escape my share of inconvenience from the contrary tides and currents by which we are so often encountered in our journey through life. Indeed, the publication of my next poetical attempt was prematurely accelerated, from one of those unpleasant accidents which can neither be foreseen nor avoided.

I had formed the prudent resolution to endeavor to bestow a little more labor than I had yet done on my productions, and to be in no hurry again to announce myself as a candidate for literary fame. Accordingly, particular passages of a poem which was finally called Marmion were labored with a good deal of care by one by whom much care was seldom bestowed. Whether the work was worth the labor or not, I am no competent judge; but I may be permitted to say that the period of its composition was a very happy one in my life; so much so, that I remember with pleasure, at this moment, some of the spots in which particular passages were composed. It is probably owing to this that the Introductions to the several cantos assumed the form of familiar epistles to my intimate friends, in which I alluded, perhaps more than was necessary or graceful, to my domestic occupations and amusements, — a loquacity which may be excused by those who remember that I was still young, light-headed, and happy, and that 'out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.'

The misfortunes of a near relation and friend, which happened at this time, led me to alter my prudent determination, which had been to use great precaution in sending this poem into the world; and made it convenient at least, if not absolutely necessary, to hasten its publication. The publishers of The Lay of the Last Minstrel, emboldened by the success of that poem, willingly offered a thousand pounds for Marmion. The transaction, being no secret, afforded Lord Byron, who was then at general war with all who blacked paper, an apology for including me in his satire entitled English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.<sup>1</sup> I never could conceive how an arrangement between an author and his publishers, if satisfactory to the persons concerned, could afford matter of censure to any third party. I had taken no unusual or ungenerous means of enhancing the value of my merchandise, — I had never higgled a moment about the bargain, but accepted at once what I considered the handsome offer of my publishers. These gentlemen, at least, were not of opinion that they had been taken advantage of in the transaction, which indeed was one of their own framing; on the contrary, the sale of the poem was so far beyond their expectation as to induce them to supply the author's cellars with what is always an acceptable present to a young Scottish housekeeper, namely, a hogshead of excellent claret.

The poem was finished in too much haste to allow me an opportunity of softening down, if not removing, some of its most prominent defects. The nature of Marmion's guilt, although similar instances were found, and might be quoted, as existing in feudal times, was nevertheless not sufficiently peculiar to be indicative of the character of the period, forgery being the crime of a commercial rather than a proud and warlike age. This gross defect ought to have been remedied or palliated. Yet I suffered the tree to lie as it had fallen. I remember my friend, Dr. Leyden, then in the East, wrote me a furious remonstrance on the subject. I have, nevertheless, always been of opinion that corrections, however in themselves judicious, have a bad effect — after publication. An author is never so decidedly condemned as on his own confession, and may long find apologists and partisans until he gives up his own cause. I was not, therefore, inclined to afford matter for censure out of my own admissions; and, by good fortune, the novelty of the subject and, if I may say so, some force and vivacity of description, were allowed to atone for many imperfections. Thus the second experiment on the public patience, generally the most perilous, — for the public are then most apt to judge with rigor what in the first instance they had received perhaps with imprudent generosity, — was in my case decidedly successful. I had the good fortune to pass this ordeal favorably, and the return of sales before me makes the copies amount to thirty-six thousand printed between 1808 and 1825, besides a considerable sale since that period. I shall here pause upon the subject of Marmion, and, in a few prefatory words to The Lady of the Lake, the last poem of mine which obtained eminent success, I will continue the task which I have imposed on myself respecting the origin of my productions.

ABBOTSFORD, April, 1830.

To yield thy muse just half a crown per line?
No! when the sons of song descend to trade,
Their bays are near, their former laurels fade.
Let such forego the poet's sacred name,
Who rack their brains for lucre, not for fame;
Still for stern Marmion may they toil in vain!
And sadly gaze on gold they cannot gain!
Such be their need, such still the just reward
Of prostituted muse and hireling bard!
For this we spurn Apollo's venal son.
And bid a long "Good-night to Marmion."

<sup>1</sup> Lockhart quotes the passage, which is as follows:—

Next view in state, proud prancing on his roan,
The golden-crested haughty Marmion,
Now forging scrols, now foremost in the fight,
Not quite a felon, yet but half a knight,
The gibbet or the field prepared to grace;
A mighty mixture of the great and base.
And think at thou, Scott! by vain conceit perchance,
On poor taste to foist thy stale romance,
Though Murray with his Miller may combine

MARMION

A TALE OF FLODDEN FIELD

Alas! that Scottish maid should sing
 The combat where her lover fell!
 That Scottish Bard should wake the string,
 The triumph of our foes to tell!
LAYDEN'S Ode on Visiting Flodden

TO THE

RIGHT HONORABLE HENRY, LORD MONTAGUE,

&amp;c., &amp;c., &amp;c.,

THIS ROMANCE IS INSCRIBED BY

THE AUTHOR.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO
FIRST

TO WILLIAM STEWART ROSE, ESQ.

Arthurlie, Ettrick Forest

NOVEMBER's sky is chill and drear,
 November's leaf is red and sear:
 Late, gazing down the steepy linn
 That hems our little garden in,
 Low in its dark and narrow glen,
 You scarce the rivulet might ken,
 So thick the tangled greenwood grew,
 So feeble trilled the streamlet through;
 Now, murmuring hoarse, and frequent
 seen

Through bush and brier, no longer green,
 An angry brook, it sweeps the glade,
 Brawls over rock and wild cascade,
 And, foaming brown with double speed,
 Hurries its waters to the Tweed.

No longer autumn's glowing red
 Upon our Forest hills is shed;
 No more, beneath the evening beam,
 Fair Tweed reflects their purple gleam.
 Away hath passed the heather-bell
 That bloomed so rich on Needpath-fell; 20
 Sallow his brow, and russet bare
 Are now the sister-heights of Yair.
 The sheep, before the pinching heaven,
 To sheltered dale and down are driven,

Where yet some faded herbage pines,
 And yet a watery sunbeam shines;
 In meek despondency they eye
 The withered sward and wintry sky,
 And far beneath their summer hill
 Stray sadly by Glenkinnon's rill. 30
 The shepherd shifts his mantle's fold,
 And wraps him closer from the cold:
 His dogs no merry circles wheel,
 But shivering follow at his heel;
 A cowering glance they often cast,
 As deeper moans the gathering blast.

My imps, though hardy, bold, and wild,
 As best befits the mountain child,
 Feel the sad influence of the hour,
 And wail the daisy's vanished flower, 40
 Their summer gambols tell, and mourn,
 And anxious ask, — Will spring return,
 And birds and lambs again be gay,
 And blossoms clothe the hawthorn spray?

Yes, prattlers, yes. The daisy's flower
 Again shall paint your summer bower;
 Again the hawthorn shall supply
 The garlands you delight to tie;
 The lambs upon the lea shall bound,
 The wild birds carol to the round; 50
 And while you frolic light as they,
 Too short shall seem the summer day.

To mute and to material things
 New life revolving summer brings;

The genial call dead Nature hears,
 And in her glory reappears.
 But oh ! my country's wintry state
 What second spring shall renovate ?
 What powerful call shall bid arise
 The buried warlike and the wise, 60
 The mind that thought for Britain's weal,
 The hand that grasped the victor steel ?
 The vernal sun new life bestows
 Even on the meanest flower that blows;
 But vainly, vainly may he shine
 Where Glory weeps o'er NELSON's shrine,
 And vainly pierce the solemn gloom
 That shrouds, O PITT, thy hallowed tomb !

Deep graved in every British heart,
 Oh, never let those names depart ! 70
 Say to your sons, — Lo, here his grave
 Who victor died on Gadite wave !
 To him, as to the burning levin,
 Short, bright, resistless course was given;
 Where'er his country's foes were found,
 Was heard the fated thunder's sound,
 Till burst the bolt on yonder shore,
 Rolled, blazed, destroyed, — and was no

Nor mourn ye less his perished worth
 Who bade the conqueror go forth, 80
 And launched that thunderbolt of war
 On Egypt, Hafnia, Trafalgar;
 Who, born to guide such high emprise,
 For Britain's weal was early wise;
 Alas ! to whom the Almighty gave,
 For Britain's sins, an early grave !
 His worth who, in his mightiest hour,
 A bauble beld the pride of power,
 Spurned at the sordid lust of pelf,
 And served his Albion for herself; 90
 Who, when the frantic crowd amain
 Strained at subjection's bursting rein,
 O'er their wild mood full conquest gained,
 The pride, he would not crush, restrained,
 Showed their fierce zeal a worthier cause,
 And brought the freeman's arm to aid the freeman's laws.

Hadst thou but lived, though stripped of
 power,
 A watchman on the lonely tower,
 Thy thrilling trump had roused the land,
 When fraud or danger were at hand; 100
 By thee, as by the beacon-light,
 Our pilots had kept course aright;
 As some proud column, though alone,

Thy strength had propped the tottering
 throne.

Now is the stately column broke,
 The beacon-light is quenched in smoke,
 The trumpet's silver sound is still,
 The warder silent on the hill !

Oh, think, how to his latest day,
 When Death, just hovering, claimed his prey, 110
 With Palinure's unaltered mood,
 Firm at his dangerous post he stood,
 Each call for needful rest repelled,
 With dying hand the rudder held,
 Till, in his fall, with fateful sway,
 The steerage of the realm gave way !
 Then, while on Britain's thousand plains
 One unpolluted church remains,
 Whose peaceful bells ne'er sent around
 The bloody tocsin's maddening sound, 120
 But still, upon the hallowed day,
 Convoke the swains to praise and pray;
 While faith and civil peace are dear,
 Grace this cold marble with a tear,
 He who preserved them, PITT, lies here.

Nor yet suppress the generous sigh
 Because his rival slumbers nigh,
 Nor be thy requiescat dumb
 Lest it be said o'er Fox's tomb;
 For talents mourn, untimely lost, 130
 When best employed and wanted most;
 Mourn genius high, and lore profound,
 And wit that loved to play, not wound;
 And all the reasoning powers divine,
 To penetrate, resolve, combine;
 And feelings keen, and fancy's glow,
 They sleep with him who sleeps below:
 And, if thou mourn'st they could not save
 From error him who owns this grave,
 Be every harsher thought suppressed, 140
 And sacred be the last long rest.
Here, where the end of earthly things
 Lays heroes, patriots, bards, and kings;
 Where stiff the hand, and still the tongue,
 Of those who fought, and spoke, and
 sung;

Here, where the fretted aisles prolong
 The distant notes of holy song,
 As if some angel spoke again,
 'All peace on earth, good-will to men;' 150
 If ever from an English heart,
 Oh, here let prejudice depart,
 And, partial feeling cast aside,
 Record that Fox a Briton died !

When Europe crouched to France's yoke,
 And Austria bent, and Prussia broke,
 And the firm Russian's purpose brave
 Was bartered by a timorous slave,
 Even then dishonor's peace he spurned,
 The sullied olive-branch returned,
 Stood for his country's glory fast, 160
 And nailed her colors to the mast !
 Heaven, to reward his firmness, gave
 A portion in this honored grave,
 And met her held marble in its trust
 Of two such wondrous men the dust.

With more than mortal powers endowed,
 How high they soared above the crowd !
 Theirs was no common party race,
 Jostling by dark intrigue for place;
 Like fabled Gods, their mighty war 170
 Shook realms and nations in its jar;
 Beneath each banner proud to stand,
 Looked up the noblest of the land,
 Till through the British world were known
 The names of PITT and FOX alone.
 Spells of such force no wizard grave
 E'er framed in dark Thessalian cave,
 Though his could drain the ocean dry,
 And force the planets from the sky.
 These spells are spent, and, spent with 180
 these,

The wine of life is on the lees,
 Genius and taste and talent gone,
 Forever tombed beneath the stone,
 Where — taming thought to human
 pride ! —

The mighty chiefs sleep side by side.
 Drop upon FOX's grave the tear,
 'T will trickle to his rival's bier;
 O'er PITT's the mournful requiem sound,
 And FOX's shall the notes rebound. 190
 The solemn echo seems to cry, —
 ' Here let their discord with them die.
 Speak not for those a separate doom
 Whom Fate made brothers in the tomb;
 But search the land, of living men,
 Where wilt thou find their like again ? '

Rest, ardent spirits, till the cries
 Of dying nature bid you rise !
 Not even your Britain's groans can pierce
 The leaden silence of your hearse;
 Then, oh, how impotent and vain 200
 This grateful tributary strain !
 Though not unmarked from northern
 clime,

Ye heard the Border Minstrel's rhyme:

His Gothic harp has o'er you rung;
 The Bard you deigned to praise, your deathless names has sung.

Stay yet, illusion, stay a while,
 My wildered fancy still beguile !
 From this high theme how can I part,
 Ere half unloosed is my heart !
 For all the tears e'er sorrow drew, 210
 And all the raptures fancy knew,
 And all the keener rush of blood
 That throbs through bard in bardlike mood,
 Were here a tribute mean and low,
 Though all their mingled streams could
 flow —

Woe, wonder, and sensation high,
 In one spring-tide of ecstasy ! —
 It will not be — it may not last —
 The vision of enchantment's past:
 Like frostwork in the morning ray, 220
 The fancy fabric melts away;
 Each Gothic arch, memorial-stone,
 And long, dim, lofty aisle are gone;
 And, lingering last, deception dear,
 The choir's high sounds die on my ear.
 Now slow return the lonely down,
 The silent pastures bleak and brown,
 The farm begirt with copsewood wild,
 The gambols of each frolic child,
 Mixing their shrill cries with the tone 230
 Of Tweed's dark waters rushing on.

Prompt on unequal tasks to run,
 Thus Nature disciplines her son:
 Meeter, she says, for me to stray,
 And waste the solitary day
 In plucking from yon fen the reed,
 And watch it floating down the Tweed,
 Or idly list the shrilling lay
 With which the milkmaid cheers her way.

Marking its cadence rise and fall, 240
 As from the field, beneath her pail,
 She trips it down the uneven dale;
 Meeter for me, by yonder cairn,
 The ancient shepherd's tale to learn,
 Though oft he stop in rustic fear,
 Lest his old legends tire the ear
 Of one who, in his simple mind,
 May boast of book-learned taste refined.

But thou, my friend, canst fitly tell —
 For few have read romance so well — 250
 How still the legendary lay
 O'er poet's bosom holds its sway;

CANTO FIRST: THE CASTLE

How on the ancient minstrel strain
Time lays his palsied hand in vain;
And how our hearts at doughty deeds,
By warriors wrought in steely weeds,
Still throb for fear and pity's sake;
As when the Champion of the Lake
Enters Morgan's fated house,
Or in the Chapel Perilous,
Despising spells and demons' force,
Holds converse with the unburied corse;
Or when, Dame Ganore's grace to move —
Alas, that lawless was their love! —
He sought proud Tarquin in his den,
And freed full sixty knights; or when,
A sinful man and unconfessed,
He took the Sangreal's holy quest,
And slumbering saw the vision high
He might not view with waking eye.

The mightiest chiefs of British song
Scorned not such legends to prolong.
They gleam through Spenser's elfin dream,
And mix in Milton's heavenly theme;
And Dryden, in immortal strain,
Had raised the Table Round again,
But that a ribald king and court
Bade him toil on, to make them sport;
Demanded for their niggard pay,
Fit for their souls, a looser lay,
Licentious satire, song, and play;
The world defrauded of the high design,
Prised the God-given strength, and Marred the lofty line.

Warmed by such names, well may we
Then,
Though dwindled sons of little men,
Essay to break a feeble lance
In the fair fields of old romance;
Or seek the moated castle's cell,
Where long through talisman and spell,
Wild tyrants ruled and damsels wept,
The glorious Chivalry, hath slept.
There sound the harpings of the North,
Tell us awake and sally forth,
On venturesome quest to prick again,
With all his arms, with all his train,
Arméd, lance, and brand, and plume, and Surf.
Fay, giant, dragon, squire, and dwarf,
And wizard with his wand of night,
And errand maid on palfrey white.
Around the Greenias weave their spells,
And Lure, who scarce his passion tells;
Taverny, half veiled and half revealed;

And Honor, with his spotless shield;
Attention, with fixed eye; and Fear,
That loves the tale she shrinks to hear;
And gentle Courtesy; and Faith,
Unchanged by sufferings, time, or death;
And Valor, lion-mettled lord,
Leaning upon his own good sword.

Well has thy fair achievement shown,
A worthy meed may thus be won:
Ytene's oaks — beneath whose shade
Their theme the merry minstrels made,
Of Ascapart, and Bevis bold,
And that Red King, who, while of old
Through Baldrewood the chase he led,
By his loved huntaman's arrow bled —
Ytene's oaks have heard again
Renewed such legendary strain;
For thou hast sung, how he of Gaul,
That Amadis so famed in hall,
For Oriana, foiled in fight
The Necromancer's felon might;
And well in modern verse hast wove
Partenopex's mystic love:
Hear, then, attentive to my lay,
A knightly tale of Albion's elder day.

CANTO FIRST

THE CASTLE

I

DAY set on Norham's castled steep,
And Tweed's fair river, broad and deep,
And Cheviot's mountains lone;
The battled towers, the donjon keep,
The loophole grates where captives weep
The flanking walls that round it sweep,
In yellow lustre shone.
The warriors on the turrets high,
Moving athwart the evening sky,
Seemed forms of giant height;
Their armor, as it caught the rays,
Flashed back again the western blaze,
In lines of dazzling light.

II

Saint George's banner, broad and gay,
Now faded, as the fading ray
Less bright, and less, was flung;
The evening gale had scarce the power
To wave it on the donjon tower,
So heavily it hung.

The scouts had parted on their search,
 The castle gates were barred;
 Above the gloomy portal arch,
 Timing his footsteps to a march,
 The warder kept his guard,
 Low humming, as he paced along,
 Some ancient Border gathering song.

III

A distant trampling sound he hears;
 He looks abroad, and soon appears,
 O'er Horneliff-hill, a plump of spears
 Beneath a pennon gay;
 A horseman, darting from the crowd
 Like lightning from a summer cloud,
 Spurs on his mettled courser proud,
 Before the dark array.
 Beneath the sable palisade
 That closed the castle barricade,
 His bugle-horn he blew;
 The warder hastened from the wall,
 And warned the captain in the hall,
 For well the blast he knew;
 And joyfully that knight did call
 To sewer, squire, and seneschal.

IV

'Now broach ye a pipe of Malvoisie,
 Bring pasties of the doe,
 And quickly make the entrance free,
 And bid my heralds ready be,
 And every minstrel sound his glee,
 And all our trumpets blow;
 And, from the platform, spare ye not
 To fire a noble salvo-shot;
 Lord Marmion waits below !'
 Then to the castle's lower ward
 Sped forty yeomen tall,
 The iron-studded gates unbarred,
 Raised the portcullis' ponderous guard,
 The lofty palisade unsparred,
 And let the drawbridge fall.

V

Along the bridge Lord Marmion rode,
 Proudly his red-roan charger trode,
 His helm hung at the saddle bow;
 Well by his visage you might know
 He was a stalworth knight and keen,
 And had in many a battle been;
 The scar on his brown cheek revealed
 A token true of Bosworth field;
 His eyebrow dark and eye of fire
 Showed spirit proud and prompt to ire,

Yet lines of thought upon his cheek
 Did deep design and counsel speak.
 His forehead, by his casque worn bare,
 His thick moustache and curly hair,
 Coal-black, and grizzled here and there,
 But more through toil than age,
 His square-turned joints and strength of
 limb,
 Showed him no carpet knight so trim,
 But in close fight a champion grim,
 In camps a leader sage.

VI

Well was he armed from head to heel,
 In mail and plate of Milan steel;
 But his strong helm, of mighty cost,
 Was all with burnished gold embossed.
 Amid the plumage of the crest
 A falcon hovered on her nest,
 With wings outspread and forward breast;
 E'en such a falcon, on his shield,
 Soared sable in an azure field:
 The golden legend bore aright,
 'Who checks at me, to death is dight.'
 Blue was the charger's broided rein;
 Blue ribbons decked his arching mane;
 The knightly housing's ample fold
 Was velvet blue and trapped with gold.

VII

Behind him rode two gallant squires,
 Of noble name and knightly sires:
 They burned the gilded spurs to claim,
 For well could each a war-horse tame,
 Could draw the bow, the sword could
 sway,
 And lightly bear the ring away;
 Nor less with courteous precepts stored,
 Could dance in hall, and carve at board,
 And frame love-ditties passing rare,
 And sing them to a lady fair.

VIII

Four men-at-arms came at their backs,
 With halbert, bill, and battle-axe;
 They bore Lord Marmion's lance so strong,
 And led his sumpter-mules along,
 And ambling palfrey, when at need
 Him listed ease his battle-steed.
 The last and trustiest of the four
 On high his forky pennon bore;
 Like swallow's tail in shape and hue.
 Fluttered the streamer glossy blue,
 Where, blazoned sable, as before,
 The towering falcon seemed to soar.

CANTO FIRST: THE CASTLE

Last, twenty yeomen, two and two
In hosen black and jerkins blue,
With falcons broidered on each breast,
Attended on their lord's behest.
Each, chosen for an archer good,
Knew hunting-craft by lake or wood; 120
Each one a six-foot bow could bend,
And far a cloth-yard shaft could send;
Each held a boar-spear tough and strong,
And at their belts their quivers rang.
Their dusty palfreys and array
Showed they had marched a weary way.

IX

'Tis meet that I should tell you now,
How fairly armed, and ordered how,
The soldiers of the guard,
With musket, pike, and morion, 130
To welcome noble Marmion,
Stood in the castle-yard;
Minstrels and trumpeters were there,
The gunner held his linstock yare,
For welcome-shot prepared:
Entered the train, and such a clang
As then through all his turrets rang
Old Norham never heard.

X

The guards their morrice-pikes advanced,
The trumpets flourished brave, 140
The cannon from the ramparts glanced,
And thundering welcome gave.
A blithe salute, in martial sort,
The minstrels well might sound,
For, as Lord Marmion crossed the court,
He scattered angels round.
'Welcome to Norham, Marmion!
Stout heart and open hand!
Well dost thou brook thy gallant roan,
Thou flower of English land!' 150

XI

Two pursuivants, whom tabards deck,
With silver scutcheon round their neck,
Stood on the steps of stone
By which you reach the donjon gate,
And there, with herald pomp and state,
They hailed Lord Marmion:
They hailed him Lord of Fontenaye,
Of Lutterward, and Scrivelkaye,
Of Tamworth tower and town; 160
And he, their courtesy to requite,
Gave them a chain of twelve marks' weight,
All as he lighted down.

'Now, largesse, largesse, Lord Marmion,
Knight of the crest of gold!
A blazoned shield, in battle won,
Ne'er guarded heart so bold.'

XII

They marshalled him to the castle-hall,
Where the guests stood all aside,
And loudly flourished the trumpet-call,
And the heralds loudly cried, —
'Room, lordlings, room for Lord Marmion!
With the crest and helm of gold!
Full well we know the trophies won
In the lists at Cotteswold:
There, vainly Ralph de Wilton strove
'Gainst Marmion's force to stand;
To him he lost his lady love,
And to the king his land.
Ourselves beheld the listel field,
A sight both sad and fair;
We saw Lord Marmion pierce his shield,
And saw his saddle bare;
We saw the victor win the crest
He wears with worthy pride,
And on the gibbet-tree, reversed,
His foeman's scutcheon tied
Place, nobles, for the Falcon-Knight!
Room, room, ye gentles gay.
For him who conquered in the fight,
Marmion of Fontenaye!' 170

XIII

Then stepped, to meet that noble lord,
Sir Hugh the Heron bold,
Baron of Twissell and of Fersl,
And Captain of the Hold,
He led Lord Marmion to the dean,
Raised o'er the pavement high,
And placed him in the upper place.
They feasted full and high
The whiles a Northern harper cule
Chanted a rhyme of deathly foul,
'How the heroes Thurwalla, and Hithel,
all,
Stout Willimundswaleh,
And Hardriding Dike,
And Hugh of Hwadhan, and Wulf of H
Wall,
Have set on Sir Albany Featherstanching
And taken his life at the Dead-meat shaw.' 180
Scantly Lord Marmion's ear could hear
The harper's lachrymous lay,
Yet much he prized the pains he took
And well those pains did pay.

For lady's suit and minstrel's strain
By knight should ne'er be heard in vain.

XIV

'Now, good Lord Marmion,' Heron says,
'Of your fair courtesy,
I pray you bide some little space
In this poor tower with me.
Here may you keep your arms from rust,
May breathe your war-horse well;
Seldom hath passed a week but joust
Or feat of arms befell. 220
The Scots can rein a mettled steed,
And love to couch a spear; —
Saint George! a stirring life they lead
That have such neighbors near!
Then stay with us a little space,
Our Northern wars to learn;
I pray you for your lady's grace!
Lord Marmion's brow grew stern.

XV

The captain marked his altered look,
And gave the squire the sign; 230
A mighty wassail-bowl he took,
And crowned it high with wine.
'Now pledge me here, Lord Marmion;
But first I pray thee fair,
Where hast thou left that page of thine
That used to serve thy cup of wine,
Whose beauty was so rare?
When last in Raby-towers we met,
The boy I closely eyed,
And often marked his cheeks were wet 240
With tears he fain would hide.
His was no rugged horse-boy's hand,
To burnish shield or sharpen brand,
(Or saddle battle-steed,
But meeter seemed for lady fair,
To fan her cheek, or curl her hair,
Or through embroidery, rich and rare,
The slender silk to lead:
His skin was fair, his ringlets gold, 250
His bosom — when he sighed,
The russet doublet's rugged fold
Could scarce repel its pride!
Say, hast thou given that lovely youth
To serve in lady's bower?
Or was the gentle page, in sooth,
A gentle paramour?'

XVI

Lord Marmion ill could brook such jest;
He rolled his kindling eye,

With pain his rising wrath suppressed,
Yet made a calm reply: 260
'That boy thou thought so goodly fair,
He might not brook the Northern air.
More of his fate if thou wouldst learn,
I left him sick in Lindisfarne.
Enough of him. — But, Heron, say,
Why does thy lovely lady gay
Disdain to grace the hall to-day?
Or has that dame, so fair and sage,
Gone on some pious pilgrimage?' — 270
He spoke in covert scorn, for fame
Whispered light tales of Heron's dame.

XVII

Unmarked, at least unrecked, the taunt,
Careless the knight replied:
'No bird whose feathers gayly flaunt
Delights in cage to bide;
Norham is grim and grated close,
Hemmed in by battlement and fosse,
And many a darksome tower,
And better loves my lady bright
To sit in liberty and light 280
In fair Queen Margaret's bower.
We hold our greyhound in our hand,
Our falcon on our glove,
But where shall we find leash or band
For dame that loves to rove?
Let the wild falcon soar her swing,
She'll stoop when she has tired her wing.' —

XVIII

'Nay, if with Royal James's bride
The lovely Lady Heron bide,
Behold me here a messenger, 290
Your tender greetings prompt to bear;
For, to the Scottish court addressed,
I journey at our king's behest,
And pray you, of your grace, provide
For me and mine a trusty guide.
I have not ridden in Scotland since James lacked the cause of that mock prince 300
Warbeck, that Flemish counterfeit,
Who on the gibbet paid the cheat.
Then did I march with Surrey's power, 310
What time we razed old Ayton tower.' —

XIX

'For such-like need, my lord, I trow,
Norham can find you guides enow;
For here be some have pricked as far
On Scottish ground as to Dunbar,

Have drunk the monks of Saint Bothan's
ale,
And driven the beeves of Lauderdale,
Harried the wives of Greenlaw's goods,
And given them light to set their hoods.' —

XX

'Now, in good sooth,' Lord Marmion
cried,

'Were I in warlike wise to ride,
A better guard I would not lack
Than your stout forayers at my back;
But as in form of peace I go,
A friendly messenger, to know,
Why, through all Scotland, near and far,
Their king is mustering troops for war,
The sight of plundering Border spears
Might justify suspicious fears,
And deadly feud or thirst of spoil
Break out in some unseemly broil.
A herald were my fitting guide;
Or friar, sworn in peace to bide;
Or pardoner, or travelling priest,
Or strolling pilgrim, at the least.'

XXI

The captain mused a little space,
And passed his hand across his face. —
'Fain would I find the guide you want,
But ill may spare a pursuivant,
The only men that safe can ride
Mine errands on the Scottish side:
And though a bishop built this fort,
Few holy brethren here resort;
Even our good chaplain, as I ween,
Since our last siege we have not seen.
The mass he might not sing or say
Upon one stinted meal a day;
So, safe he sat in Durham aisle,
And prayed for our success the while.
Our Norham vicar, woe betide,
Is all too well in ease to ride;
The priest of Shoreswood — he could rein
The wildest war-horse in your train,
But then no spearman in the hall
Will sooner swear, or stab, or brawl.
Friar John of Tillmouth were the man;
A blithesome brother at the cau,
A welcome guest in hall and bower,
He knows each castle, town, and tower,
In which the wine and ale is good,
Twixt Newcastle and Holy-Rood.
But that good man, as ill befalls,
Hath seldom left our castle walls,

Since, on the vigil of Saint Bede,
In evil hour he crossed the Tweed,
To teach Dame Alison her creed.
Old Bughtrig found him with his wife,
And John, an enemy to strife,
Sans frock and hood, fled for his life.
The jealous churl hath deeply swore
That, if again he venture o'er,
He shall shrieve penitent no more.
Little he loves such risks, I know,
Yet in your guard perchance will go.'

XXII

Young Selby, at the fair hall-board,
Carved to his uncle and that lord,
And reverently took up the word:
'Kind uncle, woe were we each one,
If harm should hap to brother John.
He is a man of mirthful speech,
Can many a game and gambol teach;
Full well at tables can he play,
And sweep at bowls the stake away.
None can a lustier carol bawl,
The needfullest among us all,
When time hangs heavy in the hall,
And snow comes thick at Christmas tide,
And we can neither hunt nor ride
A foray on the Scottish side.
The vowed revenge of Bughtrig rude
May end in worse than loss of hood.
Let friar John in safety still
In chimney-corner snore his fill,
Roast hissing crabs, or flagons swill;
Last night, to Norham there came one
Will better guide Lord Marmion.' —
'Nephew,' quoth Heron, 'by my fay,
Well hast thou spoke; say forth thy say.' —

XXIII

'Here is a holy Palmer come,
From Salem first, and last from Rome;
One that hath kissed the blessed tomb,
And visited each holy shrine
In Araby and Palestine;
On hills of Armenia hath been,
Where Noah's ark may yet be seen;
By that Red Sea, too, hath he trod,
Which parted at the Prophet's rod;
In Sinai's wilderness he saw
The Mount where Israel heard the law,
Mid thunder-dint, and flashing levin,
And shadows, mists, and darkness, given.
He shows Saint James's cockle-shell,
Of fair Montserrat, too, can tell;

For lo! of that Grot where Olives nod,
By hie, darling of each heart and eye,
On all the youth of Sicily,
Saint Rosalie retired to God.

XXIV

'To stout Saint George of Norwich merry,
Saint Thomas, too, of Canterbury,
Cuthbert of Durham and Saint Bede, 410
For his sins' pardon hath he prayed.
He knows the passes of the North,
And seeks far shrines beyond the Forth;
Little he eats, and long will wake,
And drinks but of the stream or lake.
This were a guide o'er moor and dale;
But when our John hath quaffed his ale,
As little as the wind that blows,
And warms itself against his nose,
Kens he, or cares, which way he goes.' — 420

XXV

'Gramercy!' quoth Lord Marmion,
'Full loath were I that Friar John,
That venerable man, for me
Were placed in fear or jeopardy:
If this same Palmer will me lead
From hence to Holy-Rood,
Like his good saint, I'll pay his meed,
Instead of cockle-shell or bead,
With angels fair and good. 430
I love such holy rambles; still
They know to charm a weary hill
With song, romance, or lay:
Some jovial tale, or glee, or jest,
Some lying legend, at the least,
They bring to cheer the way.' —

XXVI

'Ah! noble sir,' young Selby said,
And finger on his lip he laid,
'This man knows much, perchance e'en 440
more
Than he could learn by holy lore.
Still to himself he's muttering,
And shrinks as at some unseen thing.
Last night we listened at his cell;
Strange sounds we heard, and, sooth to tell,
He murmured on till morn, howe'er
No living mortal could be near.
Sometimes I thought I heard it plain,
As other voices spoke again.
I cannot tell — I like it not —
Friar John hath told us it is wrote,
No conscience clear and void of wrong 450
Can rest awake and pray so long.

Himself still sleeps before his beads
Have marked ten aves and two creeds.' —

XXVII

'Let pass,' quoth Marmion; 'by my fay,
This man shall guide me on my way,
Although the great arch-fiend and he
Had sworn themselves of company.
So please you, gentle youth, to call
This Palmer to the castle-hall.'
The summoned Palmer came in place: 460
His sable cowl o'erhung his face;
In his black mantle was he clad,
With Peter's keys, in cloth of red,
On his broad shoulders wrought;
The scallop shell his cap did deck;
The crucifix around his neck
Was from Loretto brought;
His sandals were with travel tore,
Staff, budget, bottle, scrip, he wore;
The faded palm-branch in his hand 470
Showed pilgrim from the Holy Land.

XXVIII

Whenas the Palmer came in hall,
Nor lord nor knight was there more tall,
Or had a statelier step withal,
Or looked more high and keen;
For no saluting did he wait,
But strode across the hall of state,
And fronted Marmion where he sate,
As he his peer had been. 479
But his gaunt frame was worn with toil;
His cheek was sunk, alas the while!
And when he struggled at a smile
His eye looked haggard wild:
Poor wretch, the mother that him bare,
If she had been in presence there,
In his wan face and sunburnt hair
She had not known her child.
Danger, long travel, want, or woe,
Soon change the form that best we know —
For deadly fear can time outgo, 490
And blanch at once the hair;
Hard toil can roughen form and face,
And want can quench the eye's bright
grace,
Nor does old age a wrinkle trace
More deeply than despair.
Happy whom none of these befall,
But this poor Palmer knew them all.

XXIX

Lord Marmion then his boon did ask;
The Palmer took on him the task,

So he would march with morning tide, 500
 To Scottish court to be his guide.
 But I have solemn vows to pay,
 And may not linger by the way,
 To fair Saint Andrew's bound,
 Within the ocean-cave to pray,
 Where good Saint Rule his holy lay,
 From midnight to the dawn of day,
 Sung to the billows' sound;
 Thence to Saint Fillan's blessed well, 509
 Whose spring can frenzied dreams dispel,
 And the crazed brain restore.
 Saint Mary grant that cave or spring
 Could back to peace my bosom bring,
 Or bid it throb no more !

XXX

And now the midnight draught of sleep,
 Where wine and spices richly steep,
 In massive bowl of silver deep,
 The page presents on knee.
 Lord Marmion drank a fair good rest,
 The captain pledged his noble guest, 520
 The cup went through among the rest,
 Who drained it merrily;
 Alone the Palmer passed it by,
 Though Selby pressed him courteously.
 This was a sign the feast was o'er;
 It hushed the merry wassail roar,
 The minstrels ceased to sound.
 Soon in the castle night was heard
 But the slow footstep of the guard
 Pacing his sober round. 530

XXXI

With early dawn Lord Marmion rose:
 And first the chapel doors unclose;
 Then, after morning rites were done —
 A hasty mass from Friar John —
 And knight and squire had broke their fast
 On rich substantial repast,
 Lord Marmion's bugles blew to horse.
 Then came the stirrup-cup in course:
 Between the baron and his host,
 No point of courtesy was lost; 540
 High thanks were by Lord Marmion paid,
 Solemn excuse the captain made,
 Till, filing from the gate, had passed
 That noble train, their lord the last.
 Then loudly rung the trumpet call;
 Thundered the cannon from the wall,
 And shook the Scottish shore;
 Around the castle eddied slow
 Volumes of smoke as white as snow

And hid its turrets hoar, 550
 Till they rolled forth upon the air,
 And met the river breezes there,
 Which gave again the prospect fair.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO
SECOND

TO THE REV. JOHN MARRIOTT, A.M.

Ashestiel, Ettrick Forest

THE scenes are desert now and bare,
 Where flourished once a forest fair,
 When these waste glens with copse were lined,
 And peopled with the hart and hind.
 Yon thorn — perchance whose prickly spears
 Have fenced him for three hundred years,
 While fell around his green compeers —
 Yon lonely thorn, would he could tell
 The changes of his parent dell,
 Since he, so gray and stubborn now, 10
 Waved in each breeze a sapling bough !
 Would he could tell how deep the shade
 A thousand mingled branches made;
 How broad the shadows of the oak,
 How clung the rowan to the rock,
 And through the foliage showed his head,
 With narrow leaves and berries red;
 What pines on every mountain sprung,
 O'er every dell what birches hung,
 In every breeze what aspens shook, 20
 What alders shaded every brook !

'Here, in my shade,' methinks he'd say,
 'The mighty stag at noontide lay;
 The wolf I've seen, a fiercer game, —
 The neighboring dingle bears his name, —
 With lurching step around me prowl,
 And stop, against the moon to howl;
 The mountain-bear, on battle set,
 His tusks upon my stem would whet;
 While doe, and roe, and red-deer good, 30
 Have bounded by through gay greenwood.
 Then oft from Newark's riven tower
 Sallied a Scottish monarch's power:
 A thousand vassals mustered round,
 With horse, and hawk, and horn, and
 hound;
 And I might see the youth intent
 Guard every pass with crossbow bent;
 And through the brake the rangers stalk,

And falconers hold the ready hawk;
 And foresters, in Greenwood trim,
 Lead in the leash the gazehounds grim,
 Attentive, as the bratchet's bay
 From the dark covert drove the prey,
 To slip them as he broke away.
 The startled quarry bounds amain,
 As fast the gallant greyhounds strain;
 Whistles the arrow from the bow,
 Answers the arquebuss below;
 While all the rocking hills reply
 To hoof-clang, hound, and hunters' cry, 50
 And bugles ringing lightsomely.'

Of such proud huntings many tales
 Yet linger in our lonely dales,
 Up pathless Eddrick and on Yarrow,
 Where erst the outlaw drew his arrow.
 But not more blithe that sylvan court,
 Than we have been at humbler sport;
 Though small our pomp and mean our
 game,

Our mirth, dear Marriott, was the same.
 Remember'st thou my greyhounds true?
 O'er bolt or hill there never flew, 60
 From slip or leash there never sprang,
 More fleet of foot or sure of fang.
 Nor dull, between each merry chase,
 Passed by the intermitted space;
 For we had fair resource in store,
 In Classic and in Gothic lore:
 We marked each memorable scene,
 And held poetic talk between;
 Nor hill, nor brook, we paced along, 70
 But had its legend or its song.
 All silent now — for now are still Thy bowers, untenanted Bowhill!
 No longer from thy mountains dun
 The yeoman hears the well-known gun,
 And while his honest heart glows warm
 At thought of his paternal farm,
 Round to his mates a brimmer fills,
 And drinks, 'The Chieftain of the Hills!'
 No fairy fortune, in Yarrow's bowers, 80
 Trip o'er the walks or tend the flowers,
 Fair as the elves whom Janet saw
 By moonlight dance on Carterhaugh;
 No youthful Baron's left to grace
 The Forest-Sheriff's lonely chase,
 And aye, in manly step and tone,
 The majesty of Othello.
 And she is gone whose lovely face
 Is but her least and lowest grace; 90
 Though if to Sybil'd Queen I were given
 To show our earth the charms of heaven,

She could not glide along the air
 With form more light or face more fair.
 No more the widow's deafened ear
 Grows quick that lady's step to hear:
 At noontide she expects her not,
 Nor busies her to trim the cot;
 Pensive she turns her humming wheel,
 Or pensive cooks her orphans' meal,
 Yet blesses, ere she deals their bread, 100
 The gentle hand by which they're fed.

From Yair — which hills so closely bind,
 Scarce can the Tweed his passage find,
 Though much he fret, and chafe, and toil,
 Till all his eddying currents boil —
 Her long-descended lord is gone,
 And left us by the stream alone.
 And much I miss those sportive boys,
 Companions of my mountain joys,
 Just at the age 'twixt boy and youth, 110
 When thought is speech, and speech is truth.

Close to my side with what delight
 They pressed to hear of Wallace wight,
 When, pointing to his airy mound,
 I called his ramparts holy ground!
 Kindled their brows to hear me speak;
 And I have smiled, to feel my cheek,
 Despite the difference of our years,
 Return again the glow of theirs.
 Ah, happy boys! such feelings pure, 120
 They will not, cannot long endure;
 Condemned to stem the world's rude tide,
 You may not linger by the side;
 For Fate shall thrust you from the shore
 And Passion ply the sail and oar.
 Yet cherish the remembrance still
 Of the lone mountain and the rill;
 For trust, dear boys, the time will come,
 When fiercer transport shall be dumb,
 And you will think right frequently, 130
 But, well I hope, without a sigh,
 On the free hours that we have spent
 Together on the brown hill's bent.

When, musing on companions gone,
 We doubly feel ourselves alone,
 Something, my friend, we yet may gain;
 There is a pleasure in this pain:
 It soothes the love of lonely rest,
 Deep in each greater heart impressed.
 'T is silent amid worldly toils, 140
 And stifled soon by mental broils;
 But, in a bosom thus prepared,
 Its still small voice is often heard,

Whispering a mingled sentiment
 'Twixt resignation and content.
 Oft in my mind such thoughts awake
 By lone Saint Mary's silent lake:
 Thou know'st it well, — nor fen nor sedge
 Pollute the pure lake's crystal edge;
 Abrupt and sheer, the mountains sink 150
 At once upon the level brink,
 And just a trace of silver sand
 Marks where the water meets the land.
 Far in the mirror, bright and blue,
 Each hill's huge outline you may view;
 Shaggy with heath, but lonely bare,
 Nor tree, nor bush, nor brake is there,
 Save where of land yon slender line
 Bears thwart the lake the scattered pine.
 Yet even this nakedness has power, 160
 And aids the feeling of the hour:
 Nor thicket, dell, nor copse you spy,
 Where living thing concealed might lie;
 Nor point retiring hides a dell
 Where swain or woodman lone might dwell.

There's nothing left to fancy's guess,
 You see that all is loneliness:
 And silence aids — though the steep hills
 Send to the lake a thousand rills;
 In summer tide so soft they weep, 170
 The sound but lulls the ear asleep;
 Your horse's hoof-tread sounds too rude,
 So stilly is the solitude.

Nought living meets the eye or ear,
 But well I ween the dead are near;
 For though, in feudal strife, a foe
 Hath bid Our Lady's chapel low,
 Yet still, beneath the hallowed soil,
 The peasant rests him from his toil,
 And dying bids his bones be laid 180
 Where erst his simple fathers prayed.

If age had tamed the passions' strife,
 And fate had cut my ties to life,
 Here have I thought 't were sweet to
 dwell,

And rear again the chaplain's cell,
 Like that same peaceful hermitage,
 Where Milton longed to spend his age.
 'T were sweet to mark the setting day
 On Bourhope's lonely top decay,
 And, as it faint and feeble died 190
 On the broad lake and mountain's side,
 To say, 'Thus pleasures fade away;
 Youth, talents, beauty, thus decay.
 And leave us dark, forlorn, and gray;'

Then gaze on Dryhope's ruined tower,
 And think on Yarrow's faded Flower;
 And when that mountain-sound I heard,
 Which bids us be for storm prepared,
 The distant rustling of his wings,
 As up his force the Tempest brings, 200
 'T were sweet, ere yet his terrors rave,
 To sit upon the Wizard's grave,
 That Wizard Priest's whose bones are thrust

From company of holy dust;
 On which no sunbeam ever shines —
 So superstition's creed divinex —
 Thence view the lake with sullen roar
 Heave her broad billows to the shore;
 And mark the wild-swans mount the gale,
 Spread wide through mist their snowy sail, 210

And ever stoop again, to lave
 Their bosoms on the surging wave;
 Then, when against the driving hail
 No longer might my plaid avail,
 Back to my lonely home retire,
 And light my lamp and trim my fire;
 There ponder o'er some mystic lay,
 Till the wild tale had all its way,
 And, in the bittern's distant shriek, 220
 I heard unearthly voices speak,
 And thought the Wizard Priest was come
 To claim again his ancient home!
 And bade my busy fancy range,
 To frame him fitting shape and strange,
 Till from the task my brow I cleared,
 And smiled to think that I had feared.

But chief 't were sweet to think such life —

Though but escape from fortune's strife —
 Something most matchless good and wise,
 A great and grateful sacrifice, 230
 And deem each hour to musing given
 A step upon the road to heaven.

Yet him whose heart is ill at ease
 Such peaceful solitudes displease;
 He loves to drown his bosom's jar
 Amid the elemental war:
 And my black Palmer's choice had been
 Some ruler and more savage scene,
 Like that which frowns round dark Lochskene.

There eagles scream from isle to shore; 240
 Down all the rocks the torrents roar;
 O'er the black waves incessant driven,
 Dark mists infect the summer heaven;

Through the rude barriers of the lake,
 Away its hurrying waters break,
 Faster and whiter dash and curl,
 Till down yon dark abyss they hurl.
 Rises the fog-smoke white as snow,
 Thunders the viewless stream below,
 Diving, as if condemned to lave 250
 Some demon's subterranean cave,
 Who, prisoned by enchanter's spell,
 Shakes the dark rock with groan and yell.

And well that Palmer's form and mien
 Had suited with the stormy scene,
 Just on the edge, straining his ken
 To view the bottom of the den,
 Where, deep deep down, and far within,
 Toils with the rocks the roaring linn;
 Then, issuing forth one foamy wave, 260
 And wheeling round the Giant's Grave,
 White as the snowy charger's tail,
 Drives down the pass of Moffatdale.

Marriott, thy harp, on Iuis strung,
 To many a Border theme has rung:
 Then hst to me, and thou shalt know
 Of this mysterious Man of Woe.

CANTO SECOND

THE CONVENT

I

THE breeze which swept away the smoke
 Round Norham Castle rolled,
 When all the loud artillery spoke
 With lightning-flash and thunder-stroke,
 As Marmion left the hold, —
 It curled not Tweed alone, that breeze,
 For, far upon Northumbrian seas,
 It freshly blew and strong,
 Where, from high Whitby's cloistered pile,
 Bound to Saint Cuthbert's Holy Isle, 10
 It bore a bark along.
 Upon the gale she stooped her side,
 And bounded o'er the swelling tide,
 As she were dancing home;
 The merry seamen laughed to see
 Their gallant ship so lustily
 Furrow the green sea-foam.
 Much joyed they in their honored freight;
 For on the deck, in chair of state,
 The Abbess of Saint Hilda placed, 20
 With five fair nuns, the galley graced.

II

'T was sweet to see these holy maids,
 Like birds escaped to greenwood shades,
 Their first flight from the cage,
 How timid, and how curious too,
 For all to them was strange and new,
 And all the common sights they view
 Their wonderment engage.
 One eyed the shrouds and swelling sail,
 With many a benedicite; 30
 One at the rippling surge grew pale,
 And would for terror pray,
 Then shrieked because the sea-dog nigh
 His round black head and sparkling eye
 Reared o'er the foaming spray;
 And one would still adjust her veil,
 Disordered by the summer gale,
 Perchance lest some more worldly eye
 Her dedicated charms might spy,
 Perchance because such action graced 40
 Her fair-turned arm and slender waist.
 Light was each simple bosom there,
 Save two, who ill might pleasure share, —
 The Abbess and the Novice Clare.

III

The Abbess was of noble blood,
 But early took the veil and hood,
 Ere upon life she cast a look,
 Or knew the world that she forsook.
 Fair too she was, and kind had been 50
 As she was fair, but ne'er had seen
 For her a timid lover sigh,
 Nor knew the influence of her eye.
 Love to her ear was but a name,
 Combined with vanity and shame;
 Her hopes, her fears, her joys, were all
 Bounded within the cloister wall;
 The deadliest sin her mind could reach
 Was of monastic rule the breach,
 And her ambition's highest aim
 To emulate Saint Hilda's fame. 60
 For this she gave her ample dower
 To raise the convent's eastern tower;
 For this, with carving rare and quaint,
 She decked the chapel of the saint,
 And gave the relic-shrine of cost,
 With ivory and gems embossed.
 The poor her convent's bounty blest,
 The pilgrim in its halls found rest.

IV

Black was her garb, her rigid rule
 Reformed on Benedictine school; 70

Her cheek was pale, her form was spare;
 Vigils and penitence austere
 Had early quenched the light of youth:
 But gentle was the dame, in sooth;
 Though, vain of her religious away,
 She loved to see her maids obey,
 Yet nothing stern was she in cell,
 And the nuns loved their Abbess well.
 Sad was this voyage to the dame;
 Summoned to Lindisfarne, she came,
 There, with Saint Cuthbert's Abbot old
 And Tynemouth's Prioress, to hold
 A chapter of Saint Benedict,
 For inquisition stern and strict
 On two apostates from the faith,
 And, if need were, to doom to death.

V

Nought say I here of Sister Clare,
 Save this, that she was young and fair;
 As yet a novice unprofessed,
 Lovely and gentle, but distressed.
 She was betrothed to one now dead,
 Or worse, who had dishonored fled.
 Her kinsmen bade her give her hand
 To one who loved her for her land;
 Herself, almost heart-broken now,
 Was bent to take the vestal vow,
 And shroud within Saint Hilda's gloom
 Her blasted hopes and withered bloom.

VI

She sat upon the galley's prow,
 And seemed to mark the waves below;
 Nay, seemed, so fixed her look and eye,
 To count them as they glided by.
 She saw them not — 't was seeming all —
 Far other scene her thoughts recall, —
 A sun-scorched desert, waste and bare,
 Nor waves nor breezes murmured there;
 There saw she where some careless hand
 O'er a dead corpse had heaped the sand,
 To hide it till the jackals come
 To tear it from the scanty tomb. —
 See what a woful look was given,
 As she raised up her eyes to heaven!

VII

Lovely, and gentle, and distressed —
 These charms might tame the fiercest
 breast:
 Harpers have sung and poets told
 That he, in fury uncontrolled,
 The shaggy monarch of the wood,
 Before a virgin, fair and good,

Hath pacified his savage mood.
 But passions in the human frame
 Oft put the lion's rage to shame;
 And jealousy, by dark intrigue,
 With sordid avarice in league,
 Had practised with their bowl and knife
 Against the mourner's harmless life.
 This crime was charged 'gainst those who lay
 Prisoned in Cuthbert's islet gray.

VIII

And now the vessel skirts the strand
 Of mountainous Northumberland;
 Towns, towers, and halls successive rise,
 And catch the nuns' delighted eyes.
 Monk-Wearmouth soon behind them lay,
 And Tynemouth's priory and bay;
 They marked amid her trees the hall
 Of lofty Seaton-Delaval;
 They saw the Blythe and Wansbeck floods
 Rush to the sea through sounding woods;
 They passed the tower of Widderington,
 Mother of many a valiant son;
 At Coquet-isle their beads they tell
 To the good saint who owned the cell;
 Then did the Alne attention claim,
 And Warkworth, proud of Percy's name;
 And next they crossed themselves to hear
 The whitening breakers sound so near,
 Where, boiling through the rocks, they roar
 On Dunstanborough's caverned shore;
 Thy tower, proud Bamborough, marked
 they there,
 King Ida's castle, huge and square,
 From its tall rock look grimly down,
 And on the swelling ocean frown;
 Then from the coast they bore away,
 And reached the Holy Island's bay.

IX

The tide did now its flood-mark gain,
 And girdled in the Saint's domain;
 For, with the flow and ebb, its style
 Varies from continent to isle:
 Dry shod, o'er sands, twice every day
 The pilgrims to the shrine find way;
 Twice every day the waves efface
 Of staves and sandalled feet the trace.
 As to the port the galley flew,
 Higher and higher rose to view
 The castle with its battled walls,
 The ancient monastery's halls,
 A solemn, huge, and dark-red pile,
 Placed on the margin of the isle.

X

In Saxon strength that abbey frowned,
 With massive arches broad and round,
 That rose alternate, row and row, 170
 On ponderous columns, short and low,
 Built ere the art was known,
 By pointed aisle and shafted stalk
 The arcades of an alleyed walk
 To emulate in stone.

On the deep walls the heathen Dane
 Had poured his impious rage in vain;
 And needful was such strength to these,
 Exposed to the tempestuous seas,
 Scourged by the winds' eternal sway, 180
 Open to rovers fierce as they,
 Which could twelve hundred years with-

stand
 Winds, waves, and northern pirates' hand.
 Not but that portions of the pile,
 Rebuilt in a later style,
 Showed where the spoiler's hand had been;
 Not but the wasting sea-breeze keen
 Had worn the pillar's carving quaint,
 And mouldered in his niche the saint, 190
 And rounded with consuming power
 The pointed angles of each tower;
 Yet still entire the abbey stood,
 Like veteran, worn, but unsubdued.

XI

Soon as they neared his turrets strong,
 The maidens raised Saint Hilda's song,
 And with the sea-wave and the wind
 Their voices, sweetly shrill, combined,
 And made harmonious close;
 Then, answering from the sandy shore,
 Half-drowned amid the breakers' roar, 200
 According chorus rose:

Down to the haven of the Isle
 The monks and nuns in order file
 From Cuthbert's cloisters grim;
 Banner, and cross, and relics there,
 To meet Saint Hilda's maids, they bare;
 And, as they caught the sounds on air,
 They echoed back the hymn.
 The islanders in joyous mood
 Rushed emulously through the flood 210
 To hale the bark to land;
 Conspicuous by her veil and hood,
 Signing the cross, the Abbess stood,
 And blessed them with her hand.

XII

Suppose we now the welcome said,
 Suppose the convent banquet made:

All through the holy dome,
 Through cloister, aisle, and gallery,
 Wherever vestal maid might pry,
 Nor risk to meet unhallowed eye, 220
 The stranger sisters roain;
 Till fell the evening damp with dew,
 And the sharp sea-breeze coldly blew,
 For there even summer night is chill.
 Then, having strayed and gazed their fill,
 They closed around the fire;
 And all, in turn, essayed to paint
 The rival merits of their saint,
 A theme that ne'er can tire
 A holy maid, for be it known 230
 That their saint's honor is their own.

XIII

Then Whitby's nuns exulting told
 How to their house three barons bold
 Must menial service do,
 While horns blow out a note of shame,
 And monks cry, 'Fie upon your name!
 In wrath, for loss of aylvan game,
 Saint Hilda's priest ye slew.' —
 'This, on Ascension-day, each year
 While laboring on our harbor-pier, 240
 Must Herbert, Bruce, and Percy hear.' —
 They told how in their convent-cell
 A Saxon princess once did dwell,
 The lovely Edelfled;
 And how, of thousand snakes, each one
 Was changed into a coil of stone
 When holy Hilda prayed;
 Themselves, within their holy bound,
 Their stony folds had often found.
 They told how sea-fowls' pinions fail, 250
 As over Whitby's towers they sail,
 And, sinking down, with flutterings faint,
 They do their homage to the saint.

XIV

Nor did Saint Cuthbert's daughters fail
 To vie with these in holy tale;
 His body's resting-place, of old,
 How oft their patron changed, they told;
 How, when the rude Dane burned their pile,
 The monks fled forth from Holy Isle; 260
 O'er northern mountain, marsh, and moor,
 From sea to sea, from shore to shore,
 Seven years Saint Cuthbert's corpse they bore.

They rested them in fair Melrose;
 But though, alive, he loved it well,
 Not there his relics might repose;
 For, wondrous tale to tell!

In his stone coffin forth he rides,
A ponderous bark for river tides,
Yet light as gossamer it glides
Downward to Tilmouth cell. 270
Nor long was his abiding there,
For southward did the saint repair;
Chester-le-Street and Ripon saw
His holy corpse ere Wardilaw
Hailed him with joy and fear;
And, after many wanderings past,
He chose his lordly seat at last
Where his cathedral, huge and vast,
Looks down upon the Wear.
There, deep in Durham's Gothic shade, 280
His relics are in secret laid;
But none may know the place,
Save of his holiest servants three,
Deep sworn to solemn secrecy,
Who share that wondrous grace.

XV

Who may his miracles declare?
Even Scotland's dauntless king and heir —
Although with them they led Galwegians, wild as ocean's gale, 285
And Loden's knights, all sheathed in mail,
And the bold men of Teviotdale —
Before his standard fled.
T was he, to vindicate his reign,
Edged Alfred's falchion on the Dane,
And turned the Conqueror back again,
When, with his Norman bowyer band,
He came to waste Northumberland.

XVI

But fain Saint Hilda's nuns would learn
If on a rock, by Lindisfarne,
Saint Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame 300
The sea-born beads that bear his name:
Such tales had Whitby's fishers told,
And said they might his shape behold,
And hear his anvil sound;
A deadened clang, — a huge dim form,
Seen but, and heard, when gathering storm
And night were closing round.
But thus, as tale of idle fame,
The nuns of Lindisfarne disclaim.

XVII

While round the fire such legends go, 310
Far different was the scene of woe
Where, in a secret aisle beneath,
Council was held of life and death.
It was more dark and lone, that vault,
Than the worst dungeon cell;

Old Colwulf built it, for his fault
In penitence to dwell,
When he for cowl and beads laid down
The Saxon battle-axe and crown.
This den, which, chilling every sense 320
Of feeling, hearing, sight,
Was called the Vault of Penitence,
Excluding air and light,
Was by the prelate Sexhelm made
A place of burial for such dead
As, having died in mortal sin,
Might not be laid the church within.
'T was now a place of punishment;
Whence if so loud a shriek were sent
As reached the upper air, 330
The hearers blessed themselves, and said
The spirits of the sinful dead
Bemoaned their torments there.

XVIII

But though, in the monastic pile,
Did of this penitential aisle
Some vague tradition go,
Few only, save the Abbot, knew
Where the place lay, and still more few
Were those who had from him the clew
To that dread vault to go. 340
Victim and executioner
Were blindfold when transported there.
In low dark rounds the arches hung,
From the rude rock the side-walls sprung;
The gravestones, rudely sculptured o'er,
Half sunk in earth, by time half wore,
Were all the pavement of the floor;
The mildew-drops fell one by one,
With tinkling plash, upon the stone.
A cresset, in an iron chain, 350
Which served to light this drear domain,
With damp and darkness seemed to strive,
As if it scarce might keep alive;
And yet it dimly served to show
The awful conclave met below.

XIX

There, met to doom in secrecy,
Were placed the heads of convents three,
All servants of Saint Benedict,
The statutes of whose order strict
On iron table lay; 360
In long black dress, on seats of stone,
Behind were these three judges shown
By the pale cresset's ray.
The Abbess of Saint Hilda's there
Sat for a space with visage bare,

Until, to hide her bosom's swell,
And tear-drops that for pity fall,
She closely drew her veil;
Yon shrouded figure, as I guess,
By her proud mien and flowing dress, 370
Is Tynemouth's haughty Prioress,
And she with awe looks pale;
And he, that ancient man, whose sight
Has long been quenched by age's night,
Upon whose wrinkled brow alone
Nor ruth nor mercy's trace is shown,
Whose look is hard and stern, —
Saint Cuthbert's Abbot is his style,
For sanctity called through the isle
The Saint of Lindisfarne. 380

XX

Before them stood a guilty pair;
But, though an equal fate they share,
Yet one alone deserves our care.
Her sex a page's dress belied;
The cloak and doublet, loosely tied,
Obscured her charms, but could not hide.
Her cap down o'er her face she drew;
And, on her doublet breast,
She tried to hide the badge of blue,
Lord Marmion's falcon crest. 390
But, at the prioress' command,
A monk undid the silken band
That tied her tresses fair,
And raised the bonnet from her head,
And down her slender form they spread
In ringlets rich and rare.
Constance de Beverley they know,
Sister professed of Fontevraud, Whom the Church numbered with the
dead,
For broken vows and convent fled. 400

XXI

When thus her face was given to view, —
Although so pallid was her hue,
It did a ghastly contrast bear
To those bright ringlets glistening fair, —
Her look composed, and steady eye,
Bespoke a matchless constancy;
And there she stood so calm and pale
That, but her breathing did not fail,
And motion slight of eye and head,
And of her bosom, warranted 410
That neither sense nor pulse she lacks,
You might have thought a form of wax,
Wrought to the very life, was there;
So still she was, so pale, so fair.

XXII

Her comrade was a sordid soul,
Such as does murder for a meed;
Who, but of fear, knows no control,
Because his conscience, seared and foul,
Feels not the import of his deed;
One whose brute-feeling ne'er aspires 420
Beyond his own more brute desires.
Such tools the Tempter ever needs
To do the savagest of deeds;
For them no visioned terrors daunt,
Their nights no fancied spectres haunt;
One fear with them, of all most base,
The fear of death, alone finds place.
This wretch was clad in frock and cowl,
And shamed not loud to moan and howl,
His body on the floor to dash, 430
And crouch, like hound beneath the lash;
While his mute partner, standing near,
Waited her doom without a tear.

XXIII

Yet well the luckless wretch might shriek,
Well might her paleness terror speak!
For there were seen in that dark wall
Two niches, narrow, deep, and tall; —
Who enters at such grisly door
Shall ne'er, I ween, find exit more.
In each a slender meal was laid, 440
Of roots, of water, and of bread;
By each, in Benedictine dress,
Two haggard monks stood motionless,
Who, holding high a blazing torch,
Showed the grim entrance of the porch;
Reflecting back the smoky beam,
The dark-red walls and arches gleam.
Hewn stones and cement were displayed,
And building tools in order laid.

XXIV

These executioners were chose 450
As men who were with mankind foes,
And, with despite and envy fired,
Into the cloister had retired,
Or who, in desperate doubt of grace,
Strove by deep penance to efface
Of some foul crime the stain;
For, as the vassals of her will,
Such men the Church selected still
As either joyed in doing ill,
Or thought more grace to gain 460
If in her cause they wrestled down
Feelings their nature strove to own.

By strange device were they brought
there,
They knew not how, and knew not where.

XXV

And now that blind old abbot rose,
To speak the Chapter's doom
On those the wall was to enclose
Alive within the tomb,
But stopped because that woful maid,
Gathering her powers, to speak essayed; 470
Twice she essayed, and twice in vain,
Her accents might no utterance gain;
Nought but imperfect murmur slip
From her convulsed and quivering lip:
"Twixt each attempt all was so still,
You seemed to hear a distant rill —
"T was ocean's swells and falls;
For though this vault of sin and fear
Was to the sounding surge so near, 479
A tempest there you scarce could hear,
So massive were the walls.

XXVI

At length, an effort sent apart
The blood that curdled to her heart,
And light came to her eye,
And color dawned upon her cheek,
A hectic and a fluttered streak,
Like that left on the Cheviot peak
By Autumn's stormy sky;
And when her silence broke at length,
Still as she spoke she gathered strength,
And armed herself to bear. 491
It was a fearful sight to see
Such high resolve and constancy
In form so soft and fair.

XXVII

"I speak not to implore your grace,
Well know I for one minute's space
Successful might I sue:
Nor do I speak your prayers to gain;
For if a death of lingering pain
To cleanse my sins be penance vain, 500
Vain are your masses too. —
I listened to a traitor's tale,
I left the convent and the veil;
For three long years I bowed my pride,
A horse-boy in his train to ride;
And well my folly's meed he gave,
Who forfeited, to be his slave,
All here, and all beyond the grave.
He saw young Clara's face more fair,

He knew her of broad lands the heir, 510
Forgot his vows, his faith forswore,
And Constance was beloved no more.
"T is an old tale, and often told;
But did my fate and wish agree,
Ne'er had been read, in story old,
Of maiden true betrayed for gold,
That loved, or was avenged, like me!

XXVIII

"The king approved his favorite's aim;
In vain a rival barred his claim,
Whose fate with Clare's was plight, 520
For he attaints that rival's fame
With treason's charge — and on they came
In mortal lists to fight.
Their oaths are said,
Their prayers are prayed,
Their lances in the rest are laid,
They meet in mortal shock;
And hark! the throng, with thundering
cry,
Shout "Marmion, Marmion! to the sky,
De Wilton to the block!" 530
Say, ye who preach Heaven shall decide
When in the lists two champions ride,
Say, was Heaven's justice here?
When, loyal in his love and faith,
Wilton found overthrow or death
Beneath a traitor's spear?
How false the charge, how true he fell,
This guilty packet best can tell.
Then drew a packet from her breast, Paused, gathered voice, and spoke the rest. 540

XXIX

"Still was false Marmion's bridal stayed;
To Whitby's convent fled the maid,
The hated match to shun.
"Ho! shifts she thus?" King Henry
cried,
"Sir Marmion, she shall be thy bride,
If she were sworn a nun."
One way remained — the king's command
Sent Marmion to the Scottish land;
I lingered here, and rescue planned
For Clara and for me: 550
This caitiff monk for gold did swear
He would to Whitby's shrine repair,
And by his drugs my rival fair
A saint in heaven should be;
But ill the dastard kept his oath,
Whose cowardice hath undone us both.

XXX

* And now my tongue the secret tells,
Not that remorse my bosom swells,
But to assure my soul that none
Shall ever wed with Marmion. 56
Had fortune my last hope betrayed,
This packet, to the king conveyed,
Had given him to the headsman's stroke,
Although my heart that instant broke —
Now, men of death, work forth your will,
For I can suffer, and be still;
(And come he slow, or come he fast,
It is but Death who comes at last.

XXXI

* Yet dread me from my living tomb,
Ye vassal slaves of bloody Rome! 57
If Marmion's late remorse should wake,
Full soon such vengeance will he take
That you shall wish the fiery Dane
Had rather been your guest again.
Behind, a darker hour ascends!
The altars quake, the crossier bends,
The ire of a despotic king
Rides forth upon destruction's wing;
Then shall these vaults, so strong and
deep,
Burst open to the sea-winds' sweep; 58
Some traveller then shall find my bones
Whitening amid disjointed stones,
And, ignorant of priests' cruelty,
Marvel such relics here should be.

XXXII

Fixed was her look and stern her air:
Back from her shoulders streamed her
hair;
The locks that wont her brow to shade
Stared up erectly from her head;
Her figure seemed to rise more high;
Her voice despair's wild energy 59
Had given a tone of prophecy.
Appalled the astonished conclave sate;
With stupid eyes, the men of fate
Gazed on the light inspired form,
And listened for the avenging storm;
The judges felt the victim's dread;
No hand was moved, no word was said,
Till thus the abbot's doom was given,
Raising his sightless balls to heaven: 60
'Sister, let thy sorrows cease;
Sinful brother, part in peace!
From that dre dungeon, place of doom,
Of execution too, and tomb,
Paced forth the judges three;

Sorrow it were and shame to tell
The butcher-work that there befell,
When they had glided from the cell
Of sin and misery.

XXXIII

An hundred winding steps convey
That conclave to the upper day; 61
But ere they breathed the fresher air
They heard the shriekings of despair,
And many a stifled groan.
With speed their upward way they take, —
Such speed as age and fear can make, —
And crossed themselves for terror's sake,
As hurrying, tottering on,
Even in the vesper's heavenly tone
They seemed to hear a dying groan,
And bade the passing knell to toll 62
For welfare of a parting soul.
Slow o'er the midnight wave it swung,
Northumbrian rocks in answer rung;
To Warkworth cell the echoes rolled,
His beads the wakeful hermit told;
The Bumborough peasant raised his head,
But slept ere half a prayer he said;
So far was heard the mighty knell,
The stag sprang up on Cheviot Fell,
Spread his broad nostril to the wind, 63
Listed before, aside, behind,
Then couched him down beside the hind,
And quaked among the mountain fern,
To hear that sound so dull and stern.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO
THIRD

TO WILLIAM ERSKINE, ESQ.

Ashetel, Ettrick Forest

LIKE April morning clouds, that pass
With varying shadow o'er the grass,
And imitate on field and furrow
Life's checkered scene of joy and sorrow;
Like streamlet of the mountain north,
Now in a torrent racing forth,
Now winding slow its silver train,
And almost slumbering on the plain;
Like breezes of the autumn day,
Whose voice inconstant dies away, 10
And ever swells again as fast
When the ear deems its murmur past;
Thus various, my romantic theme
Flits, winds, or sinks, a morning dream.

Yet pleased, our eye pursues the trace
Of Light and Shade's inconstant race;
Pleased, views the rivulet afar,
Weaving its maze irregular;
And pleased, we listen as the breeze
Heaves its wild sigh through Autumn trees: 20
Then, wild as cloud, or stream, or gale,
Flow on, flow unconfined, my tale!

Need I to thee, dear Erskine, tell
I love the license all too well,
In sounds now lowly, and now strong,
To raise the desultory song?
Oft, when mid such capricious chime
Some transient fit of loftier rhyme
To thy kind judgment seemed excuse
For many an error of the muse, 30
Oft hast thou said, 'If, still misspent,
Thine hours to poetry are lent,
Go, and to tame thy wandering course,
Quaff from the fountain at the source;
Approach those masters o'er whose tomb
Immortal laurels ever bloom:
Instructive of the feeble bard,
Still from the grave their voice is heard;
From them, and from the paths they showed,
Choose honored guide and practised
road; 40
Nor ramble on through brake and maze,
With harpers rude of barbarous days.

'Or deem'st thou not our later time
Yields topic meet for classic rhyme?
Hast thou no elegiac verse
For BRUNSWICK's venerable hearse?
What! not a line, a tear, a sigh,
When valor bleeds for liberty? —
Oh, hero of that glorious time,
When, with unrivalled light sublime, — 50
Though martial Austria, and though all
The might of Russia, and the Gaul,
Though banded Europe stood her foes —
The star of Brandenburg arose!
Thou couldst not live to see her beam
Forever quenched in Jena's stream.
Lamented chief! — it was not given
To thee to change the doom of Heaven,
And crush that dragon in its birth,
Predestined scourge of guilty earth. 60
Lamented chief! — not thine the power
To save in that presumptuous hour
When Prussia hurried to the field,
And snatched the spear, but left the shield!

Valor and skill 't was thine to try,
And, tried in vain, 't was thine to die.
Ill had it seemed thy silver hair
The last, the bitterest pang to share,
For princedoms reft, and scutcheons riven,
And birthrights to usurpers given; 70
Thy land's, thy children's wrongs to feel,
And witness woes thou couldst not heal!
On thee relenting Heaven bestows
For honored life an honored close;
And when revolves, in time's sure change,
The hour of Germany's revenge,
When, breathing fury for her sake,
Some new Arminius shall awake,
Her champion, ere he strike, shall come
To whet his sword on BRUNSWICK's tomb.

'Or of the Red-Cross hero teach, 81
Dauntless in dungeon as on breach.
Alike to him the sea, the shore,
The brand, the bridle, or the oar:
Alike to him the war that calls
Its votaries to the shattered walls
Which the grim Turk, besmeared with
blood,
Against the Invincible made good;
Or that whose thundering voice could wake
The silence of the polar lake, 90
When stubborn Russ and mettled Swede
On the warped wave their death-game
played;
Or that where Vengeance and Affright
Howled round the father of the flight,
Who snatched on Alexandria's sand
The conqueror's wreath with dying hand.

'Or if to touch such chord be thine,
Restore the ancient tragic line,
And emulate the notes that ring
From the wild harp which silent hung 100
By silver Avon's holy shore
Till twice an hundred years rolled o'er;
When she, the bold Enchantress, came,
With fearless hand and heart on flame,
From the pale willow snatched the treasure,
And swept it with a kindred measure,
Till Avon's swans, while rung the grove
With Montfort's hate and Basil's love,
Awakening at the inspired strain,
Deemed their own Shakespeare lived
again.' 110

Thy friendship thus thy judgment
wronging
With praises not to me belonging,

And sprung of Scotland's gentler blood;
Whose eye in age, quick, clear, and keen,
Showed what in youth its glance had been;
Whose doom discording neighbors sought,
Content with equity unbought;
To him the venerable priest,
Our frequent and familiar guest, 219
Whose life and manners well could paint
Alike the student and the saint,
Alas! whose speech too oft I broke
With gambol rude and timeless joke:
For I was wayward, bold, and wild,
A self-willed imp, a grandame's child,
But half a plague, and half a jest,
Was still endured, beloved, caressed.

From me, thus nurtured, dost thou ask
The classic poet's well-conned task?
Nay, Erskine, nay — on the wild hill 230
Let the wild heath-bell flourish still;
Cherish the tulip, prune the vine,
But freely let the woodbine twine,
And leave untrimmed the eglantine:
Nay, my friend, nay — since oft thy praise
Hath given fresh vigor to my lays,
Since oft thy judgment could refine
My flattened thought or cumbrous line,
Still kind, as is thy wont, attend,
And in the minstrel spare the friend. 240
Though wild as clond, as stream, as gale,
Flow forth, flow unrestrained, my tale!

CANTO THIRD

THE HOSTEL, OR INN

I

THE livelong day Lord Marmion rode;
The mountain path the Palmer showed
By glen and streamlet winded still,
Where stunted birches hid the rill.
They might not choose the lowland road,
For the Merse forayers were abroad,
Who, fired with hate and thirst of prey,
Had scarcely failed to bar their way;
Oft on the trampling band from crown 10
Of some tall cliff the deer looked down;
On wing of jet from his repose
In the deep heath the blackcock rose;
Sprung from the gorse the timid roe,
Nor waited for the bending bow;
And when the stony path began
By which the naked peak they wan,
Up flew the snowy ptarmigan.

The noon had long been passed before
They gained the height of Lammermoor;
Thence winding down the northern way, 20
Before them at the close of day
Old Gifford's towers and hamlet lay.

II

No summons calls them to the tower,
To spend the hospitable hour.
To Scotland's camp the lord was gone;
His cautious dame, in bower alone,
Dreaded her castle to uncloze,
So late, to unknown friends or foes.
On through the hamlet as they paced,
Before a porch whose front was graced,
With bush and slagon trimly placed, 31
Lord Marmion drew his rein:
The village inn seemed large, though
rude;
Its cheerful fire and hearty food
Might well relieve his train.
Down from their seats the horsemen sprung,
With jingling spurs the court-yard rung;
They bind their horses to the stall,
For forage, food, and firing call,
And various clamor fills the hall: 40
Weighing the labor with the cost,
Toils everywhere the bustling host.

III

Soon, by the chimney's merry blaze,
Through the rude hostel might you gaze,
Might see where in dark nook aloof
The rafters of the sooty roof
Bore wealth of winter cheer;
Of sea-fowl dried, and solands store,
And gammons of the tusky boar,
And savory haunch of deer. 50
The chimney arch projected wide;
Above, around it, and beside,
Were tools for housewives' hand;
Nor wanted, in that martial day,
The implements of Scottish fray,
The buckler, lance, and brand.
Beneath its shade, the place of state,
On oaken settle Marmion sate,
And viewed around the blazing hearth
His followers mix in noisy mirth: 60
Whom with brown ale, in jolly tide,
From ancient vessels ranged aside
Full actively their host supplied.

IV

Theirs was the glee of martial breast,
And laughter theirs at little jest;

And oft Lord Marmion deigned to aid,
 And mingle in the mirth they made;
 For though, with men of high degree,
 The proudest of the proud was he,
 Yet, trained in camps, he knew the art 70
 To win the soldier's hardy heart.
 They love a captain to obey,
 Boisterous as March, yet fresh as May;
 With open hand and brow as free,
 Lover of wine and minstrelsy;
 Ever the first to scale a tower,
 As venturous in a lady's bower: —
 Such buxom chief shall lead his host
 From India's fires to Zembla's frost.

V

Resting upon his pilgrim staff, 80
 Right opposite the Palmer stood,
 His thin dark visage seen but half,
 Half hidden by his hood.
 Still fixed on Marmion was his look,
 Which he, who ill such gaze could brook,
 Strove by a frown to quell;
 But not for that, though more than once
 Full met their stern encountering glance,
 The Palmer's visage fell.

VI

By fits less frequent from the crowd 90
 Was heard the burst of laughter loud;
 For still, as squire and archer stared
 On that dark face and matted beard,
 Their glee and game declined.
 All gazed at length in silence drear,
 Unbroke save when in comrade's ear
 Some yeoman, wondering in his fear,
 Thus whispered forth his mind:
 'Saint Mary! saw'st thou e'er such sight?
 How pale his cheek, his eye how bright, 100
 Whene'er the firebrand's flickle light
 Glances beneath his cowl!
 Full on our lord he sets his eye;
 For his best palfrey would not I
 Endure that sullen scowl.'

VII

But Marmion, as to chase the awe
 Which thus had quelled their hearts who

SAW

The ever-varying firelight show
 That figure stern and face of woe,
 Now called upon a squire; 110
 •Fitz-Eustace, know'st thou not some lay,
 To speed the lingering night away?
 We slumber by the fire.'

VIII

'So please you,' thus the youth rejoined,
 'Our choicest minstrel's left behind.
 Ill may we hope to please your ear,
 Accustomed Constant's strains to hear.
 The harp full deftly can he strike,
 And wake the lover's lute alike;
 To dear Saint Valentine no thrush 120
 Sings livelier from a springtide bush,
 No nightingale her lovelorn tune
 More sweetly warbles to the moon.
 Woe to the cause, what'er it be,
 Detains from us his melody,
 Lavished on rocks and billows stern,
 Or duller monks of Lindisfarne.
 Now must I venture as I may,
 To sing his favorite roundelay.'

IX

A mellow voice Fitz-Eustace had, 130
 The air he chose was wild and sad;
 Such have I heard in Scottish land
 Rise from the busy harvest band,
 When falls before the mountaineer
 On Lowland plains the ripened ear.
 Now on a shrill voice the notes prolong,
 Now a wild chorus swells the song;
 Oft have I listened and stood still
 As it came softened up the hill,
 And deemed it the lament of men 140
 Who languished for their native glen,
 And thought how sad would be such sound
 On Susquehanna's swampy ground,
 Kentucky's wood-encumbered brake,
 Or wild Ontario's boundless lake,
 Where heart-sick exiles in the strain
 Recalled fair Scotland's hills again!

X

SONG

Where shall the lover rest,
 Whom the fates sever
 From his true maiden's breast, 150
 Parted forever?
 Where, through groves deep and high,
 Sounds the far billow,
 Where early violets die,
 Under the willow.

CHORUS

Eleu loro, etc. Soft shall be his pillow.

There, through the summer day
 Cool streams are laving;

CANTO THIRD: THE HOSTEL, OR INN

There, while the tempests sway,
 Scarce are boughs waving:
 There thy rest shalt thou take,
 Parted forever,
 Never again to wake,
 Never, O never!

СВОИМ

Eleu loro, etc. Never, O never !

X 1

Where shall the traitor rest,
He the deceiver,
Who could win maiden's breast,
Ruin and leave her?
In the lost battle,
Borne down by the flying,
Where mingles war's rattle
With groans of the dying.

72, 73, 74

Eins ion, etc. There shall be the long

Her eyes had the light of the sun
 He was blind to the world and his,
 his heart was
 His heart was
 His heart was
 His heart was “制，即”

[illegible]

1. The first step in the process of the
2. The second step is to determine the
3. The third step is to determine the
4. The fourth step is to determine the
5. The fifth step is to determine the
6. The sixth step is to determine the
7. The seventh step is to determine the
8. The eighth step is to determine the
9. The ninth step is to determine the
10. The tenth step is to determine the Point for their coming, you will have lost

 Then not the business of the world
 Yet fatal strength they have
 They intend to leave the world, then
 Even while they walk beneath the sun
 Of civil conflict in the heart
 For even Lord Marston heard his hand
 And smiling in his fortune said:
 'To it not strength that we require,
 Secured in mine our death will come
 Such as in mine the day will
 For some departing shall we find
 Nay, what may this portend?
 Then that the Palace shall be broke
 The breaking day is lost and spoken,
 'The death of a noble friend'

444

1. Supernovae, which actually blow up a star, changing it into a cloud of gas.
 2. Quasars, which emit energy like the energy from a black hole but are
 3. White dwarfs, a small and hot star
 4. Black holes, the center of a galaxy
 5. Dark matter, which is invisible but is there

1. Galaxy
 2. Star
 3. Black hole
 4. Quasar
 5. Supernova

2

1. The first of these is the fact that the
 2. of the system is not a simple one.
 3. It is a complex one, involving many
 4. factors, and it is not possible to
 5. give a simple answer to the question
 6. of what is the best system.
 7. The second of these is the fact that
 8. the system is not a simple one.
 9. It is a complex one, involving many
 10. factors, and it is not possible to
 11. give a simple answer to the question
 12. of what is the best system.

When the stern priests surprised their prey.
His train but deemed the favorite page
Was left behind to spare his age;
Or other if they deemed, none dared
To mutter what he thought and heard:
Wine to the vassal who durst pry
Into Lord Marmion's privacy!

XVI

His conscience slept — he deemed her well,
And safe secured in distant cell;
But, wakened by her favorite lay,
And that strange Palmer's boding say
That fell so ominous and drear
Full on the object of his fear,
To aid remorse's venom'd throes,
Dark tales of content-vengeance rose;
And Constance, late betrayed and scorned,
All lovely on his soul returned;
Lovely as when at treacherous call
She left her convent's peaceful wall,
Crimsoned with shame, with terror mute,
Dreading alike escape, pursuit,
Till love, victorious o'er alarms,
Had fears and blushes in his arms.

XVII

'Alas!' he thought, 'how changed that
man!
How changed these timid looks have been,
Since years of guilt and of disguise
Have steel'd her brow and arm'd her eyes!
No more of virgin terror speaks
The blood that mantles in her cheeks;
Fierce and unfeminine are there,
Fronts for joy, for grief despair;
And I the cause — for whom were given
Her peace on earth, her hopes in heaven! —
Would,' thought he, as the picture grows,
'I on its stalk had left the rose!
Oh, why should man's success remove
The very charms that wake his love? —
Her convent's peaceful solitude
Is now a prison harsh and rude;
And, pent within the narrow cell,
How will her spirit chafe and swell!
How brook the stern monastic laws!
The penance how — and I the cause! —
Vigils and scourge — penance even worse!
And twice he rose to cry, 'To horse!
And twice his sovereign's mandate came,
Like damp upon a kindling flame;
And twice he thought, 'Gave I not charge
She should be safe, though not at large?

They durst not, for their island, shred
One golden ringlet from her head.'

XVIII

While thus in Marmion's bosom strove
Repentance and reviving love,
Like whirlwinds whose contending sway
I've seen Loch Vennachar obey,
Their host the Palmer's speech had heard,
And talkative took up the word:
'Ay, reverend pilgrim, you who stray
From Scotland's simple land away,
To visit realms afar,
Full often learn the art to know
Of future weal or future woe,
By word, or sign, or star;
Yet might a knight his fortune bear,
If, knight-like, he despises fear,
Not far from hence; — if fathers old
Aright our hamlet legend told.'
These broken words the menials move, —
For marvels still the vulgar love, —
And, Marmion giving license cold,
His tale the host thus gladly told: —

XIX

THE HOST'S TALE

'A clerk could tell what years have flown
Since Alexander fill'd our throne, —
Third monarch of that warlike name, —
And eke the time when here he came
To seek Sir Hugo, then our lord:
A braver never drew a sword;
A wiser never, at the hour
Of midnight, spoke the word of power;
The same whom ancient records call
The founder of the Goblin-Hall.
I would, Sir Knight, your longer stay
Gave you that cavern to survey.
Of lofty roof and ample size,
Beneath the castle deep it lies:
To hew the living rock profound,
The floor to pave, the arch to round,
There never toiled a mortal arm,
It all was wrought by word and charm;
And I have heard my grandsire say
That the wild clamor and affray
Of those dread artisans of bell,
Who labored under Hugo's spell,
Sounded as loud as ocean's war
Among the caverns of Dunbar.

XX

'The king Lord Gifford's castle sought,
Deep laboring with uncertain thought.

Even then he mustered all his host,
To meet upon the western coast;
For Norse and Danish galleys plied
Their oars within the Firth of Clyde.
There floated Haco's banner trim
Above Norwegian warriors grim,
Savage of heart and large of limb,
Threatening both continent and isle,
Bute, Arran, Cunninghame, and Kyle.
Lord Gifford, deep beneath the ground,
Heard Alexander's bugle sound, 350
And tarried not his garb to change,
But, in his wizard habit strange,
Came forth, — a quaint and fearful sight:
His mantle lined with fox-skins white;
His high and wrinkled forehead bore
A pointed cap, such as of yore
Clerks say that Pharaoh's Magi wore;
His shoes were marked with cross and spell,
Upon his breast a pentacle; 360
His zone of virgin parchment thin,
Or, as some tell, of dead man's skin,
Bore many a planetary sign,
Combust, and retrograde, and trine;
And in his hand he held prepared
A naked sword without a guard.

XXI

'Dire dealings with the fiendish race
Had marked strange lines upon his face;
Vigil and fast had worn him grim,
His eyesight dazzled seemed and dim,
As one unused to upper day; 370
Even his own menials with dismay
Beheld, Sir Knight, the grisly sire
In this unwonted wild attire;
Unwonted, for traditions run
He seldom thus beheld the sun.
"I know," he said, — his voice was hoarse,
And broken seemed its hollow force, —
"I know the cause, although untold,
Why the king seeks his vassal's hold:
Vainly from me my hege would know 380
His kingdom's future weal or woe;
But yet, if strong his arm and heart,
His courage may do more than art.

XXII

"Of middle air the demons proud,
Who rise upon the racking cloud,
Can read to thee the wandering star
The cause of events afar,
But still their smiles me withhold,
Save when by mightier forces controlled.
Sectate I summoned to my hall; 390

And though so potent was the call
That scarce the deepest nook of hell
I deemed a refuge from the spell,
Yet, obstinate in silence still,
The haughty demon mocks my skill.
But thou, — who little know'st thy might
As born upon that blessed night
When yawning graves and dying groan
Proclaimed hell's empire overthrown, —
With untaught valor shalt compel 400
Response denied to magic spell."
"Gramesey," quoth our monarch free,
"Place him but front to front with me,
And, by this good and honored brand,
The gift of Cœur-de-Lion's hand,
Soothly I swear that, tide what tide,
The demon shall a buffet bide."
His bearing bold the wizard viewed,
And thus, well pleased, his speech renewed:
"There spoke the blood of Malcolm! — mark: 410
Forth pacing hence at midnight dark,
The rampart seek whose crenel crown
Crests the ascent of yonder down:
A southern entrance shalt thou find;
There halt, and there thy bugle wind,
And trust thou shalt see
In guise of thy worst enemy.
Couch then thy lance and spur thy steed —
Upon him! and Saint George to speed!
If he go down, thou soon shalt know 420
Whate'er these airy sprites can show;
If thy heart fail thee in the strife,
I am no warrior for thy life."

XXIII

'Soon as the midnight bell did ring,
Alone and armed, forth rode the king
To that old camp's deserted round.
Sir Knight you well might mark the mound
Left hand the town, — the Pictish race
The trench, long since, in blood did trace:
The moor around is brown and bare, 430
The space within is green and fair.
The spot our village children know,
For there the earliest wild-flowers grow;
But woe beside the wandering wight
That treads its circle in the night!
The breadth across, a bowshot clear,
Gives ample space for full career,
Opposed to the four points of heaven,
By four deep gaps are entrance given.
The southernmost our monarch passed, 440
Halted, and blew a gallant blast,
And on the north, within the ring,

Apparitions the form of England's king,
 Whose throne a thousand leagues afar,
 In Falding waded lady saw
 Yet none like England's old he would;
 Alas the leopards in the shield,
 Alas the Syrian coursers' frame,
 The rider's length of limb the same.
 Long after words and Scotland knew
 Felt Edward was her death-hour too.

XXIV

'The vision made our monarch start,
 But soon he mastered his noble heart,
 And in the first career they ran,
 The Elfin knight fell, horse and man;
 Yet did a splinter of his lance
 Through Alexander's visor glance,
 And made the skin — a penny wound.
 The king, light leaping to the ground,
 With naked blade his phantom foe
 Compelled the future war to show.
 Of large he saw the glorious plain,
 Where still gigantic bones remain,
 Memorial of the Danish war;
 Himself he saw, amid the field,
 On high his banished war-axe wield
 And strike proud Haco from his seat,
 While all around the shadowy kings Denmark's grim ravens cowered their wings.
 'T is said that in that awful night
 Remoter visions met his sight,
 For showing future conquest; but,
 When our sons' sons wage Northern war;
 A royal city, tower and spire,
 Re-blessed the midnight sky with fire,
 And beating across her ways bore
 Triumphant to the victor shore.
 Such signs may learned clerks explain,
 They pass the wit of simple swain.

XXV

'The joyful king turned home again,
 He led his host, and quelled the Dane,
 But victory, when returned the night
 Of his strange vision but with the spoils,
 His sword and spear breed no smart,
 Lord Oxford's bow would slay him;
 "Bold as an eagle, my arrow, ye say
 The parance of your start."
 Long since, beneath the stern line's wave,
 King Alexander tells his grave,
 Our lady gave him rest.
 Yet still the knightly spear and shield

The Elfin Warrior doth wield
 Upon the brown hill's breast,
 And many a knight hath proved his chance
 In the charmed ring to break a lance.
 But all have foully sped;
 Save two, as legends tell, and they Were Wallace right and Gilbert Hay. —
 'Gentles, my tale is said.'

XXVI

The quights were deep, the liquor strong,
 And on the tale the yeoman-throng
 Had made a comment sage and long,
 But Marmion gave a sign:
 And with their lord the aquires retire,
 The rest around the hostel fire
 Their drowsy limbs recline;
 For pillow, underneath each head
 The quiver and the targe were laid.
 Deep slumbering on the hostel floor,
 Oppressed with toil and ale, they snore;
 The dying flame, in fitful change,
 Throw on the group its shadows strange.

XXVII

Apart, and vestling in the bay
 Of a waste left, Fitz-Eustace lay;
 Scarce by the pale moonlight were seen
 The foldings of his mantle green
 Lightly he dreamt, as youth will dream,
 Of sport by thicket, or by stream,
 Of hawk or hound, or ring or glove,
 Or, lighter yet, of lady's love.
 A cautious tread his slumber broke,
 And, close beside him when he woke,
 In moonbeam half, and half in gloom,
 Stood a tall form with nodding plume;
 But, ere his dagger Eustace drew,
 His master Marmion's voice he knew:

XXVIII

'Fitz-Eustace' rise, — I cannot rest;
 Yon churl's wild legend haunts my breast,
 And graver thoughts have enured my mind;
 The air must cool my feverish blood,
 And 'gain would I ride forth to see
 The scene of this injury.
 Arise, and saddle me my steed;
 And, gentle Eustace, take good heed
 Thou dost not rouse these drowsy slaves;
 I would not that my peering slaves
 Had cause for saying, "O'er their sin,
 That I could credit such a sin,
 I then softly down the steps easy slid,

Eustace the stable door undid, 550
And, darkling, Marmion's steed arrayed,
While, whispering, thus the baron said: —

XXIX

'Didst never, good my youth, hear tell
That on the hour when I was born Saint George, who graced my sire's champelle,
Down from his steed of marble fell,
A weary wight forlorn?
The flattering chaplains all agree
The champion left his steed to me.
I would, the omen's truth to show, 560
That I could meet this elfin foe!
Blithe would I battle for the right
To ask one question at the sprite. —
Vain thought! for elves, if elves there
be,
An empty race, by fount or sea
To dashing waters dance and sing,
Or round the green oak wheel their ring.'
Thus speaking, he his steed bestrode,
And from the hostel slowly rode.

XXX

Fitz-Eustace followed him abroad, 570
And marked him pace the village road,
And listened to his horse's tramp,
Till, by the lessening sound,
He judged that of the Pictish camp
Lord Marmion sought the round.
Wonder it seemed, in the squire's eyes,
That one, so wary held and wise, —
Of whom 't was said, he scarce received
For gospel what the Church believed, —
Should, stirred by idle tale, 580
Ride forth in silence of the night,
As hoping half to meet a sprite,
Arrayed in plate and mail.
For little did Fitz-Eustace know
That passions in contending flow
Unfix the strongest mind;
Wearied from doubt to doubt to flee,
We welcome fond credulity,
Guide confident, though blind.

XXXI

Little for this Fitz-Eustace cared, 590
But patient waited till he heard
At distance, pricked to utmost speed,
The foot-trump of a flying steed
Come downward rushing on;
First, dead, as if on turf it trode,
Then, clattering on the village road, —

In other pace than forth he yode,
Returned Lord Marmion.
Down hastily he sprung from selle,
And in his haste wellnigh he fell; 600
To the squire's hand the rein he threw,
And spoke no word as he withdrew:
But yet the moonlight did betray
The falcon-crest was soiled with clay;
And plainly might Fitz-Eustace see,
By stains upon the charger's knee
And his left side, that on the moor
He had not kept his footing sure.
Long musing on these wondrous signs, 610
At length to rest the squire reclines,
Broken and short; for still between
Would dreams of terror intervene:
Eustace did ne'er so blithely mark
The first notes of the morning lark.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO
FOURTH

TO JAMES SKENE, ESQ.

Ashetel, Eltrick Forest

AN ancient Minstrel sagely said,
'Where is the life which late we led?'
That motley clown in Arden wood,
Whom humorous Jaques with envy viewed,
Not even that clown could amplify
On this trite text so long as I.
Eleven years we now may tell
Since we have known each other well,
Since, riding side by side, our hand
First drew the voluntary brand; 10
And sure, through many a varied scene,
Unkindness never came between.
Away these winged years have flown,
To join the mass of ages gone;
And though deep marked, like all below,
With checkered shades of joy and woe,
Though thou o'er realms and seas hast ranged,
Marked cities lost and empires changed,
While here at home my narrower ken
Somewhat of manners saw and men; 20
Though varying wishes, hopes, and fears
Fevered the progress of these years,
Yet now, days, weeks, and months but seem
The recollection of a dream,
So still we glide down to the sea
Of fathomless eternity.

Even now it scarcely seems a day
 Since first I tuned this idle lay;
 A task so often thrown aside,
 When leisure graver cares denied, 30
 That now November's dreary gale,
 Whose voice inspired my opening tale,
 That same November gale once more
 Whirls the dry leaves on Yarrow shore.
 Their vexed boughs streaming to the sky,
 Once more our naked birches sigh,
 And Blackhouse heights and Ettrick Pen
 Have donned their wintry shrouds again,
 And mountain dark and flooded mead
 Bid us forsake the banks of Tweed. 40
 Earlier than wont along the sky,
 Mixed with the rack, the snow mists fly;
 The shepherd who, in summer sun,
 Had something of our envy won,
 As thou with pencil, I with pen,
 The features traced of hill and glen, —
 He who, outstretched the livelong day,
 At ease among the heath-flowers lay,
 Viewed the light clouds with vacant look,
 Or slumbered o'er his tattered book, 50
 Or idly busied him to guide
 His angle o'er the lessened tide, —
 At midnight now the snowy plain
 Finds sterner labor for the swain.

When red hath set the beamless sun
 Through heavy vapors dank and dun,
 When the tired ploughman, dry and warm,
 Hears, half asleep, the rising storm
 Hurling the hail and sleeted rain
 Against the casement's tinkling pane; 60
 The sounds that drive wild deer and fox
 To shelter in the brake and rocks
 Are warnings which the shepherd ask
 To dismal and to dangerous task.
 Oft he looks forth, and hopes, in vain,
 The blast may sink in mellowing rain;
 Till, dark above and white below,
 Decided drives the flaky snow,
 And forth the hardy swain must go.
 Long, with dejected look and whine, 70
 To leave the hearth his dogs repine:
 Whistling and cheering them to aid,
 Around his back he wreathes the plaid:
 His flock he gathers and he guides
 To open downs and mountain-sides,
 Where fiercest though the tempest blow,
 Least deeply lies the drift below.
 The blast that whistles o'er the fells
 Stiffens his locks to icicles;
 Oft he looks back while, streaming far, 80

His cottage window seems a star, —
 Loses its feeble gleam, — and then Turns patient to the blast again,
 And, facing to the tempest's sweep,
 Drives through the gloom his lagging
 sheep.

If fails his heart, if his limbs fail,
 Benumbing death is in the gale;
 His paths, his landmarks, all unknown,
 Close to the hut, no more his own,
 Close to the aid he sought in vain, 90
 The morn may find the stiffened swain:
 The widow sees, at dawning pale,
 His orphans raise their feeble wail;
 And, close beside him in the snow,
 Poor Yarrow, partner of their woe,
 Couches upon his master's breast,
 And licks his cheek to break his rest.

Who envies now the shepherd's lot,
 His healthy fare, his rural cot,
 His summer couch by greenwood tree, 100
 His rustic kirk's loud revelry,
 His native hill-notes tuned on high
 To Marion of the blithesome eye,
 His crook, his scrip, his oaten reed,
 And all Arcadia's golden creed?

Changes not so with us, my Skene,
 Of human life the varying scene?
 Our youthful summer oft we see
 Dance by on wings of game and glee,
 While the dark storm reserves its rage 110
 Against the winter of our age;
 As he, the ancient chief of Troy,
 His manhood spent in peace and joy,
 But Grecian fires and loud alarms
 Called ancient Priam forth to arms.
 Then happy those, since each must drain
 His share of pleasure, share of pain, —
 Then happy those, beloved of Heaven,
 To whom the mingled cup is given;
 Whose lenient sorrows find relief; 120
 Whose joys are chastened by their grief.
 And such a lot, my Skene, was thine,
 When thou of late wert doomed to twine —
 Just when thy bridal hour was by —
 The cypress with the myrtle tie.
 Just on thy bride her sire had smiled,
 And blessed the union of his child,
 When love must change its joyous cheer,
 And wipe affection's filial tear.
 Nor did the actions next his end 130
 Speak more the father than the friend:
 Scarce had lamented Forbes paid

CANTO FOURTH: THE CAMP

The tribute to his minstrel's shade,
The tale of friendship scarce was told,
Ere the narrator's heart was cold —
Far may we search before we find
A heart so manly and so kind!
But not around his honored urn
Shall friends alone and kindred mourn;
The thousand eyes his care had dried 140
Pour at his name a bitter tide,
And frequent falls the grateful dew
For benefits the world ne'er knew.
If mortal charity dare claim
The Almighty's attributed name,
Inscribe above his mouldering clay,
'The widow's shield, the orphan's stay.'
Nor, though it wake thy sorrow, deem
My verse intrudes on this sad theme,
For sacred was the pen that wrote, 150
'Thy father's friend forget thou not;'
And grateful title may I plead,
For many a kindly word and deed,
To bring my tribute to his grave: —
'T is little — but 't is all I have.

To thee, perchance, this rambling strain
Recalls our summer walks again;
When, doing nought, — and, to speak true,
Not anxious to find ought to do, — 160
The wild unbounded hills we ranged,
While oft our talk its topic changed,
And, desultory as our way,
Ranged unconfined from grave to gay.
Even when it flagged, as oft will chance,
No effort made to break its trance,
We could right pleasantly pursue
Our sports in social silence too;
Thou gravely laboring to portray
The blighted oak's fantastic spray,
I spelling o'er with much delight 170
The legend of that antique knight,
Tirante by name, yeelped the White.
At either's feet a trusty squire,
Pandour and Camp, with eyes of fire,
Jealous each other's motions viewed,
And scarce suppressed their ancient feud.
The laverock whistled from the cloud;
The stream was lively, but not loud;
From the white thorn the May-flower shed
Its dewy fragrance round our head: 180
Not Ariel lived more merrily
Under the blossomed bough than we.

And blithesome nights, too, have been
ours,
When Winter stript the Summer's bowers.

Careless we heard, what now I hear,
The wild blast sighing deep and drear,
When fires were bright and lamps be-

gay,
And ladies tuned the lovely lay,
And he was held a laggard soul
Who shunned to quaff the sparkling bowl.

Then he whose absence we deplore,
Who breathes the gales of Devon's shore
The longer missed, bewailed the more,
And thou, and I, and dear-loved Rae,
And one whose name I may not say, —
For not mimosa's tender tree
Shrinks sooner from the touch than he,
In merry chorus well combined,
With laughter drowned the whistling w
Mirth was within, and Care without Might gnaw her nails to hear our shout
Not but amid the buxom scene
Some grave discourse might intervene.
Of the good horse that bore him best,
His shoulder, hoof, and arching crest;
For, like mad Tom's, our chiefest care
Was horse to ride and weapon wear.
Such nights we've had; and, though
game

Of manhood be more sober tame,
And though the field-day or the drill
Seem less important now, yet still
Such may we hope to share again.
The sprightly thought inspires my strain
And mark how, like a horseman true,
Lord Marmion's march I thus renew.

CANTO FOURTH

THE CAMP

1

EUSTACE, I said, did blithely mark
The first notes of the merry lark.
The lark sang shrill, the cock he crew,
And loudly Marmion's bugles blew.
And with their light and lively call
Brought groom and yeoman to the stall
Whistling they came and free of head
But soon their mood was changed;
Complaint was heard on every part
Of something disarranged.
Some clamored loud for armor lost;
Some brawled and wrangled with the host
'By Becket's bones,' cried one, 'I fear
That some false Scot has stolen my spear'

Young Blount, Lord Marmion's second
squire,

Found his steed wet with sweat and mire,
Although the rated horseboy aware
Last night he dressed him sleek and fair.
While chafed the impatient squire like
thunder,

Old Hubert shouts in fear and wonder, — 30
'Help, gentle Blount! help, comrades all!
Bevis lies dying in his stall;
To Marmion who the plight dare tell
Of the good steed he loves so well?'
Gaping for fear and ruth, they saw
The charger panting on his straw;
Till one, who would seem wisest, cried,
'What else but evil could betide,
With that cursed Palmer for our guide?
Better we had through mire and bush 30
Been lantern-led by Friar Rush.'

II

Fitz-Eustace, who the cause but guessed,
Nor wholly understood,
His comrades' clamorous complaints suppressed;

He knew Lord Marmion's mood.
Him, ere he issued forth, he sought,
And found deep plunged in gloomy thought,
And did his tale display
Simply, as if he knew of nought
To cause such disarray. 40

Lord Marmion gave attention cold,
Nor marvelled at the wonders told, —
Passed them as accidents of course,
And bade his clarions sound to horse.

III

Young Henry Blount, meanwhile, the cost
Had reckoned with their Scottish host;
And, as the charge he cast and paid,
'Ill thou deserv'st thy hire,' he said;
'Dost see, thou knave, my horse's plight?
Fairies have ridden him all the night, 50
And left him in a foam!

I trust that soon a conjuring band,
With English cross and blazing brand,
Shall drive the devils from this land

'To their infernal home;
For in this haunted den, I trow,
All night they trampled to and fro.'
The laughing host looked on the hire:
'Gramercy, gentle southern squire, 60
And if thou com'st among the rest,
With Scottish broadsword to be blest,
Sharp be the brand, and sure the blow,
And short the pang to undergo.'

Here stayed their talk, for Marmion
Gave now the signal to set on.
The Palmer showing forth the way,
They journeyed all the morning-day.

IV

The greensward way was smooth and good,
Through Humble's and through Saltoun's
wood;

A forest glade, which, varying still, 70
Here gave a view of dale and hill,
There narrower closed till overhead
A vaulted screen the branches made.
'A pleasant path,' Fitz-Eustace said;
'Such as where errant-knights might see
Adventures of high chivalry,
Might meet some damsel flying fast,
With hair unbound and looks aghast;
And smooth and level course were here,
In her defence to break a spear. 80
Here, too, are twilight nooks and dells;
And oft in such, the story tells,
The damsel kind, from danger freed,
Did grateful pay her champion's meed.'
He spoke to cheer Lord Marmion's mind,
Perchance to show his lore designed;

For Eustace much had pored
Upon a huge romantic tome,
In the hall-window of his home,
Imprinted at the antique dome 90
Of Caxton or de Worde.

Therefore he spoke, — but spoke in vain,
For Marmion answered nought again.

V

Now sudden, distant trumpets shrill,
In notes prolonged by wood and hill,
Were heard to echo far;
Each ready archer grasped his bow,
But by the flourish soon they know
They breathed no point of war.
Yet cautious, as in foeman's land, 100
Lord Marmion's order speeds the band
Some opener ground to gain;
And scarce a furlong had they rode,
When thinner trees receding showed
A little woodland plain.
Just in that advantageous glade
The halting troop a line had made,
As forth from the opposing shade
Issued a gallant train. 109

VI

First came the trumpets, at whose clang
So late the forest echoes rang;
On prancing steeds they forward pressed,

With scarlet mantle, azure vest;
 Each at his trump a banner wore,
 Which Scotland's royal sentcheon bore:
 Herald and pursuivants, by name
 Bute, Islay, Marchmont, Rothsay, came,
 In painted tabards, proudly showing
 Gules, argent, or, and azure glowing,
 Attendant on a king-at-arms, 120
 Whose band the armorial truncheon held
 That fendal strife had often quelled
 When wildest its alarms.

VII

He was a man of middle age,
 In aspect manly, grave, and sage,
 As on king's errand come;
 But in the glances of his eye
 A penetrating, keen, and sly
 Expression found its home;
 The flash of that satiric rage 130
 Which, bursting on the early stage,
 Branded the vices of the age,
 And broke the keys of Rome.
 On milk-white palfrey forth he paced;
 His cap of maintenance was graced
 With the proud heron-plume.
 From his steed's shoulder, loin, and breast,
 Silk housings swept the ground,
 With Scotland's arms, devier, and crest,
 Embroidered round and round. 140
 The double treasure might you see,
 First by Achais borne,
 The thistle and the fleur-de-lis,
 And gallant unicorn.
 So bright the king's armorial coat
 That scarce the dazzled eye could note,
 In living colors blazoned brave,
 The Lion, which his title gave;
 A train, which well beseeemed his state,
 But all unarm'd, around him wait. 150
 Still is thy name in high account,
 And still thy verse has charms,
 Sir David Lindsay of the Mount,
 Lord Lion King-at-arms!

VIII

Down from his horse did Marmion spring
 Soon as he saw the Lion-King;
 For well the stately baron knew
 In him such courtesy was due
 Whom royal James himself had crowned,
 And on his temples placed the round 160
 Of Scotland's ancient diadem.
 And wet his brow with hallowed wine,
 And on his finger given to shine

The emblematic gem.
 Their mutual greetings duly made,
 The Lion thus his message said:—
 'Though Scotland's King hath deep sworn
 Ne'er to knit faith with Henry more,
 And strictly hath forbid resort
 From England to his royal court,
 Yet, for he knows Lord Marmion's name
 And honors much his warlike fame,
 My liege hath deemed it shame and lack
 Of courtesy to turn him back;
 And by his order I, your guide,
 Must lodging fit and fair provide Till finds King James meet time to see
 The flower of English chivalry.'

IX

Though inly chafed at this delay,
 Lord Marmion bears it as he may.
 The Palmer, his mysterious guide,
 Beholding thus his place supplied,
 Sought to take leave in vain;
 Strict was the Lion-King's command
 That none who rode in Marmion's band
 Should sever from the train.
 'England has here enow of spies
 In Lady Heron's witching eyes:
 To Marchmont thus apart he said,
 But fair pretext to Marmion made.
 The right-hand path they now decline,
 And trace against the stream the Tyne.

X

At length up that wild dale they wind,
 Where Crichtoun Castle crowns the ban
 For there the Lion's care assigned
 A lodging meet for Marmion's rank.
 That castle rises on the steep
 Of the green vale of Tyne;
 And far beneath, where slow they creep
 From pool to eddy, dark and deep, 1
 Where alders moan and willows weep,
 You hear her streams repine.
 The tower, in different ages rose,
 Their various architecture shows
 The builders' various hands;
 A mighty mass, that could oppose
 When deadliest hatred fired its foes,
 The vengeful Douglas bands

XI

Crichtoun! though now thy mazy court
 But joins the lark steep and sheep,
 Thy turret rude and tottered keep

CANTO FOURTH: THE CAMP

While for his royal father's soul
The chanters sung, the bells did toll,
The bishop mass was saying —
For now the year brought round again 310
The day the luckless king was slain —
In Catherine's aisle the monarch knelt,
With sackcloth shirt and iron belt,
And eyes with sorrow streaming;
Around him in their stalls of state
The Thistle's Knight-Companions sate,
Their banners o'er them beaming.
I too was there, and, sooth to tell,
Bedeafened with the jangling knell, 319
Was watching where the sunbeams fell,
Through the stained casement gleam-
ing;
But while I marked what next befell
It seemed as I were dreaming.
Stepped from the crowd a ghostly wight,
In azure gown, with cincture white;
His forehead bald, his head was bare,
Down hung at length his yellow hair. —
Now, mock me not when, good my lord,
I pledge to you my knightly word
That when I saw his placid grace, 330
His simple majesty of face,
His solemn bearing, and his pace
So stately gliding on, —
Seemed to me ne'er did limner paint
So just an image of the saint
Who propped the Virgin in her faint,
The loved Apostle John!

XVII

'He stepped before the monarch's chair,
And stood with rustic plainness there,
And little reverence made; 340
Nor head, nor body, bowed, nor bent,
But on the desk his arm he leant,
And words like these he said,
In a low voice, — but never tone
So thrilled through vein, and nerve, and bone: —
"My mother sent me from afar,
Sir King, to warn thee not to war, —
Woe waits on thine array:
If war thou wilt, of woman fair,
Her witching wiles and wanton snare, 350
James Stuart, doubly warned, beware:
God keep thee as He may!" —
The wondering monarch seemed to seek
For answer, and found none;
And when he raised his head to speak,
The monitor was gone.
The marshal and myself had cast

To stop him as he outward passed;
But, lighter than the whirlwind's blast,
He vanished from our eyes,
Like sunbeam on the billow cast,
That glances but, and dies.'

XVIII

While Lindesay told his marvel strange
The twilight was so pale,
He marked not Marmion's color change
While listening to the tale;
But, after a suspended pause,
The baron spoke: 'Of Nature's laws
So strong I held the force,
That never superhuman cause
Could o'er control their course,
And, three days since, had judged yours
Was but to make your guest your gains
But I have seen, since past the Tweed,
What much has changed my sceptic crew
And made me credit aught.' — He stayed
And seemed to wish his words unsaid,
But, by that strong emotion pressed
Which prompts us to unload our breast
Even when discovery's pain,
To Lindesay did at length unfold
The tale his village host had told,
At Gifford, to his train.
Nought of the Palmer says he there,
And nought of Constance or of Clare;
The thoughts which broke his sleep he sees
To mention but as feverish dreams.

XLX

'In vain,' said he, 'to rest I spread
My burning limbs, and couched my head
Fantastic thoughts returned,
And, by their wild dominion led,
My heart within me burned.
So sore was the delirious goad,
I took my steed and forth I rode,
And, as the moon shone bright and cold
Soon reached the camp upon the wold.
The southern entrance I passed through
And halted, and my bugle blew.
Methought an answer met my ear, —
Yet was the blast so low and drear,
So hollow, and so faintly blown,
It might be echo of my own.

XX

'Thus judging, for a little space
I listened ere I left the place,
But scarce could trust my eyes,
Nor yet can think they serve me true,

When sudden in the ring I view,
In form distinct of shape and hue,
A mounted champion rise. —
I've fought, Lord-Lion, many a day, 410
In single fight and mixed affray,
And ever, I myself may say,
Have borne me as a knight;
But when this unexpected foe
Seemed starting from the gulf below, —
I care not though the truth I show, —
I trembled with affright;
And as I placed in rest my spear,
My hand so shook for very fear,
I scarce could couch it right. 420

XXI

'Why need my tongue the issue tell?
We ran our course, — my charger fell; —
What could he 'gainst the shock of hell?
I rolled upon the plain.
High o'er my head with threatening hand
The spectre shook his naked brand, —
Yet did the worst remain:
My dazzled eyes I upward cast, —
Not opening hell itself could blast
Their sight like what I saw! 430
Full on his face the moonbeam strook! —
A face could never be mistook!
I knew the stern vindictive look,
And held my breath for awe.
I saw the face of one who, fled
To foreign climes, has long been dead, —
I well believe the last;
For ne'er from visor raised did stare
A human warrior with a glare
So grimly and so ghast. 440
Thrice o'er my head he shook the blade;
But when to good Saint George I
prayed, —
The first time e'er I asked his aid, —
He plunged it in the sheath,
And, on his courser mounting light,
He seemed to vanish from my sight:
The moonbeam drooped, and deepest night
Sunk down upon the heath. —
'T were long to tell what cause I have
To know his face that met me there, 450
Called by his hatred from the grave
To cumber upper air:
Dead or alive, good cause had he
To be my mortal enemy.'

XXII

Marvelled Sir David of the Mount;
Then, learned in story, gan recount

Such chance had happed of old,
When once, near Norham, there did fight
A spectre full of fiendish might,
In likeness of a Scottish knight, 460
With Brian Bulmer bold,
And trained him nigh to disallow
The aid of his baptismal vow.
'And such a phantom, too, 't is said,
With Highland broadsword, large, and plaid,
And fingers red with gore,
Is seen in Rothiemurcus glade,
Or where the sable pine-trees shade
Dark Tomantoul, and Auchnaslaid,
Dromouchty, or Glenmore. 470
And yet, whate'er such legends say
Of warlike demon, ghest, or fay,
On mountain, moor, or plain,
Spotless in faith, in bosom bold,
True son of chivalry should hold
'These midnight terrors vain;
For seldom have such spirits power
To harm, save in the evil hour
When guilt we meditate within
Or harbor unrepented sin.' — 480
Lord Marmion turned him half aside,
And twice to clear his voice he tried,
'Then pressed Sir David's hand, —
But nought, at length, in answer said;
And hero their further converse stayed,
Each ordering that his band
Should bowne them with the rising day,
To Scotland's camp to take their way, —
Such was the king's command.

XXIII

Early they took Dun-Edin's road, 490
And I could trace each step they trode:
Hill, brook, nor dell, nor rock, nor stone,
Lies on the path to me unknown.
Much might it boast of storied lore;
But, passing such digression o'er,
Suffice it that their route was laid
Across the furzy hills of Braid.
They passed the glen and scanty rill,
And climbed the opposing bank, until
They gained the top of Blackford Hill. 500

XXIV

Blackford! on whose uncultured breast,
Among the broom and thorn and whin,
A truant-boy, I sought the nest,
Or listed, as I lay at rest,
While rose on breezes thin
The murmur of the city crowd.

And, from his steeple jangling loud,
 Saint Giles's mingling din.
 Now, from the summit to the plain,
 Waves all the hill with yellow grain; 510
 And o'er the landscape as I look,
 Nought do I see unchanged remain,
 Save the rude cliffs and chiming brook.
 To me they make a heavy moan
 Of early friendships past and gone.

XXV

But different far the change has been,
 Since Marmion from the crown
 Of Blackford saw that martial scene
 Upon the bent so brown:
 Thousand pavilions, white as snow, 520
 Spread all the Borough-moor below,
 Upland, and dale, and down.
 A thousand did I say? I ween,
 Thousands on thousands there were seen,
 That checkered all the heath between
 The streamlet and the town,
 In crossing ranks extending far,
 Forming a camp irregular;
 Oft giving way where still there stood
 Some relics of the old oak wood, 530
 That darkly huge did intervene
 And tamed the glaring white with green:
 In these extended lines there lay
 A martial kingdom's vast array.

XXVI

For from Hebudes, dark with rain,
 To eastern Lodon's fertile plain,
 And from the southern Redswire edge
 To furthest Rosse's rocky ledge,
 From west to east, from south to north, 540
 Scotland sent all her warriors forth.
 Marmion might hear the mingled hum
 Of myriads up the mountain come, —
 The horses' tramp and tinkling clank,
 Where chiefs reviewed their vassal rank,
 And charger's shrilling neigh, —
 And see the shifting lines advance, While frequent flashed from shield and lance
 The sun's reflected ray.

XXVII

Thin curling in the morning air,
 The wreaths of failing smoke declare 550
 Embers now the brands decayed.
 Where the night-watch their fires had made.
 A slow, slow rolling on the plain,

Full many a baggage-cart and wain,
 And dire artillery's clumsy car,
 By sluggish oxen tugged to war;
 And there were Borthwick's Sisters Seven,
 And culverins which France had given.
 Ill-omened gift! the guns remain
 The conqueror's spoil on Flodden plain. 560

XXVIII

Nor marked they less where in the air
 A thousand streamers flaunted fair;
 Various in shape, device, and hue,
 Green, sanguine, purple, red, and blue,
 Broad, narrow, swallow-tailed, and square,
 Scroll, pennon, pencil, baidrol, there
 O'er the pavilions flew.
 Highest and midmost, was descried
 The royal banner floating wide;
 The staff, a pine-tree, strong and straight, 570
 Pitched deeply in a massive stone,
 Which still in memory is shown,
 Yet bent beneath the standard's weight,
 Whene'er the western wind unrolled
 With toil the huge and cumbrous
 fold,
 And gave to view the dazzling field,
 Where in proud Scotland's royal shield
 The ruddy lion ramped in gold.

XXIX

Lord Marmion viewed the landscape
 bright,
 He viewed it with a chief's delight, 580
 Until within him burned his heart,
 And lightning from his eye did part,
 As on the battle-day;
 Such glance did falcon never dart
 When stooping on his prey.
 'Oh! well, Lord-Lion, hast thou said,
 Thy king from warfare to dissuade
 Were but a vain essay;
 For, by Saint George, were that host mine,
 Not power infernal nor divine 590
 Should once to peace my soul incline,
 Till I had dimmed their armor's shine
 In glorious battle-fray!'
 Answered the bard, of milder mood:
 'Fair is the sight, — and yet 't were good
 That kings would think withal,
 When peace and wealth their land has blessed,
 'T is better to sit still at rest
 Than rise, perchance to fall.'

XXX

Still on the spot Lord Marmion stayed, 600
 For fainter scene he ne'er surveyed.
 When sat with the martial show
 That peopled all the plain below,
 The wandering eye could o'er it go,
 And mark the distant city glow
 With gloomy splendor red;

For on the smoke-wreaths, huge and slow,
 That round her sable turrets flow,

The morning beams were shed,
 And tinged them with a lustre proud, 610
 Like that which streaks a thunder-cloud.
 Such dusky grandeur clothed the height
 Where the huge castle holds its state,
 And all the steep slope down,
 Whose ridgy back heaves to the sky,
 Fled deep and massy, close and high,

Mine own romantic town I
 But northward far, with purer blaze,
 On Ochil mountains fell the rays,
 And as each heathy top they kissed, 620
 It gleamed a purple amethyst.

Yonder the shores of Fife you saw,
 Here Preston-Bay and Berwick-Law;

And, broad between them rolled,
 The gallant Firth the eye might note,
 Whose islands on its bosom float,
 Like emeralds chased in gold.

Fitz-Eustace's heart felt closely pent;
 As if to give his rapture vent,
 The spur he to his charger lent, 630
 And raised his bridle hand,
 And making demi-volt in air,
 Cried, 'Where's the coward that would not dare

To fight for such a land!'

The Lindesay smiled his joy to see,
 Nor Marmion's frown repressed his glee.

XXXI

Thus while they looked, a flourish proud,
 Where mingled trump, and clarion loud,

And life, and kettle-drum,
 And sackbut deep, and psaltery, 640
 And war-pipe with discordant cry,
 And cymbal clattering to the sky,
 Making wild music bold and high.

Did up the mountain come;

The whilst the bells with distant chime
 Merrily tolled the hour of prime,

And thus the Lindesay spoke:

'Thus clamor still the war-notes when
 The king to mass his way has ta'en,
 Or to Saint Catherine's of Sicune, 650

Or Chapel of Saint Rocque.

To you they speak of martial fame,
 But me remind of peaceful game,

When blither was their cheer,
 Thrilling in Falkland-woods the air,
 In signal none his steed should spare.
 But strive which foremost might repair
 To the downfall of the deer.

XXXII

'Nor less,' he said, 'when looking forth
 I view yon Empress of the North 660

Sit on her hilly throne,
 Her palace's imperial towers,
 Her castle, proof to hostile powers,
 Her stately halls and holy towers—

Nor less,' he said, 'I mean
 To think what woe mischance may bring,
 And how these merry bells may ring
 The death-dirge of our gallant king,
 Or with their larum call

The burghers forth to watch and ward, 670
 'Gainst Southern sack and fires to guard
 Dun-Edin's leaguered wall.—

But not for my presaging thought,
 Dream conquest sure or cheaply bought!

Lord Marmion, I say nay:
 God is the guider of the field,
 He breaks the champion's spear and shield;

But thou thyself shalt say,
 When joins yon host in deadly stowre, 675
 That England's dames must weep in bower,
 Her monks the death-mass sing;
 For never saw'st thou such a power
 Led on by such a king.'

And now, down winding to the plain,
 The barriers of the camp they gain,

And there they made a stay.—
 There stays the Minstrel, till he fling
 His hand o'er every Border string,

And fit his harp the pomp to sing
 Of Scotland's ancient court and king, 680
 In the succeeding lay.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO
FIFTH

TO GEORGE ELLIS, ESQ.

Edinburgh

WHEN dark December glooms the day,
 And takes our autumn joys away;
 When short and scant the sunbeam throws
 Upon the weary waste of snows

A cold and profitless regard,
 Like patron on a needy bard;
 When sylvan occupation's done,
 And o'er the chimney rests the gun,
 And hang in idle trophy near,
 The game-pouch, fishing-rod, and spear; 10
 When wiry terrier, rough and grim,
 And greyhound, with his length of limb,
 And pointer, now employed no more,
 Cumber our parlor's narrow floor;
 When in his stall the impatient steed
 Is long condemned to rest and feed;
 When from our snow-encircled home
 Scarce cares the hardest step to roam,
 Since path is none, save that to bring
 The needful water from the spring; 20
 When wrinkled news-page, thrice conned
 o'er,

Beguiles the dreary hour no more,
 And darkling politician, crossed,
 Inveighs against the lingering post,
 And answering housewife sore complains
 Of carriers' snow-impaired wains; —
 When such the country-cheer, I come
 Well pleased to seek our city home;
 For converse and for books to change
 The forest's melancholy range, 30
 And welcome with renewed delight
 The busy day and social night.

Not here need my desponding rhyme
 Lament the ravages of time,
 As erst by Newark's riven towers,
 And Ettrick stripped of forest bowers.
 True, Caledonia's Queen is changed
 Since on her dusky summit ranged,
 Within its steepy limits pent
 By bulwark, line, and battlement, 40
 And flanking towers, and lake flood,
 Guarded and garrisoned she stood,
 Denying entrance or resort
 Save at each tall embattled port,
 Above whose arch, suspended, hung
 Portcullis spiked with iron prong.
 That long is gone, — but not so long
 Since, early closed and opening late,
 Jealous revolved the studded gate,
 Whose task, from eve to morning tide, 50
 A wicket churlishly supplied.
 Stern then and steel-girt was thy brow,
 Dun-Edin! Oh, how altered now,
 When safe amid thy mountain court
 Thou sitt'st, like empress at her sport,
 And liberal, unconfined, and free,
 Flinging thy white arms to the sea,

For thy dark cloud, with umbered lower,
 That hung o'er cliff and lake and tower,
 Thou gleam'st against the western ray 60
 Ten thousand lines of brighter day!

Not she, the championess of old,
 In Spenser's magic tale enrolled,
 She for the charmed spear renowned,
 Which forced each knight to kiss the
 ground, —
 Not she more changed, when, placed at
 rest,

What time she was Malbecco's guest,
 She gave to flow her maiden vest;
 When, from the corselet's grasp relieved,
 Free to the sight her bosom heaved: 70
 Sweet was her blue eye's modest smile,
 Erst hidden by the aventail,
 And down her shoulders graceful rolled
 Her locks profuse of paly gold.
 They who whilom in midnight fight
 Had marvelled at her matchless might,
 No less her maiden charms approved,
 But looking liked, and liking loved.
 The sight could jealous pangs beguile,
 And charm Malbecco's cares awhile; 80
 And he, the wandering Squire of Dames,
 Forgot his Columbella's claims,
 And passion, erst unknown, could gain
 The breast of blunt Sir Satyrane;
 Nor durst light Paridell advance,
 Bold as he was, a looser glance.
 She charmed, at once, and tamed the heart,
 Incomparable Britomart!

So thou, fair City! disarrayed
 Of battled wall and rampart's aid, 90
 As stately seem'st, but lovelier far
 Than in that panoply of war.
 Nor deem that from thy fenceless throne
 Strength and security are flown;
 Still as of yore, Queen of the North!
 Still canst thou send thy children forth.
 Ne'er readier at alarm-bell's call
 Thy burghers rose to man thy wall
 Than now, in danger, shall be thine,
 Thy dauntless voluntary line; 100
 For fosse and turret proud to stand,
 Their breasts the bulwarks of the land.
 Thy thousands, trained to martial toil,
 Full red would stain their native soil,
 Ere from thy mural crown there fell
 The slightest knosp or pinnacle.
 And if it come, as come it may,
 Dun-Edin! that eventful day,

Renowned for hospitable deed, 109
 That virtue much with Heaven may plead,
 In patriarchal times whose care
 Descending angels deigned to share;
 That claim may wrestle blessings down
 On those who fight for the Good Town, Destined in every age to be
 Refuge of injured royalty;
 Since first, when conquering York arose,
 To Henry meek she gave repose,
 Till late, with wonder, grief, and awe,
 Great Bourbon's relics sad she saw. 120

Truce to these thoughts! — for, as they rise,
 How gladly I avert mine eyes,
 Bodings, or true or false, to change
 For Fiction's fair romantic range,
 Or for tradition's dubious light,
 That bovers 'twixt the day and night:
 Dazzling alternately and dim,
 Her wavering lamp I'd rather trim,
 Knights, squires, and lovely dames to see.
 Creation of my fantasy, 130
 Than gaze abroad on reeky fen,
 And make of mists invading men. —
 Who loves not more the night of June
 Than dull December's gloomy noon?
 The moonlight than the fog of frost?
 And can we say which cheats the most?

But who shall teach my harp to gain
 A sound of the romantic strain
 Whose Anglo-Norman tones whilere
 Could win the royal Henry's ear, 140
 Famed Beaucerk called, for that he loved
 The minstrel and his lay approved?
 Who shall these lingering notes redeem,
 Decaying on Oblivion's stream;
 Such notes as from the Breton tongue
 Marie translated, Blondel sung? —
 Oh! born Time's ravage to repair,
 And make the dying Muse thy care;
 Who, when his scythe her hoary foe
 Was poisoning for the final blow, 150
 The weapon from his hand could ring,
 And break his glass and shear his wing,
 And bid, reviving in his strain,
 The gentle poet live again;
 Thou, who canst give to lightest lay
 An unpedantic moral gay,
 Nor less the dullest theme bid fit
 On wings of unexpected wit;
 In letters as in life approved,
 Example honored and beloved, — 160

Dear ELLIS! to the bard impart
 A lesson of thy magic art,
 To win at once the head and heart, —
 At once to charm, instruct, and mend,
 My guide, my pattern, and my friend!

Such minstrel lesson to bestow
 He long thy pleasing task, — but, oh!
 No more by thy example teach
 What few can practise, all can preach, —
 With even patience to endure 170
 Lingered disease and painful cure,
 And boast affliction's pangs subdued
 By mild and manly fortitude.
 Enough, the lesson has been given:
 Forbid the repetition, Heaven!

Come listen, then! for thou hast known
 And loved the Minstrel's varying tone,
 Who, like his Border sires of old,
 Waked a wild measure rude and bold,
 Till Windsor's oaks and Ascot plain 180
 With wonder heard the Northern strain.
 Come listen! bold in thy applause,
 The bard shall scorn pedantic laws;
 And, as the ancient art could stain
 Achievements on the storied pane,
 Irregularly traced and planned,
 But yet so glowing and so grand,
 So shall he strive, in changeable hue,
 Field, feast, and combat to renew,
 And loves, and arms, and harpers' glee, 190
 And all the pomp of chivalry.

CANTO FIFTH

THE COURT

I

THE train has left the hills of Braid;
 The barrier guard have open made —
 So Lindesay bade — the palisade
 That closed the tented ground;
 Their men the warders backward drew,
 And carried pikes as they rode through
 Into its ample bound.
 Fast ran the Scottish warriors there,
 Upon the Southern band to stare,
 And envy with their wonder rose, 20
 To see such well-appointed foes;
 Such length of shafts, such mighty bows,
 So huge that many simply thought
 But for a vaunt such weapons wrought,
 And little deemed their force to feel

Through links of mail and plates of steel
When, rattling upon Flodden vale,
The cloth-yard arrows flew like hail.

II

Nor less did Marmion's skilful view
Glance every line and squadron through, 20
And much he marvelled one small land
Could marshal forth such various band;

For men-at-arms were here,
Heavily sheathed in mail and plate,
Like iron towers for strength and weight,
On Flemish steeds of bone and height,
With battle-axe and spear.

Young knights and squires, a lighter
train,

Practised their chargers on the plain,
By aid of leg, of hand, and rein, 30

Each warlike feat to show,
To pass, to wheel, the croupe to gain,
And high curvet, that not in vain
The sword-sway might descend amain
On foeman's casque below.

He saw the hardy burghers there

March armed on foot with faces bare,

For visor they wore none,
Nor waving plume, nor crest of knight;
But burished were their corselets bright, 40
Their brigantines and gorgets light
Like very silver shone.

Long pikes they had for standing fight,

Two-handed swords they wore,
And many wielded mace of weight,
And bucklers bright they bore.

III

On foot the yeoman too, but dressed
In his steel-jack, a swartby vest,

With iron quilted well;
Each at his back — a slender store — 50
His forty days' provision bore,
As feudal statutes tell.

His arms were halbert, axe, or spear,
A crossbow there, a hagbut here,
A dagger-knife, and brand.

Sober he seemed and sad of cheer,
As loath to leave his cottage dear

And march to foreign strand,
Or mousing who would guide his steer
To fill the fallow land 60

Yet down not in his thoughtful eye
Did aught of dastard terror lie;

More dreadful far his ire
Than theirs who, seeing danger's name,
In eager mood to battle came.

Their valor like light straw on flame,
A fierce but fading fire.

IV

Not so the Borderer: — bred to war,
He knew the battle's din afar,

And joyed to hear it swell. 70
His peaceful day was slothful ease;
Nor harp nor pipe his ear could please
Like the loud slogan yell.

On active steed, with lance and blade,
The light-armed prickler plied his trade, —
Let nobles fight for fame;

Let vassals follow where they lead,
Burghers, to guard their townships, bleed,
But war 's the Borderers' game.

Their gain, their glory, their delight, 80
To sleep the day, maraud the night,
O'er mountain, moss, and moor;

Joyful to fight they took their way,
Searce caring who might win the day,
Their booty was secure.

These, as Lord Marmion's train passed by,
Looked on at first with careless eye,
Nor marvelled aught, well taught to know
The form and force of English bow.

But when they saw the lord arrayed 90
In splendid arms and rich brocade,
Each Borderer to his kinsman said, —

'Hist, Ringan! sweet thou there!
Canst guess which road they'll homeward ride?

Oh! could we but on Border side,
By Eusdale glen, or Liddell's tide,

Beset a prize so fair!
That fangless Lion, too, their guide.

Might chance to lose his glistening hide;
Brown Maudlin of that doublet pied 100
Could make a kirtle rare.'

V

Next, Marmion marked the Celtic race,
Of different language, form, and face,

A various race of man;
Just then the chiefs their tribes arrayed,
And wild and garish semblance made.

The checkered trows and belted plaid,
And varying notes the war-pipes brayed
To every varying clan.

Wild through their red or sable hair 110
Looked out their eyes with savage stare
On Marmion as he passed;

Their legs above the knee were bare;
Their frame was slender, short, and spare,
And hardened to the blast.

Of taller race, the clarks they own
 Were by the eagle's plumage known.
 The hunted red-deer's undressed hide
 From many butchers well supplied;
 The graceful trout decked their board; in Buns from their shoulders hung the plaid;
 A tresser of sumptuous length,
 A dagger proved for edge and strength,
 A shielded target they wore,
 And quivers, bows, and shafts, — but, oh! I Thought was the shaft and weak the bow
 To that which England bore.
 The lakes-men, carried at their backs
 The ancient Danish battle-axe.
 They raised a wild and wailing cry, 130
 As with his guide rode Marmion by.
 Loud were their clattering tongues, as when
 The clanging sea-fowl leave the fen,
 And, with their wings discordant mixed,
 Grumbled and yelled the pines intwin.

VI

Thus through the Scottish camp they
 passed,
 And reached the city gate at last,
 Where all around, a wakeful guard,
 Armed burghers kept their watch and ward.
 Well had they cause of jealous fear, 140
 When lay encamped in field so near
 The Borderer and the Mountaineer.
 As through the bustling streets they go,
 All was alive with martial show;
 At every turn with clinking clang
 The armorer's anvil clashed and rung,
 Or toiled the awastly smith to wheel
 The bar that arms the charger's heel,
 Or use of falchion to the side
 Of jarring grindstone was applied. 150
 Page, groom, and squire, with hurrying pace,
 Through street and lane and market-place,
 Bore lance or casque or sword;
 While burghers, with important face,
 Described each new-come lord,
 Discussed his lineage, told his name,
 His following, and his warlike fame.
 The Lion led to lodging meet,
 Which high o'erlooked the crowded street;
 There must the baron rest 160
 Till past the hour of vesper tide,
 And then to Holy-Rood must ride, —
 Such was the king's behest.
 Meanwhile the Lion's care assigns

A banquet rich and costly wines
 To Marmion and his train;
 And when the appointed hour succeeded,
 The baron dons his peaceful weeds,
 And following Lindsey as he leads,
 The palace halls they gain. 170

VII

Old Holy-Rood rang merrily
 That night with wassail, mirth, and glee:
 King James within her princely bower
 Feasted the chiefs of Scotland's power,
 Summoned to spend the parting hour;
 For he had charged that his array Should southward march by break of
 day.
 Well loved that splendid monarch aye
 The banquet and the song,
 By day the tourney, and by night 180
 The merry dance, traced fast and light,
 The maskers quaint, the pageant bright,
 The revel loud and long.
 This feast outshone his banquets past;
 It was his blithest — and his last.
 The dazzling lamps from gallery gay
 Cast on the court a dancing ray;
 Here to the harp did minstrels sing,
 There ladies touched a softer string;
 With long-eared cap and motley vest, 190
 The licensed fool retailed his jest;
 His magic tricks the juggler plied;
 At dice and draughts the gallants vied;
 While some, in close recess apart,
 Courted the ladies of their heart,
 Nor courted them in vain;
 For often in the parting hour
 Victorious Love asserts his power
 O'er coldness and disdain;
 And flinty is her heart can view 200
 To battle march a lover true —
 Can bear, perchance, his last adieu,
 Nor own her share of pain.

VIII

Through this mixed crowd of glee and
 game
 The king to greet Lord Marmion came,
 While, reverent, all made room.
 An easy task it was, I trow,
 King James's manly form to know,
 Although, his courtesy to show,
 He doffed to Marmion bending low 210
 His brodered cap and plume.
 For royal were his garb and mien:

His cloak of crimson velvet piled,
 Trimmed with the fur of marten wild,
 His vest of changeful satin sheen,
 The dazzled eye beguiled;
 His gorgeous collar hung adown,
 Wrought with the badge of Scotland's crown,
 The thistle brave of old renown;
 His trusty blade, Toledo right, 220
 Descended from a baldrick bright;
 White were his buskins, on the heel
 His spurs inlaid of gold and steel;
 His bonnet, all of crimson fair,
 Was buttoned with a ruby rare:
 And Marmion deemed he ne'er had seen
 A prince of such a noble mien.

IX

The monarch's form was middle size,
 For feat of strength or exercise
 Shaped in proportion fair; 230
 And hazel was his eagle eye,
 And Auburn of the darkest dye
 His short curled beard and hair.
 Light was his footstep in the dance,
 And firm his stirrup in the lists;
 And, oh! he had that merry glance
 That seldom lady's heart resists.
 Lightly from fair to fair he flew,
 And loved to plead, lament, and sue, —
 Suit lightly won and short-lived pain, 240
 For monarchs seldom sigh in vain.
 I said he joyed in banquet bower;
 But, mid his mirth, 't was often strange
 How suddenly his cheer would change,
 His look o'ercast and lower,
 If in a sudden turn he felt
 The pressure of his iron belt,
 That bound his breast in penance pain,
 In memory of his father slain.
 Even so 't was strange how evermore, 250
 Soon as the passing pang was o'er,
 Forward he rushed with double glee
 Into the stream of revelry.
 Thus dim-seen object of affright
 Startles the courser in his flight,
 And half he halts, half springs aside,
 But feels the quickening spur applied,
 And, straining on the tightened rein,
 Scours doubly swift o'er hill and plain.

X

O'er James's heart, the courtiers say, 260
 Sir Hugh the Heron's wife held sway;
 To Scotland's court she came,

To be a hostage for her lord,
 Who Cessford's gallant heart had gored,
 And with the king to make accord
 Had sent his lovely dame.
 Nor to that lady free alone
 Did the gay king allegiance own;
 For the fair Queen of France
 Sent him a turquoise ring and glove, 270
 And charged him, as her knight and love,
 For her to break a lance,
 And strike three strokes with Scottish
 brand,
 And march three miles on Southron land
 And bid the banners of his band
 In English breezes dance.
 And thus for France's queen he drest
 His manly limbs in mailed vest,
 And thus admitted English fair
 His inmost councils still to share, 280
 And thus for both he madly planned
 The ruin of himself and land!
 And yet, the sooth to tell,
 Nor England's fair nor France's queen
 Were worth one pearl-drop, bright and
 sheen,
 From Margaret's eyes that fell, —
 His own Queen Margaret, who in Lith gow's bower
 All lonely sat and wept the weary hour.

XI

The queen sits lone in Lithgow pile,
 And weeps the weary day, 290
 The war against her native soil,
 Her monarch's risk in battle broil. —
 And in gay Holy-Rood the while Dame Heron rises with a smile
 Upon the harp to play.
 Fair was her rounded arm, as o'er
 The strings her fingers flew;
 And as she touched and tuned them all,
 Ever her bosom's rise and fall
 Was plainer given to view; 300
 For, all for heat, was laid aside
 Her wimple, and her hood untied.
 And first she pitched her voice to sing,
 Then glanced her dark eye on the king,
 And then around the silent ring.
 And laughed, and blushed, and oft did say
 Her pretty oath, by yea and nay,
 She could not, would not, durst not play!
 At length, upon the harp, with glee,
 Mingled with arch simplicity, 310
 A soft yet lively air she rung,
 While thus the wily lady sung: —

XII

LOCHINVAR

LADY HERON'S SONG

Oh! young Lochinvar is come out of the west,
Through all the wide Border his steed was the best;
And save his good broadsword he weapons had none,
He rode all unarmed and he rode all alone.
So faithful in love and so dauntless in war,
There never was knight like the young Lochinvar.

He stayed not for brake and he stopped not for stone,
He swam the Eske river where ford there was none;
But ere he alighted at Netherby gate
The bride had consented, the gallant came late:
For a laggard in love and a dastard in war
Was to wed the fair Ellen of brave Lochinvar.

So boldly he entered the Netherby Hall,
Among bridesmen, and kinsmen, and brothers, and all;
Then spoke the bride's father, his hand on his sword, —
For the poor craven bridegroom said never a word, —
'Oh! come ye in peace here, or come ye in war,
Or to dance at our bridal, young Lord Lochinvar?' —

'I long wooed your daughter, my suit you denied;
Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its tide —
And now am I come, with this lost love of mine,
To lead but one measure, drink one cup of wine.
There are maidens in Scotland more lovely by far,
That would gladly be bride to the young Lochinvar.'

The bride kissed the goblet; the knight took it up,
He quaffed off the wine, and he threw down the cup.
She looked down to blush, and she looked up to sigh,
With a smile on her lips and a tear in her eye.
He took her soft hand ere her mother could bar, —
'Now tread we a measure!' said young Lochinvar.

So stately his form, and so lovely her face,
That never a hall such a galliard did grace;
While her mother did fret, and her father did fume,
And the bridegroom stood dangling his bonnet and plume;
And the bride-maidens whispered, 'T were better by far
To have matched our fair cousin with young Lochinvar.'

One touch to her hand and one word in her ear,
When they reached the hall-door, and the charger stood near;
So light to the croupe the fair lady he swung,
So light to the saddle before her he sprang!
'She is won! we are gone, over bank, bush, and scaur;
They'll have fleet steeds that follow,' quoth young Lochinvar.

There was mounting 'mong Græmes of the Netherby clan;
Forsters, Fenwicks, and Musgraves, they rode and they ran;
There was racing and chasing on Cannobie Lee,
But the lost bride of Netherby ne'er did they see.
So daring in love and so dauntless in war,
Have ye e'er heard of gallant like young Lochinvar?

XIII

The monarch o'er the siren hung,
And beat the measure as she sung;
And, pressing closer and more near,

He whispered praises in her ear.
In loud applause the courtiers vied,
And ladies winked and spoke aside.
The witching dame to Marmion threw
A glance, where seemed to reign
The pride that claims applauses due,
And of her royal conquest too

370

A real or feigned disdain:
Familiar was the look, and told
Marmion and she were friends of old.
The king observed their meeting eyes
With something like displeased surprise;
For monarchs ill can rivals brook,
Even in a word, or smile, or look.
Straight took he forth the parchment

broad

Which Marmion's high commission
showed:

'Our Borders sacked by many a raid, 380
Our peaceful liege-men robbed,' he said,
'On day of truce our warden slain.
Stout Barton killed, his vessels ta'en —
Unworthy were we here to reign,
Should these for vengeance cry in vain;
Our full defiance, hate, and scorn,
Our herald has to Henry borne.'

XIV

He paused, and led where Douglas stood
And with stern eye the pageant viewed;
I mean that Douglas, sixth of yore, 390
Who coronet of Angus bore,
And, when his blood and heart were high,
Did the third James in camp defy,
And all his minions led to die

On Lauder's dreary flat.

Princes and favorites long grew tame,
And trembled at the homely name

Of Archibald Bell-the-Cat;

The same who left the dusky vale 400
Of Hermitage in Liddisdale,

Its dungeons and its towers,

Where Bothwell's turrets brave the air,
And Bothwell bank is blooming fair,

To fix his princely bowers.

Though now in age he had laid down
His armor for the peaceful gown,

And for a staff his brand,

Yet often would flash forth the fire
That could in youth a monarch's ire

And minion's pride withstand;

410

And even that day at council board,

Unapt to soothe his sovereign's mood,
Not the war had Angus stood,

led his royal lord.

XV

His giant-form, like ruined tower,
Though fallen its muscles' brawny vaunt,
Huge-boned, and tall, and grim, and gaunt.

Seemed o'er the gaudy scene to lower;
His locks and beard in silver grew,
His eyebrows kept their sable hue. 420

Near Douglas when the monarch stood,
His bitter speech he thus pursued:

'Lord Marmion, since these letters say
That in the North you needs must stay

While slightest hopes of peace remain,
Uncourteous speech it were and stern

To say — Return to Lindisfarne,

Until my herald come again.

Then rest you in Tantallon hold;

Your host shall be the Douglas bold, — 430

A chief unlike his sires of old.

He wears their motto on his blade,
Their blazon o'er his towers displayed,

Yet loves his sovereign to oppose
More than to face his country's foes.

And, I bethink me, by Saint Stephen,

But e'en this morn to me was given

A prize, the first fruits of the war,

Ta'en by a galley from Dunbar,

A bevy of the maids of heaven. 440

Under your guard these holy maids

Shall safe return to cloister shades,

And, while they at Tantallon stay,

Requiem for Cochran's soul may say.'

And with the slaughtered favorite's name

Across the monarch's brow there came

A cloud of ire, remorse, and shame.

XVI

In answer nought could Angus speak,

His proud heart swelled well-nigh to break;

He turned aside, and down his cheek 450

A burning tear there stole.

His hand the monarch sudden took,

That sight his kind heart could not brook:

'Now, by the Bruce's soul,

Angus, my hasty speech forgive!

For sure as doth his spirit live,

As he said of the Douglas old,

I well may say of you, —

That never king did subject hold,

In speech more free, in war more bold, 460

More tender and more true;

Forgive me, Douglas, once again.' —

And, while the king his hand did strain,

The old man's tears fell down like rain.

To seize the moment Marmion tried,

And whispered to the king aside:
 'Oh! let such tears unwonted plead
 For respite short from dubious deed!
 A child will weep a bramble's smart,
 A maid to see her sparrow part, 470
 A stripling for a woman's heart;
 But woe awaits a country when
 She sees the tears of bearded men.
 Then, oh! what omen, dark and high,
 When Douglas wets his manly eye!'

XVII

Displeased was James that stranger viewed
 And tampered with his changing mood.
 'Laugh those that can, weep those that may,'

Thus did the fiery monarch say,
 'Southward I march by break of day; 480
 And if within Tantallon strong
 The good Lord Marmion tarries long,
 Perchance our meeting next may fall
 At Tamworth in his castle-hall.' —
 The haughty Marmion felt the taunt,
 And answered grave the royal vaunt:
 'Much honored were my humble home,
 If in its halls King James should come;
 But Nottingham has archers good,
 And Yorkshire men are stern of mood, 490
 Northumbrian pricklers wild and rude.
 On Derby Hills the paths are steep,
 In Ouse and Tyne the fords are deep;
 And many a banner will be torn,
 And many a knight to earth be borne,
 And many a sheaf of arrows spent,
 Ere Scotland's king shall cross the Trent:
 Yet pause, brave prince, while yet you
 may!'

The monarch lightly turned away,
 And to his nobles loud did call, 500
 'Lords, to the dance, — a ball! a hall!
 Himself his cloak and sword flung by,
 And led Dame Heron gallantly;
 And minstrels, at the royal order,
 Rung out 'Blue Bonnets o'er the Border.'

XVIII

Leave we these revels now to tell
 What to Saint Hilda's maids befell,
 Whose galley, as they sailed again
 To Whitby, by a Scot was ta'en.
 Now at Dun-Edin did they bide 510
 Till James should of their fate decide,
 And soon by his command
 Were gently summoned to prepare
 To journey under Marmion's care,

As escort honored, safe, and fair,
 Again to English land.
 The abbess told her chaplet o'er,
 Nor knew which Saint she should implore;
 For, when she thought of Constance, sore
 She feared Lord Marmion's mood. 520
 And judge what Clara must have felt!
 The sword that hung in Marmion's belt
 Had drunk De Wilton's blood.
 Unwittingly King James had given,
 As guard to Whitby's shades,
 The man most dreaded under heaven
 By these defenceless maids;
 Yet what petition could avail,
 Or who would listen to the tale
 Of woman, prisoner, and nun, 530
 Mid bustle of a war begun?
 They deemed it hopeless to avoid
 The convoy of their dangerous guide.

XIX

Their lodging, so the king assigned,
 To Marmion's, as their guardian, joined;
 And thus it fell that, passing nigh,
 The Palmer caught the abbess' eye,
 Who warned him by a scroll
 She had a secret to reveal
 That much concerned the Church's weal
 And health of sinner's soul; 540
 And, with deep charge of secrecy,
 She named a place to meet
 Within an open balcony,
 That hung from dizzy pitch and high
 Above the stately street,
 To which, as common to each home,
 At night they might in secret come.

XX

At night in secret there they came,
 The Palmer and the holy dame. 550
 The moon among the clouds rode high,
 And all the city hum was by.
 Upon the street, where late before
 Did din of war and warriors roar,
 You might have heard a pebble fall,
 A beetle hum, a cricket sing,
 An owl flap his boding wing
 On Giles's steeple tall.
 The antique buildings, climbing high,
 Whose Gothic frontlets sought the sky, 560
 Were here wrapt deep in shade;
 There on their brows the moonbeam broke,
 Through the faint wreaths of silvery
 smoke,
 And on the casements played.

And other light was none to see,
 Save torches gliding far,
 Before some chieftain of degree
 Who left the royal revelry
 To bowne him for the war. —
 A solemn scene the abbess chose,
 A solemn hour, her secret to disclose.

570

XXI

'O holy Palmer!' she began, —
 'For sure he must be sainted man,
 Whose blessed feet have trod the ground
 Where the Redeemer's tomb is found, —
 For his dear Church's sake, my tale
 Attend, nor deem of light avail,
 Though I must speak of worldly love, —
 How vain to those who wed above! —
 De Wilton and Lord Marmion wooed 580
 Clara de Clare, of Gloster's blood; —
 Idle it were of Whitby's dame
 To say of that same blood I came; —
 And once, when jealous rage was high,
 Lord Marmion said despitiously,
 Wilton was traitor in his heart,
 And had made league with Martin Swart
 When he came here on Simnel's part,
 And only cowardice did restrain
 His rebel aid on Stokefield's plain, — 590
 And down he threw his glove. The thing
 Was tried, as wont, before the king;
 Where frankly did De Wilton own
 That Swart in Guelders he had known,
 And that between them then there went
 Some scroll of courteous compliment.
 For this he to his castle sent;
 But when his messenger returned,
 Judge how De Wilton's fury burned!
 For in his packet there were laid 600
 Letters that claimed disloyal aid
 And proved King Henry's cause betrayed.
 His fame, thus blighted, in the field
 He strove to clear by spear and shield; —
 To clear his fame in vain he strove,
 For woodroos are His ways above!
 Perchance some form was unobserved,
 Perchance in prayer or faith he swerved,
 Ere low could guiltless champion quail,
 Or how the blessed orical fail? 610

XXII

'His squire, who now De Wilton saw
 As doomed to suffer law,
 Repentant, owned in vain
 That while he had the scrolls in care
 Stranger maiden, passing fair,

Had drenched him with a beverage rare;
 His words no faith could gain.
 With Clare alone he credence won,
 Who, rather than wed Marmion,
 Did to Saint Hilda's shrine repair, 620
 To give our house her livings fair
 And die a vestal votaress there.
 The impulse from the earth was given,
 But bent her to the paths of heaven.
 A purer heart, a lovelier maid,
 Ne'er sheltered her in Whithy's shade,
 No, not since Saxon Edolthed;
 Only one trace of earthly stain,
 That for her lover's loss 630
 She cherishes a sorrow vain,
 And murmurs at the cross, —
 And then her heritings: — it goes
 Along the banks of Tame;
 Deep fields of grain the reaper mows,
 In meadows rich the beifer lows,
 The falconer and huntsman knows
 Its woodlands for the game.
 Shame were it to Saint Hilda dear,
 And I, her humble votaress here, 640
 Should do a deadly sin,
 Her temple spoiled before mine eyes,
 If this false Marmion such a prize
 By my consent should win;
 Yet hath our boisterous monarch sworn
 That Clare shall from our house be torn,
 And grievous cause have I to fear
 Such mandate doth Lord Marmion bear.

XXIII

'Now, prisoner, helpless, and betrayed
 To evil power, I claim thine aid,
 By every step that thou hast trod 650
 To holy shrine and grotto dim,
 By every martyr's tortured limb,
 By angel, saint, and seraphim,
 And by the Church of God!
 For mark: when Wilton was betrayed,
 And with his squire forged letters laid,
 She was, alas! that sinful maid
 By whom the deed was done, —
 Oh! shame and horror to be said!
 She was — a perjured nun! 660
 No clerk in all the land like her
 Traced quaint and varying character.
 Perchance you may a marvel deem,
 That Marinion's paramour —
 For such vile thing she was — should Scheme
 Her lover's nuptial hour;
 But o'er him thus she hoped to gain,

As privy to his honor's stain,
 Illimitable power.
 For this she secretly retained
 Each proof that might the plot reveal,
 Instructions with his hand and seal;
 And thus Saint Hilda deigned,
 Through sinners' perfidy impure,
 Her house's glory to secure
 And Clare's immortal weal.

XXIV

'T were long and needless here to tell
 How to my hand these papers fell;
 With me they must not stay.
 Saint Hilda keep her abbess true!
 Who knows what outrage he might do
 While journeying by the way? —
 O blessed Saint, if e'er again
 I venturous leave thy calm domain,
 To travel or by land or main,
 Deep penance may I pay! —
 Now, saintly Palmer, mark my prayer:
 I give this packet to thy care,
 For thee to stop they will not dare;
 And oh! with cautious speed
 To Wolsey's hand the papers bring,
 That he may show them to the king:
 And for thy well-earned meed,
 Thou holy man, at Whitby's shrine
 A weekly mass shall still be thine
 While priests can sing and read. —
 What wilt thou? — Speak! — For as he took
 The charge a strong emotion shook
 His frame, and ere reply
 They heard a faint yet shrilly tone,
 Like distant clarion feebly blown,
 That on the breeze did die;
 And loud the abbess shrieked in fear,
 'Saint Withold, save us! — What is here!
 Look at yon City Cross!
 See on its battled tower appear
 Phantoms, that scutcheons seem to rear
 And blazoned banners toss!' —

XXV

Dun-Edin's Cross, a pillared stone,
 Rose on a turret octagon; —
 But now is razed that monument,
 Whence royal edict rang,
 And voice of Scotland's law was sent
 In glorious trumpet-clang.
 Oh! be his tomb as lead to lead
 Upon its dull destroyer's head! —
 A minstrel's malison is said. —

Then on its battlements they saw
 A vision, passing Nature's law,
 Strange, wild, and dimly seen;
 Figures that seemed to rise and die,
 Gibber and sign, advance and fly,
 While nought confirmed could ear or eye
 Discern of sound or mien.
 Yet darkly did it seem as there
 Heralds and pursuivants prepare,
 With trumpet sound and blazon fair,
 A summons to proclaim;
 But indistinct the pageant proud,
 As fancy forms of midnight cloud
 When flings the moon upon her shroud
 A wavering tinge of flame;
 It flits, expands, and shifts, till loud,
 From midmost of the spectre crowd,
 This awful summons came: —

XXVI

'Prince, prelate, potentate, and peer,
 Whose names I now shall call,
 Scottish or foreigner, give ear!
 Subjects of him who sent me here,
 At his tribunal to appear
 I summon one and all:
 I cite you by each deadly sin
 That e'er hath soiled your hearts within;
 I cite you by each brutal lust
 That e'er defiled your earthly dust, —
 By wrath, by pride, by fear,
 By each o'er-mastering passion's tone,
 By the dark grave and dying groan!
 When forty days are passed and gone,
 I cite you, at your monarch's throne
 To answer and appear.' —
 Then thundered forth a roll of names: —
 The first was thine, unhappy James!
 Then all thy nobles came;
 Crawford, Glencairn, Montrose, Argyle,
 Ross, Bothwell, Forbes, Lennox, Lyle, —
 Why should I tell their separate style?
 Each chief of birth and fame,
 Of Lowland, Highland, Border, Isle,
 Foredoomed to Flodden's carnage pile,
 Was cited there by name;
 And Marmion, Lord of Fontenaye,
 Of Lutterward, and Serivelbaye;
 De Wilton, erst of Aberley,
 The self-same thundering voice did say. —
 But then another spoke:
 'Thy fatal summons I deny
 And thine infernal lord defy,
 Appealing me to Him on high
 Who burst the sinner's yoke.'

At that dread accent, with a scream,
Parted the pageant like a dream,
The summoner was gone.
Prone on her face the abbess fell,
And fast, and fast, her beads did tell;
Her nuns came, startled by the yell,
And found her there alone.
She marked not, at the scene aghast,
What time or how the Palmer passed.

XXVII

Shift we the scene. — The camp doth move; 780

Dun-Edin's streets are empty now,
Save when, for weal of those they love,
To pray the prayer and vow the vow,
The tottering child, the anxious fair,
The gray-haired sire, with pious care,
To chapels and to shrines repair. —
Where is the Palmer now? and where
The abbess, Marmion, and Clare? —
Bold Douglas! to Tantallon fair

They journey in thy charge: 790
Lord Marmion rode on his right hand,
The Palmer still was with the band;
Angus, like Lindesay, did command
That none should roam at large.
But in that Palmer's altered mien
A wondrous change might now be seen;
Freely he spoke of war,
Of marvels wrought by single hand
When lifted for a native land,
And still looked high, as if he planned 800
Some desperate deed afar.

His courser would he feed and stroke,
And, tucking up his sable frock,
Would first his mettle bold provoke,
Then soothe or quell his pride.
Old Hubert said that never one
He saw, except Lord Marmion,
A steed so fairly ride.

XXVIII

Some half-hour's march behind there came,
By Eustace governed fair, 810
A troop escorting Hilda's dame,
With all her nuns and Clare.
No audience had Lord Marmion sought;
Ever he feared to aggravate
Clara de Clare's suspicious hate;
And safer 't was, he thought,
To wait till, from the nuns removed,
The influence of kinsmen loved,
And suit by Henry's self approved,
Her slow consent had wrought. 820

His was no flickering flame, that dies
Unless when fanned by looks and sighs
And lighted oft at lady's eyes;
He longed to stretch his wide command
O'er luckless Clara's ample land:
Besides, when Wilton with him vied,
Although the pang of humbled pride
The place of jealousy supplied,
Yet conquest, by that meanness won
He almost loathed to think upon, 830
Led him, at times, to hate the cause
Which made him burst through honor's laws.

If e'er he loved, 't was her alone
Who died within that vault of stone.

XXIX

And now, when close at hand they saw
North Berwick's town and lofty Law,
Fitz-Eustace bade them pause awhile
Before a venerable pile

Whose turrets viewed afar
The lofty Bass, the Lambie Isle, 840
The ocean's peace or war.

At tolling of a bell, forth came
The convent's venerable dame,
And prayed Saint Hilda's abbess rest
With her, a loved and honored guest,
Till Douglas should a bark prepare
To waft her back to Whitby fair.
Glad was the abbess, you may guess,
And thanked the Scottish prioress;
And tedious were to tell, I ween, 850
The courteous speech that passed between.

O'erjoyed the nuns their palfreys leave;
But when fair Clara did intend,
Like them, from horseback to descend,
Fitz-Eustace said: 'I grieve,
Fair lady, grieve e'en from my heart,
Such gentle company to part; —

Think not discourtesy,
But lords' commands must be obeyed,
And Marmion and the Douglas said 860
That you must wend with me.

Lord Marmion bath a letter broad,
Which to the Scottish earl he showed,
Commanding that beneath his care
Without delay you shall repair
To your good kinsman, Lord Fitz-Clare.'

XXX

The startled abbess loud exclaimed;
But she at whom the blow was aimed Grew pale as death and cold as lead, —

She deemed she loved her death - divine
land 67

'Hear then, my child!' the abbess said,
'They deem and love their lives my hand,
'In rule alone will armed stand.' —

'Stay, lady mother, stay,'
Fitz-Eustace said, 'the lovely Clare
Will be in Lady Angus' care,
In Scotland while we stay;

And when we move an easy rule
Will bring us to the English side,
Furnish attendance to provide 68

Scotting Clister's heir;
Now think me dreams my noble lord,
By slightest look, or act, or word,
To harass Lady Clare

Her faithful guardian he will be,
For me his slightest courtesy
That e'en to stranger falls,

'Till he shall place her safe and free
Within her kinsman's halls.' 69

He spoke, and blushed with earnest grace;
His faith was painted on his face,
And Clare's worst fear relieved.

The lady abbess loud exclaimed
On Henry, and the Douglas blamed,

Entreated, threatened, grieved,
To martyr, saint, and prophet prayed
Against Lord Marmion inveighed,
And called the prisoners to aid,

To curse with candle, bell, and book.
Her head the grave Cistercian shook: 70

'The Douglas and the king,' she said,
'In their commands will be obeyed;
Believe not, nor dream that harm can fall

The maiden in Tantallon Hall.'

XXXI

The abbess, seeing strife was vain,
Assumed her wonted state again, —
For much of state she had, —

Composed her veil, and raised her head,
And 'Hail,' in solemn voice she said,
'Thy master, bold and bad,' 71

The records of his house turn o'er,
And, when he shall there written see

That one of his own ancestry
Drove the monks forth of Coventry,

Behold his fate explore!
Flourishing in pride of earthly trust,

His charger buried him to the dust,
And by a base plebeian thrust,

He died his hand before.

Good judge Yvris Marmion and me: 72

He is a chief of high degree,
And I a poor rectise,

Yet oft in holy writ we see
Even such weak minister as me

May the oppressor bridle;
For thus, inspired, did Judith slay

The mighty in his sin,
And Jael thus, and Deborah' —

Here Eustace Blount broke in: 73

'Fitz-Eustace, we must march our band;
Saint Anton fire thee! wilt thou stand

All day, with bonnet in thy hand,
To hear the lady preach?

By this good light! if thus we stay,
Lord Marmion for our fond delay

Will sharper sermon teach.
Come, don thy cap and mount thy horse;

The dame must patience take perforce.'

XXXII

'Submit we then to force,' said Clare,
'But let this barbarous lord despair 74

His purposed aim to win;
Let him take living, land, and life,

But to be Marmion's wedded wife
In me were deadly sin:

And if it be the king's decree
That I must find no sanctuary

In that inviolable dome
Where even a homicide might come

And safely rest his head,
Though at its open portals stood, 75

Thirsting to pour forth blood for blood,
The kinsmen of the dead,

Yet one asylum is my own
Against the dreaded hour, —

A low, a silent, and a lone,
Where kings have little power.

One victim is before me there. —
Mother, your blessing, and in prayer

Remember your unhappy Clare!' 76
Loud weeps the abbess, and bestows

Kind blessings many a one;
Weeping and wailing loud arose,

Round patient Clare, the clamorous woe
Of every simple nun.

His eyes the gentle Eustace dried,
And scarce rude Blount the sight could bide

Then took the squire her rein,
And gently led away her steed,

And by each courteous word and deed
To cheer her stroke in vain.

XXXIII

But scant three miles the band had rode,
 When o'er a height they passed,
 And, sudden, close before them showed
 His towers Tantallon vast,
 Broad, massive, high, and stretching far,
 And held impregnable in war.
 On a projecting rock they rose,
 And round three sides the ocean flows.
 The fourth did battled walls enclose
 And double mound and fosse. 980
 By narrow drawbridge, outworks strong,
 Through studded gates, an entrance long,
 To the main court they cross.
 It was a wide and stately square;
 Around were lodgings fit and fair,
 And towers of various form,
 Which on the court projected far
 And broke its lines quadrangular.
 Here was square keep, there turret high,
 Or pinnacle that sought the sky, 990
 Whence oft the warler could desery
 The gathering ocean-storm.

XXXIV

Here did they rest. — The princely care
 Of Douglas why should I declare,
 Or say they met reception fair?
 Or why the tidings say,
 Which varying to Tantallon came,
 By harrying posts or fleetier fame,
 With every varying day?
 And, first, they heard King James had
 won 1000
 Etall, and Wark, and Ford; and then,
 That Norham Castle strong was ta'en.
 At that sore marvelled Marmion,
 And Douglas hoped his monarch's hand
 Would soon subdue Northumberland;
 But whispered news there came,
 That while his host inactive lay,
 And melted by degrees away,
 King James was dallying off the day
 With Heron's wily dame. 1010
 Such acts to chronicles I yield;
 Go seek them there and see:
 Mine is a tale of Flodden Field,
 And not a history. —
 At length they heard the Scottish host
 On that high ridge had made their post
 Which frowns o'er Millfield Plain;
 And that brave Surrey many a band
 Had gathered in the Southern land,
 And marched into Northumberland, 1020
 And camp at Wooler ta'en.

Marmion, like charger in the stall,
 That hears, without, the trumpet-call,
 Began to chafe and swear: —
 'A sorry thing to hide my head
 In castle, like a fearful maid,
 When such a field is near.
 Needs must I see this battle-day;
 Death to my fame if such a fray
 Were fought, and Marmion away! 1030
 The Douglas, too, I wot not why,
 Hath bated of his courtesy;
 No longer in his halls I'll stay:'
 Then bade his band they should array
 For march against the dawning day.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO
SIXTH

TO RICHARD HEBER, ESQ.

Mertoun House, Christmas

HEAP on more wood! — the wind is chill;
 But let it whistle as it will,
 We'll keep our Christmas merry still.
 Each age has deemed the new-born year
 The fittest time for festal cheer:
 Even, heathen yet, the savage Dane
 At Iol more deep the mead did drain,
 High on the beach his galleys drow,
 And feasted all his pirate crew;
 Then in his low and pine-built hall, 10
 Where shields and axes decked the wall,
 They gorged upon the half-dressed steer,
 Caroused in seas of sable beer,
 While round in brutal jest were thrown
 The half-gnawed rib and marrowbone,
 Or listened all in grim delight
 While scalds yelled out the joys of fight.
 Then forth in frenzy would they hie,
 While wildly loose their red locks fly,
 And dancing round the blazing pile, 20
 They make such barbarous mirth the while
 As best might to the mind recall
 The boisterous joys of Odin's hall.

And well our Christian sires of old
 Loved when the year its course had rolled,
 And brought blithe Christmas back again
 With all his hospitable train.
 Domestic and religious rite
 Gave honor to the holy night;
 On Christmas eve the bells were rung, 30
 On Christmas eve the mass was sung:

That only night in all the year
 Saw the stoled priest the chalice rear.
 The damsel donned her kirtle sheen;
 The hall was dressed with holly green;
 Forth to the wood did merry men go,
 To gather in the mistletoe.
 Then opened wide the baron's hall
 To vassal, tenant, serf, and all;
 Power laid his rod of rule aside, 40
 And Ceremony doffed his pride.
 The heir, with roses in his shoes,
 That night might village partner choose;
 The lord, underogating, share
 The vulgar game of 'post and pair.'
 All bailed, with uncontrolled delight
 And general voice, the happy night
 That to the cottage, as the crown,
 Brought tidings of salvation down.

The fire, with well-dried logs supplied, 50
 Went roaring up the chimney wide;
 The huge hall-table's oaken face,
 Scrubbed till it shone, the day to grace,
 Bore then upon its massive board
 No mark to part the squire and lord.
 Then was brought in the lusty brawn
 By old blue-coated serving-man;
 Then the grim boar's-head frowned on
 high,
 Crested with bays and rosemary.
 Well can the green-garbed ranger tell 60
 How, when, and where, the monster fell,
 What dogs before his death he tore,
 And all the baiting of the boar.
 The wassail round, in good brown bowls
 Garnished with ribbons, blithely trowls.
 There the huge sirloin reeked; bard by
 Plum-porridge stood and Christmas pie;
 Nor failed old Scotland to produce
 At such high tide her savory goose.
 Then came the merry maskers in, 70
 And carols roared with blithesome din;
 If unmelodious was the song,
 It was a hearty note and strong.
 Who lists may in their mumming see
 Traces of ancient mystery;
 White shirts supplied the masquerade,
 And smutted cheeks the visors made;
 But oh! what maskers, richly dight,
 Can boast of bosoms half so light!
 England was merry England when 80
 Old Christmas brought his sports again.
 'Twas Christmas broached the mightiest
 ale,
 'Twas Christmas told the merriest tale;

A Christmas gambol oft could cheer
 The poor man's heart through half the year.

Still linger in our northern clime
 Some remnants of the good old time,
 And still within our valleys here
 We hold the kindred title dear,
 Even when, perchance, its far-fetched
 claim 90

To Southron ear sounds empty name;
 For course of blood, our proverbs deem,
 Is warmer than the mountain-stream.
 And thus my Christmas still I hold
 Where my great-grandsire came of old,
 With amber beard and flaxen hair
 And reverent apostolic air,
 The feast and holy-tide to share,
 And mix sobriety with wine,
 And honest mirth with thoughts divine: 100
 Small thought was his, in after time
 E'er to be hitched into a rhyme.
 The simple sire could only boast
 That he was loyal to his cost,
 The banished race of kings revered,
 And lost his land, — but kept his beard.

In these dear halls, where welcome kind
 Is with fair liberty combined,
 Where cordial friendship gives the hand,
 And flies constraint the magic wand, 110
 Of the fair dame that rules the land,
 Little we heed the tempest drear,
 While music, mirth, and social cheer
 Speed on their wings the passing year.
 And Mertoun's halls are fair e'en now,
 When not a leaf is on the bough.
 Tweed loves them well, and turns again,
 As loath to leave the sweet domain,
 And holds his mirror to her face,
 And clips her with a close embrace: — 120
 Gladly as he we seek the dome,
 And as reluctant turn us home.

How just that at this time of glee
 My thoughts should, Heber, turn to thee!
 For many a merry hour we've known,
 And heard the chimes of midnight's tone.
 Cease, then, my friend! a moment cease,
 And leave these classic tomes in peace!
 Of Roman and of Grecian lore
 Sure mortal brain can hold no more. 130
 These ancients, as Noll Bluff might say,
 'Were pretty fellows in their day,'
 But time and tide o'er all prevail —

On Christmas eve a Christmas tale —
 Of wonder and of war — ' Profane !
 What ! leave the lofty Latin strain,
 Her stately prose, her verse's charms,
 To hear the clash of rusty arms;
 In Fairy-land or Limbo lost,
 To jostle conjurer and ghost, 140
 Goblin and witch ! ' — Nay, Heber dear,
 Before you touch my charter, hear;
 Though Leyden aids, alas ! no more,
 My cause with many-languaged lore,
 This may I say : — in realms of death
 Ulysses meets Alcides' urrait,
 Æneus upon Thracia's shore
 The ghost of murdered Polydore;
 For omens, we in Livy cross 150
 At every turn locutus Bos.
 As grave and duly speaks that ox
 As if he told the price of stocks,
 Or held in Rome republican
 The place of Common-councilman.

All nations have their omens drear,
 Their legends wild of woe and fear.
 To Cambria look — the peasant see
 Bethink him of Glendowerdy
 And shun 'the Spirit's Blasted Tree.' —
 The Highlander, whose red claymore 160
 The battle turned on Maiden's shore,
 Will on a Friday morn look pale,
 If asked to tell a fairy tale:
 He fears the vengeful Elfin King,
 Who leaves that day his grassy ring;
 Invisible to human ken,
 He walks among the sons of men.

Didst e'er, dear Heber, pass along
 Beneath the towers of Franchémont,
 Which, like an eagle's nest in air, 170
 Hang o'er the stream and hamlet fair ?
 Deep in their vaults, the peasants say,
 A mighty treasure buried lay,
 Amassed through rapine and through wrong
 By the last Lord of Franchémont.
 The iron chest is bolted hard,
 A huntsman sits its constant guard;
 Around his neck his horn is hung,
 His hanger in his belt is slung;
 Before his feet his bloodhounds lie: 180
 An 't were not for his gloomy eye,
 Whose withering glance no heart can
 brook,
 As true a huntsman doth he look

As bugle e'er in brake did sound,
 Or ever hallooed to a hound.
 To chase the fiend and win the prize
 In that same dungeon ever tries
 An aged necromantic priest;
 It is an hundred years at least
 Since 'twixt them first the strife begun, 190
 And neither yet has lost nor won.
 And oft the conjurer's words will make
 The stubborn demon groan and quake;
 And oft the bands of iron break,
 Or bursts one lock that still amain
 Fast as 't is opened, shuts again.
 That magic strife within the tomb
 May last until the day of doom,
 Unless the adept shall learn to tell 200
 The very word that clenched the spell
 When Franch'mont locked the treasure cell.
 An hundred years are passed and gone,
 And scarce three letters has he won.

Such general superstition may Excuse for old Pitscottie say,
 Whose gossip history has given
 My song the messenger from heaven
 That warned, in Lithgow, Scotland's king,
 Nor less the infernal summoning;
 May pass the Monk of Durham's tale, 210
 Whose demon fought in Gothic mail;
 May pardon plead for Fordun grave,
 Who told of Gifford's Goblin-Cave.
 But why such instances to you,
 Who in an instant can renew
 Your treasured hoards of various lore,
 And furnish twenty thousand more ?
 Hoards, not like theirs whose volumes
 rest
 Like treasures in the Franch'mont chest,
 While gripple owners still refuse 220
 To others what they cannot use;
 Give them the priest's whole century,
 They shall not spell you letters three, —
 Their pleasure in the books the same
 The magpie takes in pilfered gem.
 Thy volumes, open as thy heart,
 Delight, amusement, science, art,
 To every ear and eye impart;
 Yet who, of all who thus employ them,
 Can like the owner's self enjoy them ? — 230
 But, hark ! I hear the distant drum !
 The day of Flodden Field is come. —
 Adieu, dear Heber ! life and health,
 And store of literary wealth.

CANTO SIXTH

THE BATTLE

I

WHILE great events were on the gale,
And each hour brought a varying tale,
And the demeanor, changed and cold,
Of Douglas fretted Marmion bold,
And, like the impatient steed of war,
He snuffed the battle from afar,
And hopes were none that back again
Herald should come from Terouenne,
Where England's king in languer lay,
Before decisive battle-day, — 10
While these things were, the mournful
Clare

Did in the dame's devotions share;
For the good countess ceaseless prayed
To Heaven and saints her sons to aid,
And with short interval did pass
From prayer to book, from book to mass,
And all in high baronial pride, —
A life both dull and dignified:
Yet, as Lord Marmion nothing pressed
Upon her intervals of rest, 20
Dejected Clara well could bear
The formal state, the lengthened prayer,
Though dearest to her wounded heart
The hours that she might spend apart.

II

I said Tantallon's dizzy steep
Hung o'er the margin of the deep.
Many a rude tower and rampart there
Repelled the insult of the air,
Which, when the tempest vexed the sky,
Half breeze, half spray, came whistling
by. 30

Above the rest a turret square
Did o'er its Gothic entrance bear,
Of sculpture rude, a stony shield;
The Bloody Heart was in the field,
And in the chief three mullets stood,
The cognizance of Douglas blood.
The turret held a narrow stair,
Which, mounted, gave you access where
A parapet's embattled row
Did seaward round the castle go. 40
Sometimes in dizzy steps descending,
Sometimes in narrow circuit bending,
Sometimes in platform broad extending,
Its varying circle did combine
Bulwark, and bartizan, and line,
And bastion, tower, and vantage-coign.

Above the booming ocean leant
The far-projecting battlement;
The billows burst in ceaseless flow
Upon the precipice below. 50
Where'er Tantallon faced the land,
Gate-works and walls were strongly manned;
No need upon the sea-girt side:
The steepy rock and frantic tide
Approach of human step denied,
And thus these lines and ramparts rude
Were left in deepest solitude.

III

And, for they were so lonely, Clare
Would to these battlements repair,
And muse upon her sorrows there, 60
And list the sea-bird's cry,
Or slow, like ~~noontide~~ ghost, would glide

Along the dark-gray bulwarks' side,
And ever on the heaving tide
Look down with weary eye.
Oft did the cliff and swelling main
Recall the thoughts of Whitby's fane, —
A home she ne'er might see again;
For she had laid adown, 70
So Douglas bade, the hood and veil,
And frontlet of the cloister pale,

And Benedictine gown:
It were unseemly sight, he said,
A novice out of convent shade. —
Now her bright locks with sunny glow
Again adorned her brow of snow;
Her mantle rich, whose borders round
A deep and fretted broiery bound,
In golden foldings sought the ground;
Of holy ornament, alone 80
Remained a cross with ruby stone;

And often did she look
On that which in her hand she bore,
With velvet bound and broiery o'er,
Her breviary book.

In such a place, so lone, so grim,
At dawning pale or twilight dim,
It fearful would have been
To meet a form so richly dressed,
With book in hand, and cross on breast, 90
And such a woful mien.

Fitz-Eustace, loitering with his bow,
To practise on the gull and crow,
Saw her at distance gliding slow,
And did by Mary swear
Some lovelorn fay she might have been,
Or in romance some spell-bound queen,

For ne'er in work-day world was seen
A form so witching fair.

IV

Once walking thus at evening tide 100
It chanced a gliding sail she spied,
And sighing thought — 'The abbess there
Perchance does to her home repair;
Her peaceful rule, where Duty free
Walks hand in hand with Charity,
Where oft Devotion's tranced glow
Can such a glimpse of heaven bestow
That the enraptured sisters see
High vision and deep mystery, —
The very form of Hilda fair, 110
Hovering upon the sunny air
And smiling on her votaries' prayer.
Oh! wherefore to my duller eye
Did still the Saint her form deny?
Was it that, seared by sinful scorn,
My heart could neither melt nor burn?
Or lie my warm affections low
With him that taught them first to glow?
Yet, gentle abbess, well I knew
To pay thy kindness grateful due, 120
And well could brook the mild command
That ruled thy simple maiden band.
How different now, condemned to bide
My doom from this dark tyrant's pride! —
But Marmion has to learn ere long
That constant mind and hate of wrong
Descended to a feeble girl
From Red de Clare, stout Gloster's Earl:
Of such a stem a sapling weak,
He ne'er shall bend, although he break. 130

V

'But see! — what makes this armor
here?' —
For in her path there lay Targe, corselet, helm; she viewed them
near. —
'The breastplate pierced! — Ay, much I
fear,
Weak fence wert thou 'gainst foeman's
spear,
That hath made fatal entrance here,
As these dark blood-gouts say. —
Thus Wilton! — Oh! not corselet's ward,
Not truth, as diamond pure and hard,
Could be thy manly bosom's guard 140
On yon disastrous day!' —
She raised her eyes in mournful mood, —
Wilton himself before her stood!
It might have seemed his passing ghost,

For every youthful grace was lost,
And joy unwonted and surprise
Gave their strange wildness to his eyes. —
Expect not, noble dames and lords,
That I can tell such scene in words:
What skilful limner e'er would choose 150
To paint the rainbow's varying hues,
Unless to mortal it were given
To dip his brush in dyes of heaven?
Far less can my weak line declare
Each changing passion's shade:
Brightening to rapture from despair,
Sorrow, surprise, and pity there,
And joy with her angelic air,
And hope that paints the future fair,
Their varying hues displayed; 160
Each o'er its rival's ground extending,
Alternate conquering, shifting, blending,
Till all fatigued the conflict yield,
And mighty love retains the field.
Shortly I tell what then he said,
By many a tender word delayed,
And modest blush, and bursting sigh,
And question kind, and fond reply: —

VI

DE WILTON'S HISTORY

'Forget we that disastrous day
When senseless in the lists I lay. 170 Thence dragged, — but how I cannot know,
For sense and recollection fled, —
I found me on a pallet low
Within my ancient beadsman's shed.
Austin, — remember'st thou, my Clare,
How thou didst blush when the old man,
When first our infant love began,
Said we would make a matchless pair? —
Menials and friends and kinsmen fled
From the degraded traitor's bed, — 180
He only held my burning head,
And tended me for many a day
While wounds and fever held their sway.
But far more needful was his care
When sense returned to wake despair;
For I did tear the closing wound,
And dash me frantic on the ground,
If e'er I heard the name of Clare.
At length, to calmer reason brought,
Much by his kind attendance wrought, 190
With him I left my native strand,
And, in a palmer's weeds arrayed,
My hated name and form to shade,
I journeyed many a land,

No more a lord of rank and birth,
But mingled with the dregs of earth.

Oh! Austin for my reason feared,
When I would sit, and deeply brood
On dark revenge and deeds of blood,
Or wild mad schemes upreared.

My friend at length fell sick, and said
That would remove him soon;
And while upon his dying bed
He begged of me a boon —
If e'er my deadliest enemy
Beneath my hand should conquered lie,
Even then my mercy should awake
And spare his life for Austin's sake.

VII

Still restless as a second Cain,
To Scotland next my route was ta'en,
Full well the paths I knew.
Fame of my fate made various sound,
That death in pilgrimage I found,
That I had perished of my wound, —

None cared which tale was true;
And living eye could never guess
Do Wilton in his palmer's dress,
For now that sable slough is shed,
And trimmed my shaggy beard and head,
I scarcely know me in the glass.
A chance meet wondrous did provide
That I should be that baron's guide —

I will not name his name —
Vengeance to trial alone belongs;
But, when I think on all my wrongs,
My blood is liquid theme!

And ne'er the time shall I forget
When, in a Scottish hostel set,
Dark looks we did exchange
What were his thoughts I cannot tell,
But in my bosom muttered Hell
Its plans of dark revenge.

VIII

A word of vulgar anguish
That broke from me, I scarce know why,

Brought on a village tale,
Which wrought upon his moody sprite,
And sent him armed forth by night.
I borrowed steel and mail

And weapons from his sleeping band;
And, passing from a postern door,
We met and encountered, hand to hand, —
He fell on Gifford-moor.

For the death-stroke my brand I drew, —
Oh! then my helmeted head he knew,
The palmer's cowl was gone, —

Then had three inches of my blade
The heavy debt of vengeance paid, —
My hand the thought of Austin stayed;
I left him there alone. —

O good old man! even from the grave 250
Thy spirit could thy master save:
If I had slain my foe-man, ne'er
Had Whitby's abbess in her fear
Given to my hand this packet dear,
Of power to clear my injured fame
And vindicate De Wilton's name. —
Perchance you heard the abbess tell
Of the strange pageantry of hell

That broke our secret speech —
It rose from the infernal shade, 260
Or feebly was some juggle played,
A tale of peace to teach.

Appeal to Heaven I judged was best
When my name came among the rest.

IX

Now here within Tantallon hold
To Douglas late my tale I told,
To whom my house was known of old.
Won by my proofs, his falchion bright
This eve anew shall dub me knight.
These were the arms that once did turn 270

The tide of fight on Otterburne,
And Harry Hotspur forced to yield
When the Dead Douglas won the field.
These Angus gave — his armorer's care
Ere more shall every breach repair;
For nought, he said, was in his halls
But ancient armor on the walls,
And aged chargers in the stalls,
And women, priests, and gray-haired 280

men;
The rest were all in Twisel glen.
And now I watch my armor here,
By law of arms, till midnight's near;
Then, once again a belted knight,
Seek Surrey's camp with dawn of light.

X

There soon again we meet, my Clare!

This baron means to guide thee there:
Douglas covers his king's command,
Else would he take thee from his hand.

And thine thy cousin Surrey, too,
Will give De Wilton justice due. 290
Now muster far for martial deed,
Furnish my limbs and strong my toil,
Once more — O Wilton! must we then
Risk now-found happiness again.

Trust fate of arms once more!

And is there not an humble glen
 Where we, content and poor,
 Might build a cottage in the shade,
 A shepherd thou, and I to aid
 Thy task on dale and moor? — 300
 That reddening brow! — too well I know
 Not even thy Clare can peace bestow
 While falsehood stains thy name:
 Go then to fight! Clare bids thee go
 Clare can a warrior's feelings know
 And weep a warrior's shame,
 Can Red Earl Gilbert's spirit feel,
 Buckle the spurs upon thy heel
 And belt thee with thy brand of steel,
 And send thee forth to fame! 310

XI

That night upon the rocks and bay
 The midnight moonbeam slumbering lay,
 And poured its silver light and pure
 Through loophole and through embra-
 sure

Upon Tantallon tower and hall;
 But chief where arched windows wide
 Illuminate the chapel's pride
 The sober glances fall.
 Much was there need; though seamed with scars,

Two veterans of the Douglas' wars, 320
 Though two gray priests were there,
 And each a blazing torch held high,
 Yon could not by their blaze desery
 The chapel's carving fair.
 Amid that dim and smoky light,
 Checkering the silvery moonshine bright,
 A bishop by the altar stood,

A noble lord of Douglas blood,
 With mitre sheen and rochet white. 329
 Yet showed his meek and thoughtful eye
 But little pride of prelacy;
 More pleased that in a barbarous age
 He gave rude Scotland Virgil's page
 Than that beneath his rule he held
 The bishopric of fair Dunkeld.
 Beside him ancient Angus stood,
 Doffed his furred gown and sable hood;
 O'er his huge form and visage pale
 He wore a cap and shirt of mail, 339
 And leaned his large and wrinkled hand
 Upon the huge and sweeping brand
 Which wont of yore in battle fray
 His foeman's limbs to shred away,
 As wood-knife lops the sapling spray.
 He seemed as, from the tombs around
 Rising at judgment-day,

Some giant Douglas may be found
 In all his old array;
 So pale his face, so huge his limb,
 So old his arms, his look so grim. 350

XII

Then at the altar Wilton kneels,
 And Clare the spurs bound on his heels;
 And think what next he must have felt
 At buckling of the falchion belt!
 And judge how Clara changed her hue
 While fastening to her lover's side
 A friend, which, though in danger tried,
 He once had found untrue!
 Then Douglas struck him with his blade:
 'Saint Michael and Saint Andrew aid, 360
 I dub thee knight.

Arise, Sir Ralph, De Wilton's heir!
 For king, for church, for lady fair,
 See that thou fight.'
 And Bishop Gawain, as he rose,
 Said: 'Wilton! grieve not for thy woes,
 Disgrace, and trouble;
 For He who honor best bestows
 May give thee double.'
 De Wilton sobbed, for sob he must: 370
 'Where'er I meet a Douglas, trust
 That Douglas is my brother!'
 'Nay, nay,' old Angus said, 'not so;
 To Surrey's camp thou now must go,
 Thy wrongs no longer smother.
 I have two sons in yonder field;
 And, if thou meet'st them under shield,
 Upon them bravely — do thy worst,
 And foul fall him that blanches first!'

XIII

Not far advanced was morning day 380
 When Marmion did his troop array
 To Surrey's camp to ride;
 He had safe-conduct for his band
 Beneath the royal seal and hand,
 And Douglas gave a guide.
 The ancient earl with stately grace
 Would Clara on her palfrey place,
 And whispered in an undertone,
 'Let the hawk stoop, his prey is flown.'
 The train from out the castle drew, 390
 But Marmion stopped to bid adieu:
 'Though something I might plain,' he
 said,
 'Of cold respect to stranger guest,
 Sent hither by your king's behest,
 While in Tantallon's towers I stayed,
 Part we in friendship from your land,

And, noble earl, receive my hand.' —
 But Douglas round him drew his cloak,
 Folded his arms, and thus he spoke: — 325
 'My manors, halls, and towers shall still
 Be open at my sovereign's will
 To each one whom he lists, bowe'er
 Unmeet to be the owner's peer.
 My castles are my king's alone,
 From turret to foundation-stone —
 The hand of Douglas is his own,
 And never shall in friendly grasp
 The hand of such as Marmion clasp.'

XIV

Burned Marmion's swarthy cheek like fire
 And shook his very frame for ire, 410
 And — 'This to me!' he said,
 'An't were not for thy hoary head,
 Such hand as Marmion's had not spared
 To cleave the Douglas' head!
 And first I tell thee, haughty peer,
 He who does England's message here,
 Although the meanest in her state,
 May well, proud Angus, be thy mate;
 And, Douglas, more I tell thee here, 420
 Even in thy pitch of pride,
 Here in the land, thy vassals near, —
 Nay, never look upon your lord,
 And lay your hands upon your sword, —
 I tell thee, thou'rt defied!
 And if thou saist I am not peer
 To any lord in Scotland here,
 Lowland or Highland, far or near,
 Lord Angus, thou hast lost!' 430
 On the earl's cheek the flush of rage
 Overcame the whiteness of age
 Fiercely he broke forth, — 'And darrest thou then
 To beard the lion in his den,
 The Douglas in his hall?
 And hegest thou hence unsathed to go? —
 No, by Saint Bride of Botswell no!
 Updownledge grooves — what, warden, ho!
 Let the portcullis fall!' —
 Lord Marmion turned, — well was his mood —
 And dashed the reins in his steed, 440
 Like arrow through the archway sprung,
 The ponderous grate behind him rang;
 The paces there was such scant room,
 The lurs descending raved his plume

XV

The steed along the drawbridge flew
 Just as it trembled on the rise,

Not lighter does the swallow skim
 Along the smooth lake's level brim:
 And when Lord Marmion reached his
 band,

He halts, and turns with clenched hand,
 And shout of loud defiance pours, 450
 And shook his gauntlet at the towers.
 'Horse! horse!' the Douglas cried, 'and chase!'

But soon he reined his fury's pace:
 'A royal messenger he came,
 Though most unworthy of the name. —
 A letter forged! Saint Jude to speed!
 Did ever knight so foul a deed?
 At first in heart it liked me ill
 When the king praised his clerly skill.
 Thanks to Saint Bothan, son of mine, 460
 Save Gawain, ne'er could pen a line;
 So swore I, and I swear it still,
 Let my boy-bishop fret his fill. —
 Saint Mary mend my fiery mood!
 Old age ne'er cools the Douglas blood,
 I thought to slay him where he stood.
 'Tis pity of him too,' he cried:
 'Bold can he speak and fairly ride,
 I warrant him a warrior tried.'
 With this his mandate he recalls, 470
 And slowly seeks his castle halls.

XVI

The day in Marmion's journey wore;
 Yet ere his passion's gust was o'er,
 They crossed the heights of Stanning-moor.
 His troop more closely there he scanned,
 And missed the Palmer from the band.
 'Palmer or not,' young Blount did say,
 'He parted at the peep of day;
 Good worth it was in strange array.'
 'In what array?' said Marmion quick. 480
 'My lord, I'll can spell the trick:
 Rode all night long with clink and bang
 Close to my coach did hammers clang;
 At dawn the falling drawbridge rang,
 And from a loggia while I peep,
 Old Bell-the-Cat came from the keep,
 Wrapped in a gown of sables fur,
 As fearful of the morning star;
 Beneath, when that was hurst aside,
 A rusty short of mud I sped. 490
 Be Archibald was it, blindest wark
 Against the Saracen and Turk.
 Last night it hung not in the hall;
 I thought some marvel would befall
 And now I see them rusted loud
 Old Chivalry forth the wall's horn stood,

A matchless horse, though something old,
 Prompt in his paces, cool and bold.
 I heard the Sheriff Sholto say
 The earl did much the Master pray 500
 To use him on the battle-day,
 But he preferred ' — ' Nay, Henry, cease !
 'Thou sworn horse - courser, hold thy peace. —

Eustace, thou bear'st a brain — I pray,
 What did Blount see at break of day ? ' —

XVII

' In brief, my lord, we both desoried —
 For then I stood by Henry's side —
 The Palmer mount and outwards ride
 Upon the earl's own favorite steed.
 All sheathed he was in armor bright, 510
 And much resembled that same knight
 Subdued by you in Cotswold fight;

Lord Angus wished him speed.' —
 The instant that Fitz-Eustace spoke,
 A sudden light on Marmion broke: —
 ' Ah ! dastard fool, to reason lost !'
 He muttered; ' 'T was nor fay nor ghost
 I met upon the moonlight wold,
 But living man of earthly mould.

O dotage blind and gross ! 520
 Had I but fought as wont, one thrust
 Had laid De Wilton in the dust,

My path no more to cross. —
 How stand we now ? — he told his tale
 To Douglas, and with some avail;

'T was therefore gloomed his rugged
 brow. —

Will Surrey dare to entertain 'Gainst Marmion charge disproved and vain ?

Small risk of that, I trow. 529
 Yet Clare's sharp questions must I shun,
 Must separate Constance from the nun —
 Oh ! what a tangled web we weave
 When first we practise to deceive !
 A Palmer too ! — no wonder why
 I felt rebuked beneath his eye;
 I might have known there was but one Whose look could quell Lord Marmion.'

XVIII

Stung with these thoughts, he urged to speed

His troop, and reached at eve the Tweed, Where Lennel's convent closed their
 march. 540

There now is left but one frail arch,
 Yet mourn thou not its cells;

Our time a fair exchange has made:
 Hard by, in hospitable shade,

A reverend pilgrim dwells,
 Well worth the whole Bernardine brood
 That e'er wore sandal, frock, or hood. —
 Yet did Saint Bernard's abbot there
 Give Marmion entertainment fair,
 And lodging for his train and Clare. 550
 Next morn the baron climbed the tower,
 To view afar the Scottish power,
 Encamped on Flodden edge;

The white pavilions made a show
 Like remnants of the winter snow
 Along the dusky ridge.

Long Marmion looked: — at length his eye
 Unusual movement might desery

Amid the shifting lines;
 The Scottish host drawn out appears, 560
 For, flashing on the hedge of spears,
 The eastern sunbeam shines.

Their front now deepening, now extending,
 Their flank inclining, wheeling, bending,
 Now drawing back, and now descending,
 The skilful Marmion well could know
 They watched the motions of some foe
 Who traversed on the plain below.

XIX

Even so it was. From Flodden ridge
 The Scots beheld the English host 570
 Leave Barmore-wood, their evening post,
 And heedful watched them as they crossed

The Till by Twisel Bridge.
 High sight it is and haughty, while
 They dive into the deep defile;
 Beneath the caverned cliff they fall,
 Beneath the castle's airy wall.

By rock, by oak, by hawthorn-tree,
 Troop after troop are disappearing;
 Troop after troop their banners rear-
 ing 580

Upon the eastern bank you see;
 Still pouring down the rocky den
 Where flows the sullen Till,
 And rising from the dim-wood glen,
 Standards on standards, men on men,
 In slow succession still,

And sweeping o'er the Gothic arch,
 And pressing on, in ceaseless march,
 To gain the opposing hill. —
 That morn, to many a trumpet clang, 590
 Twisel ! thy rock's deep echo rang,
 And many a chief of birth and rank,
 Saint Helen ! at thy fountain drank.

Thy hawthorn glade, which now we see
In spring-tide bloom so lavishly,
Had then from many an axe its doom,
To give the marching columns room.

XX

And why stands Scotland idly now,
Dark Flodden ! on thy airy brow,
Since England gains the pass the while, 600
And struggles through the deep defile ?
What checks the fiery soul of James ?
Why sits that champion of the dames
Inactive on his steed,
And sees, between him and his land,
Between him and Tweed's southern strand,
His host Lord Surrey lead ?
What vails the vain knight - errant's
brand ? —

O Douglas, for thy leading wand !
Fierce Randolph, for thy speed ! 610
Oh ! for one hour of Wallace wight,
Or well-skilled Bruce, to rule the fight
And cry, ' Saint Andrew and our right !'
Another sight had seen that morn,
From Fate's dark book a leaf been torn,
And Flodden had been Bannockbourne ! —
The precious hour has passed in vain,
And England's host has gained the plain,
Wheeling their march and circling still Around the base of Flodden hill. 620

XXI

Ere yet the bands met Marmion's eye,
Fitz-Eustace shouted loud and high,
' Hark ! hark ! my lord, an English drum !
And see ascending squadrons come
Between Tweed's river and the hill,
Foot, horse, and cannon ! Hap what hap,
My basnet to a prentice cap,
Lord Surrey's o'er the Till ! —
Yet more ! yet more ! — how fair arrayed
They file from out the hawthorn shade. 630
And sweep so gallant by !
With all their banners bravely spread,
And all their armor flashing high,
Saint George might waken from the dead,
To see fair England's standards fly.' —
' Stint in thy prate,' quoth Blount, ' thou 'dst best,
And listen to our lord's behest.' —
With kindling brow Lord Marmion said,
' This instant be our band arrayed ;
The river must be quickly crossed, 640
That we may join Lord Surrey's host.
If fight King James, — as well I trust

That fight he will, and fight he must, —
The Lady Clare behind our lines
Shall tarry while the battle joins.'

XXII

Himself he swift on horseback threw,
Scarce to the abbot bade adieu,
Far less would listen to his prayer
To leave behind the helpless Clare.
Down to the Tweed his hand he drew, 650
And muttered as the flood they view,
' The pheasant in the falcon's claw,
He scarce will yield to please a daw ;
Lord Angus may the abbot awe,
So Clare shall bide with me.'
Then on that dangerous ford and deep
Where to the Tweed Leat's eddies creep,
He ventured desperately:
And not a moment will he bide
Till squire or groom before him ride ; 660
Headmost of all he stems the tide,
And stems it gallantly.
Eustace held Clare upon her horse,
Old Hubert led her rein,
Stoutly they braved the current's course,
And, though far downward driven perforce,
The southern bank they gain.
Behind them straggling came to shore,
As best they might, the train:
Each o'er his head his yew-bow bore, 670
A caution not in vain;
Deep need that day that every string,
By wet unharmed, should sharply ring.
A moment then Lord Marmion stayed,
And breathed his steed, his men arrayed,
Then forward moved his band,
Until, Lord Surrey's rear-guard won,
He halted by a cross of stone,
That on a hillock standing lone
Did all the field command. 680

XXIII

Hence might they see the full array
Of either host for deadly fray ;
Their marshalled lines stretched east and
west,
And fronted north and south,
And distant salutation passed
From the loud cannon mouth ;
Not in the close successive rattle
That breathes the voice of modern battle,
But slow and far between.
The hillock gained, Lord Marmion stayed:
' Here, by this cross,' he gently said, 690
' You well may view the scene.

Here shalt thou tarry, lovely Clare:
 Oh ! think of Marmion in thy prayer ! —
 Thou wilt not ? — well, no less my care
 Shall, watchful, for thy weal prepare. —
 You, Blount and Eustace, are her guard,
 With ten picked archers of my train;
 With England if the day go hard,
 To Berwick speed amain. — 700
 But if we conquer, cruel maid,
 My spoils shall at your feet be laid,
 When here we meet again.
 He waited not for answer there,
 And would not mark the maid's despair,
 Nor heed the discontented look
 From either squire, but spurred amain,
 And, dashing through the battle-plain,
 His way to Surrey took.

XXIV

'The good Lord Marmion, by my life ! 710
 Welcome to danger's hour ! —
 Short greeting serves in time of strife. —
 Thus have I ranged my power:
 Myself will rule this central host,
 Stout Stanley fronts their right,
 My sons command the vaward post,
 With Brian Tunstall, stainless knight;
 Lord Daere, with his horsemen light,
 Shall be in rearward of the fight,
 And succor those that need it most. 720
 Now, gallant Marmion, well I know,
 Would gladly to the vanguard go;
 Edmund, the Admiral, Tunstall there,
 With thee their charge will blithely share;
 There fight thine own retainers too
 Beneath De Burg, thy steward true.'
 'Thanks, noble Surrey !' Marmion said,
 Nor further greeting there he paid,
 But, parting like a thunderbolt,
 First in the vanguard made a halt, 730
 Where such a shout there rose
 Of 'Marmion ! Marmion !' that the cry,
 Up Flodden mountain shrilling high,
 Startled the Scottish foes.

XXV

Blount and Fitz-Eustace rested still
 With Lady Clare upon the hill,
 On which — for far the day was spent —
 The western sunbeams now were bent;
 The cry they heard, its meaning knew,
 Could plain their distant comrades view: 740
 Sadly to Blount did Eustace say,
 'Unworthy office here to stay !
 No hope of gilded spurs to-day. —

But see ! look up — on Flodden bent
 The Scottish foe has fired his tent.'
 And sudden, as he spoke,
 From the sharp ridges of the hill,
 All downward to the banks of Till,
 Was wreathed in sable smoke.
 Volumed and vast, and rolling far, 750
 The cloud enveloped Scotland's war
 As down the hill they broke;
 Nor martial shout, nor minstrel tone,
 Announced their march; their tread alone,
 At times one warning trumpet blown,
 At times a stifled hum,
 Told England, from his mountain-throne
 King James did rushing come.
 Scarce could they hear or see their foes
 Until at weapon-point they close. — 760
 They close in clouds of smoke and dust,
 With sword-sway and with lance's thrust;
 And such a yell was there,
 Of sudden and portentous birth,
 As if men fought upon the earth,
 And fends in upper air:
 Oh ! life and death were in the shout,
 Recoil and rally, charge and rout,
 And triumph and despair. 765
 Long looked the anxious squires; their
 eye
 Could in the darkness nought descry.

XXVI

At length the freshening western blast
 Aside the shroud of battle east;
 And first the ridge of mingled spears
 Above the brightening cloud appears,
 And in the smoke the pennons flow,
 As in the storm the white seamew.
 Then marked they, dashing broad and far,
 The broken billows of the war,
 And plumed crests of chieftains brave 780
 Floating like foam upon the wave;
 But nought distinct they see:
 Wide raged the battle on the plain;
 Spears shook and falchions flashed amain;
 Fell England's arrow-flight like rain;
 Crests rose, and stooped, and rose again,
 Wild and disorderly.
 Amid the scene of tumult, high
 They saw Lord Marmion's falcon fly;
 And stainless Tunstall's banner white, 790
 And Edmund Howard's lion bright,
 Still bear them bravely in the fight,
 Although against them come
 Of gallant Gordons many a one,
 And many a stubborn Badenoch-man,

And many a rugged Border clan,
With Huntly and with Howe.—

XXVII

Far on the left, unseen the while,
Stanley broke Lennox and Argyle,
Though there the western mountaineer 800
Rushed with bare bosom on the spear,
And flung the feeble targe aside,
And with both hands the broadsword plied.
‘T was vain. — But Fortune, on the right,
With fickle smile cheered Scotland’s fight.
Then fell that spotless banner white,

‘The Howard’s lion fell;
Yet still Lord Marmion’s falcon flew
With wavering flight, while fiercer grew
Around the battle-yell. 810
The Border slogan rent the sky!
A Home! a Gordon! was the cry:
Loud were the clanging blows;
Advanced, — forced back, — now low, now
high,

‘The pennon sunk and rose;
As bends the bark’s-mast in the gale,
When rent are rigging, shrouds, and sail,
It wavered mid the foes.
No longer Blount the view could bear:
‘By heaven and all its saints! I swear 820
I will not see it lost!’

Fitz-Eustace, you with Lady Clare
May bid your beads and patter prayer, —
‘I gallop to the host!’
And to the fray he rode amain,
Followed by all the archer train.
The fiery youth, with desperate charge,
Made for a space an opening large, —

‘The rescued banner rose, —
But darkly closed the war around, 830
Like pine-tree rooted from the ground
It sank among the foes.

Then Eustace mounted too, — yet stayed,
As loath to leave the helpless maid,
When, fast as shaft can fly,
Bloodshot his eyes, his nostrils spread,
The loose rein dangling from his head,
Housing and saddle bloody red,
Lord Marmion’s steed rushed by;
And Eustace, maddening at the sight, 840
A look and sign to Clara cast
To mark he would return in haste,
Then plunged into the fight.

XXVIII

Ask me not what the maiden feels,
Left in that dreadful hour alone:

Perchance her reason stoops or reels;
Perchance a courage, not her own,
Braves her mind to desperate tone. —
The scattered van of England wheels; —
She only said, as loud in air 850
The tumult roared, ‘Is Wilton there?’ —
They fly, or, maddened by despair,
Fight but to die. — ‘Is Wilton there?’
With that, straight up the hill there rode
Two horsemen drenched with gore,
And in their arms, a helpless load,
A wounded knight they bore.
His hand still strained the broken brand;
His arms were smeared with blood and sand.

Dragged from among the horses’ feet, 860
With dinted shield and helmet beat,
The falcon-crest and plumage gone,
Can that be haughty Marmion! . . .
Young Blount his armor did unlace,
And, gazing on his ghastly face,
Said, ‘By Saint George, he’s gone!
That spear-wound has our master sped,
And see the deep cut on his head!

‘Good-night to Marmion.’ — 865
‘Unnurtured Blount! thy brawling cease:
He opes his eyes,’ said Eustace; ‘peace!’

XXIX

When, doffed his casque, he felt free air,
Around gan Marmion wildly stare:
‘Where’s Harry Blount? Fitz-Eustace where?’

Linger ye here, ye hearts of hare!
Redeem my pennon, — charge again!
Cry, “Marmion to the rescue!” — Vain!
Last of my race, on battle-plain
That shout shall ne’er be heard again! —
Yet my last thought is England’s — fly, 880
To Dacre bear my signet-ring;

Tell him his squadrons up to bring. —
Fitz-Eustace, to Lord Surrey hie:
Tunstall lies dead upon the field,
His lifeblood stains the spotless shield;
Edmund is down; my life is left;
The Admiral alone is left.

Let Stanley charge with spur of fire, —
With Chester charge, and Lancashire,
Full upon Scotland’s central host, 890
Or victory and England’s lost. —

Must I bid twice? — hence, varlets! fly! —
Leave Marmion here alone — to die.’
They parted, and alone he lay;
Clara drew her from the sight away,
Till pain wrung forth a lowly moan,

he murmured, 'Is there none
 y halls have nurst,
 e, or groom, one cup to bring water from the spring,
 my dying thirst!' 900

XXX

I in our hours of ease boy, and hard to please, de as the shade
 it quivering aspen made;
 and anguish wring the brow,
 ing angel thou! —
 e the piteous accents said,
 the baron's casque the maid
 igh streamlet ran: 910
 e hatred, wrongs, and fears;
 ve voice alone she hears,
 the dying man.
 I her by the runnel's side,
 shorrence backward drew;
 from the mountain's side
 ed the war, a dark-red tide
 iling in the streamlet blue.
 (l she turn? — behold her mark ountain cell, 920
 er, clear as diamond spark,
 e basin fell.
 e half-worn letters say,
 y, pilgrim, drink, and pray.
 e soul of Sibel Grep.
 e this cross, and, well,
 he helm and back she hied,
 urprise and joy espied
 upporting Marmion's head;
 n, whom duty brought 930
 verge of battle fought,
 e the dying, bless the dead.

XXXI

Lord Marmion of the wave, stooped his brow to lave —
 and of Clare, he said,
 'Constance, bathes my head?'
 remembrance rose, —
 to me of shrift or prayer!
 dress her woes. 939
 few words, are mine to spare;
 I listen, gentle Clare! —
 she said, 'the while, — of your immortal weal!
 Constance is your zeal;
 id at Holy Isle.' —
 tion started from the ground
 if he felt no wound,

Though in the action burst the tide
 In torrents from his wounded side. 949
 'Then it was truth,' he said — 'I knew
 That the dark presage must be true. —
 I would the Fiend, to whom belongs
 The vengeance due to all her wrongs,
 Would spare me but a day!
 For wasting fire, and dying groan,
 And priests slain on the altar stone,
 Might bribe him for delay.
 It may not be! — this dizzy trance —
 Curse on yon base marauder's lance,
 And doubly cursed my failing brand! 950
 A sinful heart makes feeble hand.'
 Then fainting down on earth he sunk,
 Supported by the trembling monk.

XXXII

With fruitless labor Clara bound
 And strove to staunch the gushing wound;
 The monk with unavailing cares
 Exhausted all the Church's prayers.
 Ever, he said, that, close and near,
 A lady's voice was in his ear,
 And that the priest he could not hear; 970
 For that she ever sung,
 'In the lost battle, borne down by the flying,
 Where mingles war's rattle with groans of the dying!'

So the notes rung. —
 'Avoid thee, Fiend! — with cruel hand
 Shake not the dying sinner's sand! —
 Oh! look, my son, upon yon sign
 Of the Redeemer's grace divine;
 Oh! think on faith and bliss! —
 By many a death-bed I have been, 980
 And many a sinner's parting seen,
 But never aught like this.' —
 The war, that for a space did fail,
 Now trebly thundering swelled the gale,
 And 'Stanley!' was the cry. —
 A light on Marmion's visage spread,
 And fired his glazing eye;
 With dying hand above his head
 He shook the fragment of his blade,
 And shouted 'Victory! — 990
 Charge, Chester, charge! On, Stanley,
 on!'
 Were the last words of Marmion.

XXXIII

By this, though deep the evening fell,
 Still rose the battle's deadly swell,
 For still the Scots around their king,
 Unbroken, fought in desperate ring.

Where's now their victor vaward wing,
 Where Humber, and where Home? —
 O'er that forest of that dread horn,
 On Fotheringhay's mossy bower, 1000
 That to King Charles did come,
 Where Richard brave, and Olivier,
 And every paladin and peer,
 On Roncevaux died!
 So their eyes might warn them, not in vain,
 To seek the plunder of the slain
 And turn the doubtful day again,
 Where yet on Flodden side
 Arose the Royal Standard high,
 And many a deed and bleed and dies 1010
 Our Countrymen pride!
 I saw the wish — for far away,
 With good and havoc mark their way,
 As they sought a Cross the plunderers stray. —
 "O holy," said the monk, "away!"
 And placed her on her steed,
 And I — I met to the chapel fair
 On Tynemouth upon Tweed
 There all the night they spent in prayer,
 And at the dawn of morning there 1020
 One met her kinsman, Lord Fitz-Claire.

XXXIV

But as they left the darkening heath
 More desperate grew the strife of death.
 The English shafts in volleys hailed,
 In headlong charge their horse assailed;
 I could think, and rear, the squadrons sweep
 To break the Scottish circle deep
 That fought around their king.
 But yet, though thick the shafts as snow,
 Though charging knights like whirlwinds 1030
 Through battalions ply the ghastly blow,
 Unbroken was the ring;
 The clattering spearmen still made good
 Their dark impenetrable wood,
 Each stepping where his comrade stood
 The instant that he fell
 No thought was there of dastard flight;
 Locked in the sterned phalanx tight,
 From fought like noble, square like knights,
 As fearlessly and well, 1040
 Till utter darkness closed her wing
 O'er their thin host and wounded king.
 Then skillful Surrey's sage commands
 Led back from strife his shattered bands;
 And from the charge they drew,
 As mountain waves from wasted lands
 Sweep back to ocean blue.
 Then did their loss his foemen know;

Their king, their lords, their mightiest
 low,
 They melted from the field, as snow, 1050
 When streams are swollen and southwinds
 blow,
 Dissolves in silent dew.
 Tweed's echoes heard the ceaseless plash,
 While many a broken band
 Disordered through her currents dash,
 To gain the Scottish land;
 To town and tower, to down and dale,
 To tell red Flodden's dismal tale,
 And raise the universal wail.
 Tradition, legend, tune, and song 1060
 Shall many an age that wail prolong;
 Still from the sire the son shall hear
 Of the stern strife and carnage drear
 Of Flodden's fatal field,
 Where shivered was fair Scotland's spear
 And broken was her shield!

XXXV

Day dawns upon the mountain's side. —
 There, Scotland! lay thy bravest pride.
 Chiefs, knights, and nobles, many a one;
 The sad survivors all are gone. — 1070
 View not that corpse mistrustfully,
 Defaced and mangled though it be;
 Nor to yon Border castle high
 Look northward with upbraiding eye;
 Nor cherish hope in vain
 That, journeying far on foreign strand,
 The Royal Pilgrim to his land
 May yet return again.
 He saw the wreck his rashness wrought;
 Reckless of life, he desperate fought, 1080
 And fell on Flodden plain:
 And well in death his trusty brand,
 Firm clenched within his manly hand,
 Beseeemed the monarch slain.
 But oh! how changed since you blithe
 night! —
 Gladly I turn me from the sight
 Unto my tale again.

XXXVI

Short is my tale: — Fitz-Eustace' care
 A pierced and mangled body bare
 To moated Lichfield's lofty pile; 1090
 And there, beneath the southern aisle,
 A tomb with Gothic sculpture fair
 Did long Lord Marmion's image bear —
 Now vainly for its site you look;
 'T was levelled when fanatic Brook
 The fair cathedral stormed and took,

But, thanks to Heaven and good Saint Chad,

A guerdon meet the spoiler had ! —
There erst was martial Marmion found,
His feet upon a couchant hound, 1100
His hands to heaven upraised;
And all around, on scutcheon rich,
And tablet carved, and fretted niche,
His arms and feats were blazed.
And yet, though all was carved so fair,
And priest for Marmion breathed the

prayer,
The last Lord Marmion lay not there.
From Ettrick woods a peasant swain
Followed his lord to Flodden plain, —
One of those flowers whom plaintive lay 1110
In Scotland mourns as 'wede away.'
Sore wounded, Sibyl's Cross he spied,
And dragged him to its foot, and died
Close by the noble Marmion's side.
The spoilers stripped and gashed the slain,
And thus their corpses were mista'en;
And thus in the proud baron's tomb
The lowly woodsman took the room.

XXXVII

Less easy task it were to show
Lord Marmion's nameless grave and low.
They dug his grave e'en where he lay, 1121

But every mark is gone:
Time's wasting hand has done away
The simple Cross of Sibyl Grey,
And broke her font of stone;
But yet from out the little hill
Oozes the slender springlet still.
Oft halts the stranger there,
For thence may best his curious eye
The memorable field descry; 1130

And shepherd boys repair
To seek the water-flag and rush,
And rest them by the hazel bush,
And plait their garlands fair,
Nor dream they sit upon the grave
That holds the bones of Marmion brave. —
When thou shalt find the little hill,
With thy heart commune and be still.
If ever in temptation strong Thou left'st the right path for the wrong, 1140

If every devious step thus trod
Still led thee further from the road,
Dread thou to speak presumptuous doom
On noble Marmion's lowly tomb;
But say, 'He died a gallant knight.
With sword in hand, for England's right.'

XXXVIII

I do not rhyme to that dull elf
Who cannot image to himself
That all through Flodden's dismal night
Wilton was foremost in the fight, 1150
That when brave Surrey's steed was slain
'T was Wilton mounted him again;
'T was Wilton's brand that deepest hewed
Amid the spearmen's stubborn wood:
Unnamed by Holinshed or Hall,
He was the living soul of all;
That, after fight, his faith made plain,
He won his rank and lands again,
And charged his old paternal shield
With bearings won on Flodden Field. 1160
Nor sing I to that simple maid
To whom it must in terms be said
That king and kinsmen did agree
To bless fair Clara's constancy;
Who cannot, unless I relate,
Paint to her mind the bridal's state, —
That Wolsey's voice the blessing spoke,
More, Sands, and Denny, passed the joke;
That bluff King Hal the curtain drew, 1169
And Katherine's hand the stocking threw;
And afterwards, for many a day,
That it was held enough to say,
In blessing to a wedded pair,
'Love they like Wilton and like Clare !'

L'ENVOY

TO THE READER

WHY then a final note prolong,
Or lengthen out a closing song,
Unless to bid the gentles speed,
Who long have listened to my rede ?
To statesmen grave, if such may deign
To read the minstrel's idle strain,
Sound head, clean hand, and piercing wit,
And patriotic heart — as PITT !
A garland for the hero's crest,
And twined by her he loves the best
To every lovely lady bright,
What can I wish but faithful knight ?
To every faithful lover too,
What can I wish but lady true ?
And knowledge to the studious sage,
And pillow soft to head of age !
To thee, dear school-boy, whom my lay
Has cheated of thy hour of play,
Light task and merry holiday !
To all, to each, a fair good-night,
And pleasing dreams, and slumbers light !

THE LADY OF THE LAKE

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

The Lady of the Lake Scott says, was a very sudden thought. It was begun in the fall of 1804 when Marmion had enjoyed a year and a half of popularity. 'The first hundred lines,' he writes to Lady Abercorn, 'were written, I think, in October, 1804, and the first canto was sent to your Ladyship in Ireland as soon as it was complete, and you were the first who saw them, excepting my friend and the printer, Mr. Ballantyne, who is a great critic as well as an excellent printer. I have been always, God help me, too poor and too impatient to let my poems lie by me for years, or for months either; on the contrary, they have hitherto been always sent to the press before they were a third part finished. This is, to be sure, a very reprehensible practice in many respects, and I hope I shall get the better of it the next time.'

He had by this time separated from Constable and made Ballantyne's interests his own. In his 'Introduction' given below, Scott details in lively fashion the effect which the reading of the poem, while in course of composition, had upon the friend who started in to 'heerze up his lungs.' Lockhart quotes also from the recollection of Robert Cadell an account of the interest excited by the poem before it was published. 'James Ballantyne read the cantos from time to time to select coteries, as they advanced at press. Common fame was loud in their favor; a great poem was on all hands anticipated. I do not recollect that any of all the author's works was ever looked for with more intense anxiety, or that any one of them excited a more extraordinary sensation when it did appear. The whole country rang with the praises of the poet—crowds set off to view the scenery of Loch Katrine, till then comparatively unknown; and as the book came out just before the season for excursions, every house and inn in that neighborhood was crammed with a constant succession of visitors.' 'I have tried,' writes Scott to Lady Abercorn, 'according to promise, to make "a knight of love who never broke a vow." But welladay, though I have succeeded tolerably with the dandel, my lover, spite of my best exertions, is like to turn out what the players call a walking gentleman. It is incredible the pains it has cost me to give him a little dignity.' And then follows this curious and rueful reflection. 'Notwithstanding this, I have had in my time melancholy cause to paint from experience, for I gained no advantage from three years' constancy, except the said experience and some advantage to my conversation and manners. Mrs. Scott's match and mine was of our own making, and proceeded from the most sincere affection on both sides, which has rather increased than diminished during twelve years' marriage. But it was something short of love in all its forms, which I suspect people only feel once in their lives; folks who have been nearly drowned in bathing rarely venturing a second time out of their depth.' In a later letter written to the same lady, he returns to the subject, which plainly gave him some uneasiness. 'As for my lover, I find with deep regret that, however interesting lovers are to each other, it is no easy matter to render them generally interesting. There was, however, another reason for keeping Malcolm Græme's character a little under, as the painters say, for it must otherwise have interfered with that of the king, which I was more anxious to bring forward in splendor, or something like it.'

Once again, in a letter to Miss Smith, who took the part of Ellen in a dramatization of the poem, he wrote: 'You must know this Malcolm Græme was a great plague to me from the beginning. You ladies can hardly comprehend how very stupid lovers are to everybody but mistresses. I gave him that dip in the lake by way of making him do something; but wet or dry I could make nothing of him. His insignificance is the greatest defect among many others in the poem; but the canvas was not broad enough to include him, considering I had to group the king, Roderick, and Douglas.'

On another point, Scott had been criticised by his vigilant friend Morritt. 'The only disappointment,' writes Morritt, 'I felt in the poem is your own fault. The character and terrific birth of Brian is so highly wrought that I expected him to appear again in the dénouement, and wanted to hear something more of him; but as we do not hear of his death, it is your own fault for introducing us to an acquaintance of so much promise and not telling us how he was afterwards disposed of.' To this Scott replied: 'Your criticism is quite just as to the Son of the dry bone, Brian. Truth is, I had intended the battle should have been more detailed, and that some of the persons mentioned in the third canto, and Brian in particular, should have been commemorated. I intended he should have been shot like a corbie on a croig as he was excommunicating and anathematizing the Saxons from some of the predominant peaks in the Trossachs. But I found the battle in itself too much displaced to admit of being prolonged by any details which could be spared. For it was in the first place episodical, and then all the principal characters had been disposed of before it came on, and were absent at the time of action, and nothing hinged upon the issue of consequence to the fable. So I've left it to the judgment of my reader whether Brian was worried in the Trossachs, or escaped to take earth in his old retreat in Benharrow, near Arkinlous.

The Lady of the Lake came out early in May, 1810, and its popularity is shown by the haste with which the dramatists laid hold of it, three separate versions being attempted. 'That Mr. Siddons is bringing it out,' Scott writes to the actress, Miss Smith, 'is very certain, but it is equally so that I have not seen and do not intend to see a line of it, because I would not willingly have the public of this place [Edinburgh] suppose that I was in any degree responsible for the success of the piece; it would be like submitting to be twice tried for the same offence. My utmost knowledge has been derived from chatting with Mrs. Siddons and Mrs. Young in the green-room, where I have been an occasional lounge since our company has been put on a respectable footing. . . . Whether the dialogue is in verse or prose I really do not know. There is a third Lady of the Lake on the tapis at Covent Garden, dramatized by no less genius than the united firm of Reynolds and Morton. But though I have these theatrical grandchildren, as I may call them, I have seen none of them. I shall go to the Edinburgh piece when it is rehearsed with lights and scenes, and if I see anything that I think worth your adopting I will write to you. The strength will probably lie in the dumb show, music and decorations, for I have no idea that the language can be rendered very dramatic. If any person can make ought of it, I am sure you will. The mad Lowland captive if well played, should, I think, answer. I wish I could give you an idea of the original, whom I really saw in the Pass of Glencoe many years ago. It is one of the wildest and most tremendous passes in the Highlands, winding through huge masses of rock without a pile of verdure, and between mountains that seem rent asunder by an earthquake. This poor woman had placed herself in the wildest attitude imaginable, upon the very top of one of these huge fragments; she had scarce any covering but a tattered plaid, which left her arms, legs, and neck bare to the weather. Her long shaggy black hair was streaming backwards in the wind, and exposed a face rather wild and wasted than ugly, and bearing a very peculiar expression of frenzy. She had a handful of eagle's feathers in her hand. . . . The lady who plays this part should beware of singing with too stiff regularity; even her music, or rather her style of singing it, should be a little mad.'

Scott summed up his own analysis of the three long poems thus far published, when he wrote in 1812: 'The force in the Lay is thrown on style; in Marmion, on description, and in The Lady of the Lake, on incident.' When reissuing the poem in the collective edition of 1830, he prefixed the following

INTRODUCTION.

After the success of Marmion, I felt inclined to exclaim with Ulysses in the Odyssey:—

Ὀδυσσεύς μιν ἐν ἀέθλοισι ἀνάντων ἐστενέλευσεν
Νῦν εἴτιν σκευὴν ἄλλον.

Odys. x. 5.

'One venturous game my hand has won to-day—
Another, gallants, yet remains to play.'

The ancient manners, the habits and customs of the aboriginal race by whom the Highlands of Scotland were inhabited, had always appeared to me peculiarly adapted to poetry. The change in their manners, too, had taken place almost within my own time, or at least I had learned many particulars concerning the ancient state of the Highlands from the old men of the last generation. I had always thought the old Scottish Gael highly adapted for poetical composition. The feudal and political dimensions which, half a century earlier, would have rendered the richer and wealthier part of the kingdom indisposed to countenance a poem, the scene of which was laid in the Highlands, were now sunk in the generous compassion which the English, more than any other nation, feel for the misfortunes of an honorable foe. The Poems of Ossian had by their popularity sufficiently shown that if writings on Highland subjects were qualified to interest the reader, mere national prejudices were, in the present day, very unlikely to interfere with their success.

troubled me; and I was at a good deal of pains to efface any marks by which I thought my secret could be traced before the conclusion, when I relied on it with the same hope of producing effect, with which the Irish post-boy is said to reserve a 'trot for the avenue.'

I took uncommon pains to verify the accuracy of the local circumstances of this story. I recollect, in particular, that to ascertain whether I was telling a probable tale I went into Perthshire, to see whether King James could actually have ridden from the banks of Loch Vennachar to Stirling Castle within the time supposed in the poem, and had the pleasure to satisfy myself that it was quite practicable.

After a considerable delay, The Lady of the Lake appeared in June, 1810; and its success was certainly so extraordinary as to induce me for the moment to conclude that I had at last fixed a nail in the proverbially inconstant wheel of Fortune, whose stability in behalf of an individual who had so boldly courted her favors for three successive times had not as yet been shaken. I had attained, perhaps, that degree of reputation at which prudence, or certainly timidity, would have made a halt, and discontinued efforts by which I was far more likely to diminish my fame than to increase it. But, as the celebrated John Wilkes is said to have explained to his late Majesty, that he himself, amid his full tide of popularity, was never a Wilkite, so I can, with honest truth, exculpate myself from having been at any time a partisan of my own poetry, even when it was in the highest fashion with the million. It must not be supposed that I was either so ungrateful or so superabundantly candid as to despise or scorn the value of those whose voice had elevated me so much higher than my own opinion told me I deserved. I felt, on the contrary, the more grateful to the public, as receiving that from partiality to me, which I could not have claimed from merit; and I endeavored to deserve the partiality by continuing such exertions as I was capable of for their amusement.

It may be that I did not, in this continued course of scribbling, consult either the interest of the public or my own. But the former had effectual means of defending themselves, and could, by their coldness, sufficiently check any approach to intrusion; and for myself, I had now for several years dedicated my hours so much to literary labor that I should have felt difficulty in employing myself otherwise; and so, like Dogberry, I generously bestowed all my tediousness on the public, comforting myself with the reflection that, if posterity should think me undeserving of the favor with which I was regarded by my contemporaries, they could not but say I had the crown, and had enjoyed for a time that popularity which is so much coveted.

I conceived, however, that I held the distinguished situation I had obtained, however unworthily, rather like the champion of pugilism, on the condition of being always ready to show proofs of my skill, than in the manner of the champion of chivalry, who performs his duties only on rare and solemn occasions. I was in any case conscious that I could not long hold a situation which the caprice rather than the judgment of the public had bestowed upon me, and preferred being deprived of my precedence by some more worthy rival, to sinking into contempt for my indolence, and losing my reputation by what Scottish lawyers call the negative prescription. Accordingly, those who choose to look at the Introduction to Rokeby, will be able to trace the steps by which I declined as a poet to figure as a novelist; as the ballad says, Queen Eleanor sunk at Charing Cross to rise again at Queenlotho.

It only remains for me to say that, during my short preeminence of popularity, I faithfully observed the rules of moderation which I had resolved to follow before I began my course as a man of letters. If a man is determined to make a noise in the world, he is as sure to encounter abuse and ridicule, as he who gallops furiously through a village must reckon on being followed by the curs in full cry. Experienced persons know that in stretching to flog the latter, the rider is very apt to catch a bad fall; nor is an attempt to chastise a malignant critic attended with less danger to the author. On this principle, I let parody, burlesque, and squibs find their own level; and while the latter hissed most fiercely, I was cautious never to catch them up, as schoolboys do, to throw them back against the naughty boy who fired them off, wisely remembering that they are in such cases apt to explode in the handling. Let me add that my reign (since Byron has so called it) was marked by some instances of good-nature as well as patience. I never refused a literary person of merit such services in smoothing his way to the public as were in my power; and I had the advantage — rather an uncommon one with our irritable race — to enjoy general favor without incurring permanent ill-will, so far as is known to me, among any of my contemporaries.

ABERDEEN, April, 1830.

THE LADY OF THE LAKE

THE LADY OF THE LAKE

TO

THE MOST NOBLE

JOHN JAMES, MARQUIS OF ABERCORN

&amp;c., &amp;c., &amp;c.,

THIS POEM IS INSCRIBED BY

THE AUTHOR.

ARGUMENT

The scene of the following Poem is laid chiefly in the vicinity of Loch Katrine, in the Western Highlands of Perthshire. The time of Action includes Six Days, and the transactions of each Day occupy a Canto.

CANTO FIRST

THE CHASE

HARP of the North ! that mouldering long hast hung

On the witch-elm that shades Saint Fil-lan's spring,

And down the fitful breeze thy numbers
flung,

Till envious ivy did around thee cling, Muffling with verdant ringlet every string,

O Minstrel Harp, still must thine accents
sleep ?

Mid rustling leaves and fountains murmuring,

Still must thy sweeter sounds their silence keep,

Nor bid a warrior smile, nor teach a maid to weep ?

Not thus, in ancient days of Caledon, 10
Was thy voice mute amid the festal
crowd,

When lay of hopeless love, or glory won,
Aroused the fearful or subdued the proud.

At each according pause was heard aloud
Thine ardent symphony sublime and high !
Fair dames and crested chiefs attention
bowed ;

For still the burden of thy minstrelsy
Was Knighthood's dauntless deed, and Beauty's matchless eye.

O, wake once more ! how rude see'er the
hand

That ventures o'er thy magic maze to stray ; 20

O, wake once more ! though scarce my skill command

Some feeble echoing of thine earlier lay :
Though harsh and faint, and soon to die
away,

And all unworthy of thy nobler strain,
Yet if one heart throb higher at its sway,

The wizard note has not been touched in vain.

Then silent be no more ! Enchantress,
wake again !

The stag at eve had drunk his fill,
Where danced the moon on Monan's rill,
And deep his midnight lair had made 30

In lone Glenartney's hazel shade ;
But when the sun his beacon red

Had kindled on Benvoirlich's head,
The deep-mouthed bloodhound's heavy bay

Resounded up the rocky way,
And faint, from farther distance borne,

Were heard the clanging hoof and horn.

II

As Chief, who hears his warder call,
'To arms ! the foemen storm the wall,'

The antlered monarch of the waste 40
Sprung from his heathery couch in haste.

But ere his fleet career he took,
The dew-drops from his flanks he shook ;

Like crested leader proud and high
Tossed his beamed frontlet to the sky;
A moment gazed adown the dale,
A moment snuffed the tainted gale,
A moment listened to the cry,
That thickened as the chase drew nigh;
Then as the headmost foes appeared, 50
With one brave bound the copse he cleared,
And stretching forward free and far,
Sought the wild heaths of Uam-Var.

III

Yelled on the view the opening pack;
Rock, glen, and cavern paid them back;
To many a mingled sound at once;
The awakened mountain gave response;
A hundred dogs bayed deep and strong,
Clattered a hundred steeds along;
Their peal the merry horns rung out, 60
A hundred voices joined the shout;
With bark and whoop and wild halloo,
No rest Benvoirhel's echoes knew;
Far from the tumult fled the roe;
Close in her covert covered the doe;
The falcon, from her cairn on high,
Cast on the rout a wondering eye,
Till far beyond her piercing ken
The hurricane had swept the glen;
Faint, and more faint, its failing din 70
Returned from cavern, cliff, and din;
And silence settled, wide and still,
On the lone wood and mighty hill.

IV

Less loud the sounds of sylvan war
Disturbed the heights of Uam-Var,
And roused the cavern where, 't is told,
A giant made his den of old;
For ere that steep ascent was won,
High in his pathway hung the sun,
And many a gallant, stayed perforce, 80
Was fain to breathe his faltering horse,
And of the trackers of the deer
Scarcely half the lessening pack was near;
Shrewdly on the mountain-side
Had the bold burst their mettle tried.

V

The noble stag was pausing now
Upon the mountain's southern brow,
Where broad extended, far beneath,
The varied realms of fair Menteith:
His anxious eye he wandered o'er, 90
Mountain and meadow, moss and moor,

And pondered refuge from his toil,
By far Lochard or Aberfoyle.
But nearer was the copsewood gray
That waved and wept on Loch Achray,
And mingled with the pine-trees blue
On the bold cliffs of Benvenue.
Fresh vigor with the hope returned,
With flying foot the heath he spurned,
Held westward with unwearied race, 100
And left behind the panting chase.

VI

'T were long to tell what steeds gave o'er,
As swept the hunt through Cambusmore;
What reins were tightened in despair,
When rose Benledi's ridge in air;
Who flagged upon Bochart's heath,
Who shunned to stem the flooded Teith, —
For twice that day, from shore to shore,
The gallant stag swam stoutly o'er.
Few were the stragglers, following far, 110
That reached the lake of Vennechar;
And when the Brigg of Turk was won,
The headmost horseman rode alone.

VII

Alone, but with unbated zeal,
That horseman plied the scourge and steel;
For jaded now, and spent with toil,
Embossed with foam, and dark with soil,
While every gasp with sobs he drew,
The laboring stag strained full in view.
Two dogs of black Saint Hubert's breed, 120
Unmatched for courage, breath, and speed,
Fast on his flying traces came,
And all but won that desperate game;
For, scarce a spear's length from his haunch,
Vindictive toiled the bloodhounds stanch;
Nor nearer might the dogs attain,
Nor farther might the quarry strain.
Thus up the margin of the lake,
Between the precipice and brake,
O'er stock and rock their race they take. 130

VIII

The Hunter marked that mountain high,
The lone lake's western boundary,
And deemed the stag must turn to bay,
Where that huge rampart barred the way;
Already glorying in the prize,
Measured his antlers with his eyes;
For the death-wound and death-halloo
Mustered his breath, his whinyard drew: —
But thundering as he came prepared,

With ready arm and weapon bared, 140
 The wily quarry shunned the shock,
 And turned him from the opposing rock;
 Then, dashing down a darksome glen,
 Soon lost to hound and Hunter's ken,
 In the deep Trosachs' wildest nook
 His solitary refuge took.
 There, while close couched the thicket shed
 Cold dews and wild flowers on his head,
 He heard the baffled dogs in vain
 Rave through the hollow pass amain, 150
 Chiding the rocks that yelled again.

IX

Close on the hounds the Hunter came,
 To cheer them on the vanished game;
 But, stumbling in the rugged dell,
 The gallant horse exhausted fell.
 The impatient rider strove in vain
 To rouse him with the spur and rein,
 For the good steed, his labors o'er,
 Stretched his stiff limbs, to rise no more;
 Then, touched with pity and remorse, 160
 He sorrowed o'er the expiring horse.
 'I little thought, when first thy rein
 I slacked upon the banks of Seine;
 That Highland eagle e'er should feed
 On thy fleet limbs, my matchless steed!
 Woe worth the chase, woe worth the day,
 That costs thy life, my gallant gray!'

X

Then through the dell his horn resounds,
 From vain pursuit to call the hounds. 165
 Back limped, with slow and crippled pace,
 The sulky leaders of the chase;
 Close to their master's side they pressed,
 With drooping tail and humbled crest;
 But still the dingle's hollow throat
 Prolonged the swelling bugle-note.
 The owlets started from their dream,
 The eagles answered with their scream,
 Round and around the sounds were cast,
 Till echo seemed an answering blast;
 And on the Hunter bied his way, 180
 To join some comrades of the day,
 Yet often paused, so strange the road,
 So wondrous were the scenes it showed.

XI

The western waves of ebbing day
 Rolled o'er the glen their level way;
 Each purple peak, each flinty spire, 185
 Was bathed in floods of living fire.
 But not a setting beam could glow

Within the dark ravines below,
 Where twined the path in shadow hid, 190
 Round many a rocky pyramid,
 Shooting abruptly from the dell
 Its thunder-splintered pinnacle;
 Round many an insulated mass,
 The native bulwarks of the pass,
 Huge as the tower which builders vain
 Presumptuous piled on Shinar's plain,
 The rocky summits, split and rent,
 Formed turret, dome, or battlement,
 Or seemed fantastically set 200
 With cupola or minaret,
 Wild crests as pagod ever decked,
 Or mosque of Eastern architect.
 Nor were these earth-born castles bare,
 Nor lacked they many a banner fair;
 For, from their shivered brows displayed,
 Far o'er the unfathomable glade,
 All twinkling with the dewdrop sheen,
 The brier-rose fell in streamers green,
 And creeping shrubs of thousand dyes 210
 Waved in the west-wind's summer sighs.

XII

Boon nature scattered, free and wild,
 Each plant or flower, the mountain's child,
 Here egantine embalmed the air,
 Hawthorn and hazel mingled there;
 The primrose pale and violet flower
 Found in each clift a narrow bower;
 Foxglove and nightshade, side by side,
 Emblems of punishment and pride, 220
 Grouped their dark hues with every stain
 The weather-beaten crags retain.
 With boughs that quaked at every breath
 Gray birch and aspen wept beneath;
 Aloft, the ash and warrior oak
 Cast anchor in the rifted rock;
 And, higher yet, the pine-tree hung
 His shattered trunk, and frequent flung,
 Where seemed the cliffs to meet on high,
 His boughs athwart the narrowed sky. 230
 Highest of all, where white peaks glanced,
 Where glistening streamers waved and danced,
 The wanderer's eye could barely view
 The summer heaven's delicious blue;
 So wondrous wild, the whole might seem
 The scenery of a fairy dream.

XIII

Onward, amid the copse 'gan peep
 A narrow inlet, still and deep,
 Affording scarce such breadth of brim

As served the wild duck's brood to swim. 239
 Lost for a space, through thickets veering,
 But broader when again appearing,
 Tall rocks and tufted knolls their face
 Could on the dark-blue mirror trace;
 And farther as the Hunter strayed,
 Still broader sweep its channels made.
 The shaggy mounds no longer stood,
 Emerging from entangled wood,
 But, wave-encircled, seemed to float,
 Like castle girdled with its moat;
 Yet broader floods extending still 250
 Divide them from their parent hill,
 Till each, retiring, claims to be
 An islet in an inland sea.

XIV

And now, to issue from the glen,
 No pathway meets the wanderer's ken,
 Unless he climb with footing nice
 A far-projecting precipice.
 The broom's tough roots his ladder made,
 The hazel saplings lent their aid;
 And thus an airy point he won, 260
 Where, gleaming with the setting sun,
 One burnished sheet of living gold,
 Loeb Katrine lay beneath him rolled,
 In all her length far winding lay,
 With promontory, creek, and bay,
 And islands that, empurpled bright,
 Flashed amid the livelier light,
 And mountains that like giants stand
 To sentinel enchanted land.
 High on the south, huge Benvenue 270
 Down to the lake in masses threw Crag, knolls, and mounds, confusedly hurled,
 The fragments of an earlier world;
 A widening forest feathered o'er
 His ruined sides and summit hoar,
 While on the north, through middle air,
 Rose an beaved high his forehead bare.

XV

From the steep promontory gazed
 The stranger, raptured and amazed; 279
 And, 'What a scene were here,' he cried,
 'For princely pomp or churchman's pride!
 On this bold brow, a lordly tower;
 That soft vale, a lady's bower;
 Yonder meadow far away,
 Arrears of a cloister gray;
 A blithely might the bugle-horn
 Be on the lake the lingering morn!
 A sweet at eve the lover's lute

Chime when the groves were still and mute!

And when the midnight moon should lave
 Her forehead in the silver wave, 291
 How solemn on the ear would come
 The holy matins' distant hum,
 While the deep peal's commanding tone
 Should wake, in yonder islet lone,
 A sainted hermit from his cell,
 To drop a bead with every knell!
 And bugle, lute, and bell, and all,
 Should each bewildered stranger call
 To friendly feast and lighted hall. 300

XVI

'Blithe were it then to wander here!
 But now — beshrew yon nimble deer —
 Like that same hermit's, thin and spare,
 The copse must give my evening fare;
 Some mossy bank my couch must be,
 Some rustling oak my canopy.
 Yet pass we that; the war and chase
 Give little choice of resting-place; —
 A summer night in greenwood spent
 Were but to-morrow's merriment: 310
 But hosts may in these wilds abound,
 Such as are better missed than found;
 To meet with Highland plunderers here
 Were worse than loss of steed or deer. —
 I am alone; — my bugle-strain
 May call some straggler of the train;
 Or, fall the worst that may betide,
 Ere now this falchion has been tried.'

XVII

But scarce again his horn he wound,
 When lo! forth starting at the sound, 320
 From underneath an aged oak
 That slanted from the islet rock,
 A damsel guider of its way,
 A little skiff shot to the bay,
 That round the promontory steep
 Led its deep line in graceful sweep,
 Eddying, in almost viewless wave,
 The weeping willow twig to lave,
 And kiss, with whispering sound and slow,
 The beach of pebbles bright as snow. 330
 The boat had touched this silver strand
 Just as the Hunter left his stand,
 And stood concealed amid the brake,
 To view this Lady of the Lake.
 The maiden paused, as if again
 She thought to catch the distant strain.
 With head upraised, and look intent,
 And eye and ear attentive bent,

And locks flung back, and lips apart,
Like monument of Grecian art,
In listening mood, she seemed to stand,
The guardian Naid of the strand.

XVIII

And ne'er did Grecian chisel trace
A Nymph, a Naiad, or a Grace,
Of finer form or lovelier face!
What though the sun, with ardent frown,
Had slightly tinged her cheek with brown, —

The sportive toil, which, short and light,
Had dyed her glowing hue so bright,
Served too in hastier swell to show
Short glimpses of a breast of snow:
What though no rule of courtly grace
To measured mood had trained her pace, —
A foot more light, a step more true,
Ne'er from the heath-flower dashed the dew;
E'en the slight harebell raised its head,
Blasph'ring from her airy tread:

What though upon her speech there hung
The accents of the mountain tongue, —
Those silver sounds, so soft, so dear,
The listener held his breath to hear!

XIX

A chieftain's daughter seemed the maid;
Her eyes smok'd, her silken plaid,
Her golden braid, such lurch betrayed.
And seldom was a smok'd amid
Such wild incursive rogueries hid.
Whose glossy black to shame might bring
The plumage of the raven's wing;
And seldom e'er a breast so fair

Mottled a plaid with rosiest care,
And never beneath the folds combined
Above a heart more good and kind.
Her kindness and her worth to spy,
You need but gaze on Ellen's eye;
Not Nature in her mirror clear
Gives back the shaggy hanks more true,
Than e'er from her own glance reflected
The golden tresses of her breast;
Whether joy danced in her dark eye,
Or e'er her pity claimed a sigh,

Or bliss her soul was glowing there,
Or much devotion poured a prayer,
Or love at instant melted tears
The intelligent spirit of the North
That never passion overreached
Was undividedly the maid's command;
Yet not less purely both the same —
A word I tell, that passion's name

XX

Impatient of the silent horn,
Now on the gale her voice was borne: —
'Father!' she cried; the rocks around
Loved to prolong the gentle sound.
Awhile she paused, no answer came; — 'Malcolm, was thine the blast?' the name
Less resolutely uttered fell,
The echoes could not catch the swell.
'A stranger I,' the Huntsman said,
Advancing from the hazel shade.
The maid, alarmed, with hasty oar
Pushed her light shallop from the shore,
And when a space was gained between,
Closer she drew her bosom's screen; —
So forth the startled swan would swing,
So turn to prune his ruffled wing.
Then safe, though fluttered and amazed,
She paused, and on the stranger gazed.
Not his the form, nor his the eye,
That youthful maidens wont to fly.

XXI

On his bold visage middle age
Had slightly pressed its signet sage,
Yet had not quenched the open truth
And fiery vehemence of youth;
Forward and frolic glee was there,
The will to do, the soul to dare.
The sparkling glance, soon blown to fire,
Of hasty love or headlong ire.
His limbs were cast in manly mould
For hardy sports or contest bold;
And though in peaceful garb arrayed,
And weaponless except his blade,
His stately mien as well implied
A high-born heart, a martial pride,
As if a baron's crest he wore,
And breathed in armor trade the shore.
Sighting the petty need he showed,
He told of his beighted road:
His ready speech flowed fair and free,
In phrase of gentlest courtesy,
Yet seemed that tone and gesture bland
Less used to soothe than to command.

XXII

Awhile the maid the stranger eyed,
And measured, at length replied,
That Highland halls were open still
To welcome wanderers of the hill.
'Nor think you unsuited come
To rest here, ere our dearest home;
Before the heart and hand be free,
This morn' a maid was pulled for you.

He crossed the threshold, — and a clang
Of angry steel that instant rang.
To his bold brow his spirit rushed,
But soon for vain alarm he blushed,
When on the floor he saw displayed, 540
Cause of the din, a naked blade Dropped from the sheath, that careless flung

Upon a stag's huge antlers swung;
For all around, the walls to grace,
Hung trophies of the fight or chase:
A target there, a bugle here,
A battle-axe, a hunting-spear,
And broadswords, bows, and arrows store,
With the tusked trophies of the boar.
Here grins the wolf as when he died, 550
And there the wild-cat's brindled hide
The frontlet of the elk adorns,
Or mantles o'er the bison's horns;
Pennons and flags defaced and stained,
That blackening streaks of blood retained,
And deer-skins, dappled, dun, and white,
With otter's fur and seal's unite,
In rude and uncouth tapestry all,
To garnish forth the sylvan hall. 559

XXVIII

The wondering stranger round him gazed,
And next the fallen weapon raised: —
Few were the arms whose sinewy strength
Sufficed to stretch it forth at length.
And as the brand he eyed and swayed,
'I never knew but one,' he said,
'Whose stalwart arm might brook to wield
A blade like this in battle-field.'
She sighed, then smiled and took the word:
'You see the guardian champion's sword;
As light it trembles in his hand 570
As in my grasp a hazel wand:
My sire's tall form might grace the part
Of Ferragus or Ascabart,
But in the absent giant's hold
Are women now, and menials old.'

XXIX

The mistress of the mansion came,
Mature of age, a graceful dame,
Whose easy step and stately port
Had well become a princely court,
To whom, though more than kindred 580
knew,
Young Ellen gave a mother's due.
Most welcome to her guest she made,
Her courteous rite was paid,
Her world claim,

Though all unasked his birth and name.
Such then the reverence to a guest,
That fellest foe might join the feast,
And from his deadliest foe's door
Unquestioned turn, the banquet o'er.
At length his rank the stranger names, 590
'The Knight of Snowdown, James Fitz-
James;

Lord of a barren heritage,
Which his brave sires, from age to age,
By their good swords had held with toil;
His sire had fallen in such turmoil,
And he, God wot, was forced to stand
Oft for his right with blade in hand.
This morning with Lord Moray's train
He chased a stalwart stag in vain, 599
Outstripped his comrades, missed the deer,
Lost his good steed, and wandered here.'

XXX

Fain would the Knight in turn require
The name and state of Ellen's sire.
Well showed the elder lady's mien
That courts and cities she had seen;
Ellen, though more her looks displayed
The simple grace of sylvan maid,
In speech and gesture, form and face,
Showed she was come of gentle race.
'T were strange in ruder rank to find 610
Such looks, such manners, and such mind.
Each hint the Knight of Snowdown gave,
Dame Margaret heard with silence grave;
Or Ellen, innocently gay,
Turned all inquiry light away: —
'Weird women we! by dale and down
We dwell, afar from tower and town.
We stem the flood, we ride the blast, 618
On wandering knights our spells we cast;
While viewless minstrels touch the string,
'T is thus our charmed rhymes we sing.'
She sung, and still a harp unseen
Filled up the symphony between.

XXXI

SONG

'Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,
Sleep the sleep that knows not break-
ing;
Dream of battled fields no more,
Days of danger, nights of waking.
In our isle's enchanted hall,
Hands unseen thy couch are strewing,
Fairy strains of music fall, 610
Every sense in slumber dewing.
Soldier, rest! thy warfare o'er,

Dream of fighting fields no more;
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking,
Morn of toil, nor night of waking.

'No rude sound shall reach thine ear,
Armor's clang of war-steed clamping,
Trump nor pibroch summon here
Mustering clan or squadron tramping.
Yet the lark's shrill life may come
At the daybreak from the fallow,
And the bittern sound his drum,
Booming from the sedge shallow.
Ruder sounds shall none be near,
Guards nor warders challenge here,
Here's no war-steed's neigh and champ-
ing.
Shouting clans or squadrons stamping.'

XXXII

She paused, — then, blushing, led the lay,
To grace the stranger of the day.
Her mellow notes awhile prolong
The cadence of the flowing song,
Till to her lips in measured frame
The minstrel verse spontaneous came.

SONG CONTINUED

'Huntsman, rest! thy chase is done;
While our slumbrous spells assail ye,
Dream not, with the rising sun,
Bugles here shall sound reveillé.
Sleep! the deer is in his den;
Sleep! thy hounds are by thee lying:
Sleep! nor dream in yonder glen
How thy gallant steed lay dying.
Huntsman, rest! thy chase is done;
Think not of the rising sun,
For at dawning to assail ye
Here no bugles sound reveillé.'

XXXIII

The hall was cleared, — the stranger's bed
Was there of mountain heather spread,
Where oft a hundred guests had lain,
And dreamed their forest sports again.
But vainly did the heath-flower shed
In moorland fragrance round his head;
Not Ellen's spell had lulled to rest
The fever of his troubled breast.
In broken dreams the image rose
Of varied perils, pains, and woes:
His steed now flounders in the brake,
Now sinks his barge upon the lake;
Now leader of a broken host,
His standard falls, his honor's lost.

Then, — from my couch may heavenly might

Chase that worst phantom of the night! —
Again returned the scenes of youth,
Of confident, undoubting truth;
Again his soul he interchanged
With friends whose hearts were long estranged.

They come, in dim procession led,
The cold, the faithless, and the dead;
As warm each hand, each brow as gay,
As if they parted yesterday.
And doubt distracts him at the view, —
O were his senses false or true?
Dreamed he of death or broken vow,
Or is it all a vision now?

XXXIV

At length, with Ellen in a grove
He seemed to walk and speak of love;
She listened with a blush and sigh.
His suit was warm, his hopes were high.
He sought her yielded hand to clasp,
And a cold gauntlet met his grasp:
The phantom's sex was changed and
gone,

Upon its head a helmet shone;
Slowly enlarged to giant size,
With darkened cheek and threatening eyes,
The grisly visage, stern and hoar,
To Ellen still a likeness bore. —
He woke, and, panting with affright,
Recalled the vision of the night.
The hearth's decaying brands were red,
And deep and dusky lustre shed,
Half showing, half concealing, all
The uncouth trophies of the hall.
Mid those the stranger fixed his eye
Where that huge falchion hung on high,
And thoughts on thoughts, a countless thrang,

Rushed, chasing countless thoughts along,
Untill the giddy whirl to cure,
He rose and sought the moonshine pure.

XXXV

The wild rose, eglantine, and broom
Wasted around their rich perfume;
The birch-trees wept in fragrant balm;
The aspens slept beneath the calm;
The silver light, with quivering glance,
Played on the water's still expanse, —
Wild were the heart whose passion's sway
Could rage beneath the sober ray!
He felt its calm, that warrior guest,

While thus he communed with his
breast: —

'Why is it, at each turn I trace
Some memory of that exiled race?
Can I not mountain madden spy,
But she must bear the Douglas eye?
Can I not view a Highland brand,
But it must match the Douglas hand?
Can I not frame a fevered dream,
But still the Douglas is the theme?
I'll dream no more, — by manly mind
Not even in sleep is will resigned.
My midnight orisons said o'er,
I'll turn to rest, and dream no more.'
His midnight orisons he told,
A prayer with every bead of gold,
Consigned to heaven his cares and woes,
And sunk in undisturbed repose,
Until the heath-cock shrilly crew,
And morning dawned on Benvenue.

CANTO SECOND

THE ISLAND

I

At morn the black-cock tries his jetty
wing,

'Tis morning prompts the linnet's blith-
est lay,

All Nature's children feel the matin spring
Of life reviving, with reviving day;
And while you little bark glides down the bay,

Wafting the stranger on his way again,
Morn's genial influence roused a minstrel
gay,

And sweetly o'er the lake was heard thy strain,

Mixed with the sounding harp, O white-haired Allan-bane!

II

SONG

'Not faster yonder towers' wings

Flings from their oars the spray,
Nor faster yonder ripples bright,
Than tracks the shallop's course in light,
Melt in the lake away.

Thou man from memory erase
The benefits of former days,
Thou, stranger, go! good speed the while,
Nor think again of the lonely isle.

'High place to thee in royal court,
High place in battled line,
Good hawk and hound for sylvan sport!
Where beauty sees the brave resort,
The honored meed be thine!
True be thy sword, thy friend sincere,
Thy lady constant, kind, and dear,
And lost in love's and friendship's smile
Be memory of the lonely isle!

III

SONG CONTINUED

'But if beneath you southern sky
A plaided stranger roam,
Whose drooping crest and stifled sigh,
And sunken cheek and heavy eye,
Pine for his Highland home;
Then, warrior, then be thine to show
The care that soothes a wanderer's woe;
Remember then thy hap erewhile,
A stranger in the lonely isle.

'Or if on life's uncertain main
Mishap shall mar thy sail;
If faithful, wise, and brave in vain,
Woe, want, and exile thou sustain
Beneath the fickle gale;
Waste not a sigh on fortune changed,
On thankless courts, or friends estranged.
But come where kindred worth shall
smile,
To greet thee in the lonely isle.'

IV

As died the sounds upon the tide,
The shallop reached the mainland side,
And ere his onward way he took,
The stranger cast a lingering look,
Where easily his eye might reach
The Harper on the islet beach,
Reclined against a blighted tree,
As wasted, gray, and worn as he,
To minstrel meditation given.
His reverend brow was raised to heaven,
As from the rising sun to claim
A sparkle of inspiring flame.
His hand, reclined upon the wire,
Seemed watching the awakening fire;
No still be cut as those who wait
Till judgment speak the doom of fate;
So still, as if no breeze might dare
To lift one lock of hoary hair;
So still, as life itself were fled
In the last sound his harp had sped.

CANTO SECOND. THE ISLAND.

405

rock with lichens wild,
 When Ellen sat and smiled. —
 To see the stately drake
 With his fleet upon the lake,
 Or vexed spaniel from the beach
 To the prize beyond his reach ? —
 Me, then, the maid who knows,
 Opened on her cheek the rose ? —
 Forgive, Fidelity !
 See the maiden smiled to see
 The lingering wave adieu,
 And turn to wave anew ;
 Why ladies, ere your ire,
 To the heroine of my lyre,
 To the fair world soon to spy
 The south conquest of her eye !

[illegible]

The minstrel waked his harp, — three times
 Among the well-known martial strains,
 And thrice three high heroic deeds
 In melancholy murmurs did
 'Vainly thou bidst, O noble maid,
 Champing his withered limbs, he said,
 'Vainly thou bidst me wake the dead,
 Though all around me bid me wake
 Alas! thou wilt a nightless hour
 Has turned my harp, my strings like quenched!

I know the climate of my host town
And successful summer makes it mine;
And the proud waters make me glad
Under the morning light the sand
I walk for me of some waters
That change a strong complexion
I do not want of some sand
The water which the sun of some waters,
I do not want of some sand
I do not want of some sand

[illegible][illegible][illegible]

Confusedly bound in memory's ties,
Entangling, as they rush along,
The war-march with the funeral song? —
Small ground is now for boding fear;
Obscure, but safe, we rest us here.
My sire, in native virtue great,
Resigning lordship, lands, and state,
Not then to fortune more resigned
Than yonder oak might give the wind;
The graceful foliage storms may reave, 170
The noble stem they cannot grieve.
For me' — she stooped, and, looking round, Plucked a blue harebell from the
ground, —

'For me, whose memory scarce conveys
An image of more splendid days,
This little flower that loves the lea
May well my simple emblem be;
It drinks heaven's dew as blithe as rose
That in the King's own garden grows;
And when I place it in my hair, 180
Allan, a bard is bound to swear
He ne'er saw coronet so fair.'
Then playfully the chaplet wild
She wreathed in her dark locks, and smiled.

X

Her smile, her speech, with winning sway,
Wiled the old Harper's mood away.
With such a look as hermits throw,
When angels stoop to soothe their woe,
He gazed, till fond regret and pride
Thrilled to a tear, then thus replied: 190
'Loveliest and best! thou little know'st
The rank, the honors, thou hast lost!
O, might I live to see thee grace,
In Scotland's court, thy birthright place,
To see my favorite's step advance
The lightest in the courtly dance,
The cause of every gallant's sigh,
And leading star of every eye,
And theme of every minstrel's art,
< The Lady of the Bleeding Heart!' 200

XI

'Fair dreams are these,' the maiden
cried, —
Light was her accent, yet she sighed, —
'Yet is this mossy rock to me
Worth splendid chair and canopy;
Nor would my footstep spring more gay
In courtly dance than blithe strathspey,
Nor half so pleased mine ear incline
< To royal minstrel's lay as thine.

And then for suitors proud and high,
To bend before my conquering eye, — 210
Thou, flattering bard! thyself wilt say,
That grim Sir Roderick owns its sway.
The Saxon scourge, Clan-Alpine's pride,
The terror of Loch Lomond's side,
Would, at my suit, thou know'st, delay
A Lennox foray — for a day.' —

XII

The ancient bard her glee repressed:
'Ill hast thou chosen theme for jest!
For who, through all this western wild, Named Black Sir Roderick e'er, and smiled? 220

In Holy-Rood a knight he slew;
I saw, when back the dirk he drew,
Courtiers give place before the stride
Of the undaunted homicide;
And since, though outlawed, hath his hand
Full sternly kept his mountain land.
Who else dared give — ah! woe the day,
That I such hated truth should say! —
The Douglas, like a stricken deer,
Disowned by every noble peer, 230
Even the rude refuge we have here?
Alas, this wild marauding Chief
Alone might hazard our relief,
And now thy maiden charms expand,
Looks for his guerdon in thy hand;
Full soon may dispensation sought,
To back his suit, from Rome be brought.
Then, though an exile on the hill,
Thy father, as the Douglas, still
Be held in reverence and fear; 240
And though to Roderick thou 'rt so dear
That thou might'st guide with silken thread,
Slave of thy will, this chieftain dread,
Yet, O loved maid, thy mirth refrain!
Thy hand is on a lion's mane.' —

XIII

'Minstrel,' the maid replied, and high
Her father's soul glanced from her eye,
'My debts to Roderick's house I know:
All that a mother could bestow
To Lady Margaret's care I owe, 250
Since first an orphan in the wild
She sorrowed o'er her sister's child;
To her brave chieftain son, from ire
Of Scotland's king who shrouds my sire,
A deeper, holier debt is owed;
And, could I pay it with my blood,
Allan! Sir Roderick should command
My blood, my life, — but not my hand.

Or will Ellen Douglas dwell
In Maronnan's cell;
Or through realms beyond the sea,
To the world's cold charity,
Who'er was spoke a Scottish word,
Who'er the name of Douglas heard,
Least pilgrim will she rove,
Wed the man she cannot love.

XIV

Thou shak'st, good friend, thy tresses
In gray, —
Pleading look, what can it say
That I own? — I grant him brave, 260
Wild as Bracklinn's thundering wave;
Furious, — save vindictive mood
Does transport chafe his blood:
To him true to friendly band,
Claymore is to his hand;
That very blade of steel
Mercy for a foe would feel:
To him liberal, to fling
His clan the wealth they bring,
Back by lake and glen they wind,
To the Lowland leave behind, 280
Once some pleasant hamlet stood,
Of ashes slaked with blood
And that for my father fought
He, as his daughter ought;
In I chafed it reeking red
Presents slaughtered in their shed?
Wildly while his virtues gleam,
Dark his passions darker seem,
High along his spirit high,
Lightning o'er the midnight sky. 290
Yet a child, — and children know,
Have taught, the friend and foe, —
Flashed at his brow of gloom,
Midway plaid and sable plume;
How grown, I ill could bear
Night's morn and lordly air:
I know you't a sutor's claim,
But mood, to Roderick's name,
I with anguish! or, if e'er
Again knew the word, with fear. 300
How such solemn theme were beat, —
Think'st thou of our stranger
Guest? —

XV

Thou think'st I of him? — woe the while
I thought and wonderer to our isle!
Thou - Gaelic-brand, of yore
Thou - man - large - by fair lore,
Thou - be - leuged, no longer lost,

His Border spears with Hotspur's bows,
Dul, self-unscabbarded, forsooth
The footstep of a secret foe. 260
If courtly spy hath harbored here,
What may we for the Douglas fear?
What for this island, deemed of old
Chen-Alpine's hut and antest hold?
If neither spy nor foe, I pray
What yet may jealous Roderick say? —
Nay, wave not thy disdainful head!
Bethink thee of the discord dread
That kindled when at Beltane game
Thou ledst the dance with Malcolm Gormie;
Still, though thy sire the peace renewed, 270
Smoulders in Roderick's breast the feud:
Beware! — But hark! what sounds are
These?

My dull ears catch no faltering breeze,
No weeping birch nor aspens wake,
Nor breath is dimpling in the lake;
Still is the cannon's hoary beard,
Yet, by my minstrel faith, I heard —
And hark again! some pipe of war
Sends the bold pibroch from afar. 280

XVI

Far up the lengthened lake were spied
Four darkening specks upon the tide,
That, slow enlarging on the view,
Four manned and masted barges grew,
And, bearing downwards from Glengyle,
Steered full upon the lonely isle;
The point of Braemar they passed,
And, to the windward as they cast,
Against the sun they gave to shine
The bold Sir Roderick's bannered Pine. 290
Nearer and nearer as they bear,
Spears, pikes, and axes flash in air.
Now might you see the tartan brave,
And plaids and plummage dance and wave:
Now see the bonnets sink and rise,
As his tough oar the rower plies;
See, flashing at each sturdy stroke,
The wave ascending into smoke.
See the proud pipes on the bow,
And mark the gaudy streamers flow. 300
From their loud chanters down, and sweep
The furrowed bosom of the deep.
As, rushing through the lake main,
They plied the ancient Highland strain.

XVII

Ever, as on they bore, more loud
And louder rang the pibroch proud
At first the sounds, by distance tame,

Mellowed along the waters came,
 And, lingering long by cape and bay,
 Wailed every harsher note away, 360
 Then bursting bolder on the ear,
 The clan's shrill Gathering they could hear,
 Those thrilling sounds that call the night
 Of old Clan-Alpine to the fight.
 Thick beat the rapid notes, as when
 The mustering hundreds shake the glen,
 And hurrying at the signal dread,
 The battered earth returns their tread.
 Then prelude light, of livelier tone,
 Expressed their merry marching on, 370
 Ere peal of closing battle rose,
 With mingled outcry, shrieks, and blows;
 And mimic din of stroke and ward,
 As broadsword upon target jarred;
 And groaning pause, ere yet again,
 Condensed, the battle yelled again:
 The rapid charge, the rallying shout,
 Retreat borne headlong into rout,
 And bursts of triumph, to declare
 Clan-Alpine's conquest — all were there. 380
 Nor ended thus the strain, but slow
 Sunk in a moan prolonged and low,
 And changed the conquering clarion swell
 For wild lament o'er those that fell.

XVIII

The war-pipes ceased, but lake and hill
 Were busy with their echoes still;
 And, when they slept, a vocal strain
 Bade their hoarse chorus wake again,
 While loud a hundred clansmen raise
 Their voices in their Chieftain's praise. 390
 Each boatman, bending to his oar,
 With measured sweep the burden bore,
 In such wild cadence as the breeze
 Makes through December's leafless trees.
 The chorus first could Allan know,
 'Roderick Vich Alpine, ho! iro!'
 And near, and nearer as they rowed,
 Distinct the martial ditty flowed.

XIX

BOAT SONG

Hail to the Chief who in triumph advances!
 Honored and blessed be the ever-green
 Pine! 400
 Long may the tree, in his banner that glances,
 Flourish, the shelter and grace of our
 line!
 Heaven send it happy dew,
 Earth lend it sap anew,

Gayly to bourgeon and broadly to grow,
 While every Highland glen Sends our shout back again,
 'Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe!'

Ours is no sapling, chance-sown by the fountain,
 Blooming at Beltane, in winter to fade; 410
 When the whirlwind has stripped every leaf on the mountain,
 The more shall Clan-Alpine exult in her
 shade.
 Moored in the rifted rock,
 Proof to the tempest's shock,
 Firmer he roots him the ruder it blow;
 Menteith and Breadalbane, then,
 Echo his praise again,
 'Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe!'

XX

Proudly our pibroch has thrilled in Glen Fruin,
 And Bannochair's groans to our slogan
 replied; 420
 Glen-Luss and Ross-dhu, they are smoking
 in ruin,
 And the best of Loch Lomond lie dead
 on her side.
 Widow and Saxon maid
 Long shall lament our raid,
 Think of Clan-Alpine with fear and with woe;
 Lennox and Leven-glen
 Shake when they hear again,
 'Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe!'

Row, vassals, row, for the pride of the Highlands!
 Stretch to your oars for the ever-green
 Pine! 430
 O that the rosebud that graces yon islands
 Were wreathed in a garland around him to twine!
 O that some seedling gem,
 Worthy such noble stem
 Honored and blessed in their shadow might grow!
 Loud should Clan-Alpine then
 Ring from her deepmost glen,
 'Roderigh Vich Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe!'

XXI

With all her joyful female band
 Had Lady Margaret sought the strand. 440

on the breeze their tresses flew,
 high their snowy arms they threw,
 going back with shrill acclaim,
 horus wild, the Chieftain's name;
 prompt to please, with mother's art,
 arling passion of his heart,
 ame called Ellen to the strand,
 et her kinsman ere he land:
 A loiterer, come! a Douglas thou, run to wreath a victor's brow?' 450
 antly and slow, the maid
 welcome summoning obeyed,
 hen a distant bugle rung,
 mid-path aside she sprung: — Allan-bane! From mainland cast my father's signal blast.
 's,' she cried, 'the skiff to guide,
 aft him from the mountain-side.'
 like a sunbeam, swift and bright, uted to her shallop light, 460
 agerly while Roderick scanned,
 r dear form, his mother's band,
 let far behind her lay,
 he had landed in the bay.

XXII

Feelings are to mortals given less of earth in them than heaven;
 there be a human tear
 passion's dross refined and clear,
 so limpid and so meek
 id not stain an angel's cheek, 470 hat which pious fathers shed
 a duteous daughter's head!
 t the Douglas to his breast
 cling Ellen closely pressed,
 only drops her tresses steeped,
 h't was an hero's eye that weeped.
 hile on Ellen's faltering tongue
 ial welcomes crowded hung,
 d she that fear — affection's proof — old a graceful youth aloof; 480
 ot till Douglas named his name,
 gh the youth was Malcom Græme.

XXIII

with wistful look the while,
 d Roderick landing on the isle;
 ater piteously he eyed,
 azed upon the Chieftain's pride,
 ashed with hasty hand away
 his dimmed eye the gathering spray;
 uglas, as his hand he laid eolm's shoulder, kindly said: 490
 thou, young friend, no meaning spy

In my poor follower's glistening eye?
 I'll tell thee: — he recalls the day
 When in my praise he led the lay
 O'er the arched gate of Bothwell proud,
 While many a minstrel answered loud,
 When Percy's Norman pennon, won
 In bloody field, before me shone,
 And twice ten knights, the least a name
 As mighty as yon Chief may claim, 500
 Gracing my pomp, behind me came.
 Yet trust me, Malcolm, not so proud
 Was I of all that marshalled crowd, Though the waned crescent owned my
 might,

And in my train trooped lord and knight,
 Though Blantyre hymned her holiest lays,
 And Bothwell's bards flung back my praise,
 As when this old man's silent tear,
 And this poor maid's affection dear,
 A welcome give more kind and true 510
 Than aught my better fortunes knew.
 Forgive, my friend, a father's boast, —
 O, it out-beggars all I lost!

XXIV

Delightful praise! — like summer rose,
 That brighter in the dew-drop glows,
 The bashful maiden's cheek appeared,
 For Douglas spoke, and Malcolm heard.
 The flush of shame-faced joy to hide,
 The hounds, the hawk, her cares divide;
 The loved caresses of the maid 520
 The dogs with crouch and whimper paid;
 And, at her whistle, on her hand
 The falcon took his favorite stand,
 Closed his dark wing, relaxed his eye,
 Nor, though unhooded, sought to fly.
 And, trust, while in such guise she stood,
 Like fabled Goddess of the wood,
 That if a father's partial thought
 O'erweighed her worth and beauty aught,
 Well might the lover's judgment fail 530
 To balance with a juster scale;
 For with each secret glance he stole,
 The fond enthusiast sent his soul.

XXV

Of stature fair, and slender frame,
 But firmly knit, was Malcolm Græme.
 The belted plaid and tartan hose
 Did ne'er more graceful limbs disclose;
 His flaxen hair, of sunny hue,
 Curled closely round his bonnet blue.
 Trained to the chase, his eagle eye 540
 The ptarmigan in snow could spy;

Each pass, by mountain, lake, and heath,
He knew, through Lennox and Menteith;
Vain was the bound of dark-brown doe
When Malcolm bent his sounding bow,
And scarce that doe, though winged with
fear,

Outstripped in speed the mountaineer:
Right up Ben Lomond could he press,
And not a sob his toil confess.
His form accorded with a mind 550
Lively and ardent, frank and kind;
A blither heart, till Ellen came,
Did never love nor sorrow tame;
It danced as lightsome in his breast
As played the feather on his crest.
Yet friends, who nearest knew the youth,
His scorn of wrong, his zeal for truth,
And bards, who saw his features bold
When kindled by the tales of old,
Said, were that youth to manhood grown, 560
Not long should Roderick Dhu's renown
Be foremost voiced by mountain fame,
But quail to that of Malcolm Græme.

XXVI

Now back they wend their watery way,
And, 'O my sire!' did Ellen say,
'Why urge thy chase so far astray?
And why so late returned? And why'
The rest was in her speaking eye.
'My child, the chase I follow far,
'T is mimicry of noble war; 570
And with that gallant pastime reft
Were all of Douglas I have left.
I met young Malcolm as I strayed
Far eastward, in Glenfinlas' shade;
Nor strayed I safe, for all around
Hunters and horsemen scoured the ground.
This youth, though still a royal ward,
Risked life and land to be my guard,
And through the passes of the wood
Guided my steps, not unpursued; 580
And Roderick shall his welcome make,
Despite old spleen, for Douglas' sake.
Then must he seek Strath-Endrick glen,
Nor peril aught for me again.'

XXVII

Sir Roderick, who to meet them came,
Reddened at sight of Malcolm Græme,
Yet, not in action, word, or eye,
Failed aught in hospitality.
In talk and sport they whiled away
The morning of that summer day;
But at high noon a courier light 590

Held secret parley with the knight,
Whose moody aspect soon declared
That evil were the news he heard.
Deep thought seemed toiling in his head;
Yet was the evening banquet made
Ere he assembled round the flame
His mother, Douglas, and the Græme,
And Ellen too; then cast around
His eyes, then fixed them on the ground, 600
As studying phrase that might avail
Best to convey unpleasant tale.
Long with his dagger's hilt he played,
Then raised his haughty brow, and said:—

XXVIII

'Short be my speech;—nor time affords,
Nor my plain temper, glozing words.
Kinsman and father,—if such name
Douglas vouchsafe to Roderick's claim;
Mine honored mother;—Ellen,—why,
My cousin, turn away thine eye?— 610
And Græme, in whom I hope to know
Full soon a noble friend or foe,
When age shall give thee thy command,
And leading in thy native land,—
List all!—The King's vindictive pride
Boasts to have tamed the Border-side, Where chiefs, with hound and hawk who
came
To share their monarch's sylvan game,
Themselves in bloody toils were snared,
And when the banquet they prepared, 620
And wide their loyal portals flung,
O'er their own gateway struggling hung.
Loud cries their blood from Meggat's
mead,
From Yarrow braes and banks of Tweed,
Where the lone streams of Ettrick glide,
And from the silver Teviot's side;
The dales, where martial clans did ride,
Are now one sheep-walk, waste and wide.
This tyrant of the Scottish throne,
So faithless and so ruthless known, 630
Now hither comes; his end the same,
The same pretext of sylvan game.
What grace for Highland Chiefs, judge ye
By fate of Border chivalry.
Yet more; amid Glenfinlas' green,
Douglas, thy stately form was seen.
This by espial sure I know:
Your counsel in the streight I show.'

XXIX

Ellen and Margaret fearfully
Sought comfort in each other's eye, 640

Then turned their ghastly look, each one,
 This to her sire, that to her son.
 The hasty color went and came
 In the bold cheek of Malcolm Grame,
 But from his glance it well appeared
 'T was but for Ellen that he feared;
 While, sorrowful, but undismayed,
 The Douglas thus his counsel said:
 'Brave Roderick, though the tempest roar,
 It may but thunder and pass o'er; 650
 Nor will I here remain an hour,
 To draw the lightning on thy bower;
 For well thou know'st, at this gray head
 The royal bolt were fiercest sped.
 For thee, who, at thy King's command,
 Canst aid him with a gallant hand,
 Submission, homage, humbled pride,
 Shall turn the Monarch's wrath aside.
 Poor remnants of the Bleeding Heart,
 Ellen and I will seek apart 660
 The refuge of some forest cell;
 There, like the hunted quarry, dwell,
 Till on the mountain and the moor
 The stern pursuit be passed and o'er.' —

XXX

'No, by mine honor,' Roderick said,
 'So help me Heaven, and my good blade!
 No, never! Blasted be yon Pine,
 My father's ancient crest and mine,
 If from its shade in danger part
 The lineage of the Bleeding Heart! 670
 Hear my blunt speech: grant me this maid
 To wife, thy counsel to mine aid;
 To Douglas, leagued with Rhoderick Dhu,
 Will friends and allies flock enow;
 Like cause of doubt, distrust, and grief,
 Will bind to us each Western Chief.
 When the loud pipes my bridal tell,
 The Links of Forth shall hear the knell,
 The guards shall start in Stirling's porch;
 And when I light the nuptial torch, 680
 A thousand villages in flames
 Shall scare the slumbers of King James! —
 Nay, Ellen, blench not thus away,
 And, mother, cease these signs, I pray;
 I meant not all my heat might say. —
 Small need of inroad or of fight,
 When the sage Douglas may unite
 Each mountain clan in friendly band,
 To guard the passes of their land,
 Till the foiled King from pathless glen 690
 Shall bootless turn him home again.'

XXXI

There are who have, at midnight hour,
 In slumber scaled a dizzy tower,
 And, on the verge that beetled o'er
 The ocean tide's incessant roar,
 Dreamed calmly out their dangerous
 dream,
 Till wakened by the morning beam;
 When, dazzled by the eastern glow,
 Such startler cast his glance below,
 And saw unmeasured depth around, 700
 And heard unintermitted sound,
 And thought the battled fence so frail,
 It waved like colweb in the gale; —
 Amid his senses' giddy wheel,
 Did he not desperate impulse feel,
 Headlong to plunge himself below,
 And meet the worst his fears foreshow? —
 Thus Ellen, dizzy and astound,
 As sudden ruin yawned around,
 By crossing terrors wildly tossed, 710
 Still for the Douglas fearing most,
 Could scarce the desperate thought with-
 stand,
 To buy his safety with her hand.

XXXII

Such purpose dread could Malcolm spy
 In Ellen's quivering lip and eye,
 And eager rose to speak, — but ere
 His tongue could hurry forth his fear,
 Had Douglas marked the hectic strife,
 Where death seemed combating with life;
 For to her cheek, in feverish flood, 720
 One instant rushed the throbbing blood,
 Then ebbing back, with sudden sway,
 Left its domain as wan as clay.
 'Roderick, enough! enough!' he cried,
 'My daughter cannot be thy bride;
 Not that the blush to wooer dear,
 Nor paleness that of maiden fear.
 It may not be, — forgive her, Chief,
 Nor hazard aught for our relief.
 Against his sovereign, Douglas ne'er 730
 Will level a rebellious spear.
 'T was I that taught his youthful hand
 To rein a steed and wield a brand;
 I see him yet, the princely boy!
 Not Ellen more my pride and joy;
 I love him still, despite my wrongs
 By hasty wrath and slanderous tongues.
 O, seek the grace you well may find,
 Without a cause to mine combined!'

XXXIII

Twice through the hall the Chieftain
strode; 740

The waving of his tartans broad,
And darkened brow, where wounded pride
With ire and disappointment vied,
Seemed, by the torch's gloomy light,
Like the ill Demon of the night,
Stooping his pinions' shadowy sway
Upon the nighted pilgrim's way:
But, unrequited Love ! thy dart
Plunged deepest its envenomed smart, 749
And Roderick, with thine anguish stung,
At length the hand of Douglas wrung,
While eyes that mocked at tears before
With bitter drops were running o'er.
The death-pangs of long-cherished hope
Scarce in that ample breast had scope,
But, struggling with his spirit proud,
Convulsive heaved its checkered shroud,
While every sob — so mute were all —
Was heard distinctly through the hall.
The son's despair, the mother's look, 760
Ill might the gentle Ellen brook;
She rose, and to her side there came,
To aid her parting steps, the Græme.

XXXIV

Then Roderick from the Douglas broke —
As flashes flame through sable smoke,
Kindling its wreaths, long, dark, and low,
To one broad blaze of ruddy glow,
So the deep anguish of despair
Burst, in fierce jealousy, to air.
With stalwart grasp his hand he laid 770
On Malcolm's breast and belted plaid:
' Back, beardless boy ! ' he sternly said,
' Back, minion ! holdst thou thus at nought
The lesson I so lately taught ?
This roof, the Douglas, and that maid,
Thank thou for punishment delayed.'
Eager as greyhound on his game,
Fiercely with Roderick grappled Græme.
' Perish my name, if aught afford
Its Chieftain safety save his sword ! ' 780
Thus as they strove their desperate hand
Gripped to the dagger or the brand,
And death had been — but Douglas rose,
And thrust between the struggling foes
His giant strength: — ' Chieftains, forego !
I hold the first who strikes my foe. —
Maddmen, forbear your frantic jar !
What ! is the Douglas fallen so far,
His daughter's hand is deemed the spoil
Of such dishonorable broil ? ' 790

Sullen and slowly they unclasp,
As struck with shame, their desperate grasp,
And each upon his rival glared,
With foot advanced and blade half bared.

XXXV

Ere yet the brands aloft were flung,
Margaret on Roderick's mantle hung,
And Malcolm heard his Ellen's scream,
As faltered through terrific dream.
Then Roderick plunged in sheath his sword,
And veiled his wrath in scornful word: 800
' Rest safe till morning; pity 't were
Such cheek should feel the midnight air !
Then mayst thou to James Stuart tell,
Roderick will keep the lake and fell,
Nor lackey with his freeborn clan
The pageant pomp of earthly man.
More would he of Clan-Alpine know,
Thou canst our strength and passes show. —
Malise, what ho ! ' — his benchman came:
' Give our safe-conduct to the Græme.' 810
Young Malcolm answered, calm and bold:
' Fear nothing for thy favorite hold;
The spot an angel deigned to grace
Is blessed, though robbers haunt the place.
Thy churlish courtesy for those Reserve, who fear to be thy foes.
As safe to me the mountain way
At midnight as in blaze of day,
Though with his boldest at his back
Even Roderick Dhu beset the track. — 820
Brave Douglas, — lovely Ellen, — nay,
Nought here of parting will I say.
Earth does not hold a lonesome glen
So secret but we meet again. —
Chieftain ! we too shall find an hour, ' —
He said, and left the sylvan bower.

XXXVI

Old Allan followed to the strand —
Such was the Douglas's command —
And anxious told, how, on the morn, 829
The stern Sir Roderick deep had sworn,
The Fiery Cross should circle o'er
Dale, glen, and valley, down and moor.
Much were the peril to the Græme
From those who to the signal came;
Far up the lake 't were safest land,
Himself would row him to the strand.
He gave his counsel to the wind,
While Malcolm did, unheeding, bind,
Round dirk and pouch and broadsword
rolled,

aple plaid in tightened fold, 840 tripped his limbs to such array it might suit the watery way, —

XXXVII

spoke abrupt: 'Farewell to thee,
a of old fidelity!'
finstrel's hand he kindly pressed, — old I point a place of rest!
ereign holds in ward my land,
rle leads my vassal band;
as his foes, his friends to aid,
faleolm has but heart and blade. 850
'there be one faithful Graine
oves the chieftain of his name, ng shall honored Douglas dwell
anted stag in mountain cell;
re you pride-swollen robber dare, —
not give the rest to air!
oderick Dhu I owed him nought,
e poor service of a boat,
ft me to yon mountain-side.'
lunged he in the flashing tide. 860
'er the flood his head he bore,
outly steered him from the shore;
llan strained his anxious eye,
id the lake his form to spy,
ting across each puny wave,
ish the moon her silver gave.
the cormorant could skim,
summer plied each active limb;
inding in the moonlight dell, bouted of his weal to tell. 870
instrel heard the far halloo, yful from the shore withdrew.

CANTO THIRD

THE GATHERING

I

olls his ceaseless course. The race of yore,
danced our infancy upon their
knee,
dd our marvelling boyhood legends their heir strange ventures happed by land or sea,
re they blotted from the things that
he!
few, all weak and withered of their force,
a the verge of dark eternity,

Like stranded wrecks, the tide returning
hoarse,
To sweep them from our sight! Time rolls his ceaseless course.

Yet live there still who can remember
well, 10
How, when a mountain chief his bugle blew,
Both field and forest, dingle, cliff, and dell,
And solitary heath, the signal knew;
And fast the faithful clan around him
drew,
What time the warning note was keenly
wound,
What time aloft their kindred banner flew,
While clamorous war-pipes yelled the gathering sound,
And while the Fiery Cross glanced, like a meteor, round.

II

The Summer dawn's reflected hue
To purple changed Loch Katrine blue; 20
Mildly and soft the western breeze
Just kissed the lake, just stirred the trees,
And the pleased lake, like maiden coy,
Trembled but dimpled not for joy:
The mountain-shadows on her breast
Were neither broken nor at rest;
In bright uncertainty they lie,
Like future joys to Fancy's eye.
The water-lily to the light 30
Her chalice reared of silver bright;
The doe awoke, and to the lawn,
Begemmed with dew-drops, led her fawn;
The gray mist left the mountain-side,
The torrent showed its glistening pride;
Invisible in flecked sky
The lark sent down her revelry;
The blackbird and the speckled thrush
Good-morrow gave from brake and bush;
In answer cooed the cushat dove
Her notes of peace and rest and love. 40

III

No thought of peace, no thought of rest,
Assuaged the storm in Roderick's breast.
With sheathed broadsword in his hand,
Abrupt he paced the islet strand,
And eyed the rising sun, and laid
His hand on his impatient blade.
Beneath a rock, his vassals' care
Was prompt the ritual to prepare,
With deep and deathful meaning fraught;

For such Antiquity had taught
Was preface meet, ere yet abroad
The Cross of Fire should take its road.
The shrinking band stood oft agast
At the impatient glance he cast; —
Such glance the mountain eagle threw,
As, from the cliffs of Benvenue,
She spread her dark sails on the wind,
And, high in middle heaven reclined,
With her broad shadow on the lake,
Silenced the warblers of the brake.

IV

A heap of withered boughs was piled,
Of juniper and rowan wild,
Mingled with shivers from the oak,
Rent by the lightning's recent stroke.
Brian the Hermit by it stood,
Barefooted, in his frock and hood.
His grizzled beard and matted hair
Obscured a visage of despair;
His naked arms and legs, seamed o'er,
The scars of frantic penance bore.
That monk, of savage form and face,
The impending danger of his race
Had drawn from deepest solitude,
Far in Benharrow's bosom rude.
Not his the mien of Christian priest,
But Druid's, from the grave released,
Whose hardened heart and eye might brook
On human sacrifice to look;
And much, 't was said, of heathen lore
Mixed in the charms he muttered o'er.
The hallowed creed gave only worse
And deadlier emphasis of curse.
No peasant sought that Hermit's prayer,
His cave the pilgrim shunned with care;
The eager huntsman knew his bound,
And in mid chase called off his hound;
Or if, in lonely glen or strath,
The desert-dweller met his path,
He prayed, and signed the cross between,
While terror took devotion's mien.

V

Of Brian's birth strange tales were told.
His mother watched a midnight fold,
Built deep within a dreary glen,
Where scattered lay the bones of men
In some forgotten battle slain,
And bleached by drifting wind and rain.
It might have tamed a warrior's heart
To view such mockery of his art!
The knot-grass fettered there the hand
Which once could burst an iron band;

Beneath the broad and ample bone,
That bucklered heart to fear unknown,
A feeble and a timorous guest,
The fieldfare framed her lowly nest;
There the slow blindworm left his slime
On the fleet limbs that mocked at time;
And there, too, lay the leader's skull,
Still wreathed with chaplet, flushed and full,

For heath-bell with her purple bloom
Supplied the bonnet and the plume.
All night, in this sad glen, the maid
Sat shrouded in her mantle's shade:
She said no shepherd sought her side,
No hunter's hand her snood untied,
Yet ne'er again to braid her hair
The virgin snood did Alice wear;
Gone was her maiden glee and sport,
Her maiden girdle all too short,
Nor sought she, from that fatal night,
Or holy church or blessed rite,
But locked her secret in her breast,
And died in travail, unconfessed.

VI

Alone, among his young compeers,
Was Brian from his infant years;
A moody and heart-broken boy,
Estranged from sympathy and joy.
Bearing each taunt which careless tongue
On his mysterious lineage flung,
Whole nights he spent by moonlight pale,
To wood and stream his hap to wail,
Till, frantic, he as truth received
What of his birth the crowd believed,
And sought, in mist and meteor fire,
To meet and know his Phantom Sire!
In vain, to soothe his wayward fate,
The cloister oped her pitying gate;
In vain the learning of the age
Unclasped the sable-lettered page;
Even in its treasures he could find
Food for the fever of his mind.
Eager he read whatever tells
Of magic, cabala, and spells,
And every dark pursuit allied
To curious and presumptuous pride;
Till with fired brain and nerves o'erstrung,
And heart with mystic horrors wrung,
Desperate he sought Benharrow's den,
And hid him from the haunts of men.

VII

The desert gave him visions wild,
Such as might suit the spectre's child.

Where with black cliffs the torrents toil,
He watched the wheeling eddies boil,
Till from their foam his dazzled eyes
Beheld the River Demon rise:

The mountain mist took form and limb
Of noontide hag or goblin grim;
The midnight wind came wild and dread,
Swelled with the voices of the dead;
Far on the future battle-heath
His eye beheld the ranks of death; <sup>160</sup>
Thus the lone Seer, from mankind hurled,
Shaped forth a disembodied world.
One lingering sympathy of mind
Still bound him to the mortal kind;
The only parent he could claim
Of ancient Alpine's lineage came.
Late had he heard, in prophet's dream,
The fatal Ben-Shie's boding scream;
Sounds, too, had come in midnight blast
Of charging steeds, careering fast <sup>170</sup>
Along Benharrow's shingly side,
Where mortal horseman ne'er might ride;
The thunderbolt had split the pine, —
All augured ill to Alpine's line.
He girt his loins, and came to show
The signals of impending woe,
And now stood prompt to bless or ban,
As bade the Chieftain of his clan.

VIII

'T was all prepared; — and from the rock
A goat, the patriarch of the flock, <sup>180</sup>
Before the kindling pile was laid,
And pierced by Roderick's ready blade.
Patient the sickening victim eyed
The life-blood ebb in crimson tide
Down his clogged beard and shaggy limb,
Till darkness glazed his eyeballs dim.
The grisly priest, with murmuring prayer,
A slender crosslet framed with care,
A cubit's length in measure due;
The shaft and limbs were rods of yew, <sup>190</sup>
Whose parents in Iuch-Cailliach wave
Their shadows o'er Clan-Alpine's grave,
And, answering Lomond's breezes deep,
Soothe many a chieftain's endless sleep.
The Cross thus formed he held on high,
With wasted hand and haggard eye,
And strange and mingled feelings woke,
While his anathema he spoke: —

IX

'Woe to the clansman who shall view
This symbol of sepulchral yew, <sup>200</sup>
Forgetful that its branches grew

Where weep the heavens their holiest
dew

On Alpine's dwelling low!
Deserter of his Chieftain's trust,
He ne'er shall mingle with their dust,
But, from his sires and kindred thrust,
Each clansman's execration just
Shall doom him wrath and woe.
He paused; — the word the vassals took,
With forward step and fiery look, <sup>210</sup>
On high their naked brands they shook,
Their clattering targets wildly strook;
And first in murmur low,
Then, like the billow in his course,
That far to seaward finds his source,
And flings to shore his mustered force,
Burst with loud roar their answer hoarse,
'Woe to the traitor, woe!' <sup>220</sup>
Ben-an's gray scalp the accents knew,
The joyous wolf from covert drew,
The exulting eagle screamed afar, —
They knew the voice of Alpine's war.

X

The shout was hushed on lake and fell,
The Monk resumed his muttered spell:
Dismal and low its accents came,
The while he scathed the Cross with flame;
And the few words that reached the air,
Although the holiest name was there,
Had more of blasphemy than prayer.
But when he shook above the crowd <sup>230</sup>
Its kindled points, he spoke aloud: —
'Woe to the wretch who fails to rear
At this dread sign the ready spear!
For, as the flames this symbol sear,
His home, the refuge of his fear,
A kindred fate shall know;
Far o'er its roof the volumed flame
Clan-Alpine's vengeance shall proclaim,
While maids and matrons on his name
Shall call down wretchedness and shame, <sup>240</sup>
And infamy and woe.'
Then rose the cry of females, shrill
As goshawk's whistle on the hill,
Denouncing misery and ill,
Mingled with childhood's babbling trill
Of curses stammered slow;
Answering with imprecation dread,
'Sunk be his home in embers red!
And cursed be the meanest shed
That e'er shall hide the houseless head <sup>250</sup>
We doom to want and woe!' <sup>260</sup>
A sharp and shrieking echo gave,
Coir-Uriskin, thy goblin cave!

THE LADY OF THE LAKE

Small 1/2 inch pieces of wood were used for the legs.

And ye present the potent snow,
 And the burning breath he drew,
 And the blood in his clench'd hand,
 And the flames thro' the fiery brand,
 And the sweat that was mine dread,
 And the crown on the champion's head
 And the crown on his chieftain's aid,
 And the steel was undimmed
 And the points of sparkling wood
 And the blood among the bubbling blood,
 And the sign he reared,
 And the voice his valor was heard:
 And the love that flows from man to man,
 And the summons to his clan,
 And the war that fails to heed,
 And the love that shuns to speed !
 And the tears that the merciless eye,
 And the words the coward heart their prize !
 And the blood-stream in the earth,
 And the heart's-blood drench his hearth !
 And the living gore the spark,
 And the light, Destruction dark !
 And he the grace to him denied,
 Thought by this sign to all beside !
 He reared, no echo gave again
 The murmur of the deep Amon.

XII

Then Badurick with impatient look
From Brian's hand the symbol took:
'Speed, Mahoe, speed!' he said, and gave
The command to his henchman brave.
'The muster-place be Laurick mend —
Instant the time — speed, Mahoe, speed!' —
Like houth-bird, when the hawks pursue,
A barge across Loch Katrine flew:
High stood the henchman on the prow; 290
So rapidly the barge-men row,
The bulwarks, where they launched the boat,
Were all unbroken and afloat,
Hawing in foam and ripple still,
When it had neared the mainland hill;
And from the silver bench's side
Still was the prow three fathom wide,
When lightly bounded to the land
The messenger of blood and brand. 295

XIII

Speed, Malise, speed ! the dun deer's hide
 (On fleetest foot was never tied.
 Speed, Malise, speed ! such cause of haste

Thine active sinews never braced.
Bend 'gainst the steepy hill thy breast,
Burst down like torrent from its crest;
With short and springing footstep pass
The trembling bog and false morass;
Across the brook like roebuck bound,
And thread the brake like questing bound;
The crag is high, the scaur is deep, 310
Yet shrink not from the desperate leap:
Parched are thy burning lips and brow,
Yet by the fountain pause not now;
Herald of battle, fate, and fear,
Stretch onward in thy fleet career!
The wounded hind thou track'st not now,
Pursuest not maid through greenwood
bough,
Nor pliest thou now thy flying pace
With rivals in the mountain race;
But danger, death, and warrior deed 320
Are in thy course — speed, Malise, speed!

xiv

Fast as the fatal symbol flies,
In arms the huts and hamlets rise;
From winding glen, from upland brown,
They poured each hardy tenant down,
Nor slack'd the messenger his pace;
He showed the sign, he nam'd the place,
And, pressing forward like the wind,
Left clamor and surprise behind.
The fisherman forsook the strand,
The swarthy smith took dirk and brand;
With chang'd cheer, the mower blithe
Left in the half-cut swath his soylhe;
The herds without a keeper stray'd,
The plough was in mid-furrow stay'd,
The falconer toss'd his hawk away,
The hunter left the stag at bay;
Prompt at the signal of alarms,
Each son of Alpine rushed to arms;
So swept the tumult and affray
Along the margin of Achray.
Alas, thou lovely lake! that e'er
Thy banks should echo sounds of fear!
The rocks, the bosky thickets, sleep
So stilly on thy bosom deep,
The lark's blithe carol from the cloud
Seems for the scene too gayly loud.

xv

Speed, Malise, speed ! The lake is past,
Dunraggan's huts appear at last,
And peep, like moss-grown rocks, half
seen, 350
Half hidden in the copse so green;

There mayst thou rest, thy labor done,
 Their lord shall speed the signal on. —
 As stoops the hawk upon his prey,
 The henchman shot him down the way.
 What woeful accents load the gale?
 The funeral yell, the female wail!
 A gallant hunter's sport is o'er,
 A valiant warrior fights no more. 360
 Who, in the battle or the chase,
 At Roderick's side shall fill his place! —
 Within the hall, where torch's ray
 Supplies the excluded beams of day,
 Lies Duncan on his lowly bier,
 And o'er him streams his widow's tear.
 His stripling son stands mournful by,
 His youngest weeps, but knows not why;
 The village maids and matrons round
 The dismal coronach resound.

XVI

CORONACH

He is gone on the mountain, 370
 He is lost to the forest,
 Like a summer-dried fountain,
 When our need was the sorest.
 The font, reappearing,
 From the rain-drops shall borrow,
 But to us comes no cheering,
 To Duncan no morrow!

The hand of the reaper
 Takes the ears that are hoary,
 But the voice of the weeper 380
 Wails manhood in glory.
 The autumn winds rushing
 Waft the leaves that are searest,
 But our flower was in flushing,
 When blighting was nearest.

Fleet foot on the correi,
 Sage counsel in cumber,
 Red hand in the foray,
 How sound is thy slumber!
 Like the dew on the mountain, 390
 Like the foam on the river.
 Like the bubble on the fountain,
 Thou art gone, and forever!

XVII

See Stumrah, who, the bier beside,
 His master's corpse with wonder eyed,
 Poor Stumrah! whom his least halloo
 Could send like lightning o'er the dew,
 Bristles his crest, and points his ears,

As if some stranger step he hears.
 'Tis not a mourner's muffled tread, 400
 Who comes to sorrow o'er the dead,
 But headlong haste or deadly fear
 Urge the precipitate career.
 All stand aghast: — unheeding all,
 The henchman bursts into the hall;
 Before the dead man's bier he stood,
 Held forth the Cross besmeared with
 blood;
 'The muster-place is Lanrick mead;
 Speed forth the signal! clansmen, speed!'

XVIII

Angus, the heir of Duncan's line, 420
 Sprung forth and seized the fatal sign.
 In haste the stripling to his side
 His father's dirk and broadsword tied;
 But when he saw his mother's eye
 Watch him in speechless agony,
 Back to her opened arms he flew,
 Pressed on her lips a fond adieu, —
 'Alas!' she sobbed, — 'and yet be gone,
 And speed thee forth, like Duncan's son!' 430
 One look he cast upon the bier,
 Dashed from his eye the gathering tear,
 Breathed deep to clear his laboring breast,
 And tossed aloft his bonnet crest,
 Then, like the high-bred colt when, freed,
 First he essays his fire and speed,
 He vanished, and o'er moor and moss
 Sped forward with the Fiery Cross.
 Suspended was the widow's tear
 While yet his footsteps she could hear; 440
 And when she marked the henchman's
 eye
 Wet with unwonted sympathy,
 'Kinsman,' she said, 'his race is run
 That should have sped thine errand on;
 The oak has fallen, — the sapling bough
 Is all Duncraggan's shelter now.
 Yet trust I well, his duty done,
 The orphan's God will guard my son. —
 And you, in many a danger true,
 At Duncan's best your blades that drew,
 To arms, and guard that orphan's head!
 Let babes and women wail the dead.' 450
 Then weapon-clang and martial call
 Resounded through the funeral hall,
 While from the walls the attendant band
 Snatched sword and targe with hurried
 hand;
 And short and sitting energy
 Glanced from the mourner's sunken eye,
 As if the sounds to warrior dear

Might rouse her Duncan from his bier.
But faded soon that borrowed force; 450
Grief claimed his right, and tears their course.

XIX

Benledi saw the Cross of Fire,
It glanced like lightning up Strath-Ire.
O'er dale and hill the summons flew,
Nor rest nor pause young Angus knew;
The tear that gathered in his eye
He left the mountain-breeze to dry;
Until, where Teith's young waters roll
Betwixt him and a wooded knoll 459
That graced the sable strath with green,
The chapel of Saint Bride was seen.
Swoln was the stream, remote the bridge,
But Angus paused not on the edge;
Though the dark waves danced dizzily,
Though reeled his sympathetic eye,
He dashed amid the torrent's roar:
His right hand high the crosslet bore,
His left the pole-axe grasped, to guide
And stay his footing in the tide.
He stumbled twice, — the foam splashed 470
high,

With hoarser swell the stream raced by;
And had he fallen, — forever there,
Farewell Duncraggan's orphan heir!
But still, as if in parting life,
Firm he grasped the Cross of strife,
Until the opposing bank he gained,
And up the chapel pathway strained.

XX

A blithesome rout that morning-tide
Had sought the chapel of Saint Bride.
Her troth Tombea's Mary gave 480
To Norman, heir of Armandave,
And, issuing from the Gothic arch,
The bridal now resumed their march.
In rude but glad procession came
Bonneted sire and coif-clad dame;
And plaided youth, with jest and jeer,
Which snooded maiden would not hear;
And children, that, unwitting why,
Lent the gay about their shrilly cry;
And minstrels, that in measures vied 490
Before the young and bonny bride,
Whose downcast eye and cheek disclose
The tear and blush of morning rose.
With virgin step and bashful hand
She held the kerechief's snowy band.
The gallant bridegroom by her side

Beheld his prize with victor's pride,
And the glad mother in her ear
Was closely whispering word of cheer. 499

XXI

Who meets them at the churchyard gate?
The messenger of fear and fate!
Haste in his hurried accent lies,
And grief is swimming in his eyes.
All dripping from the recent flood,
Panting and travel-soiled he stood,
The fatal sign of fire and sword
Held forth, and spoke the appointed word:
'The muster-place is Lanrick mead;
Speed forth the signal! Norman, speed!' 510
And must he change so soon the hand
Just linked to his by holy band,
For the fell Cross of blood and brand?
And must the day so blithe that rose,
And promised rapture in the close,
Before its setting hour, divide
The bridegroom from the plighted bride?
O fatal doom! — it must! it must!
Clan-Alpine's cause, her Chieftain's trust,
Her summons dread, brook no delay;
Stretch to the race, — away! away! 520

XXII

Yet slow he laid his plaid aside,
And lingering eyed his lovely bride,
Until he saw the starting tear
Speak woe he might not stop to cheer;
Then, trusting not a second look,
In haste he sped him up the brook,
Nor backward glanced till on the heath
Where Lubnaig's lake supplies the Teith. —
What in the racer's bosom stirred? 530
The sickening pang of hope deferred,
And memory with a torturing train
Of all his morning visions vain.
Mingled with love's impatience, came
The manly thirst for martial fame;
The stormy joy of mountaineers
Ere yet they rush upon the spears;
And zeal for Clan and Chieftain burning,
And hope, from well-fought field return-
ing,
With war's red honors on his crest,
To clasp his Mary to his breast. 540
Stung by such thoughts, o'er bank and
brae,
Like fire from flint he glanced away,
While high resolve and feeling strong
Burst into voluntary song.

XXIII

SONG

The heath this night must be my bed,
The bracken curtain for my head,
My lullaby the warder's tread,
Far, far, from love and thee, Mary;
To-morrow eve, more stilly laid,
My couch may be my bloody plaid,
My vesper song thy wail, sweet maid !
It will not waken me, Mary !

I may not, dare not, fancy now
The grief that clouds thy lovely brow,
I dare not think upon thy vow,
And all it promised me, Mary.
No fond regret must Norman know;
When bursts Clan-Alpine on the foe,
His heart must be like bended bow,
His foot like arrow free, Mary.

A time will come with feeling fraught,
For, if I fall in battle fought,
Thy hapless lover's dying thought
Shall be a thought on thee, Mary.
And if returned from conquered foes,
How blithely will the evening close,
How sweet the linnets sing repose,
To my young bride and me, Mary !

XXIV

Not faster o'er thy heathery braes,
Balquidder, speeds the midnight blaze, 570
Rushing in conflagration strong
Thy deep ravines and dells along,
Wrapping thy cliffs in purple glow,
And reddening the dark lakes below;
Nor faster speeds it, nor so far,
As o'er thy heaths the voice of war.
The signal roused to martial coil
The sullen margin of Loch Veil,
Waked still Loch Doine, and to the source
Alarmed, Balvaig, thy swampy course; 580
Thence southward turned its rapid road
Adown Strath-Gartney's valley broad,
Till rose in arms each man might claim
A portion in Clan-Alpine's name,
From the gray sire, whose trembling hand
Could hardly buckle on his brand,
To the raw boy, whose shaft and bow
Were yet scarce terror to the crow.
Each valley, each sequestered glen,
Mustered its little horde of men, 590
That met as torrents from the height
In high and dales their streams unite,

Still gathering, as they pour along,
A voice more loud, a tide more strong,
Till at the rendezvous they stood
By hundreds prompt for blows and blood,
Each trained to arms since life began,
Owning no tie but to his clan,
No oath but by his chieftain's hand,
No law but Roderick Dhu's command. 600

XXV

That summer morn had Roderick Dhu
Surveyed the skirts of Benvenue,
And sent his scouts o'er hill and heath,
To view the frontiers of Menteith.
All backward came with news of truce;
Still lay each martial Greame and Bruce,
In Rednock courts no horsemen wait,
No banner waved on Cardross gate,
On Duchray's towers no beacon shone,
Nor scared the herons from Loch Cou; 610
All seemed at peace. — Now wot ye why
The Chieftain with such anxious eye,
Ere to the muster he repair,
This western frontier scanned with care ? —
In Benvenue's most darksome cleft,
A fair though cruel pledge was left;
For Douglas, to his promise true,
That morning from the isle withdrew,
And in a deep sequestered dell
Had sought a low and lonely cell. 620
By many a bard in Celtic tongue
Has Coir-nan-Uriskin been sung;
A softer name the Saxons gave,
And called the grot the Goblin Cave.

XXVI

It was a wild and strange retreat,
As e'er was trod by outlaw's feet.
The dell, upon the mountain's crest,
Yawned like a gash on warrior's breast;
Its trench had stayed full many a rock, 630
Hurled by primeval earthquake shock
From Benvenue's gray summit wild,
And here, in random ruin piled,
They frowned incumbent o'er the spot,
And formed the rugged sylvan grot.
The oak and birch with mingled shade
At noon-tide there a twilight made,
Unless when short and sudden shone
Some straggling beam on cliff or stone,
With such a glimpse as prophet's eye
Gains on thy depth, Futurity. 640
No murmur waked the solemn still,
Save tinkling of a fountain rill;
But when the wind chafed with the lake,

A sullen sound would upward break,
 With dashing hollow voice, that spoke
 The incessant war of wave and rock.
 Suspended cliffs with hideous sway
 Seemed nodding o'er the cavern gray.
 From such a den the wolf had sprung,
 In such the wild-cat leaves her young;
 Yet Douglas and his daughter fair
 Sought for a space their safety there.
 Gray Superstition's whisper dread
 Debarred the spot to vulgar tread;
 For there, she said, did fays resort,
 And satyrs hold their sylvan court,
 By moonlight tread their mystic maze,
 And blast the rash beholder's gaze.

XXVII

Now eve, with western shadows long,
 Floated on Katrine bright and stroug,
 When Roderick with a chosen few
 Repassed the heights of Benvenue.
 Above the Goblin Cave they go,
 Through the wild pass of Beal-nam-bo;
 The prompt retainers speed before,
 To launch the shallop from the shore,
 For 'cross Loch Katrine lies his way
 To view the passes of Achray,
 And place his clansmen in array.
 Yet lags the Chief in musing mind,
 Unwonted sight, his men behind.
 A single page, to bear his sword,
 Alone attended on his lord;
 The rest their way through thickets break,
 And soon await him by the lake.
 It was a fair and gallant sight,
 To view them from the neighboring height,
 By the low-levell'd sunbeam's light!
 For strength and stature, from the clan
 Each warrior was a chosen man,
 As even afar might well be seen,
 By their proud step and martial mien.
 Their feathers dance, their tartans float,
 Their targets gleam, as by the boat
 A wild and warlike group they stand,
 That well became such mountain-strand.

XXVIII

Their Chief with step reluctant still
 Was lingering on the craggy hill,
 Hard by where turned apart the road
 To Douglas's obscure abode.
 It was but with that dawning morn
 That Roderick Dhu had proudly sworn
 To drown his love in war's wild roar,
 Nor think of Ellen Douglas more;

But he who stems a stream with sand,
 And fetters flame with flaxen band,
 Has yet a harder task to prove, —
 By firm resolve to conquer love!
 Eve finds the Chief, like restless ghost,
 Still hovering near his treasure lost;
 For though his haughty heart deny
 A parting meeting to his eye,
 Still fondly strains his anxious ear
 The accents of her voice to hear,
 And inly did he curse the breeze
 That waked to sound the rustling trees.
 But hark! what mingles in the strain?
 It is the harp of Allan-bane,
 That wakes its measure slow and high,
 Attuned to sacred minstrelsy.
 What melting voice attends the strings?
 'T is Ellen, or an angel, sings.

XXIX

HYMN TO THE VIRGIN

Ave Maria! maiden mild!
 Listen to a maiden's prayer!
 Thou canst hear though from the wild,
 Thou canst save amid despair.
 Safe may we sleep beneath thy care,
 Though banished, outcast, and reviled —
 Maiden! hear a maiden's prayer;
 Mother, hear a suppliant child!
Ave Maria!

Ave Maria! undefiled!
 The flinty couch we now must share
 Shall seem with down of eider piled,
 If thy protection hover there.
 The murky cavern's heavy air Shall breathe of balm if thou hast
 smiled;
 Then, Maiden! hear a maiden's prayer,
 Mother, list a suppliant child!
Ave Maria!

Ave Maria! stainless styled!
 Foul demons of the earth and air,
 From this their wonted haunt exiled,
 Shall flee before thy presence fair.
 We bow us to our lot of care,
 Beneath thy guidance reconciled:
 Hear for a maid a maiden's prayer,
 And for a father hear a child!
Ave Maria!

XXX

Died on the harp the closing hymn, —
 Unmoved in attitude and limb,

As listening still, Clan-Alpine's lord
 Stood leaning on his heavy sword, 740
 Until the page with humble sign
 Twice pointed to the sun's decline.
 Then while his plaid he round him cast,
 'It is the last time — 't is the last,'
 He muttered thrice, — 'the last time e'er
 That angel-voice shall Roderick hear!'
 It was a goading thought, — his stride
 Hied hastier down the mountain-side;
 Sullen he flung him in the boat,
 An instant 'cross the lake it shot. 750
 They landed in that silvery bay,
 And eastward held their hasty way,
 Till, with the latest beams of light,
 The band arrived on Laurick height,
 Where mustered in the vale below
 Clan-Alpine's men in martial show.

XXXI

A various scene the clansmen made:
 Some sat, some stood, some slowly strayed;
 But most, with mantles folded round,
 Were couched to rest upon the ground, 760
 Scarce to be known by curious eye
 From the deep heather where they lie,
 So well was matched the tartan screen
 With heath-bell dark and brackens green;
 Unless where, here and there, a blade
 Or lance's point a glimmer made,
 Like glow-worm twinkling through the shade.
 But when, advancing through the gloom,
 They saw the Chieftain's eagle plume,
 Their shout of welcome, shrill and wide, 770
 Shook the steep mountain's steady side.
 Thrice it arose, and lake and fell
 Three times returned the martial yell;
 It died upon Bochart's plain,
 And Silence claimed her evening reign.

CANTO FOURTH

THE PROPHECY

I

'THE rose is fairest when 't is budding
 And hope is brightest when it dawns
 from fears;
 The rose is sweetest washed with morning
 dew,
 And love is loveliest when embalmed in tears.

O wilding rose, whom fancy thus endears,
 I bid your blossoms in my bonnet wave,
 Emblem of hope and love through future
 years!
 Thus spoke young Norman, heir of Ar-
 mandave,
 What time the sun arose on Vennachar's broad wave.

II

Such fond conceit, half said, half sung, 10
 Love prompted to the bridegroom's tongue.
 All while he stripped the wild-rose spray,
 His axe and bow beside him lay,
 For on a pass 'twixt lake and wood
 A wakeful sentinel he stood.
 Hark! — on the rock a footstep rung,
 And instant to his arms he sprung.
 'Stand, or thou diest! — What, Malise? —
 soon

Art thou returned from Braes of Doune.
 By thy keen step and glance I know, 20
 Thou bring'st us tidings of the foe.' —
 For while the Fiery Cross hied on,
 On distant scout had Malise gone. —
 'Where sleeps the Chief?' the henchman
 said.

'Apart, in yonder misty glade;
 To his lone couch I'll be your guide.' —
 Then called a slumberer by his side,
 And stirred him with his slackened bow, —
 'Up, up, Glentarkin! rouse thee, ho!
 We seek the Chieftain; on the track 30
 Keep eagle watch till I come back.'

III

Together up the pass they sped:
 'What of the foeman?' Norman said. —
 'Varying reports from near and far;
 This certain, — that a band of war
 Has for two days been ready boune,
 At prompt command to march from Doune;
 King James the while, with princely powers,
 Holds revelry in Stirling towers.
 Soon will this dark and gathering cloud 40
 Speak on our glens in thunder loud.
 Inured to bide such bitter bout,
 The warrior's plaid may bear it out;
 But, Norman, how wilt thou provide
 A shelter for thy bonny bride?' —
 'What! know ye not that Roderick's care
 To the lone isle hath caused repair
 Each maid and matron of the clan,

And every child and aged man
Unfit for arms; and given his charge, 50
Nor skiff nor shallop, boat nor barge,
Upon these lakes shall float at large,
But all beside the islet moor,
That such dear pledge may rest secure? —

IV

'T is well advised, — the Chieftain's plan
Bespeaks the father of his clan.
But wherefore sleeps Sir Roderick Dhu
Apart from all his followers true?
'It is because last evening-tide
Brian an augury hath tried, 60
Of that dread kind which must not be Unless in dread extremity,
'The Taghairm called; by which, afar,
Our sires foresaw the events of war.
Duncraggan's milk-white bull they slew.' —

MALISE

'Ah! well the gallant brute I knew!
The choicest of the prey we had
When swept our merry-men Gallangad.
His hide was snow, his horns were dark,
His red eye glowed like fiery spark; 70
So fierce, so tameless, and so fleet,
Sore did he cumber our retreat,
And kept our stoutest kerns in awe,
Even at the pass of Beal 'maha.
But steep and flinty was the road,
And sharp the hurrying pikeman's goad,
And when we came to Dinnan's Row
A child might scathless stroke his brow.'

V

NORMAN

'That bull was slain; his reeking hide
They stretched the cataract beside, 80
Whose waters their wild tumult toss
Adown the black and craggy boss
Of that huge cliff whose ample verge
Tradition calls the Hero's Targe.
Couched on a shelf beneath its brink,
Close where the thundering torrents sink,
Rocking beneath their headlong sway,
And drizzled by the ceaseless spray,
Midst groan of rock and roar of stream,
'The wizard waits prophetic dream. 90
'Nor distant rests the Chief; — but hush!
See, gliding slow through mist and bush,
The hermit gains yon rock, and stands
To gaze upon our slumbering bands.
'Seems he not, Malise, like a ghost,

That hovers o'er a slaughtered host?
Or raven on the blasted oak,
That, watching while the deer is broke,
His morsel claims with sullen croak?'

MALISE

'Peace! peace! to other than to me 100
Thy words were evil augury;
But still I hold Sir Roderick's blade
Clan-Alpine's omen and her aid,
Not aught that, gleaned from heaven or
hell,
You fiend-begotten Monk can tell.
The Chieftain joins him, see — and now
Together they descend the brow.'

VI

And, as they came, with Alpine's Lord
The Hermit Monk held solemn word: —
'Roderick! it is a fearful strife, 110
For man endowed with mortal life,
Whose shroud of sentient clay can still Feel feverish pang and fainting chill,
Whose eye can stare in stony trance,
Whose hair can rouse like warrior's
lance, —

'T is hard for such to view, unfurled,
The curtain of the future world.
Yet, witness every quaking limb,
My sunken pulse, mine eyeballs dim,
My soul with harrowing anguish torn, 120
This for my Chieftain have I borne! —
The shapes that sought my fearful couch
A human tongue may ne'er avouch;
No mortal man — save he, who, bred
Between the living and the dead,
Is gifted beyond nature's law —
Had e'er survived to say he saw.
At length the fateful answer came
In characters of living flame!
Not spoke in word, nor blazed in scroll, 130
But borne and branded on my soul: —
WHICH SPILLS THE FOREMOST FORMAN'S
LIFE,
THAT PARTY CONQUERS IN THE STRIFE.'

VII

'Thanks, Brian, for thy zeal and care!
Good is thine augury, and fair.
Clan-Alpine ne'er in battle stood
But first our broadsword's tasted blood.
A surer victim still I know,
Self-offered to the auspicious blow:
A spy has sought my land this morn, — 140
No eve shall witness his return!

My followers guard each pass's mouth,
To east, to westward, and to south;
Red Murdoch, bribed to be his guide,
Has charge to lead his steps aside,
Till in deep path or dingle brown
He light on those shall bring him down. —
But see, who comes his news to show!
Malise! what tidings of the foe? 149

VIII

At Doune, o'er many a spear and glaive,
Two Barons prond their banners wave.
I saw the Moray's silver star,
And marked the sable pale of Mar.
By Alpine's soul, high tidings those!
I love to hear of worthy foes.
When move they on? 'To-morrow's noon
Will see them here for battle bouné.
'Then shall it see a meeting stern!
But, for the place, — say, couldst thou learn

Nought of the friendly clans of Earn? 150
Strengthened by them, we well might bide
The battle on Benledi's side.
Thou couldst not? — well! Clan-Alpine's
men

Shall man the Trosachs' shaggy glen;
Within Loch Katrine's gorge we'll fight,
All in our maids' and matrons' sight,
Each for his hearth and household fire,
Father for child, and son for sire,
Lover for maid beloved! — But why —
Is it the breeze affects mine eye? 170
Or dost thou come, ill-omened tear!
A messenger of doubt or fear?
No! sooner may the Saxon lance
Unfix Benledi from his stance,
Than doubt or terror can pierce through
The unyielding heart of Roderick Dhu!
'Tis stubborn as his trusty targe.
Each to his post! — all know their charge.
The pibroch sounds, the bands advance,
The broadswords gleam, the banners
dance, 180

Obedient to the Chieftain's glance. —
I turn me from the martial roar,
And seek Coir-Uriskin once more.

IX

Where is the Douglas? — he is gone;
And Ellen sits on the gray stone
Fast by the cave, and makes her moan,
While vainly Allan's words of cheer
Are poured on her unheeding ear.
'He will return — dear lady, trust! —

With joy return; — he will — he must. 190
Well was it time to seek afar
Some refuge from impending war,
When e'en Clan-Alpine's rugged swarm
Are cowed by the approaching storm.
I saw their boats with many a light,
Floating the livelong yesternight,
Shifting like flashes darted forth
By the red streamers of the north;
I marked at morn how close they ride,
Thick moored by the lone islet's side, 200
Like wild ducks couching in the fen
When stoops the hawk upon the glen.
Since this rude race dare not abide
The peril on the mainland side,
Shall not thy noble father's care
Some safe retreat for thee prepare?'

X

ELLEN

'No, Allan, no! Pretext so kind
My wakeful terrors could not blind.
When in such tender tone, yet grave,
Douglas a parting blessing gave, 210
The tear that glistened in his eye
Drowned not his purpose fixed and high.
My soul, though feminine and weak,
Can image his; e'en as the lake,
Itself disturbed by slightest stroke,
Reflects the invulnerable rock.
He hears report of battle rife,
He deems himself the cause of strife.
I saw him reddén when the theme
Turned, Allan, on thine idle dream 220
Of Malcolm Grème in fetters bound,
Which I, thou saidst, about him wound.
Think'st thou he trowed thine omen aught?
O no! 't was apprehensive thought
For the kind youth, — for Roderick too —
Let me be just — that friend so true;
In danger both, and in our cause!
Minstrel, the Douglas dare not pause.
Why else that solemn warning given,
'If not on earth, we meet in heaven!' 230
Why else, to Cambus-kenneth's fane,
If eve return him not again,
Am I to hie and make me known?
Alas! he goes to Scotland's throne,
Buys his friends' safety with his own;
He goes to do — what I had done,
Had Douglas' daughter been his son!'

XI

'Nay, lovely Ellen! — dearest, nay!
If aught should his return delay,

He only named yon holy fane
 As sitting place to meet again.
 Be sure he's safe, and for the Græme, —
 Heaven's blessing on his gallant name ! —
 My visioned sight may yet prove true,
 Nor bode of ill to him or you.
 When did my gifted dream beguile ?
 Think of the stranger at the isle,
 And think upon the harpings slow
 That presaged this approaching woe !
 Sooth was my prophecy of fear;
 Believe it when it augurs cheer.
 Would we had left this dismal spot !
 Ill luck still haunts a fairy grot.
 Of such a wondrous tale I know —
 Dear lady, change that look of woe,
 My harp was wont thy grief to cheer.'

ELLEN

' Well, be it as thou wilt; I hear,
 But cannot stop the bursting tear.'
 The Minstrel tried his simple art,
 But distant far was Ellen's heart.

XII

BALLAD

ALICE BRAND

Merry it is in the good greenwood,
 When the mavis and merle are singing,
 When the deer sweeps by, and the hounds
 are in cry,
 And the hunter's horn is ringing.

' O Alice Brand, my native land
 Is lost for love of you;
 And we must hold by wood and wold,
 As outlaws wont to do.

' O Alice, 't was all for thy locks so bright,
 And 't was all for thine eyes so blue, 270
 That on the night of our luckless flight
 Thy brother bold I slew.

' Now must I teach to hew the beech
 The hand that held the glaive,
 For leaves to spread our lowly bed,
 And stakes to fence our cave.

' And for vest of pall, thy fingers small,
 That wont on harp to stray,
 A cloak must shear from the slaughtered
 deer,
 To keep the cold away.'

240

' O Richard ! if my brother died,
 'T was but a fatal chance;
 For darkling was the battle tried,
 And fortune sped the lance.

' If pall and vair no more I wear,
 Nor thou the crimson sheen,
 As warm, we 'll say, is the russet gray,
 As gay the forest-green.

250

' And, Richard, if our lot be hard,
 And lost thy native land,
 Still Alice has her own Richard,
 And he his Alice Brand.'

290

XIII

BALLAD CONTINUED

'T is merry, 't is merry, in good greenwood;
 So blithe Lady Alice is singing;
 On the beech's pride, and oak's brown side,
 Lord Richard's axe is ringing.

260

Up spoke the moody Elfin King,
 Who woned within the hill, —
 Like wind in the porch of a ruined church,
 His voice was ghostly shrill.

300

' Why sounds yon stroke on beech and
 oak,
 Our moonlight circle's screen ?
 Or who comes here to chase the deer,
 Beloved of our Elfin Queen ?
 Or who may dare on wold to wear
 The fairies' fatal green ?

' Up, Urgan, up ! to yon mortal hie,
 For thou wert christened man;
 For cross or sign thou wilt not fly,
 For muttered word or ban.

310

' Lay on him the curse of the withered heart,
 The curse of the sleepless eye;
 Till he wish and pray that his life would
 part,
 Nor yet find leave to die.'

XIV

BALLAD CONTINUED

'T is merry, 't is merry, in good green-
 wood,
 Though the birds have stilled their sing-
 ing;
 The evening blaze doth Alice raise,
 And Richard is fagots bringing.

280

Up Urgan starts, that hideous dwarf,
 Before Lord Richard stands, 320
 And, as he crossed and blessed himself,
 'I fear not sign,' quoth the grisly elf,
 'That is made with bloody hands.'

But out then spoke she, Alice Brand,
 That woman void of fear, —
 'And if there 's blood upon his hand,
 'T is but the blood of deer.'

'Now loud thou liest, thou bold of mood!
 It cleaves unto his hand,
 The stain of thine own kindly blood, 330
 The blood of Ethert Brand.'

Then forward stepped she, Alice Brand,
 And made the holy sign, —
 'And if there 's blood on Richard's hand,
 A spotless hand is mine.

'And I conjure thee, demon elf,
 By Him whom demons fear,
 To show us whence thou art thyself,
 And what thine errand here?'

XV

BALLAD CONTINUED

'T is merry, 't is merry, in Fairy-land, 340
 When fairy birds are singing,
 When the court doth ride by their monarch's
 side,
 With bit and bridle ringing:

'And gayly shines the Fairy-land —
 But all is glistening show,
 Like the idle gleam that December's beam
 Can dart on ice and snow.

'And fading, like that varied gleam,
 Is our inconstant shape,
 Who now like knight and lady seem, 350
 And now like dwarf and ape.

'It was between the night and day,
 When the Fairy King has power,
 That I sunk down in a sinful fray,
 And 'twixt life and death was snatched away
 To the joyless Elfin bower.

'But wist I of a woman bold,
 Who thrice my brow durst sign,
 I might regain my mortal mould,
 As fair a form as thine.' 360

She crossed him once — she crossed him twice —

That lady was so brave;
 The fouler grew his goblin hue,
 The darker grew the cave.

She crossed him thrice, that lady bold;
 He rose beneath her hand
 The fairest knight on Scottish mould,
 Her brother, Ethert Brand!

Merry it is in good greenwood,
 When the mavis and merle are sing-
 ing, 370
 But merrier were they in Dunfermline gray,
 When all the bells were ringing.

XVI

Just as the minstrel sounds were staid,
 A stranger climbed the steepy glade;
 His martial step, his stately mien,
 His hunting-suit of Lincoln green,
 His eagle glance, remembrance claims —
 'T is Snowdon's Knight, 't is James Fitz-
 James.

Ellen beheld as in a dream,
 Then, starting, scarce suppressed scream: 380

'O stranger! in such hour of fear
 What evil hap has brought thee here?'
 'An evil hap how can it be
 That bids me look again on thee?
 By promise bound, my former guide
 Met me betimes this morning-tide,
 And marshalled over bank and bourne
 The happy path of my return.'
 'The happy path! — what! said he nought

Of war, of battle to be fought, 390
 Of guarded pass?' 'No, by my faith!
 Nor saw I aught could augur scathe.'
 'O haste thee, Allan, to the kern:
 Yonder his tartans I discern;
 Learn thou his purpose, and conjure
 That he will guide the stranger sure! —
 What prompted thee, unhappy man?
 The meanest serf in Roderick's clan
 Had not been bribed, by love or fear,
 Unknown to him to guide thee here.' 400

XVII

'Sweet Ellen, dear my life must be,
 Since it is worthy care from thee;
 Yet life I hold but idle breath
 When love or honor's weighed with death

Then let me profit by my chance,
 And speak my purpose bold at once.
 I come to hear thee from a wild
 Where ne'er before such blossom smiled,
 By this soft hand to lead thee far
 From frantic scenes of feud and war. 410
 Near Bochester my horses wait;
 They bear us soon to Stirling gate.
 I'll place thee in a lovely bower,
 I'll guard thee like a tender flower —
 'O hush, Sir Knight! 't were female art,
 To say I do not read thy heart;
 Too much, before, my selfish ear
 Was idly soothed my praise to bear.
 That fatal but hath lured thee back,
 In deathful hour, o'er dangerous track; 420
 And how, O how, can I atone
 The wreck my vanity brought on! —
 One way remains — I'll tell him all —
 Yea! struggling bosom, forth it shall!
 Thou, whose light folly bears the blame,
 May thine own pardon with thy shame!
 But first — my father is a man
 Outlawed and exiled, under ban;
 The price of blood is on his head,
 With me, 't were infamy to wed. 430
 Will'st thoust thou speak? — then hear the truth!

Fitz-James, there is a noble youth
 If yet he is! — espoused for me
 And mine to dread extremity —
 Thou hast the secret of my heart;
 Forgive, be generous, and depart!

XVIII

Fitz-James knew every wily train
 A lady's fickle heart to gain,
 But here he knew and felt them vain.
 There shot no glance from Ellen's eye, 440
 To give her steadfast speech the lie;
 In maiden confidence she stood,
 Though mantled in her cheek the blood,
 And told her love with such a sigh
 Of deep and hopeless agony.
 As death had sealed her Malcolm's doom
 And she sat sorrowing on his tomb,
 Hope vanished from Fitz-James's eye,
 But not with hope fled sympathy.
 He proffered to attend her side, 450
 As brother would a sister guide.
 'O little know'st thou Roderick's heart!
 Safer for both we go apart.
 O haste thee, and from Allan learn
 If thou mayst trust yon wily kern.
 With hand upon his forehead laid,

The conflict of his mind to shade,
 A parting step or two he made;
 Then, as some thought had crossed his brain,
 He paused, and turned, and came again. 460

XIX

'Hear, lady, yet a parting word! —
 It chanced in fight that my poor sword
 Preserved the life of Scotland's lord.
 This ring the grateful Monarch gave,
 And bade, when I had boon to crave,
 To bring it back, and boldly claim
 The recompense that I would name.
 Ellen, I am no courtly lord,
 But one who lives by lance and sword,
 Whose castle is his helm and shield, 470
 His lordship the embattled field.
 What from a prince can I demand,
 Who neither reck of state nor land?
 Ellen, thy hand — the ring is thine;
 Each guard and usher knows the sign.
 Seek thou the King without delay;
 This signet shall secure thy way:
 And claim thy suit, whate'er it be,
 As ransom of his pledge to me.
 He placed the golden circlet on, 480 Paused — kissed her hand — and then was gone.

The aged Minstrel stood aghast.
 So hastily Fitz-James shot past.
 He joined his guide, and wending down
 The ridges of the mountain brown,
 Across the stream they took their way
 That joins Loch Katrine to Achray.

XX

All in the Trosachs' glen was still,
 Noontide was sleeping on the hill: 490
 Sudden his guide whooped loud and high —
 'Murdoch! was that a signal cry?' —
 He stammered forth, 'I shout to scare
 Yon raven from his dainty fare.'
 He looked — he knew the raven's prey,
 His own brave steed: 'Ah! gallant gray!
 For thee — for me, perchance — 't were well
 We ne'er had seen the Trosachs' dell. —
 Murdoch, move first — but silently;
 Whistle or whoop, and thou shalt die!' 500
 Jealous and sullen on they fared,
 Each silent, each upon his guard.

XXI

Now wound the path its dizzy ledge
 Around a precipice's edge,

When lo ! a wasted female form,
 Blighted by wrath of sun and storm,
 In tattered weeds and wild array,
 Stood on a cliff beside the way,
 And glancing round her restless eye,
 Upon the wood, the rock, the sky,
 Seemed nought to mark, yet all to spy. 510
 Her brow was wreathed with gaudy broom;

With gesture wild she waved a plume
 Of feathers, which the eagles fling
 To crag and cliff from dusky wing;
 Such spoils her desperate step had sought,
 Where scarce was footing for the goat.
 The tartan plaid she first descried,
 And shrieked till all the rocks replied;
 As loud she laughed when near they
 drew,

For then the Lowland garb she knew; 520
 And then her hands she wildly wrung,
 And then she wept, and then she sung —
 She sung ! — the voice, in better time,
 Perchance to harp or lute might chime;
 And now, though strained and roughened,
 still
 Rung wildly sweet to dale and hill.

XXII

SONG

They bid me sleep, they bid me pray,
 They say my brain is warped and wrung —
 I cannot sleep on Highland brae,
 I cannot pray in Highland tongue. 530
 But were I now where Allan glides,
 Or heard my native Devan's tides,
 So sweetly would I rest, and pray
 That Heaven would close my wintry day !

'T was thus my hair they bade me braid,
 They made me to the church repair;
 It was my bridal morn, they said,
 And my true love would meet me there.
 But woe betide the cruel guile 539
 That drowned in blood the morning smile !
 And woe betide the fairy dream !
 I only waked to sob and scream.

XXIII

'Who is this maid ? what means her lay ?
 She hovers o'er the hollow way,
 And flutters wide her mantle gray,
 As the lone heron spreads his wing,
 By twilight, o'er a haunted spring.'
 'T is Blanche of Devan,' Murdoch said,

'A crazed and captive Lowland maid,
 Ta'en on the morn she was a bride, 540
 When Roderick forayed Devan-side.
 The gay bridegroom resistance made,
 And felt our Chief's unconquered blade.
 I marvel she is now at large,
 But oft she 'scapes from Maudlin's
 charge. —

Hence, brain-sick fool !' — He raised his bow : —

'Now, if thou strik'st her but one blow,
 I'll pitch thee from the cliff as far
 As ever peasant pitched a bar !'

'Thanks, champion, thanks !' the Maniac
 cried, 560

And pressed her to Fitz-James's side.

'See the gray pennons I prepare,
 To seek my true love through the air !
 I will not lend that savage groon,
 To break his fall, one downy plume !
 No ! — deep amid disjointed stones,
 The wolves shall batten on his bones,
 And then shall his detested plaid,
 By bush and brier in mid-air stayed,
 Wave forth a banner fair and free, 570
 Meet signal for their revelry.'

XXIV

'Hush thee, poor maiden, and be still !'
 'O ! thou look'st kindly, and I will.
 Mine eye has dried and wasted been,
 But still it loves the Lincoln green;
 And, though mine ear is all unstrung,
 Still, still it loves the Lowland tongue.

'For O my sweet William was forester
 true,
 He stole poor Blanche's heart away ! 579
 His coat it was all of the greenwood hue,
 And so blithely he trilled the Lowland
 lay !

'It was not that I meant to tell . . .
 But thou art wise and guessest well.'
 Then, in a low and broken tone,
 And hurried note, the song went on.
 Still on the Clansman fearfully
 She fixed her apprehensive eye,
 Then turned it on the Knight, and then
 Her look glanced wildly o'er the glen.

XXV

'The toils are pitched, and the stakes are set, — 590
 Ever sing merrily, merrily;

The bows they bend, and the knives they whet,
Hunters live so cheerily.

'It was a stag, a stag of ten,
Bearing its branches sturdily;
He came stately down the glen, —
Ever sing hardily, hardily.

'It was there he met with a wounded
doe,
She was bleeding deathfully;
She warned him of the toils below, 600
O, so faithfully, faithfully!

'He had an eye, and he could heed, —
Ever sing warily, warily;
He had a foot, and he could speed, —
Hunters watch so narrowly.'

XXVI

Fitz-James's mind was passion-tossed,
When Ellen's hints and fears were lost;
But Murdoch's shout suspicion wrought,
And Blanche's song conviction brought.
Not like a stag that spies the snare, 610
But lion of the hunt aware,
He waved at once his blade on high,
'Disclose thy treachery, or die!
Forth at full speed the Clansman flew,
But in his race his bow he drew.
The shaft just grazed Fitz-James's crest,
And thrilled in Blanche's faded breast. —
Murdoch of Alpine! prove thy speed,
For ne'er had Alpine's son such need;
With heart of fire, and foot of wind, 620
The fierce avenger is behind!
Fate judges of the rapid strife —
The forfeit death — the prize is life;
Thy kindred ambush lies before,
Close couched upon the heathery moor;
Them couldst thou reach! — it may not
be —

Thine ambushed kin thou ne'er shalt see,
The fiery Saxon gains on thee! —
Resistless speeds the deadly thrust,
As lightning strikes the pine to dust; 630
With foot and hand Fitz-James must strain

Ere he can win his blade again.
Bent o'er the fallen with falcon eye,
He grimly smiled to see him die,
Then slower wended back his way,
Where the poor maiden bleeding lay.

XXVII

She sat beneath the birchen tree,
Her elbow resting on her knee;
She had withdrawn the fatal shaft,
And gazed on it, and feebly laughed; 640
Her wreath of broom and feathers gray,
Daggled with blood, beside her lay.
The Knight to staunch the life-stream tried, —

'Stranger, it is in vain!' she cried.
'This hour of death has given me more
Of reason's power than years before;
For, as these ebbing veins decay,
My frenzied visions fade away.
A helpless injured wretch I die,
And something tells me in thine eye 650
That thou wert mine avenger born.
Seest thou this tress? — O, still I've worn
This little tress of yellow hair,
Through danger, frenzy, and despair!
It once was bright and clear as thine,
But blood and tears have dimmed its shine.
I will not tell thee when 't was shred,
Nor from what guiltless victim's head, —
My brain would turn! — but it shall wave
Like plumage on thy helmet brave, 660
Till sun and wind shall bleach the stain,
And thou wilt bring it me again.
I waver still. — O God! more bright
Let reason beam her parting light! —
O, by thy knighthood's honored sign,
And for thy life preserved by mine,
When thou shalt see a darksome man,
Who boasts him Chief of Alpine's Clan,
With tartans broad and shadowy plume,
And hand of blood, and brow of gloom, 670
Be thy heart bold, thy weapon strong,
And wreak poor Blanche of Devan's
wrong! —
They watch for thee by pass and fell . . .
Avoid the path . . . O God! . . . farewell!'

XXVIII

A kindly heart had brave Fitz-James;
Fast poured his eyes at pity's claims;
And now, with mingled grief and ire,
He saw the murdered maid expire.
'God, in my need, be my relief,
As I wreak this on yonder Chief!' 680
A look from Blanche's tresses fair
He blended with her bridegroom's hair;
The mingled braid in blood he dyed,
And placed it on his bonnet-side:

' By Him whose word is truth, I swear,
No other favor will I wear,
Till this sad token I imbrue
In the best blood of Roderick Dhu! —
But hark! what means yon faint halloo?
The chase is up, — but they shall know, 690
The stag at bay 's a dangerous foe.'
Barred from the known but guarded way, Through copse and cliffs Fitz-James must
stray,

And oft must change his desperate track,
By stream and precipice turned back.
Heartless, fatigued, and faint, at length,
From lack of food and loss of strength,
He couched him in a thicket hoar,
And thought his toils and perils o'er: —
Of all my rash adventures past, 700
This frantic feat must prove the last!
Who e'er so mad but might have guessed
That all this Highland hornet's nest
Would muster up in swarms so soon
As e'er they heard of bands at Doune? —
Like bloodhounds now they search me out, —

Hark, to the whistle and the shout! —
If farther through the wilds I go,
I only fall upon the foe:
I'll couch me here till evening gray, 710
Then darkling try my dangerous way.'

XXIX

The shades of eve come slowly down,
The woods are wrapt in deeper brown,
The owl awakens from her dell,
The fox is heard upon the fell;
Enough remains of glimmering light
To guide the wanderer's steps aright,
Yet not enough from far to show
His figure to the watchful foe.
With cautious step and ear awake, 720
He climbs the crag and threads the brake;
And not the summer solstice there
Tempered the midnight mountain air,
But every breeze that swept the wold
Benumbed his drenched limbs with cold.
In dread, in danger, and alone,
Famished and chilled, through ways unknown,
Tangled and steep, he journeyed on;
Till, as a rock's huge point he turned,
A watch-fire close before him burned. 730

XXX

Beside its embers red and clear,
Basked in his plaid a mountaineer;

And up he sprung with sword in hand, —
'Thy name and purpose! Saxon, stand!'
'A stranger.' 'What dost thou require?'
'Rest and a guide, and food and fire.
My life 's beset, my path is lost,
The gale has chilled my limbs with frost.'
'Art thou a friend to Roderick?' 'No.'
'Thou dar'st not call thyself a foe?' 740
'I dare! to him and all the band
He brings to aid his murderous hand.'
'Bold words! — but, though the beast of
game

The privilege of chase may claim,
Though space and law the stag we lend,
Ere hound we slip or bow we bend,
Who ever recked, where, how, or when,
The prowling fox was trapped or slain?
Thus treacherous scouts, — yet sure they
lie,

Who say thou cam'st a secret spy! — 750
'They do, by heaven! — come Roderick Dhu,

And of his clan the boldest two,
And let me but till morning rest,
I write the falsehood on their crest.'
'If by the blazo I mark aright,
Thou bear'st the belt and spur of Knight.'
'Then by these tokens mayst thou know
Each proud oppressor's mortal foe.'
'Enough, enough; sit down and share
A soldier's couch, a soldier's fare.' 760

XXXI

He gave him of his Highland cheer,
The hardened flesh of mountain deer;
Dry fuel on the fire he laid,
And bade the Saxon share his plaid.
He tended him like welcome guest,
Then thus his further speech addressed: —
'Stranger, I am to Roderick Dhu
A clansman born, a kinsman true:
Each word against his honor spoke
Demands of me avenging stroke; 770
Yet more, — upon thy fate, 't is said,
A mighty augury is laid.
It rests with me to wind my horn, —
Thou art with numbers overborne;
It rests with me, here, brand to brand,
Worn as thou art, to bid thee stand;
But, not for clan, nor kindred's cause,
Will I depart from honor's laws;
To assail a wearied man were shame,
And stranger is a holy name; 780
Guidance and rest, and food and fire,
In vain he never must require.

Then rest thee here till dawn of day;
Myself will guide thee on the way,
O'er stock and stone, through watch and ward,

Till past Clan-Alpine's outmost guard,
As far as Coilantogle's ford;
From thence thy warrant is thy sword.
'I take thy courtesy, by heaven,
As freely as 't is nobly given!'
'Well, rest thee; for the bittern's cry

Sings us the lake's wild lullaby.'
With that he shook the gathered heath,
And spread his plaid upon the wreath;
And the brave foemen, side by side,
Lay peaceful down like brothers tried,
And slept until the dawning beam
Purpled the mountain and the stream.

CANTO FIFTH

THE COMBAT

I

FAIR as the earliest beam of eastern light,
When first, by the bewildered pilgrim
spied,

It smiles upon the dreary brow of night,
And silvers o'er the torrent's foaming
tide,

And lights the fearful path on mountain-
side, —

Fair as that beam, although the fairest far,

Giving to horror grace, to danger pride,
Shine martial Faith, and Courtesy's bright star,

Through all the wreckful storms that cloud
the brow of War.

II

That early beam, so fair and sheen,
Was twinkling through the hazel screen,
When, rousing at its glimmer red,
The warriors left their lowly bed,
Looked out upon the dappled sky,
Muttered their soldier matins by,
And then awaked their fire, to steal,
As short and rude, their soldier meal.
That o'er, the Gael around him threw
His graceful plaid of varied hue,
And, true to promise, led the way,
By thicket green and mountain gray.
A wildering path! — they winded now
Along the precipice's brow,

Commanding the rich scenes beneath,
The windings of the Forth and Teith,
And all the vales between that lie,
Till Stirling's turrets melt in sky;
Then, sunk in copse, their farthest glance
Gained not the length of horseman's lance.
'T was oft so steep, the foot was fain
Assistance from the hand to gain;
So tangled oft that, bursting through,
Each hawthorn shed her showers of
dew, —

That diamond dew, so pure and clear,
It rivals all but Beauty's tear!

III

At length they came where, stern and steep,

The hill sinks down upon the deep.

Here Vennachar in silver flows,

There, ridge on ridge, Benledi rose;

Ever the hollow path twined on,

Beneath steep bank and threatening stone;

A hundred men might hold the post

With hardihood against a host.

The rugged mountain's scanty cloak

Was dwarfish shrubs of birch and oak,

With shingles bare, and cliffs between,

And patches bright of bracken green,

And heather black, that waved so high,

It held the copse in rivalry.

But where the lake slept deep and still,

Dank osiers fringed the swamp and hill;

And oft both path and hill were torn,

Where wintry torrent down had borne,

And heaped upon the cumbered land

Its wreck of gravel, rocks, and sand.

So toilsome was the road to trace,

The guide, abating of his pace,

Led slowly through the pass's jaws,

And asked Fitz-James by what strange cause

He sought these wilds, traversed by few,

Without a pass from Roderick Dhu.

IV

'Brave Gael, my pass, in danger tried,

Hangs in my belt and by my side;

Yet, sooth to tell,' the Saxon said,

'I dreamt not now to claim its aid.

When here, but three days since, I came,

Bewildered in pursuit of game,

All seemed as peaceful and as still

As the mist slumbering on yon hill;

Thy dangerous Chief was then afar,

Nor soon expected back from war.

Thus said, at least, my mountain-guide,
Though deep perchance the villain lied.
'Yet why a second venture try?'
'A warrior thou, and ask me why! —
Moves our free course by such fixed cause
As gives the poor mechanic laws?
Enough, I sought to drive away
The lazy hours of peaceful day;
Slight cause will then suffice to guide 80
A Knight's free footsteps far and wide, —
A falcon flown, a greyhound strayed,
The merry glance of mountain maid;
Or, if a path be dangerous known,
The danger's self is lure alone.'

V

'Thy secret keep, I urge thee not; —
Yet, ere again ye sought this spot,
Say, heard ye nought of Lowland war,
Against Clan-Alpine, ruisel by Mar?'
'No, by my word; — of bands prepared 90
To guard King James's sports I heard;
Nor doubt I aught, but, when they hear
This muster of the mountaineer,
Their pennons will abroad be flung,
Which else in Doune had peaceful hung.'
'Free be they flung! for we were loath
Their silken folds should feast the moth.
Free be they flung! — as free shall wave
Clan-Alpine's pine in banner brave.
But, stranger, peaceful since you came, 100
Bewildered in the mountain-game,
Whence the bold boast by which you show
Vich-Alpine's vowed and mortal foe?'
'Warrior, but yester-morn I knew Nought of thy Chieftain, Roderick Dhu,
Save as an outlawed desperate man,
The chief of a rebellious clan,
Who, in the Regent's court and sight,
With ruffian dagger stabbed a knight;
Yet this alone might from his part 110
Sever each true and loyal heart.'

VI

Wrathful at such arraignment foul,
Dark lowered the clansman's sable scowl,
A space he paused, then sternly said,
'And heardst thou why he drew his blade?
Heardst thou that shameful word and blow
Brought Roderick's vengeance on his foe?
What recked the Chieftain if he stood
On Highland heath or Holy-Rood?
He rights such wrong where it is given, 120
If it were in the court of heaven.'
'Still was it outrage; — yet, 't is true,

Not then claimed sovereignty his due;
While Albany with feeble hand
Held borrowed truncheon of command,
The young King, mewed in Stirling tower,
Was stranger to respect and power.
But then, thy Chieftain's robber life! —
Winning mean prey by causeless strife,
Wrenching from ruined Lowland swain 130
His hords and harvest reared in vain, —
Methinks a soul like thine should scorn
The spoils from such foul foray borne.'

VII

The Gael beheld him grim the while,
And answered with disdainful smile:
'Saxon, from yonder mountain high,
I marked thee send delighted eye
Far to the south and east, where lay,
Extended in succession gay,
Deep waving fields and pastures green, 140
With gentle slopes and groves between: —
These fertile plains, that softened vale,
Were once the birthright of the Gael;
The stranger came with iron hand,
And from our fathers reft the land.
Where dwell we now? See, rudely swell
Crag over crag, and fell o'er fell.
Ask we this savage hill we tread
For fattened steer or household bread,
Ask we for flocks these shingles dry, 150
And well the mountain might reply, —
"To you, as to your sires of yore,
Belong the target and claymore!
I give you shelter in my breast,
Your own good blade must win the rest."
Pent in this fortress of the North,
Think'st thou we will not sally forth,
To spoil the spoiler as we may,
And from the robber rend the prey?
Ay, by my soul! — While on you plain 160
The Saxon rears one shock of grain,
While of ten thousand herds there strays
But one along yon river's maze, —
The Gael, of plain and river heir,
Shall with strong hand redeem his share.
Where live the mountain Chiefs who hold
That plundering Lowland field and fold
Is aught but retribution true?
Seek other cause 'gainst Roderick Dhu.'

VIII

Answered Fitz-James: 'And, if I sought,
Think'st thou no other could be brought?
What deem ye of my path waylaid? 170
My life given o'er to ambuscade?'

'As of a meed to rashness due:
 Hadst thou sent warning fair and true, —
 I seek my hound or falcon strayed,
 I seek, good faith, a Highland maid, —
 Free hadst thou been to come and go;
 But secret path marks secret foe.
 Nor yet for this, even as a spy, 180
 Hadst thou, unheard, been doomed to die,
 Save to fulfil an augury.'
 'Well, let it pass; nor will I now
 Fresh cause of enmity avow,
 To chafe thy mood and cloud thy brow.
 Enough, I am by promise tied
 To match me with this man of pride:
 Twice have I sought Clan-Alpine's glen
 In peace; but when I come again,
 I come with banner, brand, and bow, 190
 As leader seeks his mortal foe.
 For love-lorn swain in lady's bower
 Ne'er panted for the appointed hour,
 As I, until before me stand
 This rebel Chieftain and his band !'

IX

'Have then thy wish !' — He whistled shrill,
 And he was answered from the hill;
 Wild as the scream of the curlew,
 From crag to crag the signal flew.
 Instant, through copse and heath, arose 200
 Bonnets and spears and bended bows;
 On right, on left, above, below,
 Sprung up at once the lurking foe;
 From shingles gray their lances start,
 The bracken bush sends forth the dart,
 The rushes and the willow-wand
 Are bristling into axe and brand,
 And every tuft of broom gives life
 To plaided warrior armed for strife.
 That whistle garrisoned the glen 210
 At once with full five hundred men,
 As if the yawning hill to heaven
 A subterranean host had given.
 Watching their leader's beck and will,
 All silent there they stood and still.
 Like the loose crags whose threatening mass
 Lay tottering o'er the hollow pass,
 As if an infant's touch could urge
 Their headlong passage down the verge,
 With step and weapon forward flung, 220
 Upon the mountain-side they hung.
 The Mountaineer cast glance of pride
 Along Benedi's living side,
 Then fixed his eye and sable brow
 Full on Fitz-James: 'How say'st thou now ?'

These are Clan-Alpine's warriors true;
 And, Saxon, — I am Roderick Dhu !'

X

Fitz-James was brave: — though to his heart
 The life-blood thrilled with sudden start,
 He manned himself with dauntless air, 230
 Returned the Chief his haughty stare,
 His back against a rock he bore,
 And firmly placed his foot before: —
 'Come one, come all ! this rock shall fly
 From its firm base as soon as I.'
 Sir Roderick marked, — and in his eyes
 Respect was mingled with surprise,
 And the stern joy which warriors feel
 In foeman worthy of their steel.
 Short space he stood — then waved his hand: 240
 Down sunk the disappearing band;
 Each warrior vanished where he stood,
 In broom or bracken, heath or wood;
 Sunk brand and spear and bended bow,
 In osiers pale and copses low;
 It seemed as if their mother Earth
 Had swallowed up her warlike birth.
 The wind's last breath had tossed in air
 Pennon and plaid and plumage fair, —
 The next but swept a lone hill-side, 250
 Where heath and fern were waving wide:
 The sun's last glance was glinted back
 From spear and glaive, from targe and jack;
 The next, all unreflected, shone
 On bracken green and cold gray stone.

XI

Fitz-James looked round, — yet scarce believed
 The witness that his sight received;
 Such apparition well might seem
 Delusion of a dreiful dream.
 Sir Roderick in suspense he eyed, 260
 And to his look the Chief replied:
 'Fear nought — nay, that I need not say —
 But — doubt not aught from mine array.
 Thou art my guest; — I pledged my word
 As far as Coilantogle ford:
 Nor would I call a clansman's brand
 For aid against one valiant hand,
 Though on our strife lay every vale
 Rent by the Saxon from the Gael.
 So move we on; — I only meant 270
 To show the reed on which you leant,
 Deeming this path you might pursue

Without a pass from Roderick Dhu.
They moved; — I said Fitz-James was
brave

As ever knight that belted glaive,
Yet dare not say that now his blood
Kept on its wont and tempered flood,
As, following Roderick's stride, he drew
That seeming lonesome pathway through,
Which yet by fearful proof was rife 280
With lances, that, to take his life,
Waited but signal from a guide,
So late dishonored and defied.
Ever, by stealth, his eye sought round
The vanished guardians of the ground,
And still from copse and heather deep
Fancy saw spear and broadsword peep,
And in the plover's shrilly strain
The signal whistle heard again.
Nor breathed he free till far behind 290
The pass was left; for then they wind
Along a wide and level green,
Where neither tree nor tuft was seen,
Nor rush nor bush of broom was near,
To hide a bonnet or a spear.

XII

The Chief in silence strode before,
And reached that torrent's sounding shore,
Which, daughter of three mighty lakes,
From Vennachar in silver breaks,
Sweeps through the plain, and ceaseless mines 300

On Bochartle the mouldering lines,
Where Rome, the Empress of the world,
Of yore her eagle wings unfurled.
And here his course the Chieftain stayed,
Threw down his target and his plaid,
And to the Lowland warrior said:
'Bold Saxon! to his promise just,
Vieh-Alpine has discharged his trust.
This murderous Chief, this ruthless man,
This head of a rebellious clan, 310
Hath led thee safe, through watch and
ward,

Far past Clan-Alpine's outmost guard.
Now, man to man, and steel to steel,
A Chieftain's vengeance thou shalt feel.
See, here all vantageless I stand,
Armed like thyself with single brand;
For this is Coilantogle ford,
And thou must keep thee with thy sword.'

XIII

Saxon paused: 'I ne'er delayed,
For man bade me draw my blade; 320

Nay more, brave Chief, I vowed thy death;
Yet sure thy fair and generous faith,
And my deep debt for life preserved,
A better meed have well deserved:
Can nought but blood our feud atone?
Are there no means?' — 'No, stranger,
none!

And hear, — to fire thy flagging zeal, —
The Saxon cause rests on thy steel;
For thus spoke Fate by prophet bred
Between the living and the dead: 330
"Who spills the foremost foeman's life,
His party conquers in the strife."
'Then, by my word,' the Saxon said,
'The riddle is already read.
Seek yonder brake beneath the cliff, —
There lies Red Murdoch, stark and stiff.
Thus Fate hath solved her prophecy;
Then yield to Fate, and not to me.
To James at Stirling let us go,
When, if thou wilt be still his foe, 340
Or if the King shall not agree
To grant thee grace and favor free,
I plight mine honor, oath, and word
That, to thy native strengths restored,
With each advantage shalt thou stand
That aids thee now to guard thy land.'

XIV

Dark lightning flashed from Roderick's eye:
'Soars thy presumption, then, so high,
Because a wretched kern ye slew,
Homage to name to Roderick Dhu? 350
He yields not, he, to man nor Fate!
Thou add'st but fuel to my hate; —
My clansman's blood demands revenge.
Not yet prepared? — By heaven, I change
My thought, and hold thy valor light
As that of some vain carpet knight,
Who ill deserved my courteous care,
And whose best boast is but to wear
A braid of his fair lady's hair.'
'I thank thee, Roderick, for the word! 360
It nerves my heart, it steels my sword;
For I have sworn this braid to stain
In the best blood that warms thy vein.
Now, trace, farewell! and, ruth, begone! —
Yet think not that by thee alone,
Proud Chief! can courtesy be shown;
Though not from copse, or heath, or cairn,
Start at my whistle clansmen stern,
Of this small horn one feeble blast
Would fearful odds against thee cast. 370
But fear not — doubt not — which thou wilt —

We try this quarrel hilt to hilt.
Then each at once his falchion drew,
Each on the ground his scabbard threw,
Each looked to sun and stream and plain
As what they ne'er might see again;
Then foot and point and eye opposed,
In dubious strife they darkly closed.

XV

Ill fared it then with Roderick Dhu,
That on the field his target he threw, 380
Whose brazen studs and tough bull-hide
Had death so often dashed aside;
For, trained abroad his arms to wield,
Fitz-James's blade was sword and shield.
He practised every pass and ward,
To thrust, to strike, to feint, to guard;
While less expert, though stronger far,
The Gael maintained unequal war.
Three times in closing strife they stood,
And thrice the bazon blade drank blood; 390
Nounted draught, no scanty tide,
The graining flood the tartans dyed.
Fierce Roderick felt the fatal drain,
And showered his blows like wintry rain;
And, as firm rock or castle-roof
Against the winter shower is proof,
The sea, invulnerable still,
Fooled his wild rage by steady skill;
Till, at advantage ta'en, his brand 399
Forced Roderick's weapon from his hand,
And backward borne upon the sea,
Brought the proud Chieftain to his knee.

XVI

'Now yield thee, or by Him who made
This world, thy heart's blood dyes my blade!'
'Thy threats, thy mercy, I defy!
Let rampant yield, who fears to die.'
Like soldier darting from his coil,
Like wolf that dashes through the toil,
Like mountain-cat who guards her young,
Full at Fitz-James's throat he sprung; 410
Recoiled, but recked not of a wound,
And locked his arms his foeman round. —
Now, gallant Saxon, hold thine own!
No maiden's hand is round thee thrown!
That desperate grasp thy frame might feel
Through bars of brass and triple steel!
They tug, they strain! down, down they go,
The Gael above, Fitz-James below.
The Chieftain's gripe his throat com-
pressed,

His knee was planted on his breast; 420
His clotted locks he backward threw,
Across his brow his hand he drew,
From blood and mist to clear his sight,
Then gleamed aloft his dagger bright!
But hate and fury ill supplied
The stream of life's exhausted tide,
And all too late the advantage came,
To turn the odds of deadly game;
For, while the dagger gleamed on high,
Reeled soul and sense, reeled brain and
eye. 430

Down came the blow! but in the benth
The erring blade found bloodless sheath.
The struggling foe may now unclasp
The fainting Chief's relaxing grasp;
Unwounded from the dreadful close,
But breathless all, Fitz-James arose.

XVII

He faltered thanks to Heaven for life,
Redeemed, unhop'd, from desperate strife:
Next on his foe his look he cast,
Whose every gasp appeared his last; 440
In Roderick's gore he dipped the braid. —
'Poor Blanche! thy wrongs are dearly
paid;
Yet with thy foe must die, or live,
The praise that faith and valor give.'
With that he blew a bugle note,
Undid the collar from his throat,
Unbonneted, and by the wave
Sat down his brow and hands to lave.
Then faint afar are heard the feet
Of rushing steeds in gallop fleet; 450
The sounds increase, and now are seen
Four mounted squires in Lincoln green;
Two who bear lance, and two who lead
By loosened rein a saddled steed;
Each onward held his headlong course,
And by Fitz-James reined up his horse, —
With wonder viewed the bloody spot, —
'Exclaim not, gallants! question not. —
You, Herbert and Luffness, alight,
And bind the wounds of yonder knight; 460
Let the gray palfrey bear his weight,
We destined for a fairer freight,
And bring him on to Stirling straight;
I will before at better speed,
To seek fresh horse and fitting weed.
The sun rides high: — I must be boun'd
To see the archer-game at noon;
But lightly Bavard clears the lea. —
De Vaux and Herries, follow me.

XVIII

Bayard, stand ! — the steed eyed, 470
 hing neck and bended head,
 ring eye and quivering ear,
 loved his lord to hear.
 Fitz-James in stirrup stayed,
 upon the saddle laid,
 thed his left hand in the mane,
 tly bounded from the plain,
 a the horse his armed heel,
 ed his courage with the steel. 480
 the fiery steed in air,
 'sat erect and fair,
 a bolt from steel crossbow
 ched, along the plain they go.
 bed that rapid torrent through,
 arhonic's hill they flew;
 e gallop pricked the Knight,
 ymen followed as they might.
 y banks, swift Teith, they ride,
 e race they mock thy tide;
 d Lendrick now are past, 490
 nstown lies behind them cast;
 e the bannered towers of Doune,
 t in distant woodland soon;
 mmond sees the hoofs strike fire,
 eep like breeze through Ochter-
 re;
 rk just glance and disappear
 brow of ancient Kier;
 he their coursers' sweltering sides,
 th ! amid thy sluggish tides,
 e opposing shore take ground, 500
 th, with scramble, and with bound.
 ed they leave thy cliffs, Craig-rth !
 the bulwark of the North,
 ling, with her towers and town,
 ir fleet career look down.

XIX

flinty path they strained,
 as steed the leader reined;
 to his squire he flung,
 ant to his stirrup sprung: —
 hou, De Vaux, yon woodsman 510
 ay,
 ward holds the rocky way,
 e tall and poor array ?
 thou the firm yet active stride,
 eb he scales the mountain side ?
 thou from whence he comes, or hom ?
 ay word; — a burly groom

He seems, who in the field or chase
 A baron's train would nobly grace' —
 'Out, out, De Vaux ! can fear supply,
 And jealousy, no sharper eye ? 520
 Afar, ere to the hill he drew,
 That stately form and step I knew;
 Like form in Scotland is not seen,
 Treads not such step on Scottish green.
 'T is James of Douglas, by Saint Serle !
 The uncle of the banished Earl.
 Away, away, to court, to show
 The near approach of dreaded foe:
 The King must stand upon his guard;
 Douglas and he must meet prepared.' 530
 Then right-hand wheeled their steeds, and
 straight
 They won the Castle's postern gate.

XX

The Douglas who had bent his way
 From Cambus-kenneth's abbey gray,
 Now, as he climbed the rocky shelf,
 Held sad communion with himself: —
 'Yes ! all is true my fears could frame;
 A prisoner lies the noble Grème,
 And fiery Roderick soon will feel 540
 The vengeance of the royal steel.
 I, only I, can ward their fate, —
 God grant the ransom come not late !
 The Abbess hath her promise given,
 My child shall be the bride of Heaven; —
 Be pardoned one repining tear !
 For He who gave her knows how dear,
 How excellent ! — but that is by,
 And now my business is — to die. —
 Ye towers ! within whose circuit dread
 A Douglas by his sovereign bled; 550
 And thou, O sad and fatal mound !
 That oft hast heard the death-axe sound,
 As on the noblest of the land
 Fell the stern headsman's bloody hand. —
 The dungeon, block, and nameless tomb
 Prepare — for Douglas seeks his doom !
 But hark ! what blithe and jolly peal
 Makes the Franciscan steeple reel ?
 And see ! upon the crowded street,
 In motley groups what masquers 560
 meet !
 Banner and pageant, pipe and drum,
 And merry morrice-dancers come.
 I guess, by all this quaint array,
 The burghers hold their sports to-day.
 James will be there; he loves such show,
 Where the good yeoman bends his bow,
 And the tough wrestler foils his foe,

As well as where, in proud career,
The high-born tilter shivers spear.
I'll follow to the Castle-park, 570
And play my prize; — King James shall
mark
If age has tamed these sinews stark,
Whose force so oft in happier days
His boyish wonder loved to praise.'

XXI

The Castle gates were open flung,
The quivering drawbridge rocked and rung,
And echoed loud the flinty street
Beneath the courser's clattering feet,
As slowly down the steep descent
Fair Scotland's King and nobles went, 580
While all along the crowded way
Was jubilee and loud buzza.
And ever James was bending low
To his white jeannet's saddle-bow,
Doffing his cap to city dame,
Who smiled and blushed for pride and shame.

And well the simperer might be vain, —
He chose the fairest of the train.
Gravely he greets each city sire,
Commends each pageant's quaint attire, 590
Gives to the dancers thanks aloud,
And smiles and nods upon the crowd,
Who rend the heavens with their ac-claims, —

'Long live the Commons' King, King
James!'

Behind the King thronged peer and knight,
And noble dame and damsel bright,
Whose fiery steeds ill brooked the stay
Of the steep street and crowded way.
But in the train you might discern
Dark lowering brow and visage stern; 600
There nobles mourned their pride restrained,
And the mean burgher's joys disdained;
And chiefs, who, hostage for their clan,
Were each from home a banished man,
There thought upon their own gray tower,
Their waving woods, their feudal power,
And deemed themselves a shameful part
Of pageant which they cursed in heart.

XXII

Now, in the Castle-park, drew out
Their checkered bands the joyous rout. 610
There morricers, with bell at beel
And blade in hand, their mazes wheel;
But chief, beside the butts, there stand

Bold Robin Hood and all his band, —
Friar Tuck with quarterstaff and cowl,
Old Scathelocke with his surly scowl,
Maid Marian, fair as ivory bone,
Scarlet, and Mutch, and Little John;
Their bugles challenge all that will,
In archery to prove their skill. 620
The Douglas bent a bow of might, —
His first shaft centred in the white,
And when in turn he shot again,
His second split the first in twain.
From the King's hand must Douglas take
A silver dart, the archer's stake;
Fondly he watched, with watery eye,
Some answering glance of sympathy, —
No kind emotion made reply!
Indifferent as to archer wight, 630
The monarch gave the arrow bright.

XXIII

Now, clear the ring! for, hand to hand,
The manly wrestlers take their stand.
Two o'er the rest superior rose,
And proud demanded mightier foes, —
Nor called in vain, for Douglas came. —
For life is Hugh of Larbert lame;
Scarce better John of Allon's fare,
Whom senseless home his comrades bare.
Prize of the wrestling match, the King 640
To Douglas gave a golden ring,
While coldly glanced his eye of blue,
As frozen drop of wintry dew.
Douglas would speak, but in his breast
His struggling soul his words suppressed;
Indignant then he turned him where
Their arms the brawny yeomen bare,
To hurl the massive bar in air.
When each his utmost strength had shown,
The Douglas rent an earth-fast stone 650
From its deep bed, then heaved it high,
And sent the fragment through the sky
A rood beyond the farthest mark;
And still in Stirling's royal park,
The gray-haired sires, who know the past,
To strangers point the Douglas cast,
And moralize on the decay
Of Scottish strength in modern day.

XXIV

The vale with loud applauses rang,
The Ladies' Rock sent back the clang. 660
The King, with look unmoved, bestowed
A purse well filled with pieces broad.
Indignant smiled the Douglas proud,
And threw the gold among the crowd,

Who now with anxious wonder scan,
 And sharper glance, the dark gray man;
 Till whispers rose among the throng,
 That heart so free, and hand so strong,
 Must to the Douglas blood belong. 660
 The old men marked and shook the head,
 To see his hair with silver spread,
 And winked aside, and told each son
 Of feats upon the English done,
 Ere Douglas of the stalwart hand
 Was exiled from his native land.
 The women praised his stately form,
 Though wrecked by many a winter's storm;
 The youth with awe and wonder saw
 His strength surpassing Nature's law.
 Thus judged, as is their wont, the crowd, 680
 Till murmurs rose to clamors loud.
 But not a glance from that proud ring
 Of peers who circled round the King
 With Douglas held communion kind,
 Or called the banished man to mind;
 No, not from those who at the chase
 Once held his side the honored place,
 Begirt his board, and in the field
 Found safety underneath his shield;
 For he whom royal eyes disown, 690
 When was his form to courtiers known!

XXV

The Monarch saw the gambols flag,
 And bade let loose a gallant stag,
 Whose pride, the holiday to crown,
 Two favorite greyhounds should pull down,
 That venison free and Bourdeaux wine
 Might serve the archery to dine.
 But Lufra, — whom from Douglas' side
 Nor bribe nor threat could e'er divide,
 The fleetest hound in all the North, — 700
 Brave Lufra saw, and darted forth.
 She left the royal hounds midway,
 And dashing on the antlered prey,
 Sunk her sharp muzzle in his flank,
 And deep the flowing life-blood drank.
 The king's stout huntsman saw the sport
 By strange intruder broken short,
 Came up, and with his leash unbound
 In anger struck the noble hound.
 The Douglas had endured, that morn, 710
 The King's cold look, the nobles' scorn,
 And last, and worst to spirit proud,
 Had borne the pity of the crowd;
 But Lufra had been fondly bred,
 To share his board, to watch his bed,
 And 't would Ellen Lufra's neck
 In glee with garlands deck;

They were such playmates that with name
 Of Lufra Ellen's image came.
 His stifled wrath is brimming high, 720
 In darkened brow and flashing eye;
 As waves before the bark divide,
 The crowd gave way before his stride;
 Needs but a buffet and no more,
 The groom lies senseless in his gore.
 Such blow no other hand could deal,
 Though gauntleted in glove of steel.

XXVI

Then clamored loud the royal train,
 And brandished swords and staves amain,
 But stern the Baron's warning: 'Back! 730
 Back, on your lives, ye menial pack!
 Beware the Douglas. — Yes! behold, King James! The Douglas, doomed of
 old,
 And vainly sought for near and far,
 A victim to atone the war,
 A willing victim, now attends,
 Nor craves thy grace but for his friends.' —
 'Thus is my clemency repaid?
 Presumptuous Lord!' the Monarch said:
 'Of thy misproud ambitious clan, 740
 Thou, James of Bothwell, wert the man,
 The only man, in whom a foe
 My woman-mercy would not know;
 But shall a Monarch's presence brook
 Injurious blow and haughty look? —
 What ho! the Captain of our Guard!
 Give the offender fitting ward. —
 Break off the sports!' — for tumult rose,
 And yeomen 'gan to bend their bows, —
 'Break off the sports!' he said and
 frowned, 750
 'And bid our horsemen clear the ground.'

XXVII

Then uproar wild and misarray
 Marred the fair form of festal day.
 The horsemen pricked among the crowd,
 Repelled by threats and insult loud;
 To earth are borne the old and weak,
 The timorous fly, the women shriek;
 With flint, with shaft, with staff, with bar,
 The hardier urge tumultuous war.
 At once round Douglas darkly sweep 760
 The royal spears in circle deep,
 And slowly scale the pathway steep,
 While on the rear in thunder pour
 The rabble with disordered roar.
 With grief the noble Douglas saw
 The Commons rise against the law,

And to the leading soldier said:
 'Sir John of Hyndford, 't was my blade,
 That knighthood on thy shoulder laid;
 For that good deed permit me then
 A word with these misguided men. —

XXVIII

'Hear, gentle friends, ere yet for me
 Ye break the hands of fealty.
 My life, my honor, and my cause,
 I tender free to Scotland's laws.
 Are these so weak as must require
 The aid of your misguided ire?
 Or if I suffer causeless wrong,
 Is then my selfish rage so strong,
 My sense of public weal so low,
 That, for mean vengeance on a foe,
 Those cords of love I should unbind
 Which knit my country and my kind?
 O no! Believe, in yonder tower
 It will not soothe my captive hour,
 To know those spears our foes should dread
 For me in kindred gore are red:
 To know, in fruitless brawl begun,
 For me that mother wails her son,
 For me that widow's mate expires,
 For me that orphans weep their sires,
 That patriots mourn insulted laws,
 And curse the Douglas for the cause.
 O let your patience ward such ill,
 And keep your right to love me still!

XXIX

The crowd's wild fury sunk again
 In tears, as tempests melt in rain.
 With lifted hands and eyes, they prayed
 For blessings on his generous head
 Who for his country felt alone,
 And prized her blood beyond his own.
 Old men upon the verge of life
 Blessed him who stayed the civil strife;
 And mothers held their babes on high,
 The self-devoted Chief to spy,
 Triumphant over wrongs and ire,
 To whom the prattlers owed a sire.
 Even the rough soldier's heart was moved;
 As if behind some bier beloved,
 With trailing arms and drooping head,
 The Douglas up the hill he led,
 And at the Castle's battled verge,
 With sighs resigned his honored charge.

XXX

The offended Monarch rode apart,
 With bitter thought and swelling heart,

And would not now vouchsafe again
 Through Stirling streets to lead his train.
 'O Lenox, who would wish to rule
 This changeling crowd, this common fool?
 Hear'st thou,' he said, 'the loud acclaim
 With which they shout the Douglas name?
 With like acclaim the vulgar throat
 Strained for King James their morning
 note;
 With like acclaim they hailed the day
 When first I broke the Douglas sway;
 And like acclaim would Douglas greet
 If he could hurl me from my seat.
 Who o'er the herd would wish to reign,
 Fantastic, fickle, fierce, and vain?
 Vain as the leaf upon the stream,
 And fickle as a changeful dream;
 Fantastic as a woman's mood,
 And fierce as Frenzy's fevered blood.
 Thou many-headed monster-thing,
 O who would wish to be thy king? —

XXXI

'But soft! what messenger of speed
 Spurs hitherward his panting steed?
 I guess his cognizance afar —
 What from our cousin, John of Mar?'
 'He prays, my liege, your sports keep bound
 Within the safe and guarded ground;
 For some foul purpose yet unknown, —
 Most sure for evil to the throne, —
 The outlawed Chieftain, Roderick Dhu,
 Has summoned his rebellious crew;
 'T is said, in James of Bothwell's aid
 These loose banditti stand arrayed.
 The Earl of Mar this morn from Doune
 To break their muster marched, and soon
 Your Grace will hear of battle fought;
 But earnestly the Earl besought,
 Till for such danger he provide,
 With scanty train you will not ride.'

XXXII

'Thou warn'st me I have done amiss, —
 I should have earlier looked to this;
 I lost it in this bustling day. —
 Retrace with speed thy former way;
 Spare not for spoiling of thy steed,
 The best of mine shall be thy need.
 Say to our faithful Lord of Mar,
 We do forbid the intended war;
 Roderick this morn in single fight
 Was made our prisoner by a knight,
 And Douglas hath himself and cause

ited to our kingdom's laws.
 dings of their leaders lost don dissolve the mountain host,
 ould we that the vulgar feel,
 for Chief's crimes, avenging steel.
 far our message, Braco, fly!' 870
 ned his steed, — 'My liege, I lie,
 e I cross this lily lawn
 the broadswords will be drawn.'
 of the flying courser spurned,
 his towers the King returned.

XXXIII

h King James's mood that day
 gay feast and minstrel lay;
 ere dismissed the courtly throng,
 an cut short the festal song.
 is upon the saddened town 880
 ening sunk in sorrow down.
 rghers spoke of civil jar,
 ored feuds and mountain war,
 ray, Mar, and Roderick Dhu,
 in arms; — the Douglas too,
 ourned him pent within the hold,
 e stout Earl William was of old.' — ere his word the speaker stayed,
 iger on his lip he laid,
 ted to his dagger blade. 890 led horsemen from the west
 ing to the Castle pressed,
 ay talkers said they bore
 of tight on Katrine's shore; n the deadly fray begun,
 ted till the set of sun.
 ddy rumor shook the town,
 sed the Night her pennons brown.

CANTO SIXTH

THE GUARD-ROOM

I

a, awakening, through the smoky air
 e dark city casts a sullen glance,
 g each caitiff to his task of care,
 uful man the sad inheritance;
 ming revellers from the lagging
 lance,
 ng the prowling robber to his den;
 on battled tower the warder's
 lance,
 warning student pale to leave his en,
 id his drowsy eyes to the kind urse of men.

What various scenes, and O, what scenes of woe, 10

Are witnessed by that red and struggling beam!
 The fevered patient, from his pallet low,
 Through crowded hospital beholds it
 stream;
 The ruined maiden trembles at its gleam,
 The debtor wakes to thought of gyve
 and jail.
 The love-lorn wretch starts from torment-
 ing dream;
 The wakeful mother, by the glimmering
 pale,
 Trims her sick infant's couch, and soothes
 his feeble wail.

II

At dawn the towers of Stirling rang
 With soldier-step and weapon-clang, 20
 While drums with rolling note foretell
 Relief to weary sentinel.
 Through narrow loop and casement barred,
 The sunbeams sought the Court of Guard,
 And, struggling with the smoky air,
 Deadened the torches' yellow glare.
 In comfortless alliance shone
 The lights through arch of blackened stone,
 And showed wild shapes in garb of war,
 Faces deformed with beard and scar, 30
 All haggard from the midnight watch,
 And fevered with the stern debauch;
 For the oak table's massive board,
 Flooded with wine, with fragments stored,
 And beakers drained, and cups o'erthrown,
 Showed in what sport the night had flown.
 Some, weary, snored on floor and bench;
 Some labored still their thirst to quench;
 Some, chilled with watching, spread their hands

O'er the huge chimney's dying brands, 40
 While round them, or beside them flung,
 At every step their harness rung.

III

These drew not for their fields the sword,
 Like tenants of a feudal lord,
 Nor owned the patriarchal claim
 Of Chieftain in their leader's name;
 Adventurers they, from far who roved,
 To live by battle which they loved.
 There the Italian's clouded face,
 The swarthy Spaniard's there you trace; 50
 The mountain-loving Switzer there
 More freely breathed in mountain-air;
 The Fleming there despised the soil

That paid so ill the laborer's toil;
Their rolls showed French and German
name;

And merry England's exiles came,
To share, with ill-concealed disdain,
Of Scotland's pay the scanty gain.
All brave in arms, well trained to wield
The heavy halberd, brand, and shield; 60
In camps licentious, wild, and bold;
In pillage fierce and uncontrolled;
And now, by holytide and feast,
From rules of discipline released.

IV

They held debate of bloody fray,
Fought 'twixt Loch Katrine and Achray.
Fierce was their speech, and mid their words

Their hands oft grappled to their swords;
Nor sunk their tone to spare the ear
Of wounded comrades groaning near, 70
Whose mangled limbs and bodies gored
Bore token of the mountain sword,
Though, neighboring to the Court of Guard,

Their prayers and feverish wails were heard, —

Sad burden to the ruffian joke,
And savage oath by fury spoke! —
At length up started John of Brent,
A yeoman from the banks of Trent;
A stranger to respect or fear, 80
In peace a chaser of the deer,
In host a hardy mutineer,
But still the boldest of the crew
When deed of danger was to do.
He grieved that day their games cut short,

And marred the dicer's brawling sport,
And shouted loud, 'Renew the bowl!
And, while a merry catch I troll,
Let each the buxom chorus bear,
Like brethren of the brand and spear.'

V

SOLDIER'S SONG

Our vicar still preaches that Peter and Poule 90

Laid a swinging long curse on the bonny
brown bowl,

That there's wrath and despair in the jolly black-jack,

And the seven deadly sins in a flagon of sack;

Yet whoop, Barnaby! off with thy liquor,
Drink upsees out, and a fig for the vicar!

Our vicar he calls it damnation to sip
The ripe ruddy dew of a woman's dear
lip,

Says that Beelzebub lurks in her kerchief
so aly,

And Apollyon shoots darts from her merry
black eye; 7

Yet whoop, Jack! kiss Gillian the quicker, Till she bloom like a rose, and a fig for the vicar!

Our vicar thus preaches, — and why should he not?

For the dues of his cure are the placket
and pot;

And 't is right of his office poor laymen to lurch

Who infringe the domains of our good Mother Church.

Yet whoop, bully-boys! off with your liquor,

Sweet Marjorie's the word, and a fig for the vicar!

VI

The warder's challenge, heard without,
Stayed in mid-roar the merry shout.

A soldier to the portal went, — 110

'Here is old Bertram, sirs, of Ghent;

And — beat for jubilee the drum! —

A maid and minstrel with him come.'

Bertram, a Fleming, gray and scarred,

Was entering now the Court of Guard,

A harper with him, and, in plaid

All muffled close, a mountain maid,

Who backward shrunk to 'scape the view

Of the loose scene and boisterous crew.

'What news?' they roared: — 'I only

know, 120

From noon till eve we fought with foe,

As wild and as untamable

As the rude mountains where they dwell;

On both sides store of blood is lost,

Nor much success can either boast.' —

'But whence thy captives, friend? such

spoil

As theirs must needs reward thy toil.

Old dost thou wax, and wars grow sharp;

Thou now hast glee-maiden and harp!

Get thee an ape, and trudge the land, 130

The leader of a juggler band.'

VII

'No, comrade; — no such fortune mine.
After the fight these sought our line,
That aged harper and the girl,
And, having audience of the Earl,
Mar bade I should purvey them steed,
And bring them hitherward with speed.
Forbear your mirth and rude alarm,
For none shall do them shame or harm. —'
'Hear ye his boast?' cried John of

Brent, 140
Ever to strife and jangling bent;
'Shall he strike doe beside our lodge,
And yet the jealous niggard grudge
To pay the forester his fee?
'I'll have my share howe'er it be,
Despite of Moray, Mar, or thee.'
Bertram his forward step withstood;
And, burning in his vengeful mood,
Oft Allan, though unfit for strife,
Laid hand upon his dagger-knife; 150
But Ellen boldly stepped between,
And dropped at once the tartan screen: —
So, from his morning cloud, appears
The sun of May through summer tears.
The savage soldiery, amazed,
As on descended angel gazed;
Even hardy Brent, abashed and tamed,
Stood half admiring, half ashamed.

VIII

Boldly she spoke: 'Soldiers, attend!
My father was the soldier's friend, 160
Cheered him in camps, in marches led,
And with him in the battle bled.
Not from the valiant or the strong
Should exile's daughter suffer wrong.'
Answered De Brent, most forward still
In every feat or good or ill:
'I shame me of the part I played;
And thou an outlaw's child, poor maid!
An outlaw I by forest laws,
And merry Needwood knows the cause. 170
Poor Rose, — if Rose be living now, —
He wiped his iron eye and brow, —
'Must bear such age, I think, as thou. — Hear ye, my mates! I go to call
The Captain of our watch to hall:
There lies my halberd on the floor;
And he that steps my halberd o'er,
To do the maid injurious part,
My shaft shall quiver in his heart!
Beware loose speech, or jesting rough; 180
Ye all know John de Brent. Enough.'

IX

Their Captain came, a gallant young, —
Of Tullibardine's house he sprung, —
Nor wore he yet the spurs of knight;
Gay was his mien, his humor light,
And, though by courtesy controlled,
Forward his speech, his bearing bold.
The high-born maiden ill could brook
The scanning of his curious look
And dauntless eye: — and yet, in sooth, 190
Young Lewis was a generous youth;
But Ellen's lovely face and mien,
Ill suited to the garb and scene,
Might lightly bear construction strange,
And give loose fancy scope to range.
'Welcome to Stirling towers, fair maid!
Come ye to seek a champion's aid,
On palfrey white, with harper hoar,
Like errant damosel of yore?
Does thy high quest a knight require, 200
Or may the venture suit a squire?'
Her dark eye flashed; — she paused and sighed: —
'O what have I to do with pride! —
Through scenes of sorrow, shame, and strife,
A suppliant for a father's life,
I crave an audience of the King.
Behold, to back my suit, a ring,
The royal pledge of grateful claims,
Given by the Monarch to Fitz-James.'

X

The signet-ring young Lewis took 210
With deep respect and altered look,
And said: 'This ring our duties own;
And pardon, if to worth unknown,
In semblance mean obscurely veiled,
Lady, in aught my folly failed.
Soon as the day flings wide his gates,
The King shall know what suitor waits.
Please you meanwhile in fitting bower
Repose you till his waking hour;
Female attendance shall obey 220
Your behest, for service or array.
Permit I marshal you the way.'
But, ere she followed, with the grace
And open bounty of her race,
She bade her slender purse be shared
Among the soldiers of the guard.
The rest with thanks their guerdon took,
But Brent, with shy and awkward look,
On the reluctant maiden's hold 230
Forced bluntly back the proffered gold: —
'Forgive a haughty English heart,

And O, forget its ruder part !
 The vacant purse shall be my share,
 Which in my barret-cap I 'll bear,
 Perchance, in jeopardy of war,
 Where gayer crests may keep afar.
 With thanks — 't was all she could — the maid

His rugged courtesy repaid.

XI

When Ellen forth with Lewis went,
 Allan made suit to John of Brent: — 240
 'My lady safe, O let your grace
 Give me to see my master's face !
 His minstrel I, — to share his doom
 Bound from the cradle to the tomb.
 Tenth in descent, since first my sire
 Waked for his noble house their lyres,
 Nor one of all the race was known
 But prized its weal above their own.
 With the Chief's birth begins our care;
 Our harp must soothe the infant heir, 250
 Teach the youth tales of fight, and grace
 His earliest feat of field or chase;
 In peace, in war, our rank we keep,
 We cheer his board, we soothe his sleep,
 Nor leave him till we pour our verse —
 A doleful tribute ! — o'er his hearse.
 Then let me share his captive lot;
 It is my right, — deny it not !'
 'Little we reek,' said John of Brent,
 'We Southern men, of long descent; 260
 Nor wot we how a name — a word —
 Makes clansmen vassals to a lord:
 Yet kind my noble landlord's part, —
 God bless the house of Beaudesert !
 And, but I loved to drive the deer
 More than to guide the laboring steer,
 I had not dwelt an outcast here.
 Come, good old Minstrel, follow me;
 Thy Lord and Chieftain shalt thou see.'

XII

Then, from a rusted iron hook, 270
 A bunch of ponderous keys he took,
 Lighted a torch, and Allan led Through grated arch and passage dread.
 Portals they passed, where, deep within,
 Spoke prisoner's moan and fetters' din;
 Through rugged vaults, where, loosely
 stored,
 Lay wheel, and axe, and headsman's
 sword,
 And many a hideous engine grim,
 For wrenching joint and crushing limb,

By artists formed who deemed it shame
 And sin to give their work a name.
 They halted at a low-browed porch,
 And Brent to Allan gave the torch,
 While bolt and chain he backward rol-
 And made the bar unhasp its hold.
 They entered: — 't was a prison-room
 Of stern security and gloom,
 Yet not a dungeon; for the day
 Through lofty gratings found its way,
 And rude and antique garniture
 Decked the sad walls and oaken floor,
 Such as the rugged days of old
 Deemed fit for captive noble's hold.
 'Here,' said De Brent, 'thou mayst remain

Till the Leech visit him again.
 Strict is his charge, the warders tell,
 To tend the noble prisoner well.'
 Retiring then the bolt he drew,
 And the lock's murmurs growled anew.
 Roused at the sound, from lowly bed 300
 A captive feebly raised his head;
 The wondering Minstrel looked, and
 knew —
 Not his dear lord, but Roderick Dhu !
 For, come from where Clan-Alpine fought,
 They, erring, deemed the Chief he sought.

XIII

As the tall ship, whose lofty prow
 Shall never stem the billows more,
 Deserted by her gallant band,
 Amid the breakers lies astrand, —
 So on his couch lay Roderick Dhu ! 310
 And oft his fevered limbs he threw
 In toss abrupt, as when her sides
 Lie rocking in the advancing tides,
 That shake her frame with ceaseless beat,
 Yet cannot heave her from her seat; —
 O, how unlike her course at sea !
 Or his free step on hill and len ! —
 Soon as the Minstrel he could scan, —
 'What of thy lady ? — of my clan ? — 320
 My mother ? — Douglas ? — tell me all !
 Have they been ruined in my fall ?
 Ah, yes ! or wherefore art thou here ?
 Yet speak, — speak boldly, — do not fear.'
 For Allan, who his mood well knew,
 Was choked with grief and terror too.
 'Who fought ? — who fled ? — Old man,
 be brief; —
 Some might, — for they had lost their Chief.
 Who basely live ? — who bravely died ?'

ief !' the Minstrel cried,
For that thank Heaven !'
e the Douglas given ; — et, too, is well ; 333
— on field or fell,
' minstrel told
so true and bold.
s yet unbent,
oddy bough is rent.'

XIV

red his form on high,
as in his eye ;
and livid streaks 340
rthy brow and cheeks.
I have heard thee play,
d on festal day,
- again where ne'er
or warrior hear ! —
bat peals on high,
e our victory. —
then, — for well thou

strel-spirit glanced,
re of the fight, 350
n the Saxon might.
fancy hears
de, the crash of spears
e walls, shall vanish then
f fighting men, t burst away,
m battle fray.'
rd with awe obeyed, —
his hand he laid ;
ance of the sight 360
i the mountain's height,
rtram told at night,
l power of song,
areer along ; —
d on river's tide,
rful leaves the side,
the middle stream,
l swift as lightning's

XV

' BEAL' AN DUINE
e once more to view of Benvenue, 370
he would say Loch Achray —
d, in foreign land,
sweet a strand ! —
ze upon the fern,
the lake,

Upon her eyry nods the erne,
The deer has sought the brake ;
The small birds will not sing aloud,
The springing trout lies still, 380
So darkly glooms yon thunder-cloud,
That swathes, as with a purple shroud,
Benledi's distant hill.
Is it the thunder's solemn sound,
That mutters deep and dread,
Or echoes from the groaning ground
The warrior's measured tread ?
Is it the lightning's quivering glance
That on the thicket streams,
Or do they flash on spear and lance 390
The sun's retiring beams ? —
I see the dagger-crest of Mar,
I see the Moray's silver star,
Wave o'er the cloud of Saxon war,
That up the lake comes winding far !
To hero boune for battle-strife,
Or hard of martial lay,
'T were worth ten years of peaceful
life,
One glance at their array !

XVI

' Their light-armed archers far and near 400
Surveyed the tangled ground,
Their centre ranks, with pike and spear,
A twilight forest frowned,
Their barded horsemen in the rear
The stern battalia crowned.
No symbol clashed, no clarion rang,
Still were the pipe and drum ;
Save heavy tread, and armor's clang,
The sullen march was dumb.
There breathed no wind their crests to shake, 410
Or wave their flags abroad ;
Scarce the frail aspen seemed to quake,
That shadowed o'er their road.
Their vaward scouts no tidings bring,
Can rouse no lurking foe,
Nor spy a trace of living thing,
Save when they stirred the roe ;
The host moves like a deep-sea wave,
Where rise no rocks its pride to brave,
High-swelling, dark, and slow. 420
The lake is passed, and now they gain
A narrow and a broken plain,
Before the 'Trosachs' rugged jaws ;
And here the horse and spearmen pause,
While, to explore the dangerous glen,
Dive through the pass the archer-men.

The first part of the book is a history of the city of London, from its foundation to the present time. It is written in a clear and concise style, and is well illustrated with numerous engravings of the city and its various parts. The second part of the book is a history of the city of London, from its foundation to the present time. It is written in a clear and concise style, and is well illustrated with numerous engravings of the city and its various parts. The third part of the book is a history of the city of London, from its foundation to the present time. It is written in a clear and concise style, and is well illustrated with numerous engravings of the city and its various parts.

I have been thinking of you and wondering how you are getting on.
 I hope you are well and happy.
 I have been very busy lately,
 but I have managed to find some time to write you. I have been thinking of you very much and wondering how you are getting on. I hope you are well and happy. I have been very busy lately, but I have managed to find some time to write you. I have been thinking of you very much and wondering how you are getting on. I hope you are well and happy. I have been very busy lately, but I have managed to find some time to write you. I have been thinking of you very much and wondering how you are getting on.

ge its fragments to the gale,
ken arms and disarray
the fell havoc of the day. 530

XX

he mountain's ridge askance,
stood in sullen trance,
pointed with his lance,
cried: "Behold yon isle! — are left to guard its strand weak, that wring the hand:
of yore the robber band booty wont to pile; —
with bonnet-pieces store,
I swim a bow-shot o'er, 540
a shallop from the shore.
'I'll tame the war-wolf then,
a mate, and brood, and den."
the ranks a spearman sprung,
a casque and corselet rung, unged him in the wave: —
deed, — the purpose knew,
a claimors Benvenue
pled echo gave;
a shout, their mate to cheer, 550
a females scream for fear,
or rage the mountaineer.
as by the outcry riven,
ra at once the lowering heaven:
d swept Loch Katrine's breast, reared their snowy crest.
e swimmer swelled they high,
Highland marksman's eye;
um showered, mid rain and hail,
al arrows of the Gael. 560
He nears the isle — and lo!
on a shallop's bow.
Flash of lightning came,
e waves and strand with flame;
uncraggan's widowed dame,
ak I saw her stand,
rk gleamed in her hand: —
l, — but amid the moan heard a dying groan; —
sh! — the spearman floats 570
corse beside the boats,
en matron o'er him stood,
ad dagger streaming blood.

XXI

"I revenge!" the Saxons cried,
exulting shout replied.
elemental rage,
hurried to engage;
y closed in desperate fight,

Bloody with spurring came a knight,
Sprung from his horse, and from a crag 580
Waved 'twixt the hosts a milk-white flag.
Clarion and trumpet by his side
Rung forth a truce-note high and wide,
While, in the Monarch's name, afar
A herald's voice forbade the war,
For Bothwell's lord and Roderick bold
Were both, he said, in captive hold. —
But here the lay made sudden stand,
The harp escaped the Minstrel's hand!
Oft had he stolen a glance, to spy 590
How Roderick brooked his minstrelsy:
At first, the Chieftain, to the chime,
With lifted hand kept feeble time;
That motion ceased, — yet feeling strong
Varied his look as changed the song;
At length, no more his deafened ear
The minstrel melody can hear;
His face grows sharp, — his hands are clenched,
As if some pang his heart-strings wrenched;
Set are his teeth, his fading eye 600
Is sternly fixed on vacancy;
Thus, motionless and moanless drew,
His parting breath stout Roderick Dhu! —
Old Allan-bane looked on aghast,
While grim and still his spirit passed;
But when he saw that life was fled,
He poured his wailing o'er the dead.

XXII

LAMENT

'And art thou cold and lowly laid,
Thy foeman's dread, thy people's aid, 600
Breadalbane's boast, Clan-Alpine's shade!
For thee shall none a requiem say? —
For thee, who loved the minstrel's lay,
For thee, of Bothwell's house the stay,
The shelter of her exiled line,
E'en in this prison-house of thine,
I'll wail for Alpine's honored Pine!
'What groans shall yonder valleys fill!
What shrieks of grief shall rend you hill!
What tears of burning rage shall thrill,
When mourns thy tribe thy battles done,
Thy fall before the race was won, 610
Thy sword ungirt ere set of sun!
There breathes not clansman of thy line,
But would have given his life for thine.
O, woe for Alpine's honored Pine!

'Sad was thy lot on mortal stage! —
The captive thrush may brook the cage,

The prisoned eagle dies for rage.
 Brave spirit, do not scorn my strain !
 And, when its notes awake again,
 Even she, so long beloved in vain,
 Shall with my harp her voice combine,
 And mix her woe and tears with mine,
 To wail Clan-Alpine's honored Pine.'

630

XXIII

Ellen the while, with bursting heart,
 Remained in lordly bower apart,
 Where played, with many-colored gleams,
 Through storied pane the rising beams.
 In vain on gilded roof they fall,
 And lightened up a tapestried wall,
 And for her use a menial train
 A rich collation spread in vain.
 The banquet proud, the chamber gay,
 Scarce drew one curious glance astray;
 Or if she looked, 't was but to say,
 With better omen dawned the day
 In that lone isle, where waved on high
 The dun-deer's hide for canopy;
 Where oft her noble father shared
 The simple meal her care prepared,
 While Lufra, crouching by her side,
 Her station claimed with jealous pride,
 And Douglas, bent on woodland game,
 Spoke of the chase to Malcolm Grème,
 Whose answer, oft at random made,
 The wandering of his thoughts betrayed.
 Those who such simple joys have known
 Are taught to prize them when they're gone.

640

But sudden, see, she lifts her head,
 The window seeks with cautious tread.
 What distant music has the power
 To win her in this woful hour ?
 'T was from a turret that o'erhung
 Her latticed bower, the strain was sung.

650

XXIV

LAY OF THE IMPRISONED HUNTSMAN

'My hawk is tired of perch and hood,
 My idle greyhound loathes his food,
 My horse is weary of his stall,
 And I am sick of captive thrall.
 I wish I were as I have been,
 Hunting the hart in forest green,
 With bended bow and bloodhound free,
 For that's the life is meet for me.
 'I hate to learn the ebb of time
 From yon dull steeple's drowsy chime,
 Or mark it as the sunbeams crawl,
 Inch after inch, along the wall.

670

The lark was wont my matins ring,
 The sable rook my vespers sing,
 These towers, although a king's they be,
 Have not a hall of joy for me.

680

'No more at dawning morn I rise,
 And sun myself in Ellen's eyes,
 Drive the fleet deer the forest through,
 And homeward wend with evening dew;
 A blithesome welcome blithely meet,
 And lay my trophies at her feet,
 While fled the eve on wing of glee, —
 That life is lost to love and me !'

XXV

The heart-sick lay was hardly said,
 The listener had not turned her head,
 It trickled still, the starting tear,
 When light a footstep struck her ear,
 And Snowdon's graceful Knight was near.
 She turned the hastier, lest again
 The prisoner should renew his strain.
 'O welcome, brave Fitz-James !' she said;
 'How may an almost orphan maid
 Pay the deep debt —' 'O say not so !
 To me no gratitude you owe.
 Not mine, alas ! the boon to give,
 And bid thy noble father live;
 I can but be thy guide, sweet maid,
 With Scotland's King thy suit to aid.
 No tyrant he, though ire and pride
 May lay his better mood aside.
 Come, Ellen, come ! 't is more than time,
 He holds his court at morning prime.'
 With beating heart, and bosom wrung,
 As to a brother's arm she clung.
 Gently he dried the falling tear,
 And gently whispered hope and cheer;
 Her faltering steps half led, half stayed,
 Through gallery fair and high arcade,
 Till at his touch its wings of pride
 A portal arch unfolded wide.

700

710

XXVI

Within 't was brilliant all and light,
 A thronging scene of figures bright;
 It glowed on Ellen's dazzled sight,
 As when the setting sun has given
 Ten thousand hues to summer even,
 And from their tissue fancy frames
 Aerial knights and fairy dames.
 Still by Fitz-James her footing staid;
 A few faint steps she forward made,
 Then slow her drooping head she raised,
 And fearful round the presence gazed;

730

For him she sought who owned this state,
 The dreaded Prince whose will was fate ! —
 She gazed on many a princely port
 Might well have ruled a royal court; 730
 On many a splendid garb she gazed, —
 Then turned bewildered and amazed,
 For all stood bare; and in the room
 Fitz-James alone wore cap and plume.
 To him each lady's look was lent,
 On him each courtier's eye was bent;
 Midst furs and silks and jewels shoen,
 He stood, in simple Lincoln green,
 The centre of the glittering ring, —
 And Snowdown's Knight is Scotland's
 King ! 740

XXVII

As wreath of snow on mountain-breast
 Slides from the rock that gave it rest,
 Poor Ellen glided from her stay,
 And at the Monarch's feet she lay;
 No word her choking voice commands, —
 She showed the ring, — she clasped her hands.

O, not a moment could he brook,
 The generous Prince, that suppliant look !
 Gently he raised her, — and, the while,
 Checked with a glance the circle's smile; 750
 Graceful, but grave, her brow he kissed,
 And bade her terrors be dismissed: —
 'Yes, fair; the wandering poor Fitz-James
 The fealty of Scotland claims.
 To him thy woes, thy wishes, bring;
 He will redeem his signet ring.
 Ask nought for Douglas; — yester even,
 His Prince and he have much forgiven;
 Wrong hath he had from slanderous
 tongue,

I, from his rebel kinsmen, wrong. 760
 We would not, to the vulgar crowd,
 Yield what they craved with clamor loud;
 Calmly we heard and judged his cause,
 Our council aided and our laws.
 I stanch'd thy father's death-fend stern
 With stout De Vaux and gray Glencairn;
 And Bothwell's Lord henceforth we own
 The friend and bulwark of our throne. —
 But, lovely infidel, how now ?
 What clouds thy misbelieving brow ? 770
 Lord James of Douglas, lend thine aid;
 Thou must confirm this doubting maid.'

XXVIII

Then forth the noble Douglas sprung,
 And on his neck his daughter hung.

The Monarch drank, that happy hour,
 The sweetest, holiest draught of Power, —
 When it can say with godlike voice,
 Arise, sad Virtue, and rejoice !
 Yet would not James the general eye
 On nature's raptures long should pry; 780
 He stepped between — 'Nay, Douglas,
 nay,

Steal not my proselyte away !
 The riddle 't is my right to read,
 That brought this happy chance to speed.
 Yes, Ellen, when disguised I stray
 In life's more low but happier way,
 'T is under name which veils my power,
 Nor falsely veils, — for Stirling's tower
 Of yore the name of Snowdown claims, 780
 And Normans call me James Fitz-James.
 Thus watch I o'er insulted laws,
 Thus learn to right the injured cause.'
 Then, in a tone apart and low, —
 'Ab, little traitress ! none must know
 What idle dream, what lighter thought,
 What vanity full dearly bought,
 Joined to thine eye's dark witchcraft, drew
 My spell-bound steps to Benvenue
 In dangerous hour, and all but gave 790
 Thy Monarch's life to mountain glaive !'
 Aloud he spoke: 'Thou still dost hold
 That little talisman of gold,
 Pledge of my faith, Fitz-James's ring, —
 What seeks fair Ellen of the King ?'

XXIX

Full well the conscious maiden guessed
 He probed the weakness of her breast;
 But with that consciousness there came
 A lightening of her fears for Graine,
 And more she deemed the Monarch's ire
 Kindled 'gainst him who for her sire 800
 Rebellious broadsword boldly drew;
 And, to her generous feeling true,
 She craved the grace of Roderick Dhu.
 'Forbear thy suit; — the King of kings
 Alone can stay life's parting wings.
 I know his heart, I know his hand,
 Have shared his cheer, and proved his
 brand; —

My fairest earldom would I give
 To bid Clan-Alpine's Chieftain live ! —
 Hast thou no other boon to crave ? 820
 No other captive friend to save ?'
 Blushing, she turned her from the King,
 And to the Douglas gave the ring,
 As if she wished her sire to speak
 The suit that stained her glowing cheek.

'Nay, then, my pledge has lost its force,
And stubborn justice holds her course.
Malcolm, come forth!'—and, at the word,
Down kneeled the Græme to Scotland's
Lord. 829
'For thee, rash youth, no suppliant aues,
From thee may Vengeance claim her
ducs,
Who, nurtured underneath our smile,
Haast paid our care by treacherous wile,
And sought amid thy faithful clan
A refuge for an outlawed man,
Dishonoring thus thy loyal name.—
Fetters and warder for the Græme!'—
His chain of gold the King unstrung,
The links o'er Malcolm's neck he flung,
Then gently drew the glittering band, 840
And laid the clasp on Ellen's hand.

HARP of the North, farewell! The hills grow dark,
On purple peaks a deeper shade descending;
In twilight copse the glow-worm lights her spark,
The deer, half-seen, are to the covert
wending.
Resume thy wizard elm! the fountain
lending,
And the wild breeze, thy wilder min-
strelsy;
Thy numbers sweet with nature's vespers
blending,

With distant echo from the fold and lea,
And herd-boy's evening pipe, and hum
of housing bee. 850

Yet, once again, farewell, thou Minstrel Harp!

Yet, once again, forgive my feeble sway,
And little reck I of the censure sharp
May idly cavil at an idle lay.

Much have I owed thy strains on life's long way,

Through secret woes the world has never
known,

When on the weary night dawned wearier
day,

And bitterer was the grief devoured
alone.—

That I o'erlive such woes, Enchantress! is thine own.

Hark! as my lingering footsteps slow retire, 860

Some Spirit of the Air has waked thy
string!

'Tis now a seraph hold, with touch of fire,
'Tis now the brush of Fairy's frolic
wing.

Receding now, the dying numbers ring
Fainter and fainter down the rugged
dell;

And now the mountain breezes scarcely
bring

A wandering witch-note of the distant spell—

And now, 'tis silent all!—Enchantress, fare thee well!

THE VISION OF DON RODERICK

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

THE foundation of The Vision of Don Roderick is given by Scott in the Preface printed below and referred to again in the Notes, but there was no further Introduction in 1830, and it is to the Dedication, Scott's Letters, and to Lockhart's Life that we must turn for an explanation of the occasion which produced the poem. In a letter to Lady Abercorn, dated Ashestiel, 30th April, 1811, Scott writes:—

'I promised I would not write any poetry without letting you know, and I make all sort of haste to tell you of my sudden determination to write a sort of rhapsody upon the affairs of the Peninsula. It is to be called The Vision of Don Roderick, and is founded upon the apparition explanatory of the future events in Spain, said to be seen by the last King of the Gothic race, in a vault beneath the great church of Toledo. I believe your Ladyship will find something of the story in the Comtesse D'Annou's travels into Spain, but I find it at most length in an old Spanish history of the aforesaid Don Roderick, professing to be translated from the Arabic, but being in truth a mere romance of the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella. It will serve my purpose, however, tout de même. The idea of forming a short lyric piece upon this subject has often glided through my mind, but I should never, I fear, have had the grace to turn it to practice if it were not that groping in my pockets to find some guineas for the suffering Portuguese, and detecting very few to spare, I thought I could only have recourse to the apostolic benediction, "Silver and gold have I none, but that which I have I will give unto you." My friends and booksellers, the Ballantynes of Edinburgh, have very liberally promised me a hundred guineas for this trifle, which I intend to send to the fund for relieving the sufferers in Portugal. I have 'come out to this wilderness to write my poem, and so soon as it is finished I will send you, my dear Lady Marchioness, a copy. — not that it will be worth your acceptance, but merely that you may be assured I am doing nothing that I would not you know of sooner than any one. I intend to write to the Chairman of the Committee by to-morrow's post. I would give them a hundred drops of my blood with the same pleasure, would it do them service, for my heart is a soldier's, and always has been, though my lameness rendered me unfit for the profession, which, odd as I am, I would rather follow than any other. But these are waking dreams, in which I seldom indulge even to my kindest friends.

The poem, which was published July 15, 1811, called out two criticisms, — one for the adoption of the Spenserian stanza, the other for the omission of any reference to Sir John Moore, Scott's countryman who had just fallen in battle in the cause which Scott was celebrating, and whose memory is kept alive in many readers' minds by Wolfe's martial verses on his burial, —

'Not a drum was heard, not a funeral note,
As his corse to the rampart we hurried.'

Scott meets both criticisms in a letter to Morritt, September, 1811. —

'The Edinburgh Reviewers have been down on my poor Don Roderick, hand to fist; but truly, as they are too fastidious to approve of the campaign, I should be very unreasonable if I expected them to like the celebration thereof. I agree with you respecting the lumbering weight of the stanza, and I shrewdly suspect it would require a very great poet indeed to prevent the tedium arising from the frequent recurrence of rhymes. Our language is unable to support the expenditure of so many for each stanza; even Spenser himself, with all the license of using obsolete words and uncommon spelling, sometimes fatigues the ear. They are also very wroth with me for omitting the merits of Sir John Moore; but as I never exactly discovered in what they lay, unless in conducting his advance and retreat upon a plan the most likely to verify the desponding speculations of the foresaid reviewers, I must hold myself excused for not giving praise where I was unable to see that much was due.'

The poem was both published in quarto form and included in the Edinburgh Annual Register for 1809, which was not however published till 1811. It had the following: —

PREFACE

The following Poem is founded upon a Spanish Tradition, particularly detailed in the Notes; but bearing, in general, that Don Roderick, the last Gothic King of Spain, when the Invasion of the Moors was impending, had the temerity to descend into an ancient vault, near Toledo, the opening of which had been denounced as fatal to the Spanish Monarchy. The legend adds, that his rash curiosity was mortified by an emblematical representation of those Saracens who, in the year 714, defeated him in battle, and reduced Spain under their dominion. I have prequ岸ed to prolong the Vision of the Revolutions of Spain down to the present eventful crisis of the Peninsula; and to divide it, by a supposed change of Scene, into Three Periods. The First of these represents the Invasion of the Moors, the Defeat and Death of Roderick, and closes with the peaceful occupation of the country by the Victor. The Second Period embraces the state of the Peninsula, when the conquests of the Spaniards and Portuguese in the East and West Indies had raised to the highest pitch the renown of their arms; sullied, however, by superstition and cruelty. An allusion to the inhumanities of the Inquisition terminates this picture. The Last Part of the Poem opens with the state of Spain previous to the unparalleled treachery of Bonaparte; gives a sketch of the usurpation attempted upon that unambitious and friendly kingdom, and terminates with the arrival of the British succors. It may be further proper to mention that the object of the Poem is less to commemorate or detail particular incidents, than to exhibit a general and impressive picture of the several periods brought upon the stage.

I am too sensible of the respect due to the Public, especially by one who has already experienced more than ordinary indulgence, to offer any apology for the inferiority of the poetry to the subject it is chiefly designed to commemorate. Yet I think it proper to mention that while I was hastily executing a work, written for a temporary purpose, and on passing events, the task was most cruelly interrupted by the successive deaths of Lord President Blair and Lord Viscount Melville. In those distinguished characters I had not only to regret persons whose lives were most important to Scotland, but also whose notice and patronage honored my entrance upon active life; and, I may add, with melancholy pride, who permitted my more advanced age to claim no common share in their friendship. Under such interruptions, the following verses, which my best and happiest efforts must have left far unworthy of their theme, have, I am myself sensible, an appearance of negligence and incoherence, which, in other circumstances, I might have been able to remove.

EDINBURGH, June 24, 1811.

THE VISION OF DON RODERICK

Quid dignum memorare tuis, Hispania, terris, Vox humana valet. — CLAUDIAN.

TO

JOHN WHITMORE, ESQ.,

AND TO THE

COMMITTEE OF SUBSCRIBERS FOR RELIEF OF THE PORTUGUESE SUFFERERS

IN WHICH HE PRESIDES,

THIS POEM,

COMPOSED FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FUND UNDER THEIR MANAGEMENT,

IS RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED BY

WALTER SCOTT.

INTRODUCTION

I

LIVES there a strain whose sounds of mounting fire
May rise distinguished o'er the din of
war;
Or died it with yon Master of the Lyre,
Who sung beleaguered Ilion's evil
star?
Such, WELLINGTON, might reach thee
from afar,
Wafting its descant wide o'er Ocean's range;
Nor shouts, nor clashing arms, its mood
could mar,
All as it swelled 'twixt each loud trumpet-change,
That clangs to Britain victory, to Portugal revenge!

II

Yes! such a strain, with all o'erpower-
ing measure,
Might melodize with each tumultuous
sound,
Each voice of fear or triumph, woe or
pleasure,
That rings Mondego's ravaged shores
around;
The thundering cry of hosts with conquest crowned,
The female shriek, the ruined peasant's
moan,
The shout of captives from their chains
unbound,
The foiled oppressor's deep and sullen
groan,
A Nation's choral hymn for tyranny o'er-thrown.

III

But we, weak minstrels of a laggard day,<sup>19</sup>
 Skilled but to imitate an elder page,
 Timid and raptureless, can we repay
 The debt thou claim'st in this exhausted age?
 Thou givest our lyres a theme, that might engage
 Those that could send thy name o'er sea and land,
 While sea and land shall last; for Homer's rage
 A theme; a theme for Milton's mighty
 hand —
 How much unmeet for us, a faint degenerate band!

IV

Ye mountains stern! within whose rugged breast
 The friends of Scottish freedom found repose;
 Ye torrents! whose hoarse sounds have soothed their rest,<sup>30</sup>
 Returning from the field of vanquished
 foes;
 Say, have ye lost each wild majestic
 close,
 That erst the choir of Bards or Druids
 sung;
 What time their hymn of victory arose,
 And Cattreath's glens with voice of triumph rung,
 And mystic Merlin harped, and gray-haired Llywarch sung?

V

O, if your wilds such minstrelsy retain,
 As sure your changeful gales seem oft
 to say,
 When sweeping wild and sinking soft
 again,
 Like trumpet-jubilee or harp's wild sway;<sup>40</sup>
 If ye can echo such triumphant lay,
 Then lend the note to him has loved you long!
 Who pious gathered each tradition
 gray,
 That floats your solitary wastes
 along,
 And with affection vain gave them new voice in song.

VI

For not till now, how oft soe'er the task
 Of truant verse hath lightened graver
 care,
 From Muse or Sylvan was he wont to ask,
 In phrase poetic, inspiration fair;<sup>40</sup>
 Careless he gave his numbers to the air,
 They came unsought for, if applauses
 came;
 Nor for himself prefers he now the
 prayer:
 Let but his verse befit a hero's fame,
 Immortal be the verse! — forgot the poet's name!

VII

Hark, from yon misty cairn their answer
 tost:
 'Minstrel! the fame of whose romantic lyre,
 Capricious-swelling now, may soon be
 lost,
 Like the light flickering of a cottage fire;
 If to such task presumptuous thou aspire Seek not from us the meed to warrior due;<sup>60</sup>
 Age after age has gathered son to sire,
 Since our gray cliffs the din of conflict
 knew,
 Or, pealing through our vales, victorious
 bugles blew.

VIII

'Decayed our old traditionary lore,
 Save where the lingering fays renew their ring,
 By milkmaid seen beneath the hawthorn
 hoar,
 Or round the marge of Minchmore's
 haunted spring;
 Save where their legends gray-haired shepherds sing,
 That now scarce win a listening ear
 but thine,<sup>69</sup>
 Of fends obscure and Border ravaging,
 And rugged deeds recount in rugged
 line
 Of moonlight foray made on Teviot, Tweed, or Tyne.

IX

'No! search romantic lands, where the near Sun
 Gives with unstinted boon ethereal
 flame,

When the such villages his latest took,
 As when spontaneous darts some lovely maid
 Whether chance obtrude the telltale
 chain
 Her eye of diamond! and her neck of jet
 Or constant kneeling at the shrine of heaven
 At long a wild Northern measure set,
 On earth's last, desperate ground, her garments?

X

'Euphonious eyes, where the fluty
 music
 Or wild Nevada ever gleams with
 music
 Where in the proud wilderness raised
 music
 Euphonious mountains of pomp, repose,
 Or where the tumults of more ruthless
 foes
 From the desert flow fast over Toledo's
 bow
 From where tall towers ever now the golden sun
 Or where the golden sun to spy upon the plain
 The wooded peaks of Rayland, Portugal, and Spain

XI

'Flora of Damascus for a swarthy
 maid
 Her lightness in the coloured native's
 eye
 To marry part, show step, and image
 dark
 Still mark enduring pride and constancy
 And in the jaws of feudal civility
 Bear, not, as once, thy nobles dearest
 pride,
 Harsh of thy crestless peasantry
 Have seen the plumed Hidalgo quit their side,
 Have seen yet dauntless stood — 'gainst fortune fought and died.

XII

'And cherished still by that unchanging
 race,
 Are thence for minstrelsy more high
 than thine,

(Of strange tradition many a mystic trace,
 Legend and vision, jumble and sight,
 When wonders with a strange common
 With Gothic images of unlovely shape, Furning a mirror more for mockery than in cool such things! — The Arabian spirit said
 With that eye I heard — I heard, and I obeyed

THE VISION OF DON RODRIGUE

I

Blazing their crests amid the cloudless
 skies,
 And clanking clattering in the pale moon-
 light
 Tolerant holy towers and spires arise
 As from a trembling base of silver
 white
 Their mingled shadows intercept the
 light
 Of the broad lunar-ground outstretched below,
 And might disturb the silence of the
 night;
 All sleeps in sullen shade, or silver
 glow,
 All save the heavy swell of Teio's ceaseless
 flow.

II

All save the rushing swell of Teio's tide,
 Or, distant heard, a courser's neigh or tramp,
 Their changing rounds as watchful horsemen ride
 To guard the limits of King Roderick's camp,
 For, through the river's night-fog rolling damp,
 Was many a proud pavilion dimly seen,
 Which glimmered back, against the moon's fair lamp,
 Tissues of silk and silver twisted sheen,
 And standards proudly pitched, and warders armed between

III

But of their monarch's person keeping
 ward,
 Since last the deep-mouthed bell of vesper tolled,

The chosen soldiers of the royal guard
The post beneath the proud cathedral
hold:

A band unlike their Gothic sires of old,
Who, for the cap of steel and iron mace,
Bear slender darts and casques bedecked
with gold,
While silver-studded belts their shoulders
grace,

Where ivory quivers ring in the broad fal-chion's place.

IV

In the light language of an idle court,
They murmured at their master's long delay,

And held his lengthened orisons in sport:
'What! will Don Roderick here till morning stay,

To wear in shrift and prayer the night
away?

And are his hours in such dull penance
past,

For fair Florinda's plundered charms to pay?

Then to the east their weary eyes they cast,

And wished the lingering dawn would glimmer forth at last.

V

But, far within, Toledo's prelate lent
An ear of fearful wonder to the king;
The silver lamp a fitful lustre sent,

So long that sad confession witnessing:
For Roderick told of many a hidden
thing,

Such as are lothly uttered to the air,
When Fear, Remorse, and Shame the bosom wring,

And Guilt his secret burden cannot
bear,

And Conscience seeks in speech a respite from Despair.

VI

Full on the prelate's face and silver hair
The stream of failing light was feebly
rolled;

But Roderick's visage, though his head
was bare,

Was shadowed by his hand and mantle's
fold.

While of his hidden soul the sins he told,

Proud Alaric's descendant could not
brook

That mortal man his bearing should behold,

Or boast that he had seen, when conscience shook,

Fear tame a monarch's brow, remorse a warrior's look.

VII

The old man's faded cheek waxed yet more pale,

As many a secret sad the king bewrayed;

As sign and glance eked out the unfinished tale,

When in the midst his faltering whisper staid. —

'Thus royal Witiza was slain,' he said;
'Yet, holy father, deem not it was I.'

Thus still Ambition strives her crimes to shade. —

'O, rather deem 't was stern necessity!
Self-preservation bade, and I must kill or die.

VIII

'And if Florinda's shrieks alarmed the
air,

If she invoked her absent sire in vain
And on her knees implored that I would spare,

Yet, reverend priest, thy sentence rash refrain!

All is not as it seems — the female train Know by their bearing to disguise their
mood: —

But Conscience here, as if in high disdain,

Sent to the Monarch's cheek the burning blood —

He stayed his speech abrupt — and up the prelate stood.

IX

'O hardened offspring of an iron race!
What of thy crimes, Don Roderick, shall I say?

What alms or prayers or penance can efface

Murder's dark spot, wash treason's stain away!

For the foul ravisher how shall I pray,
Who, scarce repentant, makes his crime his boast?

How hope Almighty vengeance shall outlast;
Unless, in mercy to you Christian host,
He spare the shepherd lest the guiltless
sheep be lost.

X

Then kindled the dark tyrant in his mood,
And to his brow returned its dauntless
glance,
'And welcome thou,' he cried, 'be blood
for blood,
For treason treachery, for dishonor
death;
Yet will I know whence come they or by whom Show, for thou canst — give forth the fatal key,
And guide me, priest, to that mysterious
room.
Where, if aught true in old traditions
be,
His nation's future hides a tyrannical king shall see.'

XI

'Ill-fated Prince! recall the desperate
word,
Or pause ere yet the omen thou obey;
Behold, yon spell-bound portal would afford
Never to former monarch entrance-
way;
Nor e'er it ever open'd records say.
Here is a king, the last of his line,
Whom time his empire suffers to deny,
And treason digs beneath her fatal
side,
And high above impends avenging wrath
divine.' —

XII

'Precious! a monarch's fate harks on
away;
Lead on!' — The ponderous key the arch was won,
And lo! the winding way, and led the
way,
By winding stair, dark aisle, and secret
room,
Then on at ancient gateway bent his look;
And to the key the desperate king
emerged,
Low muttered thunders the cathedral
shook.

And twice he stopped and twice new effort made,
Till the huge bolts rolled back and the loud hinges brayed.

XIII

Long, large, and lofty was that vaulted
hall,
Roof, walls, and floor were all of marble stone,
Of polished marble, black as funeral
pall,
Carved o'er with signs and characters
unknown,
A pale light, as of the dawning stone
Through the sad wounds, but whence they could not eye,
For window to the upper air was
none;
Yet by that light Don Roderick could descry
Wonders that ne'er till then were seen by mortal eye.

XIV

Great sentinels, against the upper wall,
Of massive bronze, two Statues held their place;
Massive their naked limbs, their stature
tall,
Their frowning foreheads golden circles grace,
Moulded they seemed for kings of giant
race,
Thus fixed and stoned before the avenging flood;
This grasped a scythe, that rested on a
sword;
The spread his wings for flight, that ponderous stood,
Each statuary seemed and stern, immutable of mood.

XV

Fixed was the right-hand giant's brassy
look,
Upon his brother's glass of shifting
sand,
As if he ebb he measured by a look,
Whence iron volume loaded his huge
hand;
In which was wrote of many a fallen
lord,
Of empires lost and kings to exile driven.

And o'er that pair their names in scroll expand —
'Lo, DESTINY and TIME! to whom by Heaven
The guidance of the earth is for a season given.' —

XVI

Even while they read, the sand-glass wastes away;
And, as the last and lagging grains
did creep,
That right-hand giant 'gan his club up-
away,
As one that startles from a heavy
sleep.
Full on the upper wall the mace's sweep
At once descended with the force of thunder,
And, hurtling down at once in crumbled
heap,
The marble boundary was rent asun-
der,
And gave to Roderick's view new sights of fear and wonder.

XVII

For they might spy beyond that mighty breach Realms as of Spain in visioned prospect laid,
Castles and towers, in due proportion
each,
As by some skilful artist's hand portrayed:
Here, crossed by many a wild Sierra's
shade
And boundless plains that tire the traveller's eye;
There, rich with vineyard and with olive glade,
Or deep-embrowned by forests huge
and high,
Or washed by mighty streams that slowly murmured by.

XVIII

And here, as erst upon the antique stage
Passed forth the band of masquers truly led,
In various forms and various equipage,
While fitting strains the hearer's fancy
fed;
So, to sad Roderick's eye in order spread,

Successive pageants filled that mystic scene,
Showing the fate of battles ere they
bled,
And issue of events that had not been;
And ever and anon strange sounds were heard between.

XIX

First shrilled an unrepeatd female shriek! —
It seemed as if Don Roderick knew
the call,
For the bold blood was blanching in his cheek. —
Then answered kettle-drum and atabal,
Gong-peal and cymbal-clank the ear ap-
pall,
The Teebir war-cry and the Lelie's yell
Ring wildly dissonant along the hall.
Needs not to Roderick their dread import tell —
'The Moor!' he cried, 'the Moor! — ring out the tocsin bell!

XX

'They come! they come! I see the groaning lands
White with the turbans of each Arab horde;
Swart Zaarab joins her misbelieving
bands,
Alla and Mahomet their battle-word,
The choice they yield, the Koran or the sword. —
See how the Christians rush to arms
again! —
In yonder shout the voice of conflict
roared,
The shadowy hosts are closing on the plain —
Now, God and Saint Iago strike for the good cause of Spain!

XXI

'By Heaven, the Moors prevail! the Christians yield!
Their coward leader gives for flight
the sign!
The accepted craven mounts to quit the
field —
Is not yon steed Orelia? — Yes, 't is mine!

But never was she turned from battle-line:
 Lo! where the recreant spurs o'er stuck and stane! —
 Carcs pursue the slave, and wrath divine!
 Rivers engulf him! — 'Hush,' in shuddering tone,
 The prelate said, 'rash prince, you visioned form's thine own.'

XXII

Just then, a torrent crossed the fier's
 course;
 The dangerous ford the king's likeness
 took;
 But the deep eddies whelmed both man
 and horse,
 Swept like beangized peasant down
 the tide,
 And the proud Moslem spread far and
 wide,
 As numerous as their native lucust
 host;
 Berber and Israel's sons the spears divided,
 Will naked ummies mate out the
 land,
 And for the bondsmen base the free-born natives brand.

XXIII

Then rose the grined Harem, to embrace
 The spookiest madmen of the Christian
 line;
 Then, mummals, to their unbelieveing
 host Castor's young milites held forbidden
 zone,
 Then, too, the holy Cross, salvation's
 sign,
 By mynion hands was from the altar
 thrown,
 And the deep anles of the polluted shrine
 belched her ugly hums and argus-ome.
 The Sultan's frantic dance, the Fakir's glittering moon.

XXIV

How fares Don Roderick? — E'en as one who spurs
 Flashes fast their place o'er midnight's calm wind,
 And harts around his children's pattering
 cries,

And sees the pale assistants stand
 aloof;
 While cruel Conscience brings him bitter proof
 His folly or his crime have caused his grief;
 And while above him nods the crumbling
 roof,
 He curses earth and Heaven — himself in chief —
 Desperate of earthly aid, despairing Heaven's relief!

XXV

That scythe-armed Giant turned his fatal glass
 And twilight on the landscape closed
 her wings;
 Far to Asturian hills the war-sounds pass,
 And in their stead rebock or timbrel rang;
 And to the sound the bell-decked dancer
 springs,
 Bazaars resound as when their marts
 are met,
 In doorway light the Moor his jerrid
 flings,
 And on the land as evening seemed to
 set,
 The Imam's elixir was heard from mosque or minaret.

XXVI

So passed that pagant. Ere another
 came,
 The visionary scene was wrapped in
 smoke,
 Whose sulphurous wreaths were crossed in sheets of flame;
 With every flash a bolt explosive
 broke,
 Till Roderick deemed the fiends had turned their yoke;
 And would guard heaven the infernal gentleness
 For War's new and dreadful language
 spoken,
 None by ancient warrior heard or
 known,
 Lightning and smoke her breath, and thunder was her tone.

XXVII

From the dim landscape roll the clouds
 away —

The Christians have regained their heritage;
 Before the Cross has waned the Crescent's ray,
 And many a monastery decks the stage,
 And lofty church and low-browed hermitage.
 The land obeys a Hermit and a Knight, —
 The Genii these of Spain for many an age;
 This clad in sackcloth, that in armor bright,
 And that was VALOR named, this BIGOTRY was hight.

XXVIII

VALOR was harnessed like a chief of old,
 Armed at all points, and prompt for knightly gest;
 His sword was tempered in the Ebro cold,
 Morena's eagle plume adorned his crest,
 The spoils of Afric's lion bound his breast.
 Fierce he stepped forward and flung down his gage;
 As if of mortal kind to brave the best.
 Him followed his companion, dark and grim,
 As he my Master sung, the dangerous Archimage.

XXIX

Haughty of heart and brow the warrior came,
 In look and language proud as proud might be,
 Vaunting his lordship, lineage, fights, and fame:
 Yet was that barefoot monk more proud than he;
 And as the ivy climbs the tallest tree,
 So round the loftiest soul his toils he wound,
 And with his spells subdued the fierce and free,
 Till ermined Age and Youth in arms renowned,
 Honoring his scourge and haircloth, meekly kissed the ground.

XXX

And thus it chanced that VALOR, peerless knight,
 Who ne'er to King or Kaiser veiled his crest,
 Victorious still in bull-feast or in fight,
 Since first his limbs with mail he did invest,
 Stooped ever to that anchoret's behest;
 Nor reasoned of the right nor of the wrong,
 But at his bidding laid the lance in rest,
 And wrought fell deeds the troubled world along,
 For he was fierce as brave and pitiless as strong.

XXXI

Of his proud galleys sought some new-found world,
 That latest sees the sun or first the morn;
 Still at that wizard's feet their spoils he hurled, —
 Ingots of ore from rich Potosi borne,
 Crowns by Caciques, aigrettes by Omrahs worn,
 Wrought of rare gems, but broken, rent, and foul;
 Idols of gold from heathen temples torn,
 Bedabbled all with blood. — With grisly scowl
 The hermit marked the stains and smiled beneath his cowl.

XXXII

Then did he bless the offering, and bade make
 Tribute to Heaven of gratitude and praise;
 And at his word the choral hymns awake,
 And many a hand the silver censers sways,
 But with the incense-breath these censers raise
 Mix steams from corpses smouldering in the fire;
 The groans of prisoned victims mar the lays,
 And shrieks of agony confound the quire;
 While, mid the mingled sounds, the darkened scenes expire.

XXXIII

Preluding light, were strains of music
 heard,
 As once again revolved that measured
 sand:
 Such sounds as when, for sylvan dance
 prepared,
 Gay Xeres summons forth her vintage
 land;
 When for the light bolero ready stand
 The mossy blithe, with gay muchacha met,
 He conscious of his brodered cap and
 band,
 She of her netted locks and light cor-
 sette,
 Each upon perch'd to spring and shake the castanet.

XXXIV

And well each strains the opening scene became,
 For VALER had relaxed his ardent
 look,
 And at a lady's feet like Bos tame, <sup>320</sup>
 Lay stretched, full loath the weight of arms to brook;
 And softened RIGOR upon his book
 Pattered a task of little good or ill,
 But the blithe peasant plied his pruninghook,
 Whistled the muleteer o'er vale and
 hill,
 And rung from village-green the merry seguidilla.

XXXV

Gray Euzaly, grown impatient of toil,
 Let the grave serpent slip his lary
 hold,
 And careless saw his rule become the
 spoil
 Of a loose female and her rumour
 told,
 But peace was on the cottage and the
 fold,
 From court intrigue, from bickering
 faction far;
 Beneath the chestnut-tree love's tale was
 told,
 And to the tinkling of the light guitar
 Sweet sloped the western sun, sweet rose the evening star.

XXXVI

As that sea-cloud, in size like human
 hand
 When first from Carmel by the Tishbite
 seen,
 Came slowly overshadowing Israel's land,
 Awhile perchance bedecked with colour
 sheen,
 While yet the sunbeams on its skirts had been,
 Limning with purple and with gold its shroud,
 Till darker folds obscured the blue serene
 And blotted heaven with one broad sable cloud,
 Then sheeted rain burst down and whirlwinds howled aloud: —

XXXVII

Even so, upon that peaceful scene was
 poured,
 Like gathering clouds, full many a foreign band,
 And HE, their leader, wore in sheath his
 sword,
 And offered peaceful front and open
 hand,
 Veiling the perjured treachery he planned,
 By friendship's seal and honor's specious guise, <sup>330</sup>
 Until he won the passes of the land;
 Then burst were home's oath and friendship's ties!
 He clutched his venture grasp and called fair Spain his prize.

XXXVIII

An iron crown his anxious forehead bore;
 And well such diadem his heart became
 Who nether his purpose for remorse gave
 o'er,
 Or checked his course for pity or
 shame,
 Who, trained a soldier, deemed a soldier's fame
 Might flourish in the wreath of battles
 won,
 Though neither truth nor home decked
 his name;
 Who, placed by fortune on a monarch's
 throne,
 Recked not of monarch's faith or mercy's kindly tone.

XXXIX

From a rude isle his ruder lineage came:
 The spark that, from a suburb-hovel's hearth
 Ascending, wraps some capital in flame,
 Hath not a meaner or more sordid birth.
 And for the soul that bade him waste the earth —
 The sable land-flood from some swamp obscure,
 That poisons the glad husband-field with dearth,
 And by destruction bids its fame endure,
 Hath not a source more sullen, stagnant, <sup>350</sup>
 and impure.

XL

Before that leader strode a shadowy
 form;
 Her limbs like mist, her torch like meteor showed,
 With which she beckoned him through fight and storm,
 And all he crushed that crossed his desperate road,
 Nor thought, nor feared, nor looked on what he trode.
 Realms could not glut his pride, blood
 could not slake,
 So oft as e'er she sheek her torch abroad:
 It was AMBITION bade his terrors
 wake,
 Nor deigned she, as of yore, a milder form
 to take. <sup>360</sup>

XLI

No longer now she spurned at mean revenge,
 Or staid her hand for conquered foe-
 man's moan,
 As when, the fates of aged Rome to change,
 By Cæsar's side she crossed the Rubicon.
 Nor joyed she to bestow the spoils she
 won,
 As when the handed powers of Greece were tasked
 To war beneath the Youth of Macedon:
 No seemly veil her modern minion
 asked,
 He saw her hideous face and loved the fiend
 unmasked.

XLII

That prelate marked his march — on banners blazed
 With battles won in many a distant land, <sup>370</sup>
 On eagle-standards and on arms he gazed;
 'And hopest thou, then,' he said, 'thy power shall stand?
 O, thou hast builded on the shifting sand
 And thou hast tempered it with slaugh-
 ter's flood;
 And know, fell scourge in the Almighty's
 hand,
 Gore-moistened trees shall perish in the bud,
 And by a bloody death shall die the Man of Blood !'

XLIII

The ruthless leader beckoned from his
 train
 A wan fraternal shade, and bade him
 kneel, <sup>380</sup>
 And paled his temples with the crown of Spain,
 While trumpets rang and heralds cried
 'Castile !'
 Not that he loved him — No ! — In no
 man's weal,
 Scarce in his own, e'er joyed that sullen
 heart;
 Yet round that throne he bade his warriors wheel,
 That the poor puppet might perform his part
 And be a sceptred slave, at his stern beck to start.

XLIV

But on the natives of that land misused
 Not long the silence of amazement
 hung,
 Nor brooked they long their friendly faith abused; <sup>390</sup>
 For with a common shriek the general
 tongue
 Exclaimed, 'To arms !' and fast to arms
 they sprung.
 And VALOR woke, that Genius of the
 land !
 Pleasure and ease and sloth aside he flung,
 As burst the awakening Nazarite his
 band
 When 'gainst his treacherous foes he clenched his dreadful hand.

XLV

That mimic monarch now cast anxious
eye
Upon the satraps that begirt him
round,
Now doffed his royal robe in act to fly,
And from his brow the diadem un-
bowed.
So oft, so near, the Patriot bugle wound,
From Tarik's walls to Bilbao's mountains blown,
These martial satellites hard labor found,
To guard awhile his substituted throne;
Light recking of his cause, but battling for their own.

XLVI

From Alpuhara's peak that bugle rung,
And it was echoed from Corunna's
wall;
Stately Seville responsive war-shout
hung,
Grenada caught it in her Moorish hall;
Gahista bade her children fight or fall,
Wild Buscay shook his mountain-coronet,
Valencia roused her at the battle-call,
And, foremost still where Valor's sons
are met,
Fast started to his gun each fiery Miquelet.

XLVII

But unappalled and burning for the fight,
The invaders march, of victory secure,
Skillful their force to sever or unite,
And trained alike to vanquish or endure.
Nor skillful less, cheap conquest to insure,
Discord to breathe and jealousy to sow,
To quell by boasting and by bribes to lure;
While nought against them bring the unpractised foe,
Save hearts for freedom's cause and hands
for freedom's blow.

XLVIII

Proudly they march — but, O, they march not forth
By one hot field to crown a brief campaign,
As when their eagles, sweeping through
the North,
Destroyed at every stoop an ancient reign!

Far other fate had Heaven decreed for Spain;
In vain the steel, in vain the torch was pled,
New Patriot armies started from the
slain,
High blazed the war, and long, and far,
and wide,
And oft the God of Battles blest the righteous side.

XLIX

Nor unatoned, where Freedom's foes prevail,
Remained their savage waste. With blade and brand
By day the invaders ravaged hill and
dale,
But with the darkness the Guerilla
band
Came like night's tempest and avenged
the land,
And claimed for blood the retribution
due,
Probed the hard heart and lopped the murderous hand;
And Dawn, when o'er the scene her beams she threw,
Midst ruins they had made the spoilers'
corpses knew.

L

What minstrel verse may sing or tongue
may tell,
Amid the visioned strife from sea to
sea,
How oft the Patriot banners rose or
fell,
Still honored in defeat as victory?
For that sad pageant of events to be Showed every form of fight by field
and flood;
Slaughter and Ruin, shouting forth their
glee,
Beheld, while riding on the tempest
scud,
The waters choked with slain, the earth
bedrenched with blood!

LI

Then Zaragoza — blighted be the tongue
That names thy name without the honor due!
For never hath the harp of minstrel rung
Of faith so felly proved, so firmly true!

Mine, sap, and bomb thy shattered ruins
 knew,
 Each art of war's extremity had room,
 Twice from thy half-sacked streets the foe withdrew,
 And when at length stern Fate decreed thy doom,
 They won not Zaragoza but her children's bloody tomb.

LII

Yet raise thy head, sad city! Though in chains,
 Enthralled thou canst not be! Arise,
 and claim
 Reverence from every heart where Freedom reigns,
 For what thou worshipping! — thy
 sainted dame,
 She of the Column, honored be her name
 By all, whate'er their creed, who honor love!
 And like the sacred relics of the flame
 That gave some martyr to the blessed above,
 To every loyal heart may thy sad embers prove!

LIII

Nor thine alone such wreck. Gerona
 fair!
 Faithful to death thy heroes should be
 sung,
 Manning the towers, while o'er their heads the air
 Swart as the smoke from raging furnace hung;
 Now thicker darkening where the mine
 was sprung,
 Now briefly lightened by the cannon's
 flare,
 Now arched with fire-sparks as the bomb
 was flung,
 And reddening now with conflagra-
 tion's glare,
 While by the fatal light the foes for storm prepare.

LIV

While all around was danger, strife, and
 fear,
 While the earth shook and darkened
 was the sky,
 And wide destruction stunned the listening ear,

480

Appalled the heart, and stupefied the
 eye, —
 Afar was heard that thrice-repeated cry,
 In which old Albion's heart and tongue
 unite,
 Whene'er her soul is up and pulse beats
 high,
 Whether it hail the wine-cup or the fight,
 And bid each arm be strong or bid each heart be light.

LV

Don Roderick turned him as the shout grew loud —
 A varied scene the changeful vision
 showed,
 For, where the ocean mingled with the
 cloud,
 A gallant navy stemmed the billows
 broad.
 From mast and stern Saint George's symbol flowed,
 Blent with the silver cross to Scotland
 dear;
 Mottling the sea their landward barges rowed,
 And flashed the sun on bayonet, brand,
 and spear,
 And the wild beach returned the seamen's jovial cheer.

LVI

It was a dread yet spirit-stirring sight!
 The billows foamed beneath a thousand oars,
 Fast as they land the red-cross ranks
 unite,
 Legions on legions brightening all the shores.
 Then banners rise and cannon-signal
 roars,
 Then peals the warlike thunder of the drum,
 Thrills the loud fife, the trumpet-flourish
 pours,
 And patriot hopes awake and doubts
 are dumb,
 For, bold in Freedom's cause, the bands of Ocean come!

LVII

A various host they came — whose ranks display
 Each mode in which the warrior meets the fight:

LXIII

O vain, though anxious, is the glance I
 cast,
 Since Fate has marked futurity her own: <sup>560</sup>
 Yet Fate resigns to worth the glorious
 past,
 The deeds recorded and the laurels
 won.
 Then, though the Vault of Destiny be
 gone,
 King, prelate, all the phantasms of my
 brain,
 Melted away like mist-wreaths in the sun,
 Yet grant for faith, for valor, and for Spain,
 One note of pride and fire, a patriot's parting strain!

CONCLUSION

I

'Who shall command Estrella's mountain-tide
 Back to the source, when tempestchafed, to hie?
 Who, when Gascogne's vexed gulf is raging wide,
 Shall hush it as a nurse her infant's
 cry?
 His magic power let such vain boaster
 try,
 And when the torrent shall his voice
 obey,
 And Biscay's whirlwinds list his lullaby,
 Let him stand forth and bar mine
 eagles' way,
 And they shall heed his voice and at his bidding stay.

II

'Else ne'er to stoop till high on Lisbon's towers <sup>10</sup>
 They close their wings, the symbol of our yoke,
 And their own sea hath whelmed yon
 red-cross powers!'
 Thus, on the summit of Alverca's
 rock,
 To marshal, duke, and peer Gaul's leader
 spoke.
 While downward on the land his legions press,

Before them it was rich with vine and flock,
 And smiled like Eden in her summer dress; —
 Behind their wasteful march a reeking wilderness.

III

And shall the boastful chief maintain his
 word,
 Though Heaven hath heard the wail-ings of the land, <sup>20</sup> Though Lusitania whet her vengeful
 sword,
 Though Britons arm and WELLING-
 TON command?
 No! grim Busaco's iron ridge shall
 stand
 An adamantine barrier to his force;
 And from its base shall wheel his shattered band,
 As from the unshaken rock the torrent
 hoarse
 Bears off its broken waves and seeks a devious course.

IV

Yet not because Alcoba's mountain-hawk Hath on his best and bravest made her food,
 In numbers confident, yon chief shall balk <sup>30</sup>
 His lord's imperial thirst for spoil and
 blood:
 For full in view the promised conquest stood,
 And Lisbon's matrons from their walls might sum
 The myriads that had half the world subdued,
 And hear the distant thunders of the drum
 That bids the bands of France to storm and havoc come.

V

Four moons have heard these thunders
 idly rolled,
 Have seen these wistful myriads eye
 their prey,
 As famished wolves survey a guarded
 fold —
 But in the middle path a Lion lay! <sup>40</sup>
 At length they move — but not to battlefray,

Nor blaze yon fires where meets the manly fight;
Beacons of infamy, they light the way
Where cowardice and cruelty unite
To damn with double shame their ignominious flight!

VI

O triumph for the fiends of lust and wrath!
Ne'er to be told, yet ne'er to be forgot,
What wanton horrors marked their wreckful path!
The peasant butchered in his ruined
cot,
The hoary priest even at the altar shot,<sup>50</sup> Childhood and age given o'er to sword and flame,
Woman to infamy; — no crime forgot,
By which inventive demons might pro-
claim Immortal hate to man and scorn of God's great name!

VII

The rudest sentinel in Britain born
With horror paused to view the havoc
done,
Gave his poor crust to feed some wretch
forlorn,
Wiped his stern eye, then fiercer
grasped his gun.
Nor with less zeal shall Britain's peaceful son
Exult the debt of sympathy to pay;<sup>60</sup>
Riches nor poverty the tax shall shun, Nor prince nor peer, the wealthy nor
the gay,
Nor the poor peasant's mite, nor bard's more worthless lay.

VIII

But thou — unfoughten wilt thou yield to Fate,
Minion of Fortune, now miscalled in
vain!
Can vantage-ground no confidence create.
Marcella's pass, nor Guarda's mountain-chain?
Vainglorious fugitive, yet turn again!
Behold, where, named by some prophetic seer,
Flows Honor's Fountain, as foredoomed
the stain<sup>70</sup>

From thy dishonored name and arms to clear —
Fallen child of Fortune, turn, redeem her favor here!

IX

Yet, ere thou turn'st, collect each distant
aid;
Those chief that never heard the lion
roar!
Within whose souls lives not a trace portrayed
Of Talavera or Mondego's shore!
Marshal each band thou hast and summon more;
Of war's fell stratagems exhaust the whole;
Rank upon rank, squadron on squadron
pour,
Legion on legion on thy foeman
roll,
And weary out his arm — thou canst not quell his soul.

X

O vainly gleams with steel Agueda's
shore,
Vainly thy squadrons hide Assuava's
plain,
And front the flying thunders as they
roar,
With frantic charge and tenfold odds,
in vain!
And what avails thee that for CAMERON
slain
Wild from his plaided ranks the yell was given?
Vengeance and grief gave mountain-rage
the rein,
And, at the bloody spear-point headlong driven,
Thy despot's giant guards fled like the rack of heaven.<sup>80</sup>

XI

Go, baffled boaster! teach thy haughty
mood
To plead at thine imperious master's throne!
Say, thou hast left his legions in their
blood,
Deceived his hopes and frustrated
thine own;
Say, that thine utmost skill and valor
shown

By British skill and valor were out-
vied;
Last say, thy conqueror was WELLING-TON!
And if he chafe, be his own fortune
tried—
God and our cause to friend, the venture
we 'll abide.

XII

But you, the heroes of that well-fought
day,
How shall a bard unknowing and unknown
His meed to each victorious leader pay,
Or bind on every brow the laurels
won?
Yet fain my harp would wake its boldest
tone,
O'er the wide sea to hail CADOGAN
brave;
And he perchance the minstrel-note
might own,
Mindful of meeting brief that Fortune
gave
Mid yon far western isles that bear the Atlantic rave.

XIII

Yes! hard the task, when Britons wield
the sword
To give each chief and every field its
fame:
Hark! Albuera thunders BERESFORD,
And red Barosa shouts for dauntless
GREME!
O for a verse of tumult and of flame,
Bold as the bursting of their cannon
sound,
To bid the world re-echo to their fame!
For never upon gory battle-ground
With conquest's well-bought wreath were braver victors crowned!

XIV

O who shall grudge him Albuera's bays
Who brought a race regenerate to the field,
Roused them to emulate their fathers'
praise,
Tempered their headlong rage, their courage steeled,
And raised fair Lusitania's fallen shield,
And gave new edge to Lusitania's
sword,

And taught her sons forgotten arms to wield—
Shivered my harp and burst its every chord,
If it forget thy worth, victorious BERES-FORD!

XV

Not on that bloody field of battle
won,
Though Gaul's proud legions rolled
like mist away,
Was half his self-devoted valor shown,—
He gaged but life on that illustrious
day;
But when he toiled those squadrons to array
Who fought like Britons in the bloody
game,
Sharper than Polish pike or assagay,
He braved the shafts of censure and
of shame,
And, dearer far than life, he pledged a soldier's fame.

XVI

Nor be his praise o'erpast who strove to hide
Beneath the warrior's vest affection's
wound,
Whose wish Heaven for his country's weal denied;
Danger and fate he sought, but glory
found.
From clime to clime, where'er war's trumpets sound,
The wanderer went; yet, Caledonia!
still Thine was his thought in march and tented ground;
He dreamed mid Alpine cliffs of Ath-ole's hill,
And heard in Ebro's roar his Lyndoch's lovely rill.

XVII

O hero of a race renowned of old, Whose war-cry oft has waked the battle-swell,
Since first distinguished in the onset
bold,
Wild sounding when the Roman rampart fell!
By Wallace' side it rung the Southron's
knell,

Alderne, Kilsythe, and Tibber owned its fame, <sup>150</sup>
Tummell's rude pass can of its terrors
tell,
But ne'er from prouder field arose the
name
Than when wild Ronda learned the conquering shout of GREME!

XVIII

But all too long, through seas unknown and dark, —
With Spenser's parable I close my tale, —

By shoal and rock hath steered my ven-turous bark,
And landward now I drive before the
gale.
And now the blue and distant shore I bail,
And nearer now I see the port er-
pand,
And now I gladly furl my weary sail, <sup>160</sup>
And as the prow light touches on the
strand,
I strike my red-cross flag and bind my skiff to land.

ROKEBY

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

Mr. Morritt, to whom Scott dedicates Rokeby, and in whose beautiful estate the scene of the poem is laid, was introduced to the poet in the early summer of 1808, and an intimacy began which was one of the most agreeable elements in Scott's life. Twenty years later when paying him a visit, Scott recorded in his Journal (ii. 195): 'He is now one of my oldest, and, I believe, one of my most sincere friends, a man unequalled in the mixture of sound good sense, high literary cultivation, and the kindest and sweetest temper that ever graced a human bosom.' The intimacy led to a long correspondence and to frequent interchange of visits. Mr. Morritt's own recollections of Scott form a delightful contribution in Lockhart's Life. He visited Scott in Edinburgh when he first made his acquaintance, and Scott returned the visit a year later. The beauty of Rokeby made a great impression upon him, as may be seen by his letter to George Ellis, July 8, 1809, and it is most probable that in taking the step which led to the purchase of Abbotsford, and removal from Ashestiel, Scott was influenced by his admiration for his friend's estate. At any rate, Scott palpably connected the writing of the poem Rokeby with the enlargement of his domain, and asked eagerly Morritt to aid him in his poetical venture.

'I have a grand project to tell you of,' he writes December 20, 1811. "Nothing less than a fourth romance, in verse; the theme, during the English civil wars of Charles I., and the scene, your own domain of Rokeby. I want to build my cottage a little better than my limited finances will permit out of my ordinary income; and although it is very true that as author should not hazard his reputation, yet, as Bob Acres says, I really think Reputation should take some care of the gentleman in return. Now, I have all your scenery deeply imprinted in my memory, and moreover, be it known to you, I intend to refresh its traces this ensuing summer, and to go as far as the borders of Lancashire, and the caves of Yorkshire, and so perhaps on to Derbyshire. I have sketched a story which pleases me, and I am only anxious to keep my theme quiet for its being piddled upon by some of your Ready-to-catch literati, as John Bunyan calls them, would be a serious misfortune to me. I am not without hope of seducing you to be my guide a little way on my tour. Is there not some book (sense or nonsense I care not) on the beauties of Teesdale — I mean a descriptive work? If you can point it out or lend it me, you will do me a great favour, and no less if you can tell me any traditions of the period. By which party was Barnard castle occupied? It strikes me that it should be held for the Parliament. Pray help me in this, by truth, or fiction, or tradition. — I care not which if it be picturesque. What the deuce is the name of that wild glen, where we had such a clamber on horseback up a stone staircase? — Cat's Cradle, or Cat's Castle, I think it was. I wish also to have the true edition of the traditional tragedy of your old house at Mortham, and the ghost thereunto appertaining, and you will do me yeoman's service in compiling the relics of so valuable a legend. Item — Do you know anything of a striking ancient castle, belonging, I think, to the Duke s, called Coningsburgh? Grosse no—but in a very flimsy manner. I once sat on the mail-coach, when its round flying buttresses had a most romantic in the morning dawn.

Upon Mr. Morritt girded himself and set himself thoroughly to the task of giving Scott with the needed material, and his suggestions for the construction of a which were clearly heeded by the in the correspondence between the two continued during the winter and spring and Morritt furnished further memoranda in answer to questions, and Scott his time between his poem and the high it was to help pay for. 'My Rokeby does and must go forward,' he wrote on March 2, 1812, 'or my trees and enclosures, perchance, stand still. But I defer the first canto after I had written it because it did not quite please me. Keep off people's kibes if I can, for though laid during the civil wars, to do with the politics of either being very much confined to the adventures of distresses of a particular family.'

In the same letter he says that he must refresh his memory with the scenery, and of the serviceable memoranda of Mr. Scott, and in the autumn of 1812 he went to Scott, Walter, and Sophia to Rokeby, staying there about a week. It was while on this visit that Mr. Morritt made the following note on Scott's habits of observation, which has often been quoted for the light it throws on the poet's attitude toward nature. 'I observed him,' says Morritt, 'noting the peculiar little wild flowers and the accidentally grew round and on the bold crag near his intended cave of the old man; and could not help saying, that he was not to be on oath in his work, violets, and primroses would be as good as any of the humble plants he was gathering. I laughed, in short, at his scrupulousness, but I understood him when he remarked that in nature herself no two scenes were exactly alike, and that whoever copied what was before his eyes, would possess a variety in his descriptions, and evidently an imagination as boundless as the range of nature in the scenes he re-created. Whoever trusted to imagination would soon find his own mind cramped and contracted to a few favorite images, and the repetition of these would later produce that very monotonousness which had always haunted the poetry in the hands of any but the purveyors of truth. Besides which,' he said, "local names and peculiarities make a fictitious story book look so much better in the face."'

The poem gave its author a good deal of trouble, since he was unwontedly anxious to do it well, and he destroyed his work and re-attacked it, finally pushing it to a conclusion in the three months at the close of 1812. As usual, during the process of composition and when it was completed he sought the criticism of his friends. 'There are two or three songs,' he wrote Morritt, 'and particularly one in praise of Brignal Banks, which I trust you will like—because, entre nous, I like them myself. One of them is a little dashing banditti song, called and entitled Allen-a-Dale.' Scott, indeed, gives Joanna Baillie a curious coincidence in the discovery, on reading her 'Passion of Fear,' that she had an outlaw's song of which the chorus was almost verbatim that which he had written for his outlaw's song in Rokeby, so that he was forced to re-write that song. Miss Baillie herself repaid him with an enthusiastic letter after reading Rokeby. 'I wish you could have seen me,' she writes, 'when it arrived. My sister was from home, so I stirred my fire, swept the hearth, chased the cat out of the room, lighted my candles, and began upon it immediately. It is written with wonderful power both as to natural objects and human character; and your magnificent bandit, Bertram, is well entitled to your partiality; for it is a masterly picture, and true to nature in all its parts, according to my conceptions of nature. Your Lady and both her lovers are very pleasing and beautifully drawn, her conduct and behavior to them both is so natural and delicate; and so is theirs to each other. How many striking passages there are which take a hold of the imagination that can never be unloosed! The burning of the castle in all its progress is very sublime; the final scene, also, when Bertram rides into the church, is grand and terrific; the scene between him and Edmund, when he weeps to find that there is any human being that will shed a tear for him, is very touching and finely imagined. I say nothing of what struck me so much in the three first cantos. And besides those higher beauties, there are those of a softer kind that are wonderfully attractive; for instance, the account of the poor Irishman's death, after he had delivered the child to the Lord of Rokeby, which made me weep freely, and the stealing of Edmund back to the cave by night with all the indications of his silent path, the owl ceasing its cry, the otter leaping into the stream, etc., is delightful. Your images and similes too, with which the work is not overloaded (like a lady with a few jewels, but of the best water), are excellent. Your songs are good, particularly those of Wilfrid; but they have struck me less, somehow or other, than the rest of the poem. As to the invention of your story, I praise that more sparingly, for tho' the leading circumstances are well imagined, the conducting of it seems to me too dramatic for a lyrical narrative, and there are too many complicated contrivances to the bringing about the catastrophe.

Miss Baillie proceeded, with some sagacity, to predict that Scott's mind was working toward dramatic composition. Her criticism of Rokeby indeed implies that the story would have lent itself better to a form which permitted a greater elaboration of character and plot. Only the next year, Scott was to perfect his Waverley. In truth in Rokeby, Scott's interest, though largely in the presentation of his friend's domain, was specifically in character and the heroine especially was the reflection, in imaginative form, of that early love, whose influence had already been felt in The Lay of the Last Minstrel. Writing to Miss Edgeworth five years after the appearance of Rokeby, he says: "Thus much of Matilda I recollect — (for that is not so easily forgotten) — that she was attempted for the existing person of a lady who is now no more, so that I am particularly flattered with your distinguishing it from the others, which are in general mere shadows." And Lockhart, quoting this, adds: "I can have no doubt that the lady he here alludes to, was the object of his own unfortunate first love; and as little, that in the romantic generosity, both of the youthful poet who fails to win her higher favor, and of his chivalrous competitor, we have before us something more than 'a mere shadow'."

Rokeby was published the first week in January, 1814, and bore the dedication to Mr. Morritt. When the poem was issued in the collective edition of 1816, it was preceded by the following Introduction.

INTRODUCTION

Between the publication of The Lady of the Lake, which was so eminently successful, and that of Rokeby, in 1814, three years had intervened. I shall not, I believe, be accused of ever having attempted to usurp a superiority over many men of genius, my contemporaries; but, in point of popularity, not of actual talent, the caprice of the public had certainly given me such a temporary superiority over most of whom, in regard to poetical fancy and feeling, I secretly thought myself worthy to loose the shoe-latch. On the other hand, it would be absurd affectation in me to deny that I concerned myself to understand more perfectly than many of my contemporaries, the manner most likely to interest the great mass of mankind. Yet, even with this belief, I must truly and fairly say that I always considered myself rather as one who held the reins in time to be paid over to the winner, than as having any pretence to keep them in my own right.

In the mean time years crept on, and not without their usual depredations on the passing generation. My sons had arrived at the age when the paternal home was no longer their best abode, as both were destined to active life. The field-sports, to which I was peculiarly attached, had now less interest, and were regulated by other amusements of a more quiet character; and the means and opportunity of pursuing these were to be sought far. I had, indeed, for some years attended to farming, a knowledge of which is, or at least was then, indispensable to the comfort of a family residing in a solitary country-house; but although this was the favorite amusement of many of my friends, I have never been able to consider it as a source of pleasure. I never could think it a matter of passing importance, that my cattle or crops were better or more plentiful than those of my neighbors, and nevertheless I began to feel the necessity of some more quiet out-door occupation, different from those I had hitherto pursued. I purchased a small farm of about one hundred acres, with the purpose of planting and improving it, to which property circumstances afterwards enabled me to make considerable additions; and thus an era took place in my life, almost equal to the important one mentioned by the Vicar of Wakefield, when he removed from the Blue-room to the Brown. In point of neighborhood, at least, the change of residence made little more difference. Ashbourn, to which we removed, was only six or seven miles down the Towed, and lay on the same beautiful stream. It did not possess the romantic character of Ashbourn my former residence, but it had a stretch of meadow-land along the river, and possessed in the phrase of the landscape-gardener, considerable regularities. Above all, the land was no own, like Uncle Toby's Bowling-green, to do what I would with. It had been, though the gardenism was long postponed as early work of mine to connect myself with my mother-earth, and prosecute those experiments by which a species of creative power is exercised over the face of nature. I am trace, even to childhood, a pleasure derived from Dodsley's account of Shenstone's Leazes, and I envied the poet much more for the pleasure of accomplishing the objects detailed in his friend's sketch of his grounds, than for the possession of pipe, crook, flock, and Phillis to boot. My memory, also, tenacious of quaint expressions, still retained a phrase which it had gathered from an old almanac of Charles the Second's time (when everything down to almanacs affected to be smart), in which the reader, in the month of June, is advised for health's sake to walk a mile or two every day before breakfast, and, if he can possibly so manage, to let his exercise be taken upon his own land.

With the satisfaction of having attained the fulfilment of an early and long-cherished hope, I commenced my improvements, as delightful in their progress as those of the child who first makes a dress for a new doll. The nakedness of the land was in time hidden by woodlands of considerable extent—the smallest of possible cottages was progressively expanded into a sort of dream of a mansion-house, whimsical in the exterior, but convenient within. Nor did I forget what is the natural pleasure of every man who has been a reader; I mean the filling the shelves of a tolerably large library. All these objects I kept in view, to be executed as convenience should serve; and although I knew many years must elapse before they could be attained, I was of a disposition to comfort myself with the Spanish proverb, 'Time and I against any two.'

The difficult and indispensable point of finding a permanent subject of occupation was now at length attained; but there was annexed to it the necessity of becoming again a candidate for public favor; for as I was turned improver on the earth of the every-day world it was under condition that the small town of Parnassus, which might be accessible to my labors, should not remain uncultivated.

I meditated, at first, a poem on the subject of Benet, in which I made some progress, but afterwards judged it advisable to lay it aside, supposing that an English story might have more novelty; in consequence, the precedence was given to Rokeby.

If subject and scenery could have influenced the fate of a poem, that of Rokeby should have been eminently distinguished; for the grounds belonged to a dear friend, with whom I had lived in habits of intimacy for many years, and the place itself united the romantic beauties of the wilds of Scotland with the rich and smiling aspect of the southern portion of the island. But the Cavaliers and Roundheads, whom I attempted to summon up to tenant this beautiful region, had for the public neither the novelty nor the peculiar interest of the primitive Highlanders. This, perhaps, was scarcely to be expected, considering that the general mind sympathizes readily and at once with the stamp which nature herself has affixed upon the manners of a people living in a simple and patriarchal state; whereas it has more difficulty in understanding or interesting itself in manners founded upon those peculiar habits of thinking or acting which are produced by the progress of society. We could read with pleasure the tale of the adventures of a Cossack or a Mongol Tartar, while we only wonder and stare over those of the lovers in the Pleasing Chinese History, where the embarrassments turn upon difficulties arising out of unintelligible delicacies peculiar to the customs and manners of that affected people.

'The cause of my failure had, however, a far deeper root. The manner, or style, which, by its novelty, attracted the public in an unusual degree, had now, after having been three times before them, exhausted the patience of the reader, and began in the fourth to lose its charms. The reviewers may be said to have apostrophized the author in the language of Farnell's Edwin:—

'And here reverse the charm, he cries,
And let it fairly now suffice,
The gambol has been shown.'

The licentious combination of rhymes, in a manner perhaps not very congenial to our language, had not been confined to the author. Indeed, in most similar cases, the inventors of such novelties have their reputation destroyed by their own imitators, as Actæon fell under the fury of his own dogs. The present author, like Bohadil, had taught his trick of fence to a hundred gentlemen (and ladies), who could fence very nearly or quite as well as himself. For this there was no remedy; the harmony became tiresome and ordinary, and both the original inventor and his invention must have fallen into contempt if he had not found out another road to public favor. What has been said of the metre only, must be considered to apply equally to the structure of the Poem and of the style. The very best passages of any popular style are not, perhaps, susceptible of imitation, but they may be approached by men of talent; and those who are less able to copy them, at least lay hold of their peculiar features, so as to produce a strong burlesque. In either way, the effect of the manner is rendered cheap and common; and, in the latter case, ridiculous to boot. The evil consequences to an author's reputation are at least as fatal as those which come upon the musical composer when his melody falls into the hands of the street ballad-singer.

Of the unfavorable species of imitation, the author's style gave room to a very large number, owing to an appearance of facility to which some of those who used the measure unquestionably leaned too far. The effect of the more favorable imitations, composed by persons of talent, was almost equally unfortunate to the original minstrel, by showing that they could overdo him with his own bow. In short, the popularity which once attended the School, as it was called, was now fast decaying.

Besides all this, to have kept his ground at the crisis when Rokeby appeared, its author ought to have put forth his utmost strength, and to have possessed at least all his original advantages, for a mighty and unsuspected rival was advancing on the stage, — a rival not in poetical powers only, but in that art of attracting popularity, in which the present writer had hitherto preceded better men than himself. The reader will readily see that Byron is here meant, who, after a little relaxation of his great promise, now appeared as a serious candidate, in the first two editions of Childe Harold. I was astonished at the power exerted by that work, which neither the Hours of Idleness, nor the Days of Battle and Scott's Rime, had prepared me to expect from its author. There was a depth in his thought, an eager abandonment in his diction, which excited full confidence in the unexhaustible resources of which he felt himself possessed, and there was none appearance of that labor of the pen, which indicates that the author is conscious of the necessity of doing every stanza to his work, that it may pass without fault. Lord Byron was also a traveller, a man whose name was filled by having seen, in distant scenes of difficulty and danger, the places whose very names are recorded in our history as the scenes of national power. For his own adventures, perhaps, but certainly to the high interests of his personal character, nature had armed in Lord Byron's veins those passions which agitate the human heart with most violence, and which may be said to have furnished his thoughts matter to no other class. There would have been little probability in supposing my verse with so formidable an antagonist; and I was as likely as one of playing the second fiddle to the master, as my imitation of beating the. Age who was advancing. I was growing impatient to those analyses of exaltation in which youth is agitated. I had around me the most pleasant but least exciting of all society, that of kind friends and an affectionate family. My circle of employments was a narrow one; it occupied me constantly, and it became daily more difficult for me to interest myself in poetical composition. —

'Now happily the days of Thalaba went by!'

Yet, though conscious that I must be, in the opinion of good judges, inferior to the place I had for four or five years held in letters, and feeling alike that the latter was one to which I had only a temporary right. I could not brook the idea of relinquishing literary occupation, which had been so long my chief diversion. Neither was I disposed to choose the alternative of sinking into a mere editor and commentator, though that was a species of labor which I had practised, and to which I was attached. But I could not endure to think that I might not, whether known or concealed, do something of more importance. My inmost thoughts were those of the Trojan Captain in the galley race.

'Non iam prius pectus Minotaurus, reges vincere cecit, Quinquas O! — and superant, quibus hoc, Neptunus
Solatus
Extremum pectus reddimus. hoc vincit, cecit,
Et perhibet uicta.'

Æn. lib. v. 134.

I had, indeed, some private reasons for my 'Quinquas O!' which were not worse than those of Minotaurus. I have already hinted that the materials were collected for a poem on the subject of Rokeby, and fragments of it had been shown to some of my friends, and received with applause. Notwithstanding therefore, the common success of Rokeby, and the great chance of his taking the wind out of my sails, there was, I judged, a species of cowardice in looking from the track which I had undertaken, and it was then enough to extract when the battle should be more decidedly lost. The sale of Rokeby, excepting as compared with that of The Lady of the Lake, was in the highest degree respectable; and as it involved fifteen hundred quatuor in three quatuor-weekly days, the trade had no reason to be dissatisfied.

Amsterdam, April, 1830.

'I could not see the bottom pain to gain,
Though — — — — — the longer was a war;
But now enjoy it when the pain is o'er.
But how to gain the power of the war —
Endless warlike and on them that disagree

De Witt

ROKEBY

A POEM IN SIX CANTOS

TO

JOHN B. S. MORRITT, ESQ.,

THIS POEM

THE SCENE OF WHICH IS LAID IN HIS BEAUTIFUL DEMESNE OF ROKERY, IS INSCRIBED, IN TOKEN OF SINCERE FRIENDSHIP, BY WALTER SCOTT.

ADVERTISEMENT

The Scene of this Poem is laid at Rokeby, near Greta Bridge, in Yorkshire, and shifts to the adjacent barony of Ravenshoe Castle, and to other places in that County.

The Time occupied by the Action is a space of Five Days, Three of which are supposed to elapse between the end of the Fifth and the beginning of the Sixth Century.

The cause of the supposed events is immediately subsequent to the great Battle of Marston, near St. Albans. This period of public confusion has been chosen without any purpose of connecting the Poem with the details of Political Events of the Civil War, but only as affording a support to probability in the fictitious Narrative now presented to the Public.

CANTO FIRST

THE moon is in her summer glow,
But hoarse and high the breeze howls,
And, racking her fair face, the cloud
Varies the tincture of her shroud.
On Barnard's towers and Toss's stream,
She changes as a guilty dream,
When Conscience with remorse and fear
Goads sleeping Truth's wild career.
Her light seems now the dusk of shame,
Seems now fierce anger's lurid flame.
Shifting that shade to crime and gloom,
Like apprehension's mirrored glow,
Then sorrow's image tinge the air,
And dies in lightning, like transient
Such varied mien the warrior sees Reflected from the Woodland Tree,
Then from old Bauld's cavern rocks forth,
Sees the chain numbering its hoar
Hears upon mountain and old mill
By fits the passing windings all
Lists to the tempest's loudness round,
And wraps his ragged mantle round.

Those towers, which to the changeable
Glean
Throw many shadows in the stream,
Those towers of Barnard's hold a ghost,
The emblem of yon troubled breast,
In wild and strange confusion tossed,
Knew no living soul of heaven
Laid down when Barnard's banner fell.
It had no change in its wear, with Lampooned its looks and words sought
By effort strong to banish thought,
Shook none at length, but with a strain
Of feelings new and haunter vain,
Struggling in wild disorder past,
The expected future with the past,
Longhouse, antiquating time
Surrendered to the unacted crime,
And calls its hoar words to follow
The sounding sword and waving banner,
While its poor victim's wretched lives
Bear witness to its mortal sin,
And here that woe's first and last Bewilders and misleads the soul.

— what age alone could tame —
 of pride, the eye of flame;
 drawn lip that upward curled,
 that seemed to scorn the world.
 had terror never blanched; 149 that eye had tear-drop quenched
 by severe of swarthy glow looked at pain and knew not woe.
 in danger's direst form,
 and earthquake, flood and storm,
 and he seen by sudden blow,
 in plague, by tortures slow,
 or breach, by steel or ball,
 his shapes and scorned them all.

IX

though BERTRAM's hardened look could blood and danger brook, more than apathy had place 161
 wart brow and callous face;
 passions cherished long loughed them with impressions
 strong.
 gives gloss to sin, all gay
 lly, past with youth away,
 and stood in manhood's hour
 of vice without their flower.
 the soil in which they grew,
 seen tamed when life was new, 170 with vigor to bring forth
 fier fruits of virtuous worth.
 when then his heart had known tler feelings' kindly tone;
 sh waste had been refined ty in his chastened mind,
 of gold, that waste to feed,
 t in love of glory's meed,
 antic then no more, his pride
 in fair virtue for its guide. 180

X

w, by conscience unrestrained,
 by gross vice, by slaughter stained,
 w his daring soul to soar,
 itery o'er the mind he bore;
 ner guilt or heart less hard beneath Bertram's bold regard.
 felt Oswald, while in vain
 e by many a winding train his sullen guest to show the news he longed to know, 190 far other subject hung
 t than faltered from his tongue.
 ght for that his guest did deign
 or spare his secret pain,

But still in stern and stubborn sort
 Returned him answer dark and short,
 Or started from the theme to range
 In loose digression wild and strange,
 And forced the embarrassed host to buy
 By query close direct reply. 200

XI

Awhile he glozed upon the cause
 Of Commons, Covenant, and Laws,
 And Church reformed — but felt rebuke
 Beneath grim Bertram's sneering look,
 Then stammered — 'Has a field been fought ?

Has Bertram news of battle brought ?
 For sure a soldier, famed so far
 In foreign fields for feats of war,
 On eve of fight ne'er left the host
 Until the field were won and lost.' 210
 'Here, in your towers by circling Tees,
 You, Oswald Wycliffe, rest at ease;
 Why deem it strange that others come
 To share such safe and easy home,
 From fields where danger, death, and toil

Are the reward of civil broil ?' —
 'Nay, mock not, friend ! since well we
 know

The near advances of the foe,
 To mar our northern army's work,
 Encamped before beleaguered York 220
 Thy horse with valiant Fairfax lay,
 And must have fought — how went the
 day ?'

XII

'Wouldst hear the tale ? — On Marston
 heath

Met front to front the ranks of death;
 Flourished the trumpets fierce, and now
 Fired was each eye and flushed each brow;
 On either side loud clamors ring,
 "God and the Cause !" — "God and the King !"

Right English all, they rushed to blows,
 With nought to win and all to lose. 230
 I could have laughed — but lacked the time —

To see, in phrenesy sublime,
 How the fierce zealots fought and bled
 For king or state, as humor led;
 Some for a dream of public good,
 Some for church-tippet, gown, and hood,
 Draining their veins, in death to claim
 A patriot's or a martyr's name. —

Lo! Bertram Bingham the hearts
That counterbalanc'd there on adverse parts, 240
No superstitious fool had I Bought El Dorado in the sky!
Chili had heard me through her states,
And Lima open'd her silver gates,
Rich Mexico I had march'd through,
And suck'd the splendours of Peru,
Till sunk Pizarro's daring name,
And, Cortes, thine, in Bertram's fame.' —
'Still from the purpose wilt thou stray!
Good gentle friend, how went the day?' 250

XIII

'Good am I deemed at trumpet sound,
And good where goblets dance the round,
Though gentle us'er was join'd till now
With rugged Bertram's breast and brow. —
But I resume. The battle's rage
Was like the strife which currents wage
Whose channel in his pride
Roth to the main no tribute tide,
His potent broad ocean urges far
A rival son of roaring war;
While in ten thousand eddies driven,
The billows fling their foam to heaven,
And the pale polar waves in vain
Where rolls the wave, where the main
From this open the bloody field
The rolling mists of conduct wheel'd
Unhappily all that heart of shame,
The Roper, in our squamous came,
Hurling against our spears a line
Of golden bars as their time,
Then, when, though darkness in their eyes,
In gold's dim light began to rise,
What wonder thou move? — in answer

Our leaders fell, our ranks were lost
A thousand men, who from the coast
Had led the horses and the wood, Remains of our brave, granger and
man.
To reach the shore and the shore,
Now, stand and wait, to destruction is given,
And a dead end at which none —
Then, when I felt the light,
With the good, brave and generous
men —

XIV

'Dreadful news! — that Wycliffe said
Dreadful destruction had he made
While thinking of you in his eye
The noblest of men to have —

'Dreadful news! — when needed most,
Told ye not that your chiefs were lost?
Complete the woful tale and say
Who fell upon that fatal day, 290
What leaders of repute and name
Bought by their death a deathless fame.
If such my direst foeman's doom,
My tears shall dew his honored tomb. —
No answer? — Friend, of all our host, Thou know'st whom I should hate the most,

Whom thou too once wert wont to hate,
Yet leavest me doubtful of his fate.' —
With look unmoved — 'Of friend or foe,
Aught,' answered Bertram, 'wouldst thou
know, 300

Demand in simple terms and plain,
A soldier's answer shalt thou gain;
For question dark or riddle high
I have nor judgment nor reply.'

XV

The wrath his art and fear suppressed
Now blazed at once in Wycliffe's breast,
And brave from man so meanly born
Roused his hereditary scorn.
'Wretch! hast thou paid thy bloody debt?
Philip of Mortmain, does he yet? 310
False to thy patron or true oath,
Traitorous or perjured, one or both,
Slave! hast thou kept thy promise plight,
To slay thy leader in the fight?
Then from his seat the soldier spring,
And Wycliffe's hand be strong and strong;
His grasp, as hard as given is truth,
Seized the red blood-stain from the wall —
'A snarl!' he cried, and so he quaffed Fling from him Wycliffe's hand and laughed —

'Now, Wycliffe, greets thy heart!
Nor play it thou with the genuine part!
Wycliffe, but for thy master's hand,
Like me to train a horseman.
What need'st thou of the horse's name,
I Bertram? wouldst thou have to mine?
When camest thou to Mortmain's back,
To the good land that was his word?
If thou, though, fortune and he had
In working, Wycliffe's master's hand, to Philip Mortmain was then in Fading his blood-stain to the floor —
No, then, and is not mortmain's hand
Answered after others.
What time, as thou a horse and that
The eye and wound fatal to heart.

point to point I frankly tell
Deed of death as it befell.

XVI

an purposed vengeance I forego,
I me a wretch, nor deem me foe; 340
when an insult I forgive, brand me as a slave and live! —
p of Mortham is with those in Bertram Risingham calls foes;
thom more sure revenge attends,
umbered with ungrateful friends.
as his wont, ere battle glowed,
g the marshalled ranks he rode,
wore his visor up the while.
r his melancholy smile 350
n, full opposed in front, he knew re ROKEBY's kindred banner flew.
I thus," he said, "will friends divide!" —

rd, and thought how side by side two had turned the battle's tide any a well-debated field re Bertram's breast was Philip's
shield.

ght on Darien's deserts pale re death bestrides the evening gale;
o'er my friend my cloak I threw, 360
fenceless faced the deadly dew;
ght on Quarriana's cliff
re, rescued from our foundering skiff, ugh the white breakers' wrath I bore
sted Mortham to the shore;
when his side an arrow found,
ked the Indian's venomous wound.
h thoughts like torrents rushed along,
reep away my purpose strong.

XVII

its are not flint, and flints are rent; 370
ls are not steel, and steel is bent.
n Mortham bade me, as of yore,
war him in the battle's roar,
reely saw the spears laid low,
reely heard the trumpets blow;
was the war in inward strife,
king Mortham's death or life.
n then I thought how, lured to come rtner of his wealth and home,
t of piratic wandering o'er, 380
him I sought our native shore.
Mortham's lord grew far estranged
t the bold heart with whom he ranged;
ts, horrors, unpermitted fears,
ued and dimmed descending years;

The wily priests their victim sought,
And damned each free-born deed and
thought.

Then must I seek another home,
My license shook his sober dome;
If gold he gave, in one wild day 390
I revelled thrice the sum away.
An idle outcast then I strayed,
Unfit for tillage or for trade.
Deemed, like the steel of rusted lance,
Useless and dangerous at once.
The women feared my hardy look,
At my approach the peaceful shook;
The merchant saw my glance of flame,
And locked his hoards when Bertram came;
Each child of coward peace kept far 400
From the neglected son of war.

XVIII

'But civil discord gave the call,
And made my trade the trade of all.
By Mortham urged, I came again
His vassals to the fight to train.
What guerdon waited on my care?
I could not cant of creed or prayer;
Sour fanatics each trust obtained,
And I, dishonored and disdained,
Gained but the high and happy lot 410
In these poor arms to front the shot! —
All this thou know'st, thy gestures tell;
Yet hear it o'er and mark it well.
'T is honor bids me now relate
Each circumstance of Mortham's fate.

XIX

'Thoughts, from the tongue that slowly
part,
Glance quick as lightning through the heart.
As my spur pressed my courser's side,
Philip of Mortham's cause was tried,
And ere the charging squadrons mixed 420
His plea was cast, his doom was fixed.
I watched him through the doubtful fray,
That changed as March's moody day,
'Till, like a stream that bursts its bank,
Fierce Rupert thundered on our flank.
'T was then, midst tumult, smoke, and
strife,
Where each man fought for death or life,
'T was then I fired my petronel,
And Mortham, steed and rider, fell.
One dying look he upward cast, 430
Of wrath and anguish — 't was his last.
Think not that there I stopped, to view
What of the battle should ensue;

I mark not but I mark, and smile
 At thy poor and selfish wile !
 From me you fear,
 Oswald Wycliffe, shields thee here ?
 Run from walls more high than
 these,
 Run through deeper streams than Tees.

Not stab thee ere one yell                      540
 Rouse the distant sentinel ?
 It — it is not my design,
 It were, weak fence were thine;
 Let me that in time of need
 And hath done more desperate deed.
 And rouse thy slumbering son;
 He, and I must needs be gone.'

XXIV

Of his sire's ungenerous part
 Wilfrid's gentle heart,                      550
 Too soft from early life
 With fortune needful strife.
 While yet a harder race
 Erous sons were Wycliffe's grace,
 Wilfrid set contemptuous brand
 On heart and forceless hand;
 And mother's care and joy
 Withered in her sickly boy.
 He of childhood's frolic mood
 The elastic spring of blood;
 For hour he loved to pore                      560
 On treasure's rich and varied lore,
 And from martial scenes and light,
 On staff's feast and Percy's fight,
 On Jaques' moral strain,
 As with Hamlet, wise in vain,
 To himself to soft repose
 In Desdemona's woes.

XXV

He sought not pleasures found
 In horse and hawk and hound,
 And the quiet joys that wake                      570
 By stream and silent lake;
 In dale's solitude to lie,
 All is cliff and copse and sky;
 On Catcastle's dizzy peak,
 On Pendragon's mound to seek.
 On his wout; and there his dream
 On some wild fantastic theme
 Of love or ceaseless spring,
 Contemplation's wearied wing
 Fast as could no more sustain,                      580
 He sunk to earth again.

XXVI

He loved — as many a lay can tell,
 Preserved in Stanmore's lonely dell;
 For his was minstrel's skill, he caught
 The art unteachable, untaught;
 He loved — his soul did nature frame
 For love, and fancy nursed the flame;
 Vainly he loved — for seldom swain
 Of such soft mould is loved again;
 Silent he loved — in every gaze                      590
 Was passion, friendship in his phrase;
 So mused his life away — till died
 His brethren all, their father's pride.
 Wilfrid is now the only heir
 Of all his stratagems and care,
 And destined darkling to pursue
 Ambition's maze by Oswald's clue.

XXVII

Wilfrid must love and woo the bright
 Matilda, heir of Rokeby's knight.                      600
 To love her was an easy quest,
 The secret empress of his breast;
 To woo her was a harder task
 To one that durst not hope or ask.
 Yet all Matilda could she gave
 In pity to her gentle slave;
 Friendship, esteem, and fair regard,
 And praise, the poet's best reward !
 She read the tales his taste approved,
 And sung the lays he framed or loved;
 Yet, loath to nurse the fatal flame                      610
 Of hopeless love in friendship's name,
 In kind caprice she oft withdrew
 The favoring glance to friendship due,
 Then grieved to see her victim's pain,
 And gave the dangerous smiles again.

XXVIII

So did the suit of Wilfrid stand
 When war's loud summons waked the
 land.
 Three banners, floating o'er the Tees,
 The woe-foreboding peasant sees;
 In concert oft they braved of old                      620
 The bordering Scot's incursion bold:
 Frowning defiance in their pride,
 Their vassals now and lords divide.
 From his fair hall on Greta banks,
 The Knight of Rokeby led his ranks,
 To aid the valiant northern earls
 Who drew the sword for royal Charles.
 Mortham, by marriage near allied, —
 His sister had been Rokeby's bride,
 Though long before the civil fray                      630 cheek unequal spread;

 ined, the loosened hair,
 axed, the mournful air. —
 ap; — a woful smile roc-worn cheek a while, — pkes some idle thought,
 in she has wrought;
 at of Indian brakes,
 n the wound she makes, 740
 thus the dreamer's pain,
 life-blood from the vein.
 tice turn his eyes,
 see the sun arise.
 h clouds is still o'ercast,
 fits the stormy blast;
 must wear away
 indle into day,
 waste that weary hour,
 instrel's magic power. 750

XXXIII

SONG

TO THE MOON

ld and clouded beam,
 e of the troubled sky I e mists that o'er thee stream brow their sullen dye I y pure and peaceful eye view our scenes below, less beam supply
 rorld of war and woe I

I will not blame thee now,
 Greta's fairy side; 760
 ud that dimmed thy brow
 angel's beauty hide.
 ides I then could chide,
 thoughts to memory dear,
 fter strain I tried,
 y blush and calmed my fear.

ear thy ray serene
 I to light some lonely dell,
 overs only seen,
 om the crystal well; 770
 i their mossy cell,
 g on the lattice bright,
 a their couch, to tell
 e wanes the summer night I

XXXIV

step at this lone hour I
 a father seeks the tower,

With haggard look and troubled sense,
 Fresh from his dreadful conference.
 'Wilfrid! — what, not to sleep addressed?
 Thou hast no cares to chase thy rest. 780
 Mortbarn has fallen on Marston-moor;
 Bertram brings warrant to secure
 His treasures, bought by spoil and blood,
 For the state's use and public good.
 The menials will thy voice obey;
 Let his commission have its way,
 In every point, in every word.
 Then, in a whisper, — 'Take thy sword!
 Bertram is — what I must not tell.
 I hear his hasty step — farewell!' 790

CANTO SECOND

I

FAR in the chambers of the west,
 The gale had sighed itself to rest;
 The moon was cloudless now and clear,
 But pale and soon to disappear.
 The thin gray clouds waxed dimly light
 On Brusleton and Houghton height;
 And the rich dale that eastward lay
 Waited the wakening touch of day,
 To give its woods and cultured plain,
 And towers and spires, to light again. 10
 But, westward, Staunmore's shapeless swell,
 And Lunedale wild, and Kelton-fell,
 And rock-begirdled Gilmanscar,
 And Arkingarth, lay dark afar;
 While as a livelier twilight falls,
 Emerge proud Barnard's bannered walls.
 High crowned he sits in dawning pale,
 The sovereign of the lovely vale.

II

What prospects from his watch-tower high
 Gleam gradual on the warder's eye! — 20
 Far sweeping to the east, he sees
 Down his deep woods the course of Tees,
 And tracks his wanderings by the steam
 Of summer vapors from the stream;
 And ere he pace his destined hour
 By Brackenbury's dungeon-tower,
 These silver mists shall melt away
 And dew the woods with glittering spray.
 Then in broad lustre shall be shown
 That mighty trench of living stone, 30
 And each huge trunk that from the side
 Reclines him o'er the darksome tide
 Where Tees, full many a fathom low,

VII

The open vale is soon passed o'er,
 Rokeby, though nigh, is seen no more;
 Sinking mid Greta's thickets deep,
 A wild and darker course they keep,
 A stern and lone yet lovely road
 As e'er the foot of minstrel trode !
 Broad shadows o'er their passage fell,
 Deeper and narrower grew the dell;
 It seemed some mountain, rent and riven,
 A channel for the stream had given, 140
 So high the cliffs of limestone gray
 Hung beetling o'er the torrent's way,
 Yielding along their rugged base
 A flinty footpath's niggard space,
 Where he who winds 'twixt rock and

WAVE

May hear the headlong torrent rave,
 And like a steed in frantic fit,
 That flings the froth from curb and bit,
 May view her chafe her waves to spray
 O'er every rock that bars her way, 150
 Till foam-globes on her eddies ride,
 Thick as the schemes of human pride
 That down life's current drive amain,
 As frail, as frothy, and as vain !

VIII

The cliffs that rear their haughty head
 High o'er the river's darksome bed
 Were now all naked, wild, and gray,
 Now waving all with greenwood spray;
 Here trees to every crevice clung
 And o'er the dell their branches hung; 160
 And there, all splintered and uneven,
 The shivered rocks ascend to heaven;
 Oft, too, the ivy swathed their breast
 And wreathed its garland round their crest,

Or from the spires bade loosely flare
 Its tendrils in the middle air.
 As pennons wont to wave of old
 O'er the high feast of baron bold,
 When revelled loud the feudal rout 165
 And the arched halls returned their shout,
 Such and more wild is Greta's roar,
 And such the echoes from her shore,
 And so the ivied banners gleam,
 Waved wildly o'er the brawling stream.

IX

Now from the stream the rocks recede,
 But leave between no sunny mead,
 No, nor the spot of pebbly sand
 Oft found by such a mountain strand.

Forming such warm and dry retreat
 As fancy deems the lonely seat 180
 Where hermit, wandering from his cell,
 His rosary might love to tell.
 But here 'twixt rock and river grew
 A dismal grove of sable yew,
 With whose sad tints were mingled seen
 The blighted fir's sepulchral green.
 Seemed that the trees their shadows cast
 The earth that nourished them to blast;
 For never knew that swarthy grove
 The verdant hue that fairies love, 190
 Nor wilding green nor woodland flower
 Arose within its baleful bower:
 The dank and sable earth receives
 Its only carpet from the leaves
 That, from the withering branches cast,
 Bestrewed the ground with every blast.
 Though now the sun was o'er the hill,
 In this dark spot 't was twilight still,
 Save that on Greta's farther side
 Some straggling beams through copsewood
 glide; 200

And wild and savage contrast made
 That dingle's deep and funeral shade
 With the bright tints of early day,
 Which, glimmering through the ivy spray,
 On the opposing summit lay.

X

The lated peasant shunned the dell;
 For Superstition wont to tell
 Of many a grisly sound and sight,
 Scaring its path at dead of night. 205
 When Christmas logs blaze high and wide
 Such wonders speed the festal tide,
 While Curiosity and Fear,
 Pleasure and Pain, sit crouching near,
 Till childhood's cheek no longer glows,
 And village maidens lose the rose.
 The thrilling interest rises higher,
 The circle closes nigh and nigher,
 And shuddering glance is cast behind,
 As louder moans the wintry wind.
 Believe that fitting scene was laid 220
 For such wild tales in Mortham glade;
 For who had seen on Greta's side
 By that dim light fierce Bertram stride,
 In such a spot, at such an hour, —
 If touched by Superstition's power, Might well have deemed that Hell had
 given

A murderer's ghost to upper heaven,
 While Wilfrid's form had seemed to glide
 Like his pale victim by his side.

THE

1

XIII

10

194

1999 seem his forfeit limbs shall pay bute of his bold essay.

XV

emerges ! — desperate now
ther course — yon beetling brow,
gy nakedness sublime,
heart or foot shall dare to climb ?
s no tendril for his clasp,
te no angle to his grasp:
ay his foot may rest upon 340
earth-bedded jetting stone.
ed on such precarious prop,
tins his grasp to reach the top.
the dangerous stretch he makes,
ven, his faithless footstool shakes !
h his tottering bulk it bends,
as, it loosens, it descends,
wnward holds its headlong way,
ig o'er rock and copsewood spray !
hunders shake the echoing dell ! 350
alone ? — alone it fell.
the very verge of fate,
rdy Bertram's falling weight
sted to his sinewy hands,
the top unharmed, he stands !

XVI

l a safer path pursued,
rvals where, roughly hewed,
leps ascending from the dell
ed the cliffs accessible.
mit slow he thus attained 360
ight that Risingham had gained,
hen he issued from the wood
the gate of Mortham stood.
a fair scene ! the sunbeam lay lled tower and portal gray ;
om the grassy slope he sees
ata flow to meet the Tees
, issuing from her darksome bed, ight the morning's eastern red,
rough the softening vale below 370
her bright waves in rosy glow,
shing to her bridal bed,
one shy maid in convent bred,
linnet, lark, and blackbird gay
with her nuptial roundelay.

XVII

sweetly sung that roundelay,
hammer morn shone blithe and gay ;
rning beam and wild-bird's call
d not Mortham's silent hall.

No porter by the low-browed gate 380
Took in the wonted niche his seat ;
To the paved court no peasant drew ;
Waked to their toil no menial crew ;
The maiden's carol was not heard,
As to her morning task she fared :
In the void offices around
Rung not a hoof nor bayed a hound ;
Nor eager steed with shrilling neigh
Accused the lagging groom's delay ;
Untrimmed, undressed, neglected now, 390
Was alleyed walk and orchard bough ;
All spoke the master's absent care,
All spoke neglect and disrepair.
South of the gate an arrow flight,
Two mighty elms their limbs unite,
As if a canopy to spread
O'er the lone dwelling of the dead ;
For their huge boughs in arches bent
Above a massive monument,
Carved o'er in ancient Gothic wise 400
With many a scutcheon and device :
There, spent with toil and sunk in gloom,
Bertram stood pondering by the tomb.

XVIII

' It vanished like a flitting ghost !
Behind this tomb,' he said, 't was lost —
This tomb where oft I deemed lies stored
Of Mortham's Indian wealth the hoard.
'T is true, the aged servants said
Here his lamented wife is laid ;
But weightier reasons may be guessed 410
For their lord's strict and stern behest
That none should on his steps intrude
Whene'er he sought this solitude.
An ancient mariner I knew,
What time I sailed with Morgan's crew,
Who oft mid our carousals spake
Of Raleigh, Frobisher, and Drake ;
Adventurous hearts ! who bartered, bold,
Their English steel for Spanish gold.
Trust not, would his experience say, 420
Captain or comrade with your prey,
But seek some charnel, when, at full,
The moon gilds skeleton and skull :
There dig and tomb your precious heap,
And bid the dead your treasure keep ;
Sure stewards they, if fitting spell
Their service to the task compel.
Lacks there such charnel ? — kill a slave
Or prisoner on the treasure-grave,
And bid his discontented ghost 430
Stalk nightly on his lonely post.

Nor longer there the warrior stood,
Retiring eastward through the wood,
But first to Wilfrid warning gives, 530
'Tell thou to none that Mortham lives.'

XXIII

Still rung these words in Wilfrid's ear,
Hinting he knew not what of fear,
When nearer came the coursers' tread,
And, with his father at their head,
Of horsemen armed a gallant power
Reined up their steeds before the tower.
'Whence these pale looks, my son?' he
said:
'Where's Bertram? Why that naked
blade?'

Wilfrid ambiguously replied — 540
For Mortham's charge his honor tied —
'Bertram is gone — the villain's word
Avouched him murderer of his lord!
Even now we fought — but when your
tread
Announced you nigh, the felon fled.'
In Wycliffe's conscious eye appear
A guilty hope, a guilty fear;
On his pale brow the dew-drop broke,
And his lip quivered as he spoke:

XXIV

'A murderer! — Philip Mortham died 550
Amid the battle's wildest tide.
Wilfrid, or Bertram raves or you!
Yet, grant such strange confession true,
Pursuit were vain — let him fly far —
Justice must sleep in civil war.'
A gallant youth rode near his side,
Brave Rokeby's page, in battle tried;
That morn an embassy of weight
He brought to Barnard's castle gate,
And followed now in Wycliffe's train 560
An answer for his lord to gain.
His steed, whose arched and sable neck
A hundred wreaths of foam bedeck,
Ctreated not against the curb more high
Than he at Oswald's cold reply;
He bit his lip, implored his saint —
His the old faith — then burst restraint:

XXV

'Yes! I beheld his bloody fall
By that base traitor's dastard ball,
Just when I thought to measure sword, 570
Presumptuous hope! with Mortham's lord.
And shall the murderer 'escape who slew

His leader, generous, brave, and true?
Escape, while on the dew you trace
The marks of his gigantic pace?
No! ere the sun that dew shall dry,
False Risingham shall yield or die. —
Ring out the castle larum bell!
Arouse the peasants with the knell! 579
Meantime disperse — ride, gallants, ride!
Beset the wood on every side.
But if among you one there be
That honors Mortham's memory,
Let him dismount and follow me!
Else on your crests sit fear and shame,
And foul suspicion dog your name!'

XXVI

Instant to earth young REDMOND sprang;
Instant on earth the harness rung
Of twenty men of Wycliffe's band,
Who waited not their lord's command. 590
Redmond his spurs from huskins drew,
His mantle from his shoulders threw,
His pistols in his belt he placed,
The green-wood gained, the footsteps
traced,
Shouted like huntsman to his hounds,
'To cover, hark!' — and in he bounds.
Scarcely heard was Oswald's anxious cry,
'Suspicion! yes — pursue him — fly —
But venture not in useless strife
On ruffian desperate of his life; 600
Whoever finds him shoot him dead!
Five hundred nobles for his head!'

XXVII

The horsemen galloped to make good
Each path that issued from the wood.
Loud from the thickets rung the shout
Of Redmond and his eager rout;
With them was Wilfrid, stung with ire,
And envying Redmond's martial fire,
And emulous of fame. — But where
Is Oswald, noble Mortham's heir? 610
He, bound by honor, law, and faith,
Avenger of his kinsman's death? —
Leaning against the elmin tree,
With drooping head and slackened knee,
And clenched teeth, and close-clasped
hands,
In agony of soul he stands!
His downcast eye on earth is bent,
His soul to every sound is lent;
For in each shout that cleaves the air
May ring discovery and despair. 620

XXVIII

What 'vailed it him that brightly played
The morning sun on Mortham's glade ?
All seems in giddy round to ride,
Like objects on a stormy tide
Seen eddying by the moonlight dim,
Imperfectly to sink and swim.
What 'vailed it that the fair domain,
Its battled mansion, hill, and plain,
On which the sun so brightly shone,
Envied so long, was now his own ? 670
The lowest dungeon, in that hour,
Of Brackenbury's dismal tower,
Had been his choice, could such a doom
Have opened Mortham's bloody tomb !
Forced, too, to turn unwilling ear
To each surmise of hope or fear,
Murmured among the rustics round,
Who gathered at the larum sound,
He dare not turn his head away, 680
Even to look up to heaven to pray,
Or call on hell in bitter mood
For one sharp death-shot from the wood !

XXIX

At length o'erpast that dreadful space,
Back straggling came the scattered chase;
Jaded and weary, horse and man,
Returned the troopers one by one.
Welfrid the last arrived to say
All trace was lost of Bertram's way,
Though Redmond still up Brignall wood
The hopeless quest in vain pursued. 690
O, fatal doom of human race !
What tyrant passions passions chase !
Remorse from Oswald's brow is gone,
Avarice and pride resume their throne;
The pang of instant terror by,
They dictate thus their slave's reply:

XXX

'Ay — let him range like hasty hound !
And if the grim wolf's lair be found,
Small is my care how goes the game
With Redmond or with Risingham. — 700
Nay, answer not, thou simple boy !
Thy fair Matilda, all so coy
To thee, is of another mood
To that bold youth of Erin's blood.
Thy ditties will she freely praise,
And pay thy pains with courtly phrase;
In a rough path will oft command —
Accept at least — thy friendly hand;
His she avoids, or, urged and prayed,
Unwilling takes his proffered aid, 710

While conscious passion plainly speaks
In downcast look and blushing cheeks.
Whene'er he sings will she glide nigh,
And all her soul is in her eye;
Yet doubts she still to tender free
The wonted words of courtesy.
These are strong signs ! — yet wherefore
sigh,
And wipe, effeminate, thine eye ?
Thine shall she be, if thou attend
The counsels of thy sire and friend. 720

XXXI

'Scarce wert thou gone, when peep of
light
Brought genuine news of Marston's fight.
Brave Cromwell turned the doubtful tide,
And conquest blessed the rightful side;
Three thousand cavaliers lie dead,
Rupert and that bold Marquis fled;
Nobles and knights, so proud of late,
Must fine for freedom and estate.
Of these committed to my charge
Is Rokeby, prisoner at large; 730
Redmond his page arrived to say
He reaches Barnard's towers to-day.
Right heavy shall his ransom be
Unless that maid compound with thee !
Go to her now — be bold of cheer
While her soul floats 'twixt hope and fear;
It is the very change of tide,
When best the female heart is tried —
Pride, prejudice, and modesty,
Are in the current swept to sea, 740
And the bold swain who plies his oar
May lightly row his bark to shore.'

CANTO THIRD

1

THE hunting tribes of air and earth
Respect the brethren of their birth;
Nature, who loves the claim of kind,
Less cruel chase to each assigned.
The falcon, poised on soaring wing,
Watches the wild-duck by the spring;
The slow-hound wakes the fox's lair;
The greyhound presses on the hare;
The eagle pounces on the lamb;
The wolf devours the fleecy dam;
Even tiger fell and sullen bear
Their likeness and their lineage spare;
Man only mars kind Nature's plan,
And turns the fierce pursuit on man,

Plying war's desultory trade,
Incursion, flight, and ambushade,
Since Nimrod, Cush's mighty son,
At first the bloody game begun.

II

The Indian, prowling for his prey,
Who hears the settlers track his way, 30
And knows in distant forest far
Camp his red brethren of the war —
He, when each double and disguise
To baffle the pursuit he tries,
Low crouching now his head to hide
Where swampy streams through rushes
glide,

Now covering with the withered leaves
The foot-prints that the dew receives —
He, skilled in every sylvan guile,
Knows not, nor tries, such various wile 30
As Risingham when on the wind
Arose the loud pursuit behind.
In Redesdale his youth had heard
Each art her wily dalesman dared,
When Rookens-edge and Redswair high
To bugle rung and blood-hound's cry,
Announcing Jedwood-axe and spear,
And Lid'sdale riders in the rear;
And well his venturesome life had proved
The lessons that his childhood loved. 40

III

Oft had he shown in climes afar
Each attribute of roving war;
The sharpened ear, the piercing eye,
The quick resolve in danger nigh;
The speed that in the flight or chase
Outstripped the Charib's rapid race;
The steady brain, the sinewy limb,
To leap, to climb, to dive, to swim;
The iron frame, inured to bear
Each dire inclemency of air, 50
Nor less confirmed to undergo Fatigue's faint chill and famine's throe.
These arts he proved, his life to save,
In peril oft by land and wave,
On Arawaca's desert shore,
Or where La Plata's billows roar,
When oft the sons of vengeful Spain
Tracked the marauder's steps in vain.
These arts, in Indian warfare tried,
Must save him now by Greta's side. 60

IV

'T was then, in hour of utmost need,
He proved his courage, art, and speed.

Now slow he stalked with stealthy pace,
Now started forth in rapid race,
Oft doubling back in mazy train
To blind the trace the dews retain;
Now clomb the rocks projecting high
To baffle the pursuer's eye;
Now sought the stream, whose brawling
sound

The echo of his footsteps drowned. 70
But if the forest verge he nears,
There trample steeds, and glimmer spears;
If deeper down the copse he drew,
He heard the rangers' loud halloo,
Beating each cover while they came,
As if to start the sylvan game.
'T was then — like tiger close beset
At every pass with toil and net,
'Countered where'er he turns his glare
By clashing arms and torches' flare, 80
Who meditates with furious bound
To burst on hunter, horse and bound —
'T was then that Bertram's soul arose,
Prompting to rush upon his foes:
But as that crouching tiger, cowed
By brandished steel and shouting crowd,
Retreats beneath the jungle's shroud,
Bertram suspends his purpose stern,
And crouches in the brake and fern,
Hiding his face lest foemen spy 90
The sparkle of his swarthy eye.

V

Then Bertram might the bearing trace
Of the bold youth who led the chase;
Who paused to list for every sound,
Climbed every height to look around,
Then rushing on with naked sword,
Each dingle's bosky depths explored.
'T was Redmond — by the azure eye;
'T was Redmond — by the locks that fly
Disordered from his glowing cheek; 100
Mien, face, and form young Redmond speak.

A form more active, light, and strong,
Ne'er shot the ranks of war along;
The modest yet the manly mien
Might grace the court of maiden queen;
A face more fair you well might find,
For Redmond's knew the sun and wind,
Nor boasted, from their tinge when free,
The charm of regularity;
But every feature had the power 110
To aid the expression of the hour:
Whether gay wit and humor sly
Danced laughing in his light-blue eye,

me, it seemed, so dire and dread
 it had power to wake the dead.
 , pondering on his life betrayed
 swald's art to Redmond's blade, treacherous purpose to withhold,
 mmed it, Mortham's promised gold,
 up and full revenge he vowed 270
 edmond, forward, fierce, and proud;
 age on Wilfrid — on his sire
 abled vengeance, swift and dire! — such mood — as legends say, well believed that simple day —
 Enemy of Man has power
 oft by the evil hour,
 stood a wretch prepared to change
 ul's redemption for revenge!
 hough his vows with such a fire 230
 rnest and intense desire engeance dark and fell were made ll might reach hell's lowest shade,
 eper clouds the grove embrowned,
 ther thunders shook the ground;
 smon knew his vassal's heart,
 pared temptation's needless art.

X

mingled with the direful theme,
 Mortham's form — was it a dream?
 d he seen in vision true 240
 very Mortham whom he slew?
 d in living flesh appeared oly man on earth he feared? —
 y the mystic cause intent,
 yes that on the cliff were bent
 ered at once a dazzling glance,
 sunbeam flashed from sword or lance.
 ce he started as for fight,
 ot a foeman was in sight;
 arld the cushat's murmur hoarse, 250
 arld the river's sounding course;
 olitary woodlands lay,
 mbering in the summer ray.
 ead, like lion roused, around,
 ank again upon the ground.
 s but, he thought, some fitful beam,
 ad sudden from the sparkling stream;
 plunged him in his gloomy train
 e-connected thoughts again, a voice behind him cried, 260 am! well met on Greta side.'

XI

it his sword was in his hand,
 ant sunk the ready brand;

Yet, dubious still, opposed he stood
 To him that issued from the wood:
 'Guy Denzil! — is it thou?' he said;
 'Do we two meet in Scargill shade! —
 Stand back a space! — thy purpose show,
 Whether thou comest as friend or foe.
 Report hath said, that Denzil's name 270
 From Rokeby's band was razed with
 shame' —

'A shame I owe that hot O'Neale,
 Who told his knight in peevish zeal
 Of my marauding on the clowns
 Of Calverley and Bradford downs.
 I reck not. In a war to strive,
 Where save the leaders none can thrive,
 Suits ill my mood; and better game
 Awaits us both, if thou 'rt the same
 Unscrupulous, bold Kisingham 280
 Who watched with me in midnight dark
 To snatch a deer from Rokeby-park.
 How think'st thou?' — 'Speak thy purpose out;
 I love not mystery or doubt.' —

XII

'Then list. — Not far there lurk a crew
 Of trusty comrades stanch and true,
 Gleaned from both factions — Roundheads,
 freed
 From cant of sermon and of creed,
 And Cavaliers, whose souls like mine
 Spurn at the bonds of discipline. 290
 Wiser, we judge, by dale and wold
 A warfare of our own to hold
 Than breathe our last on battle-down
 For elonk or surplice, mace or crown.
 Our schemes are laid, our purpose set,
 A chief and leader lack we yet.
 Thou art a wanderer, it is said,
 For Mortham's death thy steps waylaid,
 Thy head at price — so say our spies,
 Who ranged the valley in disguise. 300
 Join then with us: though wild debate
 And wrangling rend our infant state,
 Each, to an equal loath to bow,
 Will yield to chief renowned as thou.' —

XIII

'Even now,' thought Bertram, passion-stirred,
 'I called on hell, and hell has heard!
 What lack I, vengeance to command,
 But of stanch comrades such a band?
 This Denzil, vowed to every evil,
 Might read a lesson to the devil. 310

Thou first must guess what life lead we
That dwell by dale and down?
And if thou canst that riddle read, 410
As read full well you may,
Then to the greenwood shalt thou speed,
As blithe as Queen of May.'

CHORUS

Yet sung she, 'Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are green;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there
Than reign our English queen.

XVII

'I read you, by your bugle horn,
And by your palfrey good,
I read you for a ranger sworn 420
To keep the king's greenwood.'
'A ranger, lady, winds his horn,
And 'tis at peep of light;
His blast is heard at merry morn,
And mine at dead of night.'

CHORUS

Yet sung she, 'Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are gay;
I would I were with Edmund there,
To reign his Queen of May!

'With burnished brand and musketoon 430
So gallantly you come,
I read you for a bold dragoon,
That lists the tuck of drum.'
'I list no more the tuck of drum,
No more the trumpet hear;
But when the beetle sounds his hum,
My comrades take the spear.

CHORUS

'And O, though Brignall banks be fair,
And Greta woods be gay,
Yet mickle must the maiden dare 440
Would reign my Queen of May!

XVIII

'Maiden! a nameless life I lead,
A nameless death I'll die;
The fiend whose lantern lights the mead
Were better mate than I!
And when I'm with my comrades met
Beneath the greenwood bough,
What once we were we all forget,
Nor think what we are now.

CHORUS

'Yet Brignall banks are fresh and fair, 450
And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there
Would grace a summer queen.'

When Edmund ceased his simple song,
Was silence on the sullen throng.
Till waked some ruder mate their glee
With note of coarser minstrelsy.
But far apart in dark divan,
Denzil and Bertram many a plan
Of import foul and fierce designed, 460
While still on Bertram's grasping mind
The wealth of murdered Mortham hung;
Though half he feared his daring tongue,
When it should give his wishes birth,
Might raise a spectre from the earth!

XIX

At length his wondrous tale he told;
When scornful smiled his comrade bold,
For, trained in license of a court,
Religion's self was Denzil's sport;
Then judge in what contempt he held 470
The visionary tales of eld!
His awe for Bertram scarce repressed
The unbeliever's sneering jest,
'T were hard,' he said, 'for sage or seer
To spell the subject of your fear;
Nor do I boast the art renowned
Vision and omen to expound.
Yet, faith if I must needs afford
To spectre watching treasured hoard,
As ban-dog keeps his master's roof, 480
Bidding the plunderer stand aloof,
This doubt remains — thy goblin gaunt
Hath chosen ill his ghostly haunt;
For why his guard on Mortham hold,
When Rokeby castle bath the gold
Thy patron won on Indian soil
By stealth, by piracy and spoil?' —

XX

At this he paused — for angry shame
Lowered on the brow of Risingham. 490
He blushed to think, that he should seem Asserter of an airy dream,
And gave his wrath another theme.
'Denzil,' he says, 'though lowly laid,
Wrong not the memory of the dead;
For while he lived at Mortham's look
Thy very soul, Guy Denzil, shook!
And when he taxed thy breach of word
To yon fair rose of Allenford,

I saw three women like chambered maid
Whom hark the musician's hand hath found.

Yet dare to seal his foreign wealth
The agent of piracy no small;
He came in beauty with him found
When Spain's night parted with our land.
Nay, no — I found in this port
Nor might Bertram's name with love;
None a but and the women's lot,
For I believe, but tremble and Doubt of this. Say, why this trust
Thou wert at Berkeley castle stored,
Or think it that Northam would bestow
His treasure with his father's too?

XXI

Some questioned was Denzil's ill-omened
night.

Rather to visit him even the earth
Gave to his thousand apostles birth
Than venture to evade to dance
The deadly wrath of Berkeley.
Whom he answered, 'Northam's mind,
Thou know'st, to go was ill defined.
In youth, he said, a gallant free,
A lady's wonder was he;
But since returned from over sea,
A sudden and a silent mood
Hath minded the current of his blood.
Hence he refused each kindly call
To Berkeley's hospitable hall,
And our stout knight, at dawn or noon
Was loved to hear the single-urn,
Not less, when even his own undowned,
To see the middle cup go round,
To see marriage that a friend so dear
Refused to share his glass and cheer;
Thus led the kindred tarsos, as Festally flowed in the war.
Yet, trust me, friend, Maule's fair
Of Northam's wealth is destined heir.'

XXII

'Destined to her' to you slight maid I
The price my life had well-nigh paid
When 'gainst Larnach by Cayo's war
I fought my patron's wealth to save! —
Denzil, I know him long, yet ne'er
Knew him thus, upon a wall
Whom youthful friends and early fame
Called soul of gallantry and game.
A modest man he sought our crew,
Desperate and dark, whom no one knew,

And now, as men with us must see,
By something else but all the day
On each adventure that he tried,
As danger for itself he lived.
On his and drew our hearts and wine
Could we not breathe him anywhere;
It was the rumour of his smile
For I was a poor scorn and spite;
But when he laughed each heart's race
Might hold our hearts desperate
Forasmuch he sought a easy death.
Then sweetly turned him from the spot.
Nay, often across to her the way
Between his comrades and their prey;
Promising even then to come to me,
But with our dead-bought victory,
Of merry and duncanny.

XXIII

'I loved him well — his fearless part,
His gallant leading, won my heart.
And after each victorious fight,
T was I that wrangled for his right,
Restored his portion of the prey
That greedier mates had torn away.
In need and storm there stood his life.
And once and our comrades strife —
Yes, I have loved thee.' Well hath proved
My will, my tinger, how I loved!
Yet well I know to more thy fate,
Ingrate in life, in death negate.
Rise if thou must, he be and armed
And sternly stamped upon the ground —
Rise, with thy bearing proud and high,
Even as the north it met mine eye,
And give me, I thou tarrest, the lie.
He paused — then, calm and passion-free,
Bade Denzil with us take process.

XXIV

'Bertram, to thee I need not tell,
What thou hast cause to wit so well,
How superstition's nets were twined
Around the Lord of Northam's wood;
But once he drove thee from his tower,
A maid he found in Greta's bower
Whose speech, like David's harp, had sway
To charm his evil tend away.
I know not of her features moved
Remembrance of the wife he loved,
But he would gaze upon her eye,
Till his mood softened to a sigh
He, whom no living mortal sought
To question of his secret thought,

Now every thought and care confessed
 To his fair niece's faithful breast;
 Nor was there aught of rich and rare,
 In earth, in ocean, or in air, 600
 But it must deck Matilda's hair.
 Her love still bound him unto life;
 But then awoke the civil strife,
 And menials bore by his commands
 Three coffers with their iron bands
 From Mortham's vault at midnight deep
 To her lone bower in Rokeby-Keep,
 Ponderous with gold and plate of pride,
 His gift, if he in battle died.'

XXV

'Then Denzil, as I guess, lays train 610
 These iron-banded chests to gain,
 Else wherefore should he hover here
 Where many a peril waits him near
 For all his feats of war and peace,
 For plundered boors, and harts of grease?
 Since through the hamlets as he fared
 What hearth has Guy's marauding spared,
 Or where the chase that hath not rung
 With Denzil's bow at midnight strung?'
 'I hold my wont — my rangers go, 620
 Even now to track a milk-white doe.
 By Rokeby-hall she takes her lair,
 In Greta wood she harbors fair,
 And when my huntsman marks her way,
 What think'st thou, Bertram, of the prey?
 Were Rokeby's daughter in our power,
 We rate her ransom at her dower.'

XXVI

'T is well! — there's vengeance in the
 thought,
 Matilda is by Wilfrid sought;
 And hot-brained Redmond too, 't is said, 630
 Pays lover's homage to the maid.
 Bertram she scorned — if met by chance
 She turned from me her shuddering glance,
 Like a nice dame that will not brook
 On what she hates and loathes to look;
 She told to Mortham she could ne'er
 Behold me without secret fear,
 Foreboding evil: — she may rue
 To find her prophecy fall true! —
 The war has weeded Rokeby's train, 640
 Few followers in his halls remain;
 If thy scheme miss, then, brief and bold,
 We are enow to storm the hold,
 Bear off the plunder and the dame,
 And leave the castle all in flame.'

XXVII

'Still art thou Valor's venturous son!
 Yet ponder first the risk to run:
 The menials of the castle, true
 And stubborn to their charge, though few —
 The wall to scale — the moat to cross — 650
 The wicket-grate — the inner fosse' —
 'Fool! if we blench for toys like these,
 On what fair guerdon can we seize?
 Our hardest venture, to explore
 Some wretched peasant's fenceless door,
 And the best prize we bear away,
 The earnings of his sordid day.'
 'A while thy hasty taunt forbear:
 In sight of road more sure and fair
 Thou wouldst not choose, in blindfold
 wrath 660
 Or wantonness a desperate path?
 List, then; — for vantage or assault,
 From gilded vane to dungeon vault,
 Each pass of Rokeby-house I know:
 There is one postern dark and low
 That issues at a secret spot,
 By most neglected or forgot.
 Now, could a spial of our train
 On fair pretext admittance gain,
 That sally-port might be unbarred; 670
 Then, vain were battlement and ward!

XXVIII

'Now speak'st thou well: to me the same
 If force or art shall urge the game;
 Indifferent if like fox I wind,
 Or spring like tiger on the hind. —
 But, hark! our merry men so gay
 Troll forth another roundelay.'

RONG

'A weary lot is thine, fair maid,
 A weary lot is thine!
 To pull the thorn thy brow to braid, 680
 And press the rue for wine!
 A lightsome eye, a soldier's mien,
 A feather of the blue,
 A doublet of the Lincoln green, —
 No more of me you knew,
 My love!
 No more of me you knew.

'This morn is merry June, I trow,
 The rose is budding fain;
 But she shall bloom in winter snow 690
 Ere we two meet again.'

He turned his charger as he spake
 Upon the river shore,
 His gaze his breath-trans a shake,
 Said, 'Adieu for evermore,
 My love!
 And adieu for evermore.'

XXIX

'What youth is this your hand among
 The best for manatrelsy and song?
 In his wild notes seem aptly met 700
 A strain of pleasure and regret.' —
 'Edmund of Winstan is his name;
 The harper sounded with the same
 Of early days his childhood gave, —
 Now centred all in Bagnall cave!
 I watch him well — his wayward course
 Shows oft a tincture of remorse.
 Some early love shaft grazed his heart,
 And oft the year will ache and smart. 710
 Yet is he useful; — of the rest
 By fits the darling and the jest,
 His harp, his story, and his lay,
 Oft aid the idle hours away.
 When unemployed, each fiery mate
 Is ripe for mutinous debate.
 He tuned his strings e'en now — again
 He wakes them with a blither strain.'

XXX

SUNG

ALLEN-A DALE

Allen-a-Dale has no fagot for burning,
 Allen-a-Dale has no furrow for turning,
 Allen-a-Dale has no fleece for the spin- 720
 ning,
 Yet Allen-a-Dale has red gold for the winning,
 Come, send me my riddle! come, hearken
 my tale!
 And tell me the craft of bold Allen-a-
 Dale.

The Baron of Ravensworth prances in
 pride,
 And he views his domains upon Arkindale
 side,
 The mere for his net and the land for his
 game,
 The chase for the wild and the park for the tame;

Yet the fish of the lake and the deer of the vale
 Are less free to Lord Dacre than Allen-a-
 Dale!

Allen-a-Dale was ne'er belted a knight, 730
 Though his spur be as sharp and his blade
 be as bright;
 Allen-a-Dale is no baron or lord,
 Yet twenty tall yeomen will draw at his
 word;
 And the best of our nobles his bonnet will veil,
 Who at Eere-cross on Stanmore meet
 Allen-a-Dale!

Allen-a-Dale to his wooing is come;
 The mother, she asked of his household and home:
 'Though the castle of Richmond stand fair
 on the hill,
 My hall,' quoth bold Allen, 'shows gallanter
 still;
 'T is the blue vault of heaven, with its crescent so pale 740
 And with all its bright spangles!' said
 Allen-a-Dale.

The father was steel and the mother was
 stone;
 They lifted the latch and they bade him be
 gone;
 But loud on the morrow their wail and their
 cry:
 He had laughed on the lass with his bonny
 black eye,
 And she fled to the forest to hear a love-
 tale,
 And the youth it was told by was Allen-a-dale!

XXXI

'Thou see'st that, whether sad or gay,
 Love mingles ever in his lay.
 But when his boyish wayward fit 750
 Is o'er, he hath address and wit;
 O, 't is a brain of fire, ran aye
 Each dialect, each various shape!' —
 'Nay then, to aid thy project, Guy —
 Soft! who comes here?' — 'My trusty
 spy.
 Speak, Humlin! hast thou lodged our
 deer?' —
 'I have — but two fair stags are near.

I watched her as she slowly strayed
 From Egliston up Thorsgill glade,
 But Wilfrid Wycliffe sought her side, 760
 And then young Redmond in his pride
 Shot down to meet them on their way;
 Much, as it seemed, was theirs to say:
 There 's time to pitch both toil and net
 Before their path be homeward set.'
 A hurried and a whispered speech
 Did Bertram's will to Denzil teach,
 Who, turning to the robber band,
 Bade four, the bravest, take the brand.

CANTO FOURTH

I

WHEN Denmark's raven soared on high,
 Triumphant through Northumbrian sky,
 The hovering near her fatal croak
 Bade Reged's Britons dread the yoke,
 And the broad shadow of her wing
 Blackened each cataract and spring
 Where Tees in tumult leaves his source,
 Thundering o'er Caldron and High-Force;
 Beneath the shade the Northmen came,
 Fixed on each vale a Runic name, 780
 Reared high their altar's rugged stone,
 And gave their gods the land they won.
 Then, Balder, one bleak garth was thine
 And one sweet brooklet's silver line,
 And Woden's Croft did title gain
 From the stern Father of the Slain;
 But to the Monarch of the Mace,
 That held in fight the foremost place,
 To Odin's son and Sifia's spouse, 790
 Near Startforth high they paid their vows,
 Remembered Thor's victorious fame,
 And gave the dell the Thunderer's name.

II

Yet Scald or Kemper erred, I ween,
 Who gave that soft and quiet scene,
 With all its varied light and shade,
 And every little sunny glade,
 And the blithe brook that strolls along
 Its pebbled bed with summer song,
 To the grim God of blood and scar,
 The grisly King of Northern War. 800
 O, better were its banks assigned
 To spirits of a gentler kind!
 For where the thicket-groups recede
 And the rath primrose decks the mead,
 The velvet graas seems carpet meet

For the light fairies' lively feet.
 Yon tufted knoll with daisies strown
 Might make proud Oberon a throne,
 While, hidden in the thicket nigh,
 Puck should brood o'er his frolic sly; 810
 And where profuse the wood-vetch clings
 Round ash and elm in verdant rings,
 Its pale and azure-pencilled flower
 Should canopy Titania's bower.

III

Here rise no cliffs the vale to shade;
 But, skirting every sunny glade,
 In fair variety of green
 The woodland lends its sylvan screen.
 Hoary yet haughty, frowns the oak,
 Its boughs by weight of ages broke; 820
 And towers erect in sable spire
 The pine-tree scathed by lightning-fire;
 The drooping ash and birch between
 Hang their fair tresses o'er the green,
 And all beneath at random grow
 Each coppice dwarf of varied show,
 Or, round the stems profusely twined,
 Fling summer odors on the wind.
 Such varied group Urbino's hand
 Round Him of Tarsus nobly planned, 830
 What time he bade proud Athens own
 On Mars's Mount the God Unknown!
 Then gray Philosophy stood nigh,
 Though bent by age, in spirit high:
 There rose the scar-seamed veteran's spear,
 There Grecian Beauty bent to hear,
 While Childhood at her foot was placed,
 Or clung delighted to her waist.

IV

'And rest we here,' Matilda said,
 And sat her in the varying shade. 840
 'Chance-met, we well may steal an hour,
 To friendship due from fortune's power.
 Thou, Wilfrid, ever kind, must lend
 Thy counsel to thy sister-friend;
 And, Redmond, thou, at my behest,
 No farther urge thy desperate quest.
 For to my care a charge is left,
 Dangerous to one of aid bereft,
 Wellnigh an orphan and alone,
 Captive her sire, her house o'erthrown.' 850
 Wilfrid, with wonted kindness graced,
 Beside her on the turf she placed;
 Then paused with downcast look and eye,
 Nor bade young Redmond seat him nigh.
 Her conscious diffidence he saw,
 Drew backward as in modest awe,

And at a little space removed,
Unmarked to gaze on her he loved.

V

Wreathed in its dark-brown rings, her hair
Half hid Matilda's forehead fair, 50
Half hid and half revealed to view
Her full dark eye of hazel hue.
The rose with faint and feeble streak
So slightly tinged the maiden's cheek
That you had said her hue was pale;
But if she faced the summer gale,
Or spoke, or sung, or quicker moved,
Or heard the praise of those she loved,
Or when of interest was expressed
Aught that waked feeling in her breast, 100
The mantling blood in ready play
Reviv'd the blush of rising day.
There was a soft and pensive grace,
A cast of thought upon her face,
That suited well the forehead high,
The eyelash dark and downcast eye;
The mild expression spoke a mind
In duty firm, composed, resigned; —
'T is that which Roman art has given,
To mark their maiden Queen of Heaven. 110
In hours of sport that mood gave way
To Fancy's light and frolic play;
And when the dance, or tale, or song
In harmless mirth sped time along,
Full oft her doing sure would call
His mind the merriest of them all.
But days of war and civil crime
Allowed but ill such festal time,
And her soft pensiveness of brow
Had deepened into sadness now. 120
In Marsden field her father slain,
Her friends dispersed, leave Mortham
slain.

While every ill her soul foretold
From Oswald's thirst of power and gold,
And boding thoughts that she must part
With a soft vision of her heart, —
All lowered around the lovely maid,
To darken her dejection's shade.

VI

Who has not heard — while Erin yet
Strove 'gainst the Saxon's iron bit — 130
Who has not heard how brave O'Neale
In English blood imbued his steel,
Against Saint George's cross blazed high
The banners of his Tanistry,
To fiery Easter gave the foil,
And reigned a prince on Ulster's soil?

But chief arose his victor pride
When that brave Marshal fought and died,
And Avon-Duff to ocean bore
His billows red with Saxon gore. 140
'T was first in that disastrous fight
Rokeby and Mortham proved their might
There had they fallen amongst the rest,
But pity touched a chieftain's breast;
The Tanist he to great O'Neale,
He checked his followers' bloody zeal,
To quarter took the kinsmen bold,
And bore them to his mountain-hold,
Gave them each sylvan joy to know
Shere-Denard's cliffs and woods could 150 show.

Shared with them Erin's festal cheer,
Showed them the chase of wolf and deer,
And, when a firing time was come,
Safe and unransomed sent them home,
Loaded with many a gift to prove
A generous foe's respect and love.

VII

Years speed away. On Rokeby's head
Some touch of early snow was shed;
Calm he enjoyed by Greta's wave 160
The peace which James the Peaceful gave,
While Mortham far beyond the main
Waged his fierce wars on Indian Spain. —
It chanced upon a wintry night
That whitened Stanmore's stormy height,
The chase was o'er, the stag was killed,
In Rokeby hall the cups were filled,
And by the huge stone chimney sat
The knight in hospitable state.
Moonless the sky, the hour was late,
When a loud summons shook the gate, 170
And sore for entrance and for aid
A voice of foreign accent prayed.
The porter answered to the call,
And instant rushed into the hall
A man whose aspect and attire
Startled the circle by the fire.

VIII

His plaited hair in elf-locks spread
Around his bare and matted head;
On leg and thigh close stretched and trim,
His vesture showed the sinewy limb; 180
In salmon dyes, a linen vest
Was frequent folded round his breast;
A mantle long and loose he wore,
Shaggy with ice and stained with gore.
He clasped a burden to his heart,
And, resting on a knotted dart,

from hair and beard he shook,
 and him gazed with wildered look.
 the hall with staggering pace led by the blaze to place, 190 less from the bitter air,
 a boy of beauty rare.
 by next he louted low,
 and erect his tale to show
 of majestic port and tone,
 of some barbarous throne.
 and, Lord of Rokeby, hear!
 O'Neale salutes thee dear;
 and to thy care 199
 Redmond gives, his grandson fair.
 hee breed him as thy son,
 though's days of joy are done,
 for lords have seized his land,
 and feeble is his hand,
 the glory of Tyrone
 morning vapor flown.
 the duty on thy soul,
 hee think on Erin's bowl!
 young the young O'Neale,
 hee think of Erin's steel. 210
 nam first this charge was due, absence honors you.—
 y master's message by,
 aught will contented die.'

IX

grew fixed, his cheek grew pale,
 when he had told his tale;
 beneath his mantle wide,
 wound was in his side.
 all aid—in terror wild
 he screamed the orphan child. 220
 aught raised his wistful eyes,
 he strove to soothe his cries;
 of his dying pain,
 and blest him o'er again,
 and the little hands outspread,
 and crossed the infant head,
 his native tongue and phrase
 each saint to watch his days;
 his strength together drew to Rokeby to renew. 230
 if was faltered from his breast,
 by dying signs expressed,
 'O'Neale!' he faintly said,
 the faithful spirit fled.

X

ere soothing might prevail
 child to end the tale:

And then he said that from his home
 His grandsire had been forced to roam,
 Which had not been if Redmond's hand
 Had but had strength to draw the brand,
 The brand of Lenaugh More the Red, 241
 That hung beside the gray wolf's head.—
 'T was from his broken phrase descried,
 His foster father was his guide,
 Who in his charge from Ulster bore
 Letters and gifts a goodly store;
 But ruffians met them in the wood,
 Ferraught in battle boldly stood,
 Till wounded and overpowered at length,
 And stripped of all, his failing strength 251
 Just bore him here—mid then the child
 Renewed again his moaning wild.

XI

The tear down childhood's cheek that flows
 Is like the dew-drop on the rose;
 When next the summer breeze comes by
 And waves the bush, the flower is dry.
 Won by their care, the orphan child
 Soon on his new protector smiled,
 With dimpled cheek and eye so fair,
 Through his thick curls of flaxen hair, 260
 But blithest laughed that cheek and eye,
 When Rokeby's little maid was nigh;
 'T was his with elder brother's pride
 Matilda's tottering steps to guide;
 His native lays in Irish tongue
 To soothe her infant ear he sung,
 And primrose twined with daisy fair
 To form a chaplet for her hair.
 By lawn, by grove, by brooklet's strand,
 The children still were hand in hand, 270
 And good Sir Richard smiling eyed
 The early knot so kindly tied.

XII

But summer months bring wilding shoot
 From bud to bloom, from bloom to fruit;
 And years draw on our human span
 From child to boy, from boy to man;
 And soon in Rokeby's woods is seen
 A gallant boy in hunter's green.
 He loves to wake the felon boar
 In his dark haunt on Greta's shore, 280
 And loves against the deer so dun
 To draw the shaft, or lift the gun;
 Yet more he loves in autumn prime
 The hazel's spreading boughs to climb,
 And down its clustered stores to hail
 Where young Matilda holds her veil.

And she whose veil receives the shower
Is altered too and knows her power,
Assumes a monarch's pride 25;
Her Redmond's dangerous sports to chide,
Yet insists still to hear him tell
How the grim wild-beast fought and fell,
How at his fall the bugle rang,
Till rock and greenwood answer thung;
Then blesses her that man can find
A pasture of such savage kind!

XIII

But Redmond knew to weave his tale
So well with praise of wood and dale,
And knew so well each point to trace 30;
Gives living interest to the chase,
And knew so well of all to throw
His spirit's wild romantic glow,
That while she blamed and while she feared,

She loved each venturesome tale she heard.
Oh! too, when drifted snow and rain
To tower and hall their steps restrain,
Together they explored the page
Of glowing bard or gifted sage;
Of, placed the evening fire beside,
The minstrel art alternate tried, 35;
While gladsome harp and lively lay
Made winter night fit fast away.
Thus, from their childhood blending still
Their sport, their study, and their skill,
As union of the soul they prove,
But must not think that it was love.
But though they shrank not, envious Fame
Soon dared to give that union name;
And when so often side by side
From year to year the pair she eyed, 40;
She sometimes blamed the good old knight
As dull of ear and dim of sight,
Sometimes his purpose would declare
That young O'Neale should wed his heir.

XIV

The suit of Wilfrid rent disguise
And bandage from the lovers' eyes;
'T was plain that Oswald for his son
Had Rokeby's favor wellnigh won.
Now must they meet with change of cheer,
With mutual looks of shame and fear; 35;
Now must Matilda stray apart
To school her disobedient heart,
And Redmond now alone must rue
The love he never can subdue.
But factions rose, and Rokeby aware
No rebel's son should wed his heir;

And Redmond, nurtured while a child
In many a hard's traditions wild,
Now sought the lonely wood or stream,
To cherish there a happier dream 30;
Of maiden won by sword or lance,
As in the regions of romance;
And count the heroes of his line,
Great Nial of the Pledges Nine,
Shane-Irmas wild, and Geraldine,
And Conan-more, who vowed his race
For ever to the fight and chase,
And cursed him of his lineage born Should sheathe the sword to reap the corn.

Or leave the mountain and the wold 35;
To shroud himself in castled hold.
From such examples hope he drew,
And brightened as the trumpet blew.

XV

If brides were won by heart and blade,
Redmond had both his cause to aid,
And all beside of nurture rare
That might besem a haroe's heir.
Turlough O'Neale in Erin's strife
On Rokeby's Lord bestowed his life, 30;
And well did Rokeby's generous knight 30
Young Redmond for the deed requite.
Nor was his liberal care and cost
Upon the gallant stripling lost.
Seek the North Riding broad and wide,
Like Redmond none could steed beside;
From Tynemouth search to Cumberland,
Like Redmond none could wield a brand;
And then, of humor kind and free,
And bearing him to each degree 35;
With frank and fearless courtesy, 35
There never youth was fonder to steal
Upon the heart like brave O'Neale.

XVI

Sir Richard loved him as his son;
And when the days of peace were done,
And to the gales of war he gave
The banner of his sires to wave,
Redmond, distinguished by his care,
He chose that honored flag to bear,
And named his page, the next degree
In that old time to chivalry. 30;
In five pitched fields he well maintained
The honored place his worth obtained,
And high was Redmond's youthful name
Blazed in the roll of martial fame.
Had fortune smiled on Marston fight,
The eye had seen him dubbed a knight;

Twice mid the battle's doubtful strife
Of Rokeby's Lord he saved the life,
But when he saw him prisoner made,
He kissed and then resigned his blade, 390
And yielded him an easy prey
To those who led the knight away,
Resolved Matilda's sire should prove
In prison, as in fight, his love.

XVII

When lovers meet in adverse hour,
'T is like a sun-glimpse through a shower,
A watery ray an instant seen
The darkly closing clouds between.
As Redmond on the turf reclined,
The past and present filled his mind: 400
'It was not thus,' Affection said,
'I dreamed of my return, dear maid !
Not thus when from thy trembling hand
I took the banner and the brand,
When round me, as the bugles blew,
Their blades three hundred warriors drew,
And, while the standard I unrolled,
Clashed their bright arms, with clamor
bold.

Where is that banner now ? — its pride
Lies whelmed in Ouse's sullen tide ! 410
Where now these warriors ? — in their gore
They cumber Marston's dismal moor !
And what avails a useless brand,
Held by a captive's shackled hand,
That only would his life retain
To aid thy sire to bear his chain !'
Thus Redmond to himself apart,
Nor lighter was his rival's heart;
For Wilfrid, while his generous soul
Disdained to profit by control, 420
By many a sign could mark too plain,
Save with such aid, his hopes were vain.
But now Matilda's accents stole
On the dark visions of their soul,
And bade their mournful musing fly,
Like mist before the zephyr's sigh.

XVIII

'I need not to my friends recall,
How Northam shunned my father's hall,
A man of silence and of woe,
Yet ever anxious to bestow 430
On my poor self what'er could prove
A kinsman's confidence and love.
My feeble aid could sometimes chase
The clouds of sorrow for a space;
But oftener, fixed beyond my power,
I marked his deep despondence lower.

One dismal cause, by all unguessed,
His fearful confidence confessed;
And twice it was my hap to see
Examples of that agony 440
Which for a season can o'erstrain
And wreck the structure of the brain.
He had the awful power to know
The approaching mental overthrow,
And while his mind had courage yet
To struggle with the dreadful fit,
The victim writhed against its throes,
Like wretch beneath a murderer's blows.
This malady, I well could mark, Sprung from some direful cause and
dark, 450
But still he kept its source concealed,
Till arming for the civil field;
Then in my charge he bade me hold
A treasure huge of gems and gold,
With this disjointed dismal scroll
That tells the secret of his soul
In such wild words as oft betray
A mind by anguish forced astray.'

XIX

NORTHAM'S HISTORY

'Matilda ! thou hast seen me start,
As if a dagger thrilled my heart, 460
When it has happened some casual phrase
Waked memory of my former days.
Believe that few can backward cast
Their thought with pleasure on the past;
But I ! — my youth was rash and vain,
And blood and rage my manhood stain,
And my gray hairs must now descend
To my cold grave without a friend !
Even thou, Matilda, wilt disown
Thy kinsman when his guilt is known. 470
And must I lift the bloody veil
That hides my dark and fatal tale ?
I must — I will — Pale phantom, cease !
Leave me one little hour in peace !
Thus haunted, think'st thou I have skill
Thine own commission to fulfil ?
Or, while thou point'st with gesture fierce
Thy blighted cheek, thy bloody hearse,
How can I paint thee as thou wert,
So fair in face, so warm in heart ! — 480

XX

'Yes, she was fair ! — Matilda, thou
Hast a soft sadness on thy brow;
But hers was like the sunny glow,
That laughs on earth and all below !

We wedded secret — there was need —
 Differing in country and in creed;
 And when to Mortham's tower she came,
 We mentioned not her race and name,
 Until thy sire, who fought afar, 499
 Should turn him home from foreign war,
 On whose kind influence we relied
 To soothe her father's ire and pride.
 Few months we lived retired, unknown
 To all but one dear friend alone,
 One darling friend — I spare his shame,
 I will not write the villain's name!
 My trespasses I might forget,
 And sue in vengeance for the debt
 Due by a brother worm to me,
 Ungrateful to God's clemency, 500
 That spared me penitential time,
 Nor cut me off amid my crime. —

XXI

'A kindly smile to all she lent,
 Bet on her husband's friend 't was bent
 So kind that from its harmless glee
 The wretch misconstrued villany.
 Repulsed in his presumptuous love,
 A vengeful snare the traitor wore.
 Alone we sat — the flask had flowed,
 My blood with heat unwonted glowed, 501
 When through the alleyed walk we sped
 With hurried step my Edith glided,
 Covering beneath the verdant screen,
 As one unwilling to be seen.
 Words cannot paint the headish smile
 That curled the traitor's cheek the while!
 Fiercely I questioned of the cause;
 He made a cold and artful pause,
 Then prayed it might not chafe my mood —
 "There was a gallant in the wood!" 502
 We had been shouting at the deer;
 My cross-bow — evil chance! — was near:
 That ready weapon of my wrath
 I caught and, hasting up the path,
 In the yew grove my wife I found;
 A stranger's arms her neck had bound!
 I marked his heart — the bow I drew —
 I loosed the shaft — 't was more than true!
 I found my Edith's dying charms 503
 Looked in her murdered brother's arms!
 He came in secret to inquire
 Her state and reconcile her sire.

XXII

'All fired my rage — the villain first
 Whose craft my jealousy had nursed;

He sought in far and foreign clime
 To 'scape the vengeance of his crime.
 The manner of the slaughter done
 Was known to few, my guilt to none;
 Some tale my faithful steward framed —
 I know not what — of shaft mis-aimed; 504
 And even from those the act who knew
 He hid the hand from which it flew.
 Untouched by human laws I stood,
 But God had heard the cry of blood!
 There is a blank upon my mind,
 A fearful vision ill-defined
 Of raving till my flesh was torn,
 Of dungeon-bolts and fetters worn —
 And when I waked to woe more mild
 And questioned of my infant child — 505
 Have I not written that she bore
 A boy, like summer morning fair? —
 With looks confused my menials tell
 That armed men in Mortham dell
 Beset the nurse's evening way,
 And bore her with her charge away.
 My faithless friend, and none but he,
 Could profit by this villany;
 Him then I sought with purpose dread
 Of treble vengeance on his head! 506
 He 'scaped me — but my bosom's wound
 Some faint relief from wandering found,
 And over distant land and sea
 I bore my load of misery.

XXIII

'T was then that fate my footsteps led Among a daring crew and dread,
 With whom full oft my hated life
 I ventured in such desperate strife
 That even my fierce associates saw
 My frantic deeds with dumb and awe. 507
 Much then I learned and much can show
 Of human guilt and human woe,
 Yet ne'er have in my wanderings known
 A wretch whose sorrows matched my own! —
 It chanced that after battle fray
 Upon the bloody field we lay;
 The yellow moon her lustre shed
 Upon the wounded and the dead,
 While, sense in toil and wassail drowned,
 My ruffian comrades slept around, 508
 There came a voice — its silver tone
 Was soft, but hark, as thine own —
 "Ah, wretch!" it said, "what mak'st thou
 here,
 While unavenged my bloody hire,

While unprotected lives mine heir
Without a father's name and care ? "

XXIV

'I heard — obeyed — and homeward drew;
The fiercest of our desperate crew
I brought, at time of need to aid
My purposed vengeance long delayed. 390
But humble be my thanks to Heaven
That better hopes and thoughts has given,
And by our Lord's dear prayer has taught
Mercy by mercy must be bought ! —
Let me in misery rejoice —
I've seen his face — I've heard his voice —

I claimed of him my only child —
As he disowned the theft, he smiled !
That very calm and callous look,
That fiendish sneer his visage took, 600
As when he said, in scornful mood,
"There is a gallant in the wood ! " —
I did not slay him as he stood —
All praise be to my Maker given !
Long suffrance is one path to heaven.'

XXV

Twas far the woful tale was heard
When something in the thicket stirred.
Up Redmond sprung; the villain Guy —
For he it was that lurked so nigh —
Drew back — he durst not cross his steel 610
A moment's space with brave O'Neale
For all the treasured gold that rests
In Mortham's iron-banded chests.
Redmond resumed his seat; he said
Some roe was rustling in the shade.
Bertram laughed grimly when he saw
His timorous comrade backward draw;
'A trusty mate art thou, to fear
A single arm, and aid so near !
Yet have I seen thee mark a deer. 620
Give me thy carbine — I 'll show
As art that thou wilt gladly know,
How thou mayst safely quell a foe.'

XXVI

On hands and knees fierce Bertram drew
The spreading birch and hazels through,
Till he had Redmond full in view;
The gun he levelled — Mark like this
Was Bertram never known to miss,
When fair opposed to aim their sate 630
As object of his mortal hate.
That day young Redmond's death had seen,
But twice Matilda came between

The carbine and Redmond's breast
Just ere the spring his finger pressed.
A deadly oath the ruffian swore,
But yet his fell design forbore:
'It ne'er,' he muttered, 'shall be said
That thus I scathed thee, haughty maid !'
Then moved to seek more open aim,
When to his side Guy Denzil came: 640
'Bertram, forbear ! — we are undone
For ever, if thou fire the gun.
By all the fiends, an armed force
Descends the dell of foot and horse !
We perish if they hear a shot —
Madman ! we have a safer plot —
Nay, friend, be ruled, and bear thee
back !

Behold, down yonder hollow track
The warlike leader of the band
Comes with his broadsword in his hand.' 650
Bertram looked up; he saw, he knew
That Denzil's fears had counselled true,
Then cursed his fortune and withdrew,
Threaded the woodlands undescried,
And gained the cave on Greta side.

XXVII

They whom dark Bertram in his wrath
Doomed to captivity or death,
Their thoughts to one sad subject lent,
Saw not nor heard the ambushment.
Heedless and unconcerned they sate 660
While on the very verge of fate,
Heedless and unconcerned remained
When Heaven the murderer's arm restrained;
As ships drift darkling down the tide,
Nor see the shelves o'er which they glide.
Uninterrupted thus they heard
What Mortham's closing tale declared.
He spoke of wealth as of a load
By fortune on a wretch bestowed,
In bitter mockery of hate, 670
His cureless woes to aggravate;
But yet he prayed Matilda's care
Might save that treasure for his heir —
His Edith's son — for still he raved
As confident his life was saved;
In frequent vision, he averred,
He saw his face, his voice he heard,
Then argued calm — had murder been,
The blood, the corpses, had been seen;
Some had pretended, too, to mark 680
On Windermere a stranger bark,
Whose crew, with jealous care yet mild,
Guarded a female and a child.

While these faint proofs he told and praised,
Hope seemed to kindle in his breast;
Though inconsistent, vague, and vain,
It warped his judgment and his brain.

XXVIII

These solemn words his story close: —
Heaven witness for me that I chose
My part in this sad civil fight
Moved by no cause but England's right.
My country's groans have bid me draw
My sword for gospel and for law; —
These righted, I fling arms aside
And seek my son through Europe wide.
My wealth, on which a kinsman nigh
Already casts a grasping eye,
With thee may unsuspected lie.
When of my heart Matilda hears,
Let her weak but trust three years;
If soon from me the treasure claim,
Pursuing a Marchmont's race and name,
Then let it leave her generous hand,
And flow in bounty over the land,
Nursed the wounded prisoner's lot,
Requited the prisoner's named one;
No wealth acquired by fight after,
Shall mingle darkness war.

XXIX

The generous words, who well had known
Of Marchmont's mind the powerful tone,
To that high mind by silence answered
Some compassion his woes deserved.
But Wilfrid said, who saw no need
Why Marchmont wished his life extended,
In secret, readiness to pursue
The soldier as criminal from the Thronged the he heard Marchmont bid
That he would carry her father's will,
His purpose of vengeance.
When in his presence he stood so
The great and noble that Marchmont
Remembered and trembled to all
Days to come and to death.
And now to surrender to the wealth
Heaven, he no longer and
On the land made the bargain.
The Marchmonts then the son chose
To the soldier's will that was
That they in love and peace
The father used a gentle word
A Marchmont's name in love and peace
A Marchmont's name in love and peace

Matilda hastened to reply,
For anger flashed in Redmond's eye; —
'Duty,' she said, with gentle grace,
'Kind Wilfrid, has no choice of place;
Else had I for my sire assigned
Prison less galling to his mind
Than that his wild-wood haunts which sees
And hears the murmur of the Tees,
Recalling thus with every glance
What captive's sorrow can enhance;
But where those woes are highest, there
Needs Rokeby most his daughter's care.'

XXX

He felt the kindly check she gave,
And stood amazed — then answered grave
'I sought thy purpose, noble maid,
Thy doubts to clear, thy schemes to aid.
I have beneath mine own command,
So wills my sire, a gallant band,
And well could send some horsemen wight
To bear the treasure forth by night,
And so before it is put down
In these ill days may safest seem.'
'Thanks, gentle Wilfrid, thanks,' she said:
'Oh, be it not me thy help need!
And, mark the secret found to aid,
Be thou myself watchful to aid
In mine own keeping Marchmont's gold,
Safe with thee.' — While thus she spoke,
Armed soldiers in their massive bands,
The arm of whose approach afraid
The refugees hid their unshaken
Their eyes to Wilfrid bended over,
Then bowed forward to her a bow.
'What mean'st thou, friend, young Wilfrid said,
'Why thus a word best the gain?' —
'That word I gladly gave thee, friend,
For up my aquiline as I love
To endure our martial game
I was the name of Marchmont's name,
A stranger and not with the old,
Surrounded, and a death received
In the a soldier's hand, I went
A Marchmont's name, a Marchmont's name
In the a soldier's hand, I went
A Marchmont's name, a Marchmont's name

XXXI

Wilfrid's words were the answer
That he had heard in the prison's gate,
That Wilfrid's name was the name
That he had heard in the prison's gate

And Denzil's carbine he found;
 Sure evidence by which they knew
 The warning was as kind as true.
 Wisest it seemed with cautious speed
 To leave the dell. It was agreed
 That Redmond with Matilda fair
 And fitting guard should home repair;
 At nightfall Wilfrid should attend
 With a strong band his sister-friend, 790
 To bear with her from Rokeby's bowers
 To Barnard Castle's lofty towers
 Secret and safe the banded chests
 In which the wealth of Mortham resta.
 This hasty purpose fixed, they part,
 Each with a grieved and anxious heart.

CANTO FIFTH

I

THE sultry summer day is done,
 The western hills have hid the sun,
 But mountain peak and village spire
 Retain reflection of his fire.
 Old Barnard's towers are purple still
 To those that gaze from Toller-hill;
 Distant and high, the tower of Bowes
 Like steel upon the anvil glows;
 And Stanmore's ridge behind that lay
 Rich with the spoils of parting day, 10
 In crimson and in gold arrayed,
 Streaks yet awhile the closing shade,
 Then slow resigns to darkening heaven
 The tints which brighter hours had given.
 Thus aged men full loath and slow
 The vanities of life forego,
 And count their youthful follies o'er
 Till memory lends her light no more.

II

THE eve that slow on upland fades
 Has darker closed on Rokeby's glades 20
 Where, sunk within their banks profound,
 Her guardian streams to meeting wound.
 The stately oaks, whose sombre frown
 Of noontide made a twilight brown,
 Impervious now to fainter light,
 Of twilight make an early night.
 Haste into middle air arose
 The vespers of the roosting crows,
 And with congenial murmurs seem
 To wake the Genii of the stream; 30
 For louder clamored Greta's tide,
 And Tees in deeper voice replied,

And fitful waked the evening wind,
 Fitful in sighs its breath resigned.
 Wilfrid, whose fancy-nurtured soul
 Felt in the scene a soft control,
 With lighter footstep pressed the ground,
 And often paused to look around;
 And, though his path was to his love,
 Could not but linger in the grove, 40
 To drink the thrilling interest dear
 Of awful pleasure checked by fear.
 Such inconsistent moods have we,
 Even when our passions strike the key.

III

Now, through the wood's dark mazes past,
 The opening lawn he reached at last
 Where, silvered by the moonlight ray,
 The ancient Hall before him lay.
 Those martial terrors long were fled
 That frowned of old around its head; 50
 The battlements, the turrets gray,
 Seemed half abandoned to decay;
 On barbican and keep of stone
 Stern Time the foeman's work had done.
 Where banners the invader braved,
 The harebell now and walltower waved;
 In the rude guard-room where of yore
 Their weary hours the warders wore,
 Now, while the cheerful fagots blaze, 60
 On the paved floor the spindle plays;
 The flanking guns dismounted lie,
 The moat is ruinous and dry,
 The grim portcullis gone — and all
 The fortress turned to peaceful Hall.

IV

But yet precautions lately ta'en
 Showed danger's day revived again;
 The court-yard wall showed marks of care
 The fall'n defences to repair,
 Lending such strength as might withstand
 The insult of marauding band. 70
 The beams once more were taught to bear
 The trembling drawbridge into air,
 And not till questioned o'er and o'er
 For Wilfrid oped the jealous door,
 And when he entered bolt and bar
 Resumed their place with sullen jar;
 Then, as he crossed the vaulted porch,
 The old gray porter raised his torch,
 And viewed him o'er from foot to head
 Ere to the hall his steps he led. 80
 That huge old hall of knightly state
 Dismantled seemed and desolate.

The moon through transom-shafts of stone
Which crossed the latticed oriels shone,
And by the mournful light she gave
The Gothic vault seemed funeral cave.
Pennon and banner waved no more
O'er beams of stag and tusks of boar,
Nor glimmering arms were marshalled
seen

To glance those sylvan spoils between. 90
Those arms, those ensigns, borne away,
Accomplished Rokeby's brave array,
But all were lost on Marston's day !
Yet here and there the moonbeams fall
Where armor yet adorns the wall,
Cumbrous of size, uncouth to sight,
And useless in the modern fight,
Like veteran relic of the wars
Known only by neglected scars.

V

Matilda soon to greet him came, 100
And bade them light the evening flame;
Said all for parting was prepared,
And tarried but for Wilfrid's guard.
But then, reluctant to unfold
His father's avarice of gold,
He hinted that lest jealous eye
Should on their precious burden pry,
He judged it best the castle gate
To enter when the night wore late;
And therefore he had left command 110
With those he trusted of his band
That they should be at Rokeby met
What time the midnight-watch was set.
Now Redmond came, whose anxious care
Till then was busied to prepare
All needful, meetly to arrange
The mansion for its mournful change.
With Wilfrid's care and kindness pleased,
His cold unready hand he seized,
And pressed it till his kindly strain 120
The gentle youth returned again.
Seemed as between them this was said,
'Awhile let jealousy be dead,
And let our contest be whose care
Shall best assist this helpless fair.'

VI

There was no speech the truce to bind;
It was a compact of the mind,
A generous thought at once impressed
On either rival's generous breast.
Matilda well the secret took 130
From sudden change of mien and look,

And — for not small had been her fear
Of jealous ire and danger near —
Felt even in her dejected state
A joy beyond the reach of fate.
They closed beside the chimney's blaze,
And talked, and hoped for happier days,
And lent their spirits' rising glow
Awhile to gild impending woe —
High privilege of youthful time,
Worth all the pleasures of our prime !
The bickering fagot sparkled bright
And gave the scene of love to sight.
Bade Wilfrid's cheek more lively glow,
Played on Matilda's neck of snow,
Her nut-brown curls and forehead high,
And laughed in Redmond's azure eye.
Two lovers by the maiden sate
Without a glance of jealous hate;
The maid her lovers sat between
With open brow and equal mien;
It is a sight but rarely spied,
Thanks to man's wrath and woman's pride

VII

While thus in peaceful guise they sate
A knock alarmed the outer gate,
And ere the tardy porter stirred
The tinkling of a harp was heard.
A manly voice of mellow swell
Bore burden to the music well : —

SONG

'Summer eve is gone and past,
Summer dew is falling fast;
I have wandered all the day,
Do not bid me farther stray !
Gentle hearts of gentle kin,
Take the wandering harper in !'

But the stern porter answer gave,
With 'Get thee hence, thou strolling knave
The king wants soldiers; war, I trow,
Were meeter trade for such as thou.'
At this unkind reproof again
Answered the ready Minstrel's strain:

SONG RESUMED

'Bid not me, in battle-field,
Buckler lift or broadsword wield !
All my strength and all my art
Is to touch the gentle heart
With the wizard notes that ring
From the peaceful minstrel-string.'

the porter, all unmoved, replied, —
 Depart in peace, with Heaven to guide;
 Longer by the gate thou dwell, 180
 Trust me, thou shalt not part so well.'

VIII

With somewhat of appealing look
 The harper's part young Wilfrid took:
 These notes so wild and ready thrill,
 They show no vulgar minstrel's skill;
 And were his task to seek a home
 More distant, since the night is come;
 And for his faith I dare engage —
 Your Harpool's blood is soured by age;
 His gate, once readily displayed 190
 To greet the friend, the poor to aid,
 Now even to me though known of old
 Did but reluctantly unfold.' —
 O blame not as poor Harpool's crime
 An evil of this evil time.
 He deems dependent on his care
 The safety of his patron's heir,
 Nor judges meet to open the tower
 To guest unknown at parting hour,
 Urging his duty to excess 200
 Of rough and stubborn faithfulness.
 For this poor harper, I would fain
 He may relax: — hark to his strain!'

IX

SONG RESUMED

'I have song of war for knight,
 Lay of love for lady bright,
 Fairy tale to lull the heir,
 Goblin grim the maids to scare.
 Dark the night and long till day,
 Do not bid me farther stray!

'Rokeby's lords of martial fame, 210
 I can count them name by name;
 Legends of their line there be,
 Known to few but known to me;
 If you honor Rokeby's kin,
 Take the wandering harper in!

'Rokeby's lords had fair regard
 For the harp and for the bard;
 Baron's race throve never well
 Where the curse of minstrel fell.
 If you love that noble kin, 220
 Take the weary harper in!'

'Hark! Harpool parleys — there is hope,'
 Said Redmond, 'that the gate will open.' —

'For all thy brag and boast, I trow,
 Nought knowest thou of the Felon Sow,'
 Quoth Harpool, 'nor how Greta-side
 She roamed and Rokeby forest wide;
 Nor how Ralph Rokeby gave the beast
 To Richmond's friars to make a feast.
 Of Gilbert Griffinson the tale 230
 Goes, and of gallant Peter Dale
 That well could strike with sword amain,
 And of the valiant son of Spain,
 Friar Middleton, and blithe Sir Ralph;
 There were a jest to make us laugh!
 If thou canst tell it, in you shed,
 Thou'st won thy supper and thy bed.'

X

Matilda smiled; 'Cold hope,' said she,
 'From Harpool's love of minstrelsy!
 But for this harper may we dare, 240
 Redmond, to mend his couch and fare?' —
 'O, ask me not! — At minstrel-string
 My heart from infancy would spring;
 Nor can I hear its simplest strain
 But it brings Erin's dream again,
 When placed by Owen Lysagh's knee —
 The Fíle of O'Neale was he,
 A blind and bearded man whose old
 Was sacred as a prophet's held —
 I've seen a ring of rugged kerne, 250
 With aspects shaggy, wild, and stern,
 Enchanted by the master's lay,
 Linger around the livelong day,
 Shift from wild rage to wilder glee,
 To love, to grief, to ecstasy,
 And feel each varied change of soul
 Obedient to the harp's control. —
 Ah! Clandeboy! thy friendly floor
 Slieve-Donard's oak shall light no more;
 Nor Owen's harp beside the blaze 260
 Tell maiden's love or hero's praise!
 The mantling brambles hide thy hearth,
 Centre of hospitable mirth;
 All undistinguished in the glade,
 My sires' glad home is prostrate laid,
 Their vassals wander wide and far,
 Serve foreign lords in distant war,
 And now the stranger's sons enjoy
 The lovely woods of Clandeboy!
 He spoke, and proudly turned aside 270
 The starting tear to dry and hide.

XI

Matilda's dark and softened eye
 Was glistening ere O'Neale's was dry.

dy, weave a wreath for me,
ave it of the cypress-tree.'

XIV

observed the starting tear,
oke with kind and blithesome beer—
ble Wilfrid ! ere the day
ourns the land thy silent lay, ay a wreath be freely wove of friendship and of love.
not wish that rigid Fate
med thee to a captive's state, 380
ands are bound by honor's law,
ars a sword he must not draw;
e it so, in minstrel pride
d together would we ride
eing steeds, like harpers old,
or the halls of barons bold;
er of the lyre we'd seek ichael's Mount to Skiddaw's Peak, wild Albin's mountain strand,
m green Erin's lovely land, 390
hou the gentler souls should move
y of pity and of love,
y mate, in rougher strain
ing of war and warriors slain.
agland's bards were vanquished
ben,
tland's vaunted Hawthornden,
enced on Iernian shore,
a's harp should charn no more !'
' mood he spoke to wile
Wilfrid's woe - worn cheek a mile. 400

XV

aid Matilda, 'ere thy name,
edmond, gain its destined fame,
t thou kindly deign to call ther-minstrel to the hall ?
the household too attend,
his rank a humble friend;
their faithful hearts will grieve
their poor mistress takes her leave;
he born and beaker flow gate their parting woe.' 410 per came ; — in youth's first prime
; in mode of olden time was fashioned, to express lent English minstrel's dress,
y gown of Kendal green
rget closed of silver sheen;
in silken scarf was slung,
his side an anlace hung.

It seemed some masquer's quaint array
For revel or for holiday.

410

XVI

He made obeisance with a free
Yet studied air of courtesy.
Each look and accent framed to please
Seemed to affect a playful ease;
His face was of that doubtful kind
That wins the eye, but not the mind;
Yet harsh it seemed to deem amiss
Of brow so young and smooth as this.
His was the subtle look and sly
That, spying all, seems nought to spy; 430
Round all the group his glances stole,
Unmarked themselves, to mark the whole.
Yet sunk beneath Matilda's look,
Nor could the eye of Redmond brook.
To the suspicious or the old
Subtle and dangerous and bold
Had seemed this self-invited guest;
But young our lovers, — and the rest,
Wrapt in their sorrow and their fear
At parting of their Mistress dear, 440
Tear-blinded to the castle-hall
Came as to bear her funeral pall.

XVII

All that expression base was gone
When waked the guest his minstrel tone;
It fled at inspiration's call,
As erst the demon fled from Saul.
More noble glance he cast around,
More free-drawn breath inspired the sound,
His pulse beat bolder and more high
In all the pride of minstrelsy ! 450
Alas ! too soon that pride was o'er,
Sunk with the lay that bade it soar !
His soul resumed with habit's chain
Its vices wild and follies vain,
And gave the talent with him born
To be a common curse and scorn.
Such was the youth whom Rokeby's maid
With condescending kindness prayed
Here to renew the strains she loved,
At distance beard and well approved. 460

XVIII

SONG

THE HARP

I was a wild and wayward boy,
My childhood scorned each childish toy;

Retired from all reserved and coy,
To musing prone,
I wooed my solitary joy,
My Harp alone.

Mr youth with bold ambition's mood
Dispersed the humble stream and wood
Where my poor father's cottage stood,
To fame unknown; —
What should my soaring views make good?
Mr Harp alone!

Love came with all his frantic fire,
And wild romance of vain desire:
The harp's daughter heard his love
And pressed the tone:—
What could peremptory hope inspire?
My Mary sing!

It reached a point the bubble burst,
 And reached a point the vision burst,
 And all was dark and cold around
 Love's great and cold
 Yet space the soul that failed me first,
 My life's name!

We came with war and went with war,
 And it was mine to undergo Each danger of the world and —
 The mightiest above.
 My faith and valor, my wit and love,
 My strength and sword —

The above was written by me at New York -
M. HARTY

The more mountain, more and still
 A better view, I know the hill
 And what the top of them are all
 In every part
 The more the more and still
 A better view

[illegible]

Of military melody;
Then paused amid the martial sound,
And looked with well - feigned fear
around:—

'None to this noble house belong,'
 He said, 'that would a minstrel wrong
 Whose fate has been through good and ill
 To love his Royal Master still,
 And with your honored leave would fain
 Rejoice you with a royal strain.'
 Then, as assured by sign and look,
 The warlike tone again he took;
 And Harpod stopped and turned to hear
 A ditty of the Cavalier.

213

THE ANSWER

While the dawn on the mountain was misty and grey.

My true love has mounted his steed and
away.

Over hill, over vale, o'er dale, and o'er
stream

Heroes stand the best, gallant that fight for the Cause!

[illegible]

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
ASTOR LENOX TILDEN FOUNDATION
500 5TH AVENUE
NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

— 100 —

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
ASTOR LENOX TILDEN FOUNDATION
500 5TH AVENUE
NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

— 10 —

THE FIRST OF THE MONTH OF OCTOBER 1891

— 100 —

[illegible]

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
ASTOR LENOX TILDEN FOUNDATION
500 5TH AVENUE
NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

The ... ..

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
ASTOR LENOX TILDEN FOUNDATION
500 5TH AVENUE
NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

e's Derby and Cavendish, dread of their foes;
e's Erin's high Ormond and Scotland's
Montrose!
ld you match the base Skippon, and Massey, and Brown,
the Barons of England that fight for the Crown?

joy to the crest of the brave Cavalier!
his banner unconquered, resistless his
spear,
in peace and in triumph his toils he may drown,
pledge to fair England, her Church,
and her Crown.

XXI

s!' Matilda said, 'that strain, (harper, now is heard in vain!
time has been at such a sound
a Rokeby's vassals gathered round, 550 hundred manly hearts would bound;
now, the stirring verse we hear trump in dying soldier's ear!
ears and sad the notes we own,
power to answer them is flown.
not without his meet applause
e that sings the rightful cause, when the crisis of its fate
human eye seems desperate.
to Rokeby's heir such power retains, 560 his slight guerdon pay thy pains: — lend thy harp; I fain would try
y poor skill can aught supply,
yet I leave my fathers' hall,
bourn the cause in which we fall.'

XXII

harper with a downcast look trembling hand her bounty took.
et the conscious pride of art steered him in his treacherous part;
werful spring of force unguessed 570
hath each gentler mood suppressed, reigned in many a human breast,
his that plans the red campaign
is that wastes the woodland reign.
failing wing, the blood-shot eye sportsman marks with apathy, feeling of his victim's ill
med in his own successful skill.
veteran, too, who now no more
as to head the battle's roar, 580

Loves still the triumph of his art,
And traces on the pencilled chart
Some stern invader's destined way
Through blood and ruin to his prey;
Patriots to death, and towns to flame
He dooms, to raise another's name,
And shares the guilt, though not the fame.
What pays him for his span of time
Spent in premeditating crime?
What against pity arms his heart? 590
It is the conscious pride of art.

XXIII

But principles in Edmund's mind
Were baseless, vague, and undefined.
His soul, like bark with rudder lost,
On passion's changeful tide was tost;
Nor vice nor virtue had the power
Beyond the impression of the hour;
And O, when passion rules, how rare
The hours that fall to Virtue's share!
Yet now she roused her — for the pride 600
That lack of sterner guilt supplied
Could scarce support him when arose
The lay that mourned Matilda's woes.

SONG

THE FAREWELL

'The sound of Rokeby's woods I hear,
They mingle with the song:
Dark Greta's voice is in mine ear,
I must not hear them long.
From every loved and native haunt
The native heir must stray,
And, like a ghost whom sunbeams daunt, 610
Must part before the day.

'Soon from the halls my fathers reared,
Their scutcheons may descend,
A line so long beloved and feared
May soon obscurely end.
No longer here Matilda's tone
Shall bid these echoes swell;
Yet shall they hear her proudly own
The cause in which we fell.'

The lady paused, and then again 620
Resumed the lay in loftier strain. —

XXIV

'Let our halls and towers decay,
Be our name and line forgot,
Lands and manors pass away, —
We but share our monarch's lot.

If no more our annals show
 Battles won and banners taken,
 Still in death, defeat, and woe,
 Ours be loyalty unshaken !

'Constant still in danger's hour, 630
 Princes owned our fathers' aid;
 Lands and honors, wealth and power,
 Well their loyalty repaid.
 Perish wealth and power and pride,
 Mortal boons by mortals given !
 But let constancy abide,
 Constancy 's the gift of Heaven.'

XXV

While thus Matilda's lay was heard,
 A thousand thoughts in Edmund stirred.
 In peasant life he might have known 640
 As fair a face, as sweet a tone;
 But village notes could ne'er supply
 That rich and varied melody.
 And ne'er in cottage maid was seen
 The easy dignity of mien,
 Claiming respect yet waiving state,
 That marks the daughters of the great.
 Yet not perchance had these alone
 His scheme of purposed guilt o'erthrown;
 But while her energy of mind 650
 Superior rose to griefs combined,
 Lending its kindling to her eye,
 Giving her form new majesty, —
 To Edmund's thought Matilda seemed
 The very object he had dreamed
 When, long ere guilt his soul had known,
 In Winston bowers he mused alone,
 Taxing his fancy to combine
 The face, the air, the voice divine,
 Of princess fair by cruel fate 660
 Rest of her honors, power, and state,
 Till to her rightful realm restored
 By destined hero's conquering sword.

XXVI

'Such was my vision !' Edmund thought;
 'And have I then the ruin wrought
 Of such a maid that fancy ne'er
 In fairest vision formed her peer ?
 Was it my hand that could unclose
 The postern to her ruthless foes ?
 Foes lost to honor, law, and faith, 670
 Their kindest mercy sudden death !
 Have I done this ? I, who have sworn
 That if the globe such angel bore,
 I would have traced its circle broad
 To kiss the ground on which she trode ! —

And now — O, would that earth would
 And close upon me while alive ! —
 Is there no hope ? — is all then lost ? —
 Bertram's already on his post !
 Even now beside the hall's arched door !
 I saw his shadow cross the floor !
 He was to wait my signal strain —
 A little respite thus we gain:
 By what I heard the menials say,
 Young Wycliffe's troop are on their way.
 Alaric precipitates the crime !
 My harp must wear away the time. —
 And then in accents faint and low
 He faltered forth a tale of woe.

XXVII

BALLAD

"And whither would you lead me then ?
 Quoth the friar of orders gray;
 And the ruffians twain replied again,
 "By a dying woman to pray." —

"I see," he said, "a lovely sight,
 A sight bodes little harm,
 A lady as a lily bright
 With an infant on her arm." —

"Then do thine office, friar gray,
 And see thou shrive her free !
 Else shall the sprite that purts to-night
 Fling all its guilt on thee.

"Let mass be said and trentals read
 When thou'rt to convent gone,
 And bid the bell of Saint Benedict
 Toll out its deepest tone."

'The shift is done, the friar is gone,
 Blindfolded as he came —
 Next morning all in Littlecot Hall
 Were weeping for their dame.

'Wild Darrell is an altered man,
 The village crones can tell;
 He looks pale as clay and strives to pray
 If he hears the convent bell.

'If prince or peer cross Darrell's way,
 He'll beard him in his pride —
 If he meet a friar of orders gray,
 He droops and turns aside.'

XXVIII

'Harper ! methinks thy magic lays,
 Matilda said, 'can goblins raise !

Wellnigh my fancy can discern 730
Near the dark porch a visage stern;
E'en now in yonder shadowy nook
I see it! — Redmond, Wilfrid, look! —
A human form distinct and clear —
God, for thy mercy! — It draws near!
She saw too true. Stride after stride,
The centre of that chamber wide Fierce Bertram gained; then made a
stand

And, proudly waving with his hand, 739
Thundered — 'Be still, upon your lives! —
He bleeds who speaks, he dies who strives.'
Behind their chief the robber crew,
Forth from the darkened portal drew
In silence — save that echo dread
Returned their heavy measured tread.
The lamp's uncertain lustre gave
Their arms to gleam, their plumes to wave;
File after file in order pass,
Like forms on Banquo's mystic glass.
Then, halting at their leader's sign, 740
At once they formed and curved their line,
Hemming within its crescent drear
Their victims like a herd of deer.
Another sign, and to the aim
Levelled at once their muskets came,
As waiting but their chieftain's word
To make their fatal volley heard.

XXIX

Back in a heap the menials drew;
Yet, even in mortal terror true,
Their pale and startled group oppose 750
Between Matilda and the foes.
'O, haste thee, Wilfrid!' Redmond cried;
'Undo that wicket by thy side!
Bear hence Matilda — gain the wood —
The pass may be awhile made good —
Thy band ere this must sure be nigh —
O speak not — dally not — but fly!' —
While yet the crowd their motions hide,
Through the low wicket door they glide.
Through vaulted passages they wind, 759
In Gothic intricacy twined;
Wilfrid half led and half he bore
Matilda to the postern door,
And safe beneath the forest tree,
The lady stands at liberty.
The moonbeams, the fresh gale's caress,
Renewed suspended consciousness; —
'Where 's Redmond?' eagerly she cries:
'Thou answer'st not — he dies! he dies!
And thou hast left him all hereft 770
Of mortal aid — with murderers left!

I know it well — he would not yield
His sword to man — his doom is sealed!
For my scorned life, which thou hast bought
At price of his, I thank thee not.'

XXX

The unjust reproach, the angry look,
The heart of Wilfrid could not brook.
'Lady,' he said, 'my band so near,
In safety thou mayst rest thee here. 779
For Redmond's death thou shalt not mourn,
If mine can buy his safe return.'
He turned away — his heart throbbed high,
The tear was bursting from his eye;
The sense of her injustice pressed
Upon the maid's distracted breast, —
'Stay, Wilfrid, stay! all aid is vain!'
He heard but turned him not again!
He reaches now the postern door,
Now enters — and is seen no more.

XXXI

With all the agony that e'er 790
Was gendered 'twixt suspense and fear,
She watched the line of windows tall
Whose Gothic lattice lights the Hall,
Distinguished by the paly red
The lamps in dim reflection shed,
While all beside in wan moonlight
Each grated casement glimmered white.
No sight of harm, no sound of ill,
It is a deep and midnight still. 799
Who looked upon the scene had guessed
All in the castle were at rest —
When sudden on the windows shone
A lightning flash just seen and gone!
A shot is heard — again the flame
Flashed thick and fast — a volley came!
Then echoed wildly from within
Of shout and scream the mingled din,
And weapon-clash and maddening cry,
Of those who kill and those who die! —
As filled the hall with sulphurous smoke,
More red, more dark, the death-flash broke,
And forms were on the lattice cast 812
That struck or struggled as they past.

XXXII

What sounds upon the midnight wind
Approach so rapidly behind?
It is, it is, the tramp of steeds,
Matilda hears the sound, she speeds,
Seizes upon the leader's rein —
'O, haste to aid ere aid be vain!

Fly to the postern — gain the hall !' 830
 From saddle spring the troopers all;
 Their gallant steeds at liberty
 Run wild along the moonlight lea.
 But ere they burst upon the scene
 Full stubborn had the conflict been.
 When Bertram marked Matilda's flight,
 It gave the signal for the fight;
 And Rokeby's veterans, seamed with scars
 Of Scotland's and of Erin's wars,
 Their momentary panic o'er, 830
 Stood to the arms which then they bore —
 For they were weaponed and prepared
 Their mistress on her way to guard.
 Then cheered them to the fight (O'Neale,
 Then pealed the shot, and clashed the steel;

The war-smoke soon with sable breath
 Darkened the scene of blood and death,
 While on the few defenders close
 The bandits with redoubled blows,
 And, twice driven back, yet fierce and
 fell 840
 Renew the charge with frantic yell.

XXXIII

Wilfrid has fallen — but o'er him stood Young Redmond soiled with smoke and
 blood,
 Cheering his mates with heart and hand
 Still to make good their desperate stand:
 'Up, comrades, up ! In Rokeby halls
 Ne'er be it said our courage falls.
 What ! faint ye for their savage cry,
 Or do the smoke-wreaths daunt your eye ?
 These rafters have returned a shout 850
 As loud at Rokeby's wassail rout,
 As thick a smoke these hearths have given
 At Hallow-tide or Christmas-even.
 Stand to it yet ! renew the fight
 For Rokeby's and Matilda's right !
 These slaves ! they dare not hand to hand
 Hide buffet from a true man's brand.'
 Impetuous, active, fierce, and young,
 Upon the advancing foes he sprung.
 Woe to the wretch at whom is bent 860
 His brandished falchion's sheer descent !
 Backward they scattered as he came,
 Like wolves before the levin flame,
 When, mid their howling conclave driven,
 Hath glanced the thunderbolt of heaven.
 Bertram rushed on — but Harpool clasped
 His knees, although in death he gasped,
 His falling corpse before him flung,
 And round the trammelled ruffian clung.

Just then the soldiers filled the dome, 870
 And shouting charged the felons home
 So fiercely that in panic dread
 They broke, they yielded, fell, or fled,
 Bertram's stern voice they heed no more,
 Though heard above the battle's roar;
 While, trampling down the dying man,
 He strove with volleyed threat and ban
 In scorn of odds, in fate's despite,
 To rally up the desperate fight.

XXXIV

Soon murkier clouds the hall enfold 880
 Than e'er from battle-thunders rolled,
 So dense the combatants scarce know
 To aim or to avoid the blow.
 Smothering and blindfold grows the
 fight —
 But soon shall dawn a dismal light !
 Mid cries and clashing arms there came
 The hollow sound of rushing flame;
 New horrors on the tumult dire
 Arise — the castle is on fire !
 Doubtful if chance had cast the brand 890
 Or frantic Bertram's desperate hand,
 Matilda saw — for frequent broke
 From the dim casements gusts of smoke,
 Yon tower, which late so clear defined
 On the fair hemisphere reclined
 That, pencilled on its azure pure,
 The eye could count each embrasure,
 Now, swathed within the sweeping cloud,
 Seems giant-spectre in his shroud;
 Till, from each loop-hole flashing light, 900
 A spout of fire shines ruddy bright,
 And, gathering to united glare,
 Streams high into the midnight air;
 A dismal beacon, far and wide
 That wakened Greta's slumbering side.
 Soon all beneath, through gallery long
 And pendent arch, the fire flashed stroug,
 Snatching whatever could maintain,
 Raise, or extend its furious reign;
 Startling with closer cause of dread 910
 The females who the conflict fled,
 And now rushed forth upon the plain,
 Filling the air with clamors vain.

XXXV

But ceased not yet the hall within
 The shriek, the shout, the carnage-din,
 Till bursting lattices give proof
 The flames have caught the raftered roof.
 What ! wait they till its beams amain
 Crash on the slayers and the slain ?

alarm is caught—the drawbridge falls, 920
warriors hurry from the walls,
by the conflagration's light
the lawn renew the fight.
straggling felon down was hewed,
he could gain the sheltering wood;
orth the affrighted harper sprung,
so Matilda's robe he clung.
criek, entreaty, and command ed the pursuer's lifted hand.
l and he alive were ta'en; 930
est save Bertram all are slain.

XXXVI

where is Bertram? — Soaring high,
general flame ascends the sky;
thered group the soldiers gaze
the broad and roaring blaze, like infernal demon, sent from his penal element,
ague and to pollute the air,
ice all gore, on fire his hair,
from the central mass of smoke 940
iant form of Bertram broke!
randished sword on high he rears, plunged among opposing spears;
his left arm his mantle trussed,
ved and foiled three lances' thrust;
hese his headlong course withstood,
eeds he snapped the tough ashwood.
n his foes around him clung;
matchless force aside he flung boldest, — as the bull at bay 950
the ban-dogs from his way,
gh forty foes his path he made,
afely gained the forest glade.

XXXVII

was this final conflict o'er from the postern Redmond bore
id, who, as of life bereft,
n the fatal hall been left,
ted there by all his train;
edmond saw and turned again.
th an oak he laid him down 960
n the blaze gleamed ruddy brown,
hen his mantle's clasp undid;
la held his drooping head,
iven to breathe the freer air,
ning life repaid their care.
zed on them with heavy sigh, —
ld have wished even thus to die!
re he said, — for now with speed
trooper had regained his steed;

The ready palfreys stood arrayed 970
For Redmond and for Rokeby's maid;
Two Wilfrid on his horse sustain,
One leads his charger by the rein.
But oft Matilda looked behind,
As up the vale of Tees they wind,
Where far the mansion of her sires
Beaconed the dale with midnight fires.
In gloomy arch above them spread,
The clouded heaven lowered bloody red;
Beneath in sombre light the flood 980
Appeared to roll in waves of blood.
Then one by one was heard to fall
The tower, the donjon-keep, the hall.
Each rushing down with thunder sound
A space the conflagration drowned;
Till gathering strength again it rose,
Announced its triumph in its close,
Shook wide its light the landscape o'er,
Then sunk — and Rokeby was no more!

CANTO SIXTH

I

THE summer sun, whose early power
Was wont to gild Matilda's bower
And rouse her with his matin ray
Her duteous orisons to pay,
That morning sun has three times seen
The flowers unfold on Rokeby green,
But sees no more the slumbers fly
From fair Matilda's hazel eye;
That morning sun has three times broke 990
On Rokeby's glades of elm and oak,
But, rising from their sylvan screen,
Marks no gray turrets glance between.
A shapeless mass lie keep and tower,
That, hissing to the morning shower,
Can but with smouldering vapor pay
The early smile of summer day.
The peasant, to his labor bound,
Pauses to view the blackened mound,
Striving amid the ruined space
Each well-remembered spot to trace. 1000
That length of frail and fire-searched wall
Once screened the hospitable hall;
When yonder broken arch was whole,
'T was there was dealt the weekly dote;
And where yon tottering column nod
The chapel sent the hymn to God.
So flits the world's uncertain span!
Nor zeal for God nor love for man
Gives mortal monuments a date
Beyond the power of Time and Fate. 1010

The towers must share the builder's doom;
 Ruin is theirs, and his a tomb:
 But better boon benignant Heaven
 To Faith and Charity has given,
 And bids the Christian hope sublime
 Transcend the bounds of Fate and Time.

II

Now the third night of summer came
 Since that which witnessed Rokeby's flame.
 On Brignall cliffs and Scargill brake
 The owl's homilies awake, 40
 The bittern screamed from rush and flag,
 The raven slumbered on his crag,
 Forth from his den the otter drew, —
 Grayling and trout their tyrant knew,
 As between reed and sedge he peers,
 With fierce round snout and sharpened
 ears,

Or prowling by the moonbeam cool
 Watches the stream or swims the pool; —
 Perched on his wonted eyrie high,
 Sleep sealed the tercelet's wearied eye, 50
 That all the day had watched so well
 The cushat dart across the dell.
 In dubious beam reflected shone
 That lofty cliff of pale gray stone
 Beside whose base the secret cave
 To rapine late a refuge gave.
 The crag's wild crest of copse and yew
 On Greta's breast dark shadows threw,
 Shadows that met or shunned the sight
 With every change of fitful light, 60
 As hope and fear alternate chase
 Our course through life's uncertain race.

III

Gliding by crag and copsewood green,
 A solitary form was seen
 To trace with stealthy pace the wold.
 Like fox that seeks the midnight fold,
 And pauses oft, and cowers dismayed
 At every breath that stirs the shade.
 He passes now the ivy bush, —
 The owl has seen him and is hush; 70
 He passes now the doddered oak, —
 He heard the startled raven croak;
 Lower and lower he descends,
 Rustle the leaves, the brushwood bends;
 The otter hears him tread the shore,
 And dives and is beheld no more;
 And by the cliff of pale gray stone
 The midnight wanderer stands alone.
 Methinks that by the moon we trace
 A well-remembered form and face ! 80

That stripling shape, that cheek so pale,
 Combine to tell a rueful tale,
 Of powers misused, of passion's force,
 Of guilt, of grief, and of remorse !
 'Tis Edmund's eye at every sound
 That flings that guilty glance around;
 'Tis Edmund's trembling haste divides
 The brushwood that the cavern hides;
 And when its narrow porch lies bare
 'Tis Edmund's form that enters there. 90

IV

His flint and steel have sparkled bright,
 A lamp hath lent the cavern light.
 Fearful and quick his eye surveys
 Each angle of the gloomy maze.
 Since last he left that stern abode,
 It seemed as none its floor had trode;
 Untouched appeared the various spoil,
 The purchase of his comrades' toil;
 Masks and disguises grimed with mud, 100
 Arms broken and defiled with blood,
 And all the nameless tools that aid
 Night-felons in their lawless trade,
 Upon the gloomy walls were hung
 Or lay in nooks obscurely flung.
 Still on the sordid board appear
 The relics of the noontide cheer:
 Flagons and emptied flasks were there,
 And bench o'erthrown and shattered chair;
 And all around the semblance showed,
 As when the final revel glowed, 110
 When the red sun was setting fast
 And parting pledge Guy Denzil past.
 'To Rokeby treasure - vaults !' they
 quaffed,
 And shouted loud and wildly laughed,
 Poured maddening from the rocky door,
 And parted — to return no more !
 They found in Rokeby vaults their doom, —
 A bloody death, a burning tomb !

V

There his own peasant dress he spies,
 Doffed to assume that quaint disguise, 120
 And shuddering thought upon his glee
 When pranked in garb of minstrelsy.
 'O, be the fatal art accurst,'
 He cried, 'that moved my folly first,
 Till, bribed by bandits' base applause,
 I burst through God's and Nature's laws !
 Three summer days are scanty past
 Since I have trod this cavern last,
 A thoughtless wretch, and prompt to err —
 But O, as yet no murderer ! 130

now I list my comrades' cheer,
 general laugh is in mine ear
 he raised my pulse and steeled my
 heart,
 rehearsed my treacherous part — would that all since then could seem phantom of a fever's dream!
 fatal memory notes too well
 horrors of the dying yell
 my despairing mates that broke a flashed the fire and rolled the smoke, 140
 the avengers shouting came beamed us 'twixt the sword and
 flame!
 rantic flight — the lifted brand —
 angel's interposing hand! — my life from slaughter freed could pay some grateful meed!
 hence this object of my quest aid' — he turned nor spoke the rest.

VI

northward from the rugged hearth paces five he meets the earth, 150 toiled with mattock to explore mtrails of the cavern floor, paused till deep beneath the ground
 search a small steel casket found.
 as he stooped to loose its hasp boulder felt a giant grasp;
 startled and looked up aghast, shrieked! — "Twas Bertram held him fast.
 not!' he said; but who could hear deep stern voice and cease to
 fear? 160
 not! — By heaven, he shakes as much urtridge in the falcon's clutch:
 hised him and unloosed his hold,
 e from the opening casket rolled in and reliquaire of gold.
 am beheld it with surprise, d on its fashion and device,
 cheering Edmund as he could,
 what he smoothed his rugged mood,
 till the youth's half-lifted eye 170
 shed with terror's agony, sidelong glanced as to explore editated flight the door.
 Bertram said, 'from danger free:
 caust not and thou shalt not flee.
 ce brings me hither; hill and plain sought for refuge-place in vain.

And tell me now, thou aguish boy,
 What makest thou here? what means this
 toy?

Denzil and thou, I marked, were ta'en; 180
 What lucky chance unbound your chain?
 I deemed, long since on Baliol's tower,
 Your heads were warped with sun and shower.

Tell me the whole — and mark! nought
 e'er

Chafes me like falsehood or like fear.
 Gathering his courage to his aid
 But trembling still, the youth obeyed.

VII

'Denzil and I two nights passed o'er
 In fetters on the dungeon floor.
 A guest the third sad morrow brought; 190
 Our hold, dark Oswald Wycliffe sought,
 And eyed my comrade long askance
 With fixed and penetrating glance.
 "Guy Denzil art thou called?" — "The same."

"At Court who served wild Buckingham;
 Thence banished, won a keeper's place,
 So Villiers willed, in Marwood-chase;
 That lost — I need not tell thee why —
 Thou madest thy wit thy wants supply,
 Then fought for Rokeby: — have I guessed 200
 My prisoner right?" — "At thy be-
 best." —

He paused awhile, and then went on
 With low and confidential tone; —
 Me, as I judge, not then he saw Close nestled in my couch of straw. —
 "List to me, Guy. Thou know'st the great
 Have frequent need of what they hate;
 Hence, in their favor oft we see
 Unscrupled, useful men like thee.
 Were I disposed to bid thee live, 210
 What pledge of faith hast thou to give?"

VIII

'The ready fiend who never yet
 Hath failed to sharpen Denzil's wit
 Prompted his lie — "His only child Should rest his pledge." — The baron
 smiled,
 And turned to me — "Thou art his son?"
 I bowed — our fetters were undone,
 And we were led to hear apart
 A dreadful lesson of his art.
 Wilfrid, he said, his heir and son, 220
 Had fair Matilda's favor won;

And long since had their union been
But for her father's bigot spleen,
Whose brute and blindfold party-rage
Would, forsooth, perforce, her hand engage
To a base harn of Irish earth,
Unknown his lineage and his birth,
Save that a dying ruffian bore
The infant lost to Rokeby door.
Gentle restraint, he said, would lead 135
Old Rokeby to enlarge his creed;
But fair occasion he must find
For such restraint well meant and kind.
The knight being rendered to his charge
But as a prisoner at large.

IX

'He schooled us in a well-forged tale
Of scheme the castle walls to scale,
To which was leagued each Cavalier
That dwells upon the Tine and Wear,
That Rokeby, his parole large. 140
Had dealt with us to aid the plot.
Such was the charge which Denzil's seal
Of late to Rokeby and O'Neale
Proffered as witness to make good.
Even though the forfeit were their blood.
I scrupled until o'er and o'er
His prisoners' safety Wycliffe swore;
And then — alas! what needs there more?
I knew I should not live to say
The proffer I refused that day; 145
Ashamed to live, yet loath to die,
I united me with their infamy!
'Poor youth!' said Bertram, 'watering
still.

Unfit alike for good or ill:
But what fell next?' — 'Soon as at large
Was scribbled and signed our fatal charge.
There never yet on tragic stage
Was seen so well a painted rage
As Oswald's showed! With loud alarm
He called his garrison to arm; 150
From tower to tower, from post to post,
He hurried as if all were lost;
Consigned to dungeon and to chain
The good old knight and all his train;
Warped each suspected Cavalier
Within his limits to appear
To-morrow at the hour of noon
In the high church of Eglistone.' —

X

'Of Eglistone! — Even now I passed.'
Said Bertram, 'as the night closed fast; 155

Torches and cressets gleamed around,
I heard the saw and hammer sound,
And I could mark they toiled to raise
A scaffold, hung with sable base,
Which the grim headman's scene displayed,

Block, axe, and sawdust ready laid
Some evil deed will there be done
Unless Matilda wed his son; —
She loves him not — 't is shrewdly guessed
That Redmond rules the damsel's breast —
This is a turn of Oswald's skill;
But I may meet, and foil him still! —
How earnest thou to thy freedom?' —
'There

Lies mystery more dark and rare.
In midst of Wycliffe's well-fringed rage,
A scroll was offered by a page.
Who told a muffled horseman late
Had left it at the Castle-gate.
He broke the seal — his cheek showed charge.

Sudden, passionate, wild, and strange; 160
The mimic passion of his eye
Was turned to actual agony;
His hand like summer sapling shook,
Terror and guilt were in his look.
Denzil he judged in time of need
Fit counsellor for evil deed.
And thus apart his counsel broke.
While with a ghastly smile he spoke:

XI

'As in the pageants of the stage
The dead awake in this wild age.
Mortham — whom all men deemed decreed
In his own deadly snare to breed,
Slain by a bravo whom o'er sea
He trained to aid in murdering me. —
Mortham has leaped! The sword that
The sword-belt harmed the ruler not."
Here with an execration fell
Bertram leaped up and paced the cell —
'Thine own gray head or bosom dark,'
He muttered, 'may be surer mark!'
Then sat and signed to Edmund, pale 165
With terror, to resume his tale.
'Wycliffe went on: — "Mark with what dignity
Of wildered reverse he writes: —

THE LETTER

'Ruler of Mortham's destiny!
Though dead, thy victim lives to thee.

Once had he all that binds to life,
A lovely child, a lovelier wife;
Wealth, fame, and friendship were his
own —

Thou gavest the word and they are flown.
Mark how he pays thee: to thy hand 321
He yields his honors and his land,
One boon premised; — restore his child !
And, from his native land exiled,
Mortham no more returns to claim
His lands, his honors, or his name;
Refuse him this and from the slain
Thou shalt see Mortham rise again." —

XII

"This billet while the baron read,
His faltering accents showed his dread; 330
He pressed his forehead with his palm,
Then took a scornful tone and calm;
"Wild as the winds, as billows wild !
What wot I of his spouse or child ?
Hither he brought a joyous dame,
Unknown her lineage or her name:
Her in some frantic fit he slew;
The nurse and child in fear withdrew.
Heaven be my witness, wist I where
To find this youth, my kinsman's heir, 340
Unguarded I would give with joy
The father's arms to fold his boy,
And Mortham's lands and towers resign
To the just heirs of Mortham's line."
Thou know'st that scarcely e'en his fear
Suppresses Denzil's cynic sneer; —
"Then happy is thy vassal's part."
He said, "to ease his patron's heart !
In thine own jailer's watchful care
Lies Mortham's just and rightful heir; 350
Thy generous wish is fully won, — Redmond O'Neale is Mortham's son." —

XIII

"Up starting with a frenzied look,
His clenched hand the baron shook:
"Is Hell at work ? or dost thou rave,
Or darest thou palter with me, slave !
Perchance thou wot'st not, Barnard's towers
Have racks of strange and ghastly powers."

Denzil, who well his safety knew,
Firmly rejoined, "I tell thee true. 360
Thy racks could give thee but to know
The proofs which I, untortured, show.
It chanced upon a winter night
When early snow made Stanmore white,

That very night when first of all
Redmond O'Neale saw Rokeby-hall,
It was my goodly lot to gain
A reliquary and a chain,
Twisted and chased of massive gold.
Demand not how the prize I hold ! 370
It was not given nor lent nor sold.
Gilt tablets to the chain were hung
With letters in the Irish tongue.
I hid my spoil, for there was need
That I should leave the land with speed,
Nor then I deemed it safe to bear
On mine own person gems so rare.
Small heed I of the tablets took,
But since have spelled them by the book
When some sojourn in Erin's land 380
Of their wild speech had given command.
But darkling was the sense; the phrase
And language those of other days,
Involved of purpose, as to foil
An interloper's prying toil.
The words but not the sense I knew,
Till fortune gave the guiding clue.

XIV

"Three days since, was that clue revealed
In Thorsgill as I lay concealed,
And heard at full when Rokeby's maid 390
Her uncle's history displayed;
And now I can interpret well
Each syllable the tablets tell.
Mark, then: fair Edith was the joy
Of old O'Neale of Clandeboy;
But from her sire and country fled
In secret Mortham's lord to wed.
O'Neale, his first resentment o'er,
Despatched his son to Greta's shore, 399
Enjoining he should make him known —
Until his farther will were shown —
To Edith, but to her alone.
What of their ill-starred meeting fell
Lord Wycliffe knows, and none so well.

XV

"O'Neale it was who in despair
Robbed Mortham of his infant heir;
He bred him in their nurture wild,
And called him murdered Connel's child.
Soon died the nurse; the clan believed 409
What from their chieftain they received.
His purpose was that ne'er again
The boy should cross the Irish main,
But, like his mountain sires, enjoy
The woods and wastes of Clandeboy.

Then on the land wild troubles came,
And stronger chieftains urged a claim,
And wrested from the old man's hands
His native towers, his father's lands.
Unable then amid the strife
To guard young Redmond's rights or
life,

Late and reluctant he restores
The infant to his native shores,
With goodly gifts and letters stored,
With many a deep conjuring word,
To Mortham and to Rokeby's lord.
Nought knew the clod of Irish earth,
Who was the guide, of Redmond's birth,
But deemed his chief's commands were laid

On both, by both to be obeyed.
How he was wounded by the way
I need not, and I list not say." —

XVI

"A wondrous tale! and, grant it true,
What," Wycliffe answered, "might I do?
Heaven knows, as willingly as now
I raise the bonnet from my brow,
Would I my kinsman's manors fair
Restore to Mortham or his heir;
But Mortham is distraught — O'Neale
Has drawn for tyranny his steel,
Malignant to our rightful cause
And trained in Rome's delusive laws.
Hark thee apart!" They whispered long,
Till Denzil's voice grew bold and strong:
"My proofs! I never will," he said,
"Show mortal man where they are laid.
Nor hope discovery to foreclose
By giving me to feed the crows;
For I have mates at large who know
Where I am wont such toys to stow.
Free me from peril and from band,
These tablets are at thy command;
Nor were it hard to form some train,
To wile old Mortham o'er the main.
Then, lunatic's nor papist's hand
Should wrest from thine the goodly land."
"I like thy wit," said Wycliffe, "well;
But here in hostage shalt thou dwell.
Thy son, unless my purpose err,
May prove the trustier messenger.
A scroll to Mortham shall he bear
From me, and fetch these tokens rare.
Gold shalt thou have, and that good store,
And freedom, his commission o'er;
But if his faith should chance to fail,
The gibbet frees thee from the jail."

XVII

'Meshed in the net himself had twined,
What subterfuge could Denzil find?
He told me with reluctant sigh
That hidden here the tokens lie,
Conjured my swift return and aid,
By all he scoffed and discoloured,
And looked as if the noose were tied
And I the priest who left his side.
This scroll for Mortham Wycliffe gave,
Whom I must seek by Greta's wave,
Or in the hut where chief he hides,
Where Thorsgill's forester resides. —
Thence chanced it, wandering in the glade,
That he descried our ambuscade. —
I was dismissed as evening fell,
And reached but now this rocky cell.
'Give Oswald's letter.' — Bertram read,
And tore it fiercely shred by shred: —
'All lies and villany! to blind
His noble kinsman's generous mind,
And train him on from day to day,
Till he can take his life away. —
And now, declare thy purpose, youth,
Nor dare to answer, save the truth;
If aught I mark of Denzil's art,
I'll tear the secret from thy heart!'

XVIII

'It needs not. I renounce,' he said,
'My tutor and his deadly trade.
Fixed was my purpose to declare
To Mortham, Redmond is his heir;
To tell him in what risk he stands,
And yield these tokens to his hands.
Fixed was my purpose to atone,
Far as I may, the evil done;
And fixed it rests — if I survive
This night, and leave this cave alive.' —
'And Denzil?' — 'Let them ply the rack,
Even till his joints and sinews crack!
If Oswald tear him limb from limb,
What ruth can Denzil claim from him
Whose thoughtless youth he led astray
And damned to this unhallowed way?
He schooled me, faith and vows were vain;
Now let my master reap his gain.' —
'True,' answered Bertram, 't is his meed;
There's retribution in the deed.
But thou — thou art not for our course,
Hast fear, hast pity, hast remorse;
And he with us the gale who braves
Must heave such cargo to the waves,
Or lag with overloaded prore
While barks unburdened reach the shore.'

XIX

He paused and, stretching him at length,
Seemed to repose his bulky strength.
Communing with his secret mind, 520
As half he sat and half reclined,
One ample hand his forehead pressed,
And one was dropped across his breast.
The shaggy eyebrows deeper came
Above his eyes of swarthy flame;
His lip of pride awhile forebore
The haughty curve till then it wore;
The unaltered fierceness of his look
A shade of darkened sadness took, —
For dark and sad a presage pressed 530
Resistlessly on Bertram's breast, —
And when he spoke, his wonted tone,
So fierce, abrupt, and brief, was gone.
His voice was steady, low, and deep,
Like distant waves when breezes sleep;
And sorrow mixed with Edmund's fear,
Its low unbroken depth to hear.

XX

'Edmund, in thy sad tale I find
The woe that warped my patron's mind;
'T would wake the fountains of the eye 540
In other men, but mine are dry.
Mortham must never see the fool
That sold himself base Wycliffe's tool,
Yet less from thirst of sordid gain
Than to avenge supposed disdain.
Say Bertram rue his fault — a word
Till now from Bertram never heard:
Say, too, that Mortham's lord he prays
To think but on their former days;
On Quariana's beach and rock, 550
On Cayo's bursting battle-shock,
On Darien's sands and deadly drow,
And on the dart Tlatzeca threw; —
Perchance my patron yet may hear
More that may grace his comrade's bier,
My soul hath felt a secret weight,
A warning of approaching fate:
A priest had said, "Return, repent!"
As well to bid that rock be rent.
Firm as that flint I face mine end; 560
My heart may burst but cannot bend.

XXI

'The dawning of my youth with awe
And prophecy the Dalesmen saw;
For over Redesdale it came,
As bodeful as their beacon-flame.
Edmund, thy years were scarcely mine
When, challenging the Clans of Tyne

To bring their best my brand to prove,
O'er Herham's altar hung my glove;
But Tynedale, nor in tower nor town, 570
Held champion meet to take it down.
My noontide India may declare;
Like her fierce sun, I fired the air!
Like him, to wood and cave bade fly
Her natives from mine angry eye.
Panama's maids shall long look pale
When Risingham inspires the tale;
Chili's dark matrons long shall tame
The froward child with Bertram's name.
And now, my race of terror run, 580
Mine be the eve of tropic sun!
No pale gradations quench his ray,
No twilight dews his wrath allay;
With disk like battle-target red
He rushes to his burning bed,
Dyes the wide wave with bloody light,
Then sinks at once — and all is night. —

XXII

'Now to thy mission, Edmund. Fly,
Seek Mortham out, and bid him hie 589
To Richmond where his troops are laid,
And lend his force to Redmond's aid.
Say till he reaches Eglistone
A friend will watch to guard his son.
Now, fare-thee-well; for night draws
on,
And I would rest me here alone.
Despite his ill-dissembled fear,
There swam in Edmund's eye a tear;
A tribute to the courage high
Which stooped not in extremity,
But strove, irregularly great, 600
To triumph o'er approaching fate!
Bertram beheld the dew-drop start,
It almost touched his iron heart:
'I did not think there lived,' he said,
'One who would tear for Bertram shed.'
He loosened then his baldric's hold,
A buckle broad of massive gold; —
'Of all the spoil that paid his pains
But this with Risingham remains;
And this, dear Edmund, thou shalt take, 610
And wear it long for Bertram's sake.
Once more — to Mortham speed again;
Farewell! and turn thee not again.'

XXIII

The night has yielded to the morn,
And far the hours of prime are worn.
Oswald, who since the dawn of day
Had cursed his messenger's delay,

Impatient questioned now his train,
 'Was Denzil's son returned again?'
 It chanced there answered of the crew 670
 A menial who young Edmund knew:
 'No son of Denzil this,' he said;
 'A peasant boy from Winston glade,
 For song and minstrelsy renowned
 And knavish pranks the hamlets round.'
 'Nur Denzil's son! — from Winston vale! —
 Then it was false, that specious tale;
 Or worse — he hath despatched the youth
 To show to Mortham's lord its truth.
 Fool that I was! — But 't is too late; — 680
 This is the very turn of fate! —
 The tale, or true or false, relies
 On Denzil's evidence! — He dies! —
 Ho! Provost Marshal! instantly
 Lead Denzil to the gallows-tree!
 Allow him not a parting word;
 Short be the shrift and sure the cord!
 Then let his gory head appall
 Marauders from the castle-wall.
 Lead forth thy guard, that duty done, 690
 With best despatch to Eglistone. —
 Basil, tell Wilfrid he must straight
 Attend me at the castle-gate.'

XXIV

'Alas!' the old domestic said,
 And shook his venerable head,
 'Alas, my lord! full ill to-day
 May my young master brook the way!
 The leech has spoke with grave alarm
 Of unseen hurt, of secret harm,
 Of sorrow lurking at the heart, 695
 That mars and lets his healing art.'
 'Tush! tell not me! — Romantic boys
 Pine themselves sick for airy toys,
 I will find cure for Wilfrid soon;
 Bid him for Eglistone be bouné,
 And quick! — I hear the dull death-drum
 Tell Denzil's hour of fate is come.'
 He paused with scornful smile, and then Resumed his train of thought agen.
 'Now comes my fortune's crisis near! 700
 Entreaty boots not — instant fear,
 Nought else, can bend Matilda's pride
 Or win her to be Wilfrid's bride.
 But when she sees the scaffold placed,
 With axe and block and headsmann graced,
 And when she deems that to deny
 Dooms Redmond and her sire to die,
 She must give way. — Then, were the
 line
 Of Rokeby once combined with mine,

I gain the weather-gage of fate! 690
 If Mortham come, he comes too late,
 While I, allied thus and prepared,
 Bid him defiance to his beard. —
 If she prove stubborn, shall I dare
 To drop the axe? — Soft! pause we there.
 Mortham still lives — yon youth may tell
 His tale — and Fairfax loves him well; —
 Else, wherefore should I now delay
 To sweep this Redmond from my way? —
 But she to piety perforce 700 Must yield. — Without there! Sound to horse!

XXV

'T was bustle in the court below, —
 'Mount, and march forward!' Forth they go;
 Steeds neigh and trample all around,
 Steel rings, spears glimmer, trumpets
 sound. —
 Just then was sung his parting hymn;
 And Denzil turned his eyeballs dim,
 And, scarcely conscious what he sees,
 Follows the horsemen down the Tees;
 And scarcely conscious what he hears, 710
 The trumpets tingle in his ears.
 O'er the long bridge they're sweeping now,
 The van is hid by greenwood bough;
 But ere the rearward had passed o'er
 Guy Denzil heard and saw no more!
 One stroke upon the castle bell
 To Oswald rung his dying knell.

XXVI

O, for that peneil, erst profuse
 Of chivalry's emblazoned hues,
 That traced of old in Woodstock bower 720
 The pageant of the Leaf and Flower,
 And bodied forth the tourney high
 Held for the hand of Emily!
 Then might I paint the tumult broad
 That to the crowded abbey flowed,
 And poured, as with an ocean's sound,
 Into the church's ample bound!
 Then might I show each varying mien,
 Exulting, woful, or serene;
 Indifference, with his idiot stare, 730
 And Sympathy, with anxious air;
 Paint the dejected Cavalier,
 Doubtful, disarmed, and sad of cheer;
 And his proud foe, whose formal eye
 Claimed conquest now and mastery;
 And the brute crowd, whose curious zeal
 Huzzas each turn of Fortune's wheel,

And loudest shouts when lowest lie
 Exalted worth and station high.
 Yet what may such a wish avail? 720
 'T is mine to tell an onward tale,
 Hurrying, as best I can, along
 The hearers and the hasty song; —
 Like traveller when approaching home,
 Who sees the shades of evening come,
 And must not now his course delay,
 Or choose the fair but winding way:
 Nay, scarcely may his pace suspend,
 Where o'er his head the wildings bend,
 To bless the breeze that cools his brow 730
 Or snatch a blossom from the bough.

XXVII

The reverend pile lay wild and waste,
 Profaned, dishonored, and defaced.
 Through storied lattices no more
 In softened light the sunbeams pour,
 Gilding the Gothic sculpture rich
 Of shrine and monument and niche.
 The civil fury of the time
 Made sport of sacrilegious crime;
 For dark fanaticism rent 740
 Altar and screen and ornament,
 And peasant hands the tombs o'erthrew
 Of Bowes, of Rokeby, and Fitz-Hugh.
 And now was seen, unwonted sight,
 In holy walls a scaffold dight!
 Where once the priest of grace divine
 Dealt to his flock the mystic sign,
 There stood the block displayed, and there
 The headsman grim his hatchet bare,
 And for the word of hope and faith 750
 Resounded loud a doom of death.
 Thrice the fierce trumpet's breath was
 heard,

And echoed thrice the herald's word,
 Dooming, for breach of martial laws
 And treason to the Commons' cause,
 The Knight of Rokeby, and O'Neale,
 To stoop their heads to block and steel.
 The trumpets flourished high and shrill,
 Then was a silence dead and still;
 And silent prayers to Heaven were cast, 760
 And stifled sobs were bursting fast,
 Till from the crowd began to rise
 Murmurs of sorrow or surprise,
 And from the distant isles there came Deep - muttered threats with Wycliffe's
 name.

XXVIII

But Oswald, guarded by his band,
 Powerful in evil, waved his hand,

And bade sedition's voice be dead,
 On peril of the murmurer's head.
 Then first his glance sought Rokeby's
 Knight, 770

Who gazed on the tremendous sight
 As calm as if he came a guest
 To kindred baron's feudal feast,
 As calm as if that trumpet-call
 Were summons to the bannered hall;
 Firm in his loyalty he stood,
 And prompt to seal it with his blood.
 With downcast look drew Oswald nigh, —
 He durst not cope with Rokeby's eye! —
 And said with low and faltering breath, 780
 'Thou know'st the terms of life and
 death.'

The knight then turned and sternly smiled:
 'The maiden is mine only child,
 Yet shall my blessing leave her head
 If with a traitor's son she wed.'
 Then Redmond spoke: 'The life of one Might thy malignity atone,
 On me be flung a double guilt!
 Spare Rokeby's blood, let mine be spilt!' 790
 Wycliffe had listened to his suit,
 But dread prevailed and he was mute.

XXIX

And now he pours his choice of fear
 In secret on Matilda's ear;
 'An union formed with me and mine
 Ensures the faith of Rokeby's line.
 Consent, and all this dread array
 Like morning dream shall pass away;
 Refuse, and by my duty pressed
 I give the word — thou know'st the rest.'
 Matilda, still and motionless, 800
 With terror heard the dread address,
 Pale as the sheeted maid who dies
 To hopeless love a sacrifice;
 Then wrung her hands in agony,
 And round her cast bewildered eye,
 Now on the scaffold glanced, and now
 On Wycliffe's unrelenting brow.
 She veiled her face, and with a voice
 Scarce audible, 'I make my choice!
 Spare but their lives! — for aught beside
 Let Wilfrid's doom my fate decide. 811
 He once was generous!' As she spoke,
 Dark Wycliffe's joy in triumph broke:
 'Wilfrid, where loitered ye so late?
 Why upon Basil rest thy weight? —
 Art spell-bound by enchanter's wand? —
 Kneel, kneel, and take her yielded hand;
 Thank her with raptures, simple boy!
 Should tears and trembling speak thy joy?' 820

If his struggling force he rears,
 Lacking brands and stabbing spears,
 From assailants shook him free, 920
 Mined his feet and twice his knee.
 Fold odds oppressed at length,
 His struggles and his strength,
 A hundred mortal wounds
 As for 'mongst mangling hounds;
 When he died his parting groan
 More of laughter than of moan
 As when a lion dies,
 Others scarcely trust their eyes,
 And their weapons on the slain 930
 A grim king should rouse again!
 Low and insult some renewed,
 On the trunk the head had hewed,
 All's voice the deed forbade;
 He o'er the corse he laid: —
 He was in act and mind,
 No bolder heart behind:
 Give him, for a soldier meet,
 Her's cloak for winding sheet.'

XXXIV

Of death and dying pang, 940
 Of trump and bugle clang,
 Through the sounding woods there
 Some
 And bugle, trump and drum.
 With such powers as well had
 Freed
 Redmond at his utmost need,
 Cried with such a band of horse
 At less ample powers enforce,
 Led of every proof and sign
 Give an heir to Mortham's line,
 Added to a father's arms 950
 Of his Edith's charms, —

Mortham is come, to hear and see
 Of this strange morn the history.
 What saw he? — not the church's floor,
 Cumbered with dead and stained with gore;
 What heard he? — not the clamorous
 crowd,
 That shout their gratulations loud:
 Redmond he saw and heard alone,
 Clapsed him and sobbed, 'My son! my son!'

XXXV

This chanced upon a summer morn, 960
 When yellow waved the heavy corn:
 But when brown August o'er the land
 Called forth the reaper's busy band,
 A gladsome sight the sylvan road
 From Eglstone to Mortham showed.
 Awhile the hardy rustic leaves
 The task to bind and pile the sheaves,
 And maids their sickles fling aside
 To gaze on bridegroom and on bride,
 And childhood's wondering group draws
 near, 970
 And from the gleaner's hands the ear
 Drops while she folds them for a prayer
 And blessing on the lovely pair.
 'T was then the Maid of Rokeby gave
 Her plighted troth to Redmond brave;
 And Teesdale can remember yet
 How Fate to Virtue paid her debt,
 And for their troubles bade them prove
 A lengthened life of peace and love.
 Time and Tide had thus their sway, 980
 Yielding, like an April day,
 Smiling noon for sullen morrow,
 Years of joy for hours of sorrow!

THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

Of the projects which grew out of the of the Ballantynes, when Scott was to the toils, was the establishment of Edinburgh Annual Register, which was to be in opposition to Constable's Edin- burgh Review. It was to be mainly historical alistic, and the Quarterly Review esl shortly after more completely served pose of an antagonist of the Review, it infused a little literary spirit into Edinburgh, and amongst other contributions inserted in the first volume, for 1809, some imitations of living poets, one of them taking Scott himself for its model!

Meanwhile Rokeby had been started on the stocks; and Scott, who in the ebullition of his active fancy liked to keep two or three varied tasks on hand, bethought himself of one of these fragments, The Vision of Triermain, and conceived the notion of expanding it into a poem, to be published anonymously at the same time with Rokeby, and fathered upon some one of his friends, to complete the mystification. The fragment taken is nearly identical with Canto First of the Bridal, divisions L-VIII. He hoped especially by this scheme to draw Jeffrey, and elicit from him a criticism which would be unencumbered by the reviewer's relations with the real author.

As Erskine had generally been credited with the authorship of the anonymous fragments in the Register, he was asked by Scott to play his part in the plot, and good naturedly lent his aid. 'I shall be very much amused,' he wrote to Scott, 'if the secret is kept and the knowing ones taken in. To prevent any discovery from your prose, what think you of putting down your ideas of what the preface ought to contain, and allowing me to write it over? And perhaps a quizzing hint might be connected.' Scott took the hint, and the Introduction to The Bridal of Triermaln given below is a mixture of Scott and Erskine, the latter's quotations from the Greek being especially adapted to throwing off the scent those who might naturally attribute the poem to Scott. In his Introduction to The Lord of the Isles, written in 1830, when the secret had long been out, Scott wrote: 'Being much urged by my intimate friend, now unhappily no more, William Erskine (a Scottish judge, by the title of Lord Kincedder), I agreed to write the little romantic tale called The Bridal of Triermaln; but it was on the condition that he should make no serious effort to disown the composition, if report should lay it at his door. As he was more than suspected of a taste for poetry, and as I took care, in several places, to mix something which might resemble (as far as was in my power) my friend's feeling and manner, the train easily caught, and two large editions were sold. A third being called for, Lord Kincedder became unwilling to aid any longer a deception which was going farther than he expected or desired, and the real author's name was given.'<sup>1</sup>

Scott had taken Morritt into his confidence, but apparently he had not thus treated his intimate correspondent, Lady Louisa Stuart, or Lady Abercorn. With both of these clever women he kept up a bit of fencing, though it is not quite certain that one or the other did not have an inkling of the truth, and so amused herself with playing a like game of hoodwinking. The little book was published almost on the same day as Rokeby, and Scott wrote to Morritt, March 9, 1813; 'I wish you would give the said author of Triermaln a hoist to notice, by speaking of him now and then in those parts where a word spoken is sure to have a hundred echoes. . . . I hear it has really bestowed great praise on the and means to give it a place in his review has not, he says, my great artery, but it more attention to style, more elegance of nament, etc., etc. We will see, however, he really will say to it in his review, for is no sure augury from his private coction.' A few days later, when writing to Abercorn, Scott threw in a reference to a poem in a careless fashion. He is sending some books: 'The first and most interesting is a spirited imitation of my manner called Bridal of Triermaln. The author is unknown, but it makes some noise among us. The is a little novel,' and so on with a red shortly to his own Rokeby. A month writing the same lady again, he says, 'ethetically, as it were, The Bridal of Triermaln is the book which has excited the most interest here. Jeffrey lauds it highly. I am formed, and is one day to throw it at head.' Lady Louisa Stuart on her side intimates that she suspects Scott to have written the Bridal, though she reports common-sense to assign it to R. P. Gillies.

It was some time before the authorship was rightly placed. Scott and Morritt were pointed that Jeffrey did not fall into the laid for them, but though Scott's name often mentioned as that of the probable author the secret was well kept. As late as Jan. 1814, Scott was writing to Morritt: 'fourth edition is at press. The Emperor of Prussia has expressed such an interest in it, that it will be inscribed to her, in doggerel sonnet or other, by the unknown author. This is funny enough;' and again same friend: 'As your conscience has various things to answer for, you must still burrow with the secret of the Bridal. It is spread very rapidly, and I have one or two little romances which will make a second volume and which I would wish published, but with my name. The truth is that this muddling work amuses me, and I am nothing in the condition of Joseph Surface was embarrassed by getting himself too a reputation; for many things would people well enough anonymously. When they bore me on the title-page, would give me that sort of ill-name which phanging, and that would be in many respects inconvenient if I thought of again trying grande opus. I will give you a hundred reasons when we meet for not owning Bridal till I either secede entirely from field of literature, or from that of life,' an amusing comment on Scott's willingness to allow others to carry off his honors. We find him writing in his Journal a dozen

<sup>1</sup> A statement somewhat at variance with Scott's to Morritt on occasion of a fourth edition. — See below.

later : 'A long letter from R. P. Gillies. I wonder how ever he could ask me to announce myself as the author of Annotations on German

Novels which he is to write.' The Introduction prefixed to the first edition, of March, 1818, here follows :—

INTRODUCTION

In the Edinburgh Annual Register for the year 1809, Three Fragments were inserted, written in imitation of Living Poets. It must have been apparent that by these proluisions nothing burlesque or disrespectful to the authors was intended, but that they were offered to the public as serious, though certainly very imperfect, imitations of that style of composition by which each of the writers is supposed to be distinguished. As these exercises attracted a greater degree of attention than the author anticipated, he has been induced to complete one of them and present it as a separate publication.

It is not in this place that an examination of the works of the master whom he has here adopted as his model, can, with propriety, be introduced; since his general acquiescence in the favorable suffrage of the public must necessarily be inferred from the attempt he has now made. He is induced, by the nature of his subject, to offer a few remarks on what has been called romantic poetry; the popularity of which has been revived in the present day, under the auspices, and by the unparalleled success, of one individual.

The original purpose of poetry is either religious or historical, or, as must frequently happen, a mixture of both. To modern readers the poems of Homer have many of the features of pure romance; but in the estimation of his contemporaries, they probably derived their chief value from their supposed historical authenticity. The same may be generally said of the poetry of all early ages. The marvels and miracles which the poet blends with his song do not exceed in number or extravagance the figments of the historians of the same period of society; and indeed, the difference betwixt poetry and prose, as the vehicles of historical truth, is always of late introduction. Poets, under various denominations of Bards, Scalds, Chroniclers, and so forth, are the first historians of all nations. Their intention is to relate the events they have witnessed, or the traditions that have reached them; and they clothe the relation in rhyme, merely as the means of rendering it more solemn in the narrative, or more easily committed to memory. But as the poetical historian improves in the art of conveying information, the authenticity of his narrative unavoidably declines. He is tempted to dilate and dwell upon the events that are interesting to his imagination, and, conscious how indifferent his audience is to the naked truth of his poem, his history gradually becomes a romance.

It is in this situation that those epics are found, which have been generally regarded the standards of poetry; and it has happened somewhat strangely that the moderns have pointed out as the characteristics and peculiar excellencies of narrative poetry, the very circumstances which the authors themselves adopted, only because their art involved the duties of the historian as well as the poet. It cannot be believed, for example, that Homer selected the siege of Troy as the most appropriate subject for poetry; his purpose was to write the early history of his country; the event he has chosen, though not very fruitful in varied incident, nor perfectly well adapted for poetry, was nevertheless combined with traditionary and genealogical anecdotes extremely interesting to those who were to listen to him; and this he has adorned by the exertions of a genius which, if it has been equalled, has certainly been never surpassed. It was not till comparatively a late period that the general accuracy of his narrative, or his purpose in composing it, was brought into question. Δοκεῖ πρῶτος [δ' Ἀναξάγορας] (καθὰ φησι Φαβρίνιος ἐν παντοδαπῇ Ἱστορίᾳ) τὴν Ὀμήρου ποιεῖν ἀποφύνασθαι εἶναι περὶ ἀρετῆς καὶ δικαιοσύνης.<sup>1</sup> But whatever theories might be framed by speculative men, his work was of an historical, not of an allegorical nature. Ἐναυτίλλετο μετὰ τοῦ Μέντεω καὶ ὄκου ἐκαστοτε ἀφίκοντο, πάντα τὰ ἐπιχώρια διερωτῶτο, καὶ ἱστορίων ἐκυνθάνετο, οἷός τε μιν ἦν καὶ μυημάτων πάντων γράφεσθαι.<sup>2</sup> Instead of recommending the choice of a subject similar to that of Homer, it was to be expected that critics should have exhorted the poets of these latter days to adopt or invent a narrative in itself more susceptible of poetical ornament, and to avail themselves of that advantage in order to compensate, in some degree, the inferiority of genius. The contrary course has been inculcated by almost all the writers upon the Epopeia; with what success, the fate of Homer's numerous imitators may best show. The ultimum supplicium of criticism was inflicted on the author if he did not choose a subject which at once deprived him of all claim to originality, and placed him, if not in actual contest, at least in fatal comparison, with those giants in the land whom it was most his interest to avoid. The celebrated receipt for writing an epic poem, which appeared in The Guardian,<sup>1</sup> was the first instance in which common sense was applied to this department of poetry; and, indeed, if the question be considered on its own merits, we must be satisfied that narrative poetry, if strictly confined to the great occurrences of history, would be deprived of the individual interest which it is so well calculated to excite.

<sup>1</sup> Diogenes Laertius, lib. ii. Anaxag. Segm. II.

<sup>2</sup> Homer's Vits, in Herod. Heur. Steph. 1670, p.

Modern poets may therefore be pardoned in seeking simpler subjects of verse, more interesting in proportion to their simplicity. Two or three figures, well grouped, suit the artist better than a crowd, for whatever purpose assembled. For the same reason, a scene immediately presented to the imagination, and directly brought home to the feelings, though involving the fate of but one or two persons, is more favorable for poetry than the political struggles and convulsions which influence the fate of kingdoms. The former are within the reach and comprehension of all, and, if depicted with vigor, seldom fail to fix attention: The other if more sublime, are more vague and distant, less capable of being distinctly understood, and infinitely less capable of exciting those sentiments which it is the very purpose of poetry to inspire. To generalize is always to destroy effect. We would, for example, be more interested in the fate of an individual soldier in combat, than in the grand event of a general action; with the happiness of two lovers raised from misery and anxiety to peace and union, than with the successful exertions of a whole nation. From what causes this may originate, is a separate and obviously an immaterial consideration. Before ascribing this peculiarity to causes decidedly and odiously selfish, it is proper to recollect that while men see only a limited space, and while their affections and conduct are regulated, not by aspiring to an universal good, but by exerting their power of making themselves and others happy within the limited scale allotted to each individual, so long will individual history and individual virtue be the readier and more accessible road to general interest and attention; and, perhaps, we may add, that it is the more useful, as well as the more accessible, inasmuch as it affords an example capable of being easily imitated.

According to the author's idea of Romantic Poetry, as distinguished from Epic, the former comprehends a fictitious narrative, framed and combined at the pleasure of the writer; beginning and ending as he may judge best; which neither exacts nor refuses the use of supernatural machinery; which is free from the technical rules of the Epic; and is subject only to those which good sense, good taste, and good morals apply to every species of poetry without exception. The date may be in a remote age, or in the present; the story may detail the adventures of a prince or of a peasant. In a word, the author is absolute master of his country and its inhabitants, and everything is permitted to him, excepting to be heavy or prosaic, for which, free and unembarrassed as he is, he has no manner of apology. Those, it is probable, will be found the peculiarities of this species of composition; and before joining the outcry against the vitiated taste that fosters and encourages it, the justice and grounds of it ought to be made perfectly apparent. If the want of sieges and battles and great military evolutions, in our poetry, is complained of, let us reflect that the campaigns and heroes of our days are perpetuated in a record that neither requires nor admits of the aid of fiction; and if the complaint refers to the inferiority of our bards, let us pay a just tribute to their modesty, limiting them, as it does, to subjects which, however indifferently treated, have still the interest and charm of novelty, and which thus prevents them from adding insipidity to their other more insuperable defects.

<sup>1</sup> The Guardian, No. 78. Forth.

THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMALN

OR

THE VALE OF SAINT JOHN

A LOVER'S TALE

INTRODUCTION

I

COME LUCY ! while 't is morning hour
The woodland brook we needs must
pass;
So ere the sun assume his power
We shelter in our poplar bower,
Though vanished from the velvet grass.
Carbing the stream, this stony ridge
May serve us for a sylvan bridge;
For here compelled to disunite,
Round petty isles the runnels glide, 10
And chafing off their puny spite,
The shallow murmurers waste their might,
Yielding to footstep free and light
A dry-shod pass from side to side.

II

Nay, why this hesitating pause ?
And, Lucy, as thy step withdraws,
Why sidelong eye the streamlet's brim ?
Titania's foot without a slip,
Like thine, though timid, light, and slim,
From stone to stone might safely trip, 20
Nor risk the glow-worm clasp to dip
That buds her slipper's silken rim.
Or trust thy lover's strength; nor fear
That this same stalwart arm of mine,
Which could yon oak's prone trunk up-
rear,
Shall shrink beneath the burden dear
Of form so slender, light, and fine. —
So — now, the danger dared at last,
Look back and smile at perils past !

III

And now we reach the favorite glade, 30
Paired in by copsewood, cliff, and stone,
Where never harsher sounds invade
To break affection's whispering tone
Than the deep breeze that waves the shade,
Than the small brooklet's feeble moan.

Come ! rest thee on thy wonted seat;
Mossed is the stone, the turf is green,
A place where lovers best may meet
Who would not that their love be seen.
The boughs that dim the summer sky 40
Shall hide us from each lurking spy
That fain would spread the invidious
tale,
How Lucy of the lofty eye,
Noble in birth, in fortunes high,
She for whom lords and barons sigh,
Meets her poor Arthur in the dale.

IV

How deep that blush ! — how deep that
sigh !
And why does Lucy shun mine eye ?
Is it because that crimson draws
Its color from some secret cause, 50
Some hidden movement of the breast,
She would not that her Arthur guessed ?
O, quicker far is lovers' ken
Than the dull glance of common men,
And by strange sympathy can spell
The thoughts the loved one will not tell !
And mine in Lucy's blush saw met
The hue of pleasure and regret;
Pride mingled in the sigh her voice,
And shared with Love the crimson
glow, 60
Well pleased that thou art Arthur's choice,
Yet shamed thine own is placed so
low:
Thou turn'st thy self-confessing cheek,
As if to meet the breezes cooling;
Then, Lucy, hear thy tutor speak,
For Love too has his hours of schooling.

V

Too oft my anxious eye has spied
That secret grief thou fain wouldst hide,
The passing pang of humbled pride;

Too oft when through the splendid
hall,

The loadstar of each heart and eye,
My fair one leads the glittering ball,
Will her stolen glance on Arthur fall

With such a blush and such a sigh!
Thou wouldst not yield for wealth or rank

The heart thy worth and beauty won,
Nor leave me on this mossy bank

To meet a rival on a throne:
Why then should vain repinnings rise,
That to thy lover fate denies

A nobler name, a wide domain,
A baron's birth, a menial train,
Since Heaven assigned him for his part
A lyre, a falchion, and a heart?

VI

My sword — its master must be dumb;
But when a soldier names my name,

Approach, my Lucy! fearless come,
Nor dread to hear of Arthur's shame.

My heart — mid all yon courtly crew
Of lordly rank and lofty line,

Is there to love and honor true,
That boasts a pulse so warm as mine?

They praised thy diamonds' lustre rare —
Matched with thine eyes, I thought it faded;

They praised the pearls that bound thy
hair —

I only saw the locks they braided;
They talked of wealthy dower and land,

And titles of high birth the token —
I thought of Lucy's heart and hand.

Nor knew the sense of what was spoken.

And yet, if ranked in Fortune's roll,
I might have learned their choice unwise

Who rate the dower above the soul
And Lucy's diamonds o'er her eyes.

VII

My lyre — it is an idle toy

That borrows accents not its own,
Like warbler of Colombian sky

That sings but in a mimic tone.

Ne'er did it sound o'er sauntered well,

Nor boasts it aught of Border spell;

Its strings no feudal slogan pour,

Its heroes draw no broad claymore;

No shouting clans applauses raise

Because it sung their fathers' praise;

On Scottish moor, or English down,
It ne'er was graced with fair renown;
Nor won — best meed to minstrel true —
One favoring smile from fair BUCCLEUCH!
By one poor streamlet sounds its tone,
And heard by one dear maid alone.

VIII

But, if thou bid'st, these tones shall tell
Of errant knight, and damoselle;
Of the dread knot a wizard tied,
In punishment of maiden's pride,
In notes of marvel and of fear
That best may charm romantic ear.

For Lucy loves — like COLLINS, ill-starred
name!

Whose lay's requital was that tardy Fame,
Who bound no laurel round his living
head,

Should hang it o'er his monument when
dead, —

For Lucy loves to tread enchanted strand,
And thread like him the maze of Fairy-
land;

Of golden battlements to view the gleam,
And slumber soft by some Elysian stream;
Such lays she loves — and, such my Lucy's
choice,

What other song can claim her Poet's voice?

CANTO FIRST

I

WHERE is the maiden of mortal strain
That may match with the Baron of Tri-ermaln?

She must be lovely and constant and kind,
Holy and pure and humble of mind,
Blithe of cheer and gentle of mood,
Courteous and generous and noble of
blood —

Lovely as the sun's first ray
When it breaks the clouds of an April
day;

Constant and true as the widowed dove,
Kind as a minstrel that sings of love;

Pure as the fountain in rocky cave

Where never sunbeam kissed the wave;

Humble as maiden that loves in vain,

Holy as hermit's vesper strain;

Gentle as breeze that but whispers and dies,

the as the light leaves that dance in its sighs;
ous as monarch the morn he is crowned,
us as spring-dews that bless the glad ground;
her blood as the currents that met,
veins of the noblest Plantagenet — just her form be, her mood, and her
strain,
hall match with Sir Roland of Trier-
main.

II

dand de Vaux he hath laid him to
sleep,
ood it was fevered, his breathing
was deep.
I been pricking against the Scot,
ray was long and the skirmish hot;
sted helm and his buckler's plight
oken of a stubborn fight.
n the castle must hold them still,
s must lull him to his rest,
he slow soft tunes he loves the best ep sink down upon his breast,
the dew on a summer hill.

III

the dawn of an autumn day;
n was struggling with frost-fog gray
ke a silvery crape was spread Skiddaw's dim and distant head, intly gleamed each painted pane
lordly halls of Triermain,
n that baron bold awoke.
g he woke and loudly did call,
g his menials in bower and hall
le hastily he spoke.

IV

cen, my minstrels ! Which of ye all
d his harp with that dying fall,
weet, so soft, so faint,
ed an angel's whispered call n expiring saint ?
arken, my merry-men ! What time or where she pass, that maid with her heavenly
brow,
er look so sweet and her eyes so fair,
r graceful step and her angel air,
he eagle plume in her dark-brown
hair,
passed from my bower e'en now !

V

Answered him Richard de Bretville; he Was chief of the baron's minstrelsy, —
'Silent, noble chieftain, we Have sat since midnight close,
When such lulling sounds as the brooklet sings
Murmured from our melting strings,
And hushed you to repose.
Had a harp-note sounded here,
It had caught my watchful ear,
Although it fell as faint and shy
As bashful maiden's half-formed sigh
When she thinks her lover near.'
Answered Philip of Fastwaite tall;
He kept guard in the outer-hall, —
'Since at eve our watch took post,
Not a foot has thy portal crossed;
Else had I heard the steps, though low
And light they fell as when earth receives
In morn of frost the withered leaves
That drop when no winds blow.'

VI

'Then come thou hither, Henry, my page,
Whom I saved from the sack of Hermitage,
When that dark castle, tower, and spire,
Rose to the skies a pile of fire,
And reddened all the Nine-stane Hill, 70
And the shrieks of death, that wildly broke Through devouring flame and smothering
smoke,
Made the warrior's heart-blood chill.
The trustiest thou of all my train,
My fleetest courser thou must rein,
And ride to Lyulph's tower,
And from the Baron of Triermain
Greet well that sage of power.
He is sprung from Druid sires
And British bards that tuned their lyres
To Arthur's and Pendragon's praise, 80
And his who sleeps at Dunmailraise.
Gifted like his gifted race,
He the characters can trace
Graven deep in elder time
Upon Hellvellyn's cliffs sublime;
Sign and sigil well doth he know,
And can bode of weal and woe,
Of kingdoms' fall and fate of wars,
From mystic dreams and course of stars.
He shall tell if middle earth 100
To that enchanting shape gave birth,
Or if 't was but an airy thing
Such as fantastic slumbers bring,
Framed from the rainbow's varying dyes

Or fading tints of western skies.
 For, by the blessed rood I swear,
 If that fair form breathe vital air,
 No other maiden by my side
 Shall ever rest De Vaux's bride !'

VII

The faithful page he mounts his steed, 110
 And soon he crossed green Irthing's mead,
 Dashed o'er Kirkoswald's verdant plain,
 And Eden barred his course in vain.
 He passed red Penrith's Table Round,
 For feats of chivalry renowned,
 Left Mayburgh's mound and stones of
 power,
 By Druids raised in magic hour,
 And traced the Eamont's winding way
 Till Ulfo's lake beneath him lay.

VIII

Onward he rode, the pathway still 120
 Winding betwixt the lake and hill;
 Till, on the fragment of a rock
 Struck from its base by lightning shock,
 He saw the hoary sage:
 The silver moss and lichen twined,
 With fern and deer-hair checked and
 lined,

A cushion fit for age;
 And o'er him shook the aspen-tree,
 A restless rustling canopy.
 Then sprung young Henry from his selle 130
 And greeted Lyulph grave,
 And then his master's tale did tell,
 And then for counsel crave.
 The man of years mused long and deep,
 Of time's lost treasures taking keep,
 And then, as rousing from a sleep,
 His solemn answer gave.

IX

'That maid is born of middle earth
 And may of man be won,
 Though there have glided since her birth 140
 Five hundred years and one.
 But where 's the knight in all the north
 That dare the adventure follow forth,
 So perilous to knightly worth,
 In the valley of Saint John ?
 Listen, youth, to what I tell,
 And bind it on thy memory well;
 Nor muse that I commence the rhyme
 Far distant mid the wrecks of time.
 The mystic tale by bard and sage 150
 Is handed down from Merlin's age.

X

LYULPH'S TALE

'King Arthur has ridden from merry Carlisle

When Pentecost was o'er:
 He journeyed like errant-knight the while,
 And sweetly the summer sun did smile
 On mountain, moss, and moor.
 Above his solitary track
 Rose Glaramara's ridgy back,
 Amid whose yawning gulfs the sun
 Cast umbered radiance red and dun, 160
 Though never sunbeam could discern
 The surface of that sable tarn.
 In whose black mirror you may spy
 The stars while noontide lights the sky.
 The gallant king he skirted still
 The margin of that mighty hill;
 Rock upon rocks incumbent hung,
 And torrents, down the gullies flung,
 Joined the rude river that brawled on,
 Recoiling now from crag and stone, 170
 Now diving deep from human ken,
 And raving down its darksome glen.
 The monarch judged this desert wild,
 With such romantic ruin piled,
 Was theatre by Nature's hand
 For feat of high achievement planned.

XI

'O, rather he chose, that monarch bold,
 On venturesome quest to ride
 In plate and mail by wood and wold
 Than, with ermine trapped and cloth of 180
 gold,
 In princely bower to bide;
 The bursting crash of a foeman's spear,
 As it shivered against his mail,
 Was merrier music to his ear
 Than courtier's whispered tale:
 And the clash of Caliburn more dear,
 When on the hostile casque it rang,
 Than all the lays
 To the monarch's praise
 That the harpers of Reged sung. 190
 He loved better to rest by wood or river
 Than in bower of his bride, Dame Guen-ever,
 For he left that lady so lovely of cheer
 To follow adventures of danger and fear;
 And the frank-hearted monarch full little did wot
 That she smiled in his absence on brave Lancelot.

XII

Till over down and dell
 The more broad and deeper fell;
 Ligh around the mountain's head
 Streams of purple and gold and
 red, 200
 The base, unblest by beam,
 The black rocks and roared the realm.
 The king his way pursued
 Threlkeld's waste and wood,
 His course obliquely shone
 The valley of SAINT JOHN,
 Spring to the western sky
 Lingerer sunbeams love to lie.
 And to feel those beams again,
 He drew up his charger's rein; 210
 The outlet raised he screened his sight,
 And with the level light,
 Beneath his glove of mail
 At his ease the lovely vale,
 Against the sun his armor bright
 Ruddy like the beacon's light.

XIII

A by many a lofty hill,
 The dale lay smooth and still,
 In its verdant bosom led,
 The brooklet found its bed. 220
 Most of the vale a mound
 With airy turrets crowned,
 And rampire's circling bound,
 Mighty keep and tower;
 Some primeval giant's hand
 The massive walls had planned,
 Rous bulwark to withstand Ious Nimrod's power.
 The moated entrance slung,
 The slanted drawbridge trembling
 Sing, 230
 Lous of a foe;
 Of oak, as iron hard,
 The studded, cleuched, and barred,
 The aged portcullis, joined to guard
 Loomy pass below.
 The gray walls no banners crowned,
 The watchtower's airy round
 The er stood his horn to sound,
 The beside the bridge was found,
 The Gothic gateway frowned 240
 And neither bill nor bow.

XIV

The castle's gloomy pride,
 The round did Arthur ride

Three times; nor living thing he spied,
 Nor heard a living sound,
 Save that, awakening from her dream,
 The owlet now began to scream
 In concert with the rushing stream
 That washed the battled mound.
 He lighted from his goodly steed, 250
 And he left him to graze on bank and mead;
 And slowly he climbed the narrow way
 That reached the entrance grim and gray,
 And he stood the outward arch below,
 And his bugle-horn prepared to blow
 In summons blithe and bold,
 Deeming to rouse from iron sleep
 The guardian of this dismal keep,
 Which well he guessed the hold
 Of wizard stern, or goblin grim, 260
 Or pagan of gigantic limb,
 The tyrant of the wold.

XV

The ivory bugle's golden tip
 Twice touched the monarch's manly lip,
 And twice his hand withdrew. —
 Think not but Arthur's heart was good!
 His shield was crossed by the blessed rood:
 Had a pagan host before him stood,
 He had charged them through and
 through;
 Yet the silence of that ancient place 270
 Sunk on his heart, and he paused a space
 Ere yet his horn he blew.
 But, instant as its larum rung,
 The castle gate was open flung,
 Portcullis rose with crashing groan
 Full harshly up its groove of stone;
 The balance-beams obeyed the blast,
 And down the trembling drawbridge cast;
 The vaulted arch before him lay
 With nought to bar the gloomy way, 280
 And onward Arthur paced with hand
 On Caliburn's resistless brand.

XVI

A hundred torches flashing bright
 Dispelled at once the gloomy night
 That loured along the walls,
 And showed the king's astonished sight
 The inmates of the halls.
 Nor wizard stern, nor goblin grim,
 Nor giant huge of form and limb,
 Nor heathen knight, was there; 290
 But the cressets which odors flung aloft
 Showed by their yellow light and soft
 A band of damsels fair.

I have seen many a knight
In armor bright and gay,
Who in the field of battle
Have won a glorious day;
But never yet I saw one
Who in the heart of man
Had such a noble passion
For a fair maid's hand.

And when I saw the king
Who in the hall of state
Sat on his throne of gold,
And saw the queen beside
Who in her robes of blue
Sat on her throne of gold,
I thought that all the king
And all the queen were one.

For when I saw the king
Who in the hall of state
Sat on his throne of gold,
And saw the queen beside
Who in her robes of blue
Sat on her throne of gold,
I thought that all the king
And all the queen were one.

And when I saw the king
Who in the hall of state
Sat on his throne of gold,
And saw the queen beside
Who in her robes of blue
Sat on her throne of gold,
I thought that all the king
And all the queen were one.

III

For when I saw the king
Who in the hall of state
Sat on his throne of gold,
And saw the queen beside
Who in her robes of blue
Sat on her throne of gold,
I thought that all the king
And all the queen were one.

For when I saw the king
Who in the hall of state
Sat on his throne of gold,
And saw the queen beside
Who in her robes of blue
Sat on her throne of gold,
I thought that all the king
And all the queen were one.

For when I saw the king
Who in the hall of state
Sat on his throne of gold,
And saw the queen beside
Who in her robes of blue
Sat on her throne of gold,
I thought that all the king
And all the queen were one.

XXI

dy sate the monarch by,
 her turn abashed and shy,
 th indifference seemed to hear
 he whispered in her ear.
 ring modest was and fair,
 dows of constraint were there owed an over-cautious care
 inward thought to hide;
 she pause in full reply, 400
 ; cast down her large dark eye, eked the soft voluptuous sigh
 heaved her bosom's pride.
 symptoms these, but shepherds
 know
 t the mid-day sun shall glow
 the mist of morning sky;
 the wily monarch guessed is assumed restraint expressed dent passions in the breast ventured to the eye. 410
 ze pressed while beakers rang,
 onidens laughed and minstrels sang, closer to her ear —
 y pursue the common tale?
 refore show how knights prevail
 a ladies dare to hear?
 refore trace from what slight cause
 ve one tyrant passion draws,
 mastering all within,
 lives the man that has not tried 420
 irth can into folly glide
 folly into sin!

CANTO SECOND

WULPH'S TALE CONTINUED

I

ER day, another day,
 t another, glides away!
 ton stern, the pagan Dane,
 on Britain's shores again.
 of Christendom the flower,
 tering in a lady's bower;
 n that foemen wont to fear
 but to wake the Cumbrian deer,
 liburn, the British pride,
 aeless by a lover's side. 10

II

er day, another day,
 t another, glides away.
 plans in pleasure drowned,

He thinks not of the Table Round;
 In lawless love dissolved his life,
 He thinks not of his beauteous wife:
 Better he loves to snatch a flower
 From bosom of his paramour
 Than from a Saxon knight to wrest
 The honors of his heathen crest; 20
 Better to wreath mid tresses brown
 The heron's plume her hawk struck down
 Than o'er the altar give to flow
 The banners of a Paynim foe.
 Thus week by week and day by day
 His life inglorious glides away;
 But she that soothes his dream with fear
 Beholds his hour of waking near.

III

'Much force have mortal charms to stay
 Our pace in Virtue's toilsome way; 30
 But Guendolen's might far outshine
 Each maid of merely mortal line.
 Her mother was of human birth,
 Her sire a Genie of the earth,
 In days of old deemed to preside
 O'er lovers' wiles and beauty's pride,
 By youths and virgins worshipped long
 With festive dance and choral song,
 Till, when the cross to Britain came,
 On heathen altars died the flame. 40
 Now, deep in Wastdale solitude,
 The downfall of his rights he rued,
 And born of his resentment heir,
 He trained to guile that lady fair,
 To sink in slothful sin and shame
 The champions of the Christian name.
 Well skilled to keep vain thoughts alive,
 And all to promise, nought to give,
 The timid youth had hope in store,
 The bold and pressing gained no more. 50
 As wildered children leave their home
 After the rainbow's arch to roam,
 Her lovers bartered fair esteem,
 Faith, fame, and honor, for a dream.

IV

'Her sire's soft arts the soul to tame
 She practised thus — till Arthur came;
 Then frail humanity had part,
 And all the mother claimed her heart.
 Forgot each rule her father gave,
 Sunk from a princess to a slave, 60
 Too late must Guendolen deplore,
 He that has all can hope no more!
 Now must she see her lover strain
 At every turn her feeble chain,

Watch to new-bind each knot and shrink
To view each fast-decaying link.
Art she invokes to Nature's aid,
Her vest to rose, her locks to braid;
Each varied pleasure heard her call,
The feast, the tourney, and the ball;
Her storied lore she next applies,
Taxing her mind to aid her eyes;
Now more than mortal wise and then
In female softness sink again;
Now captured with each wish complying,
With langued reluctance now denying;
Each charm she varied to retain
A varying heart — and all in vain!

V

Thus in the garden's narrow bound
Blanked by some rustic's noxious sound,
To him would the artist's skill provide
The limits of his genius to hide.
The walks, in labyrinth he weaves,
Shade after shade with skill combines
With many a varied flower-knot,
And roses and roses, decks the spot,
Temp'ring the lady's foot to stay
And linger on the lovely way —
Vain art! vain art! 'tis a fruitless ail!
At length we reach the bounding wall!
And, sick of flower and trim-dressed tree,
Long for rough glades and forest free.

VI

Three summer months had wended down
When Arthur's embarrassee came Sought of no beguilement and no throng;
Said all too long had been his stay,
And bade each man a hasty way,
Prisoners were to be summer men.
Must bear her knight from tournament.
She bemoaned slowly the while,
Her mind expressed in bitter smile
How and her eye fixed Arthur's mail
And all returned the saddened one,
Confronting with the messenger
The wrong he sought to mend.
He stated, A woman's words are fated,
And from her words he saved the maid;
The path she brought him to the wall;
The way that opened a view of pride;
The answer for his question passed
The language of her words was:

At her request a sign and look,
The hint the messenger's intention took.

Eager he spoke — "No, lady, no!
Deem not of British Arthur so,
Nor think he can deserter prove
To the dear pledge of mutual love.
I swear by sceptre and by sword,
As belted knight and Britain's lord,
That if a boy shall claim my care,
That boy is born a kingdom's heir;
But, if a maiden Fate allows,
To choose that mate a fitting spouse,
A summer-day in haste shall drive
My knights — the bravest knights alive —
And he, the best and bravest tried,
Shall Arthur's daughter claim for bride."
He spoke with voice resolved and high —
The lady deigned him not reply.

VIII

At dawn of morn ere on the break
His matins had a knight made
Or stirred his wing to brush away
A single dew-drop from the spray.
Ere yet a sunbeam through the mist
The castle-battlements had risen,
The gates revolved, the drawbridge falls,
And Arthur sallies from the walls.
Dashed his swift garb of Persia's dam,
And stem from spur to helmet plumed,
His Lyones stood tall proudly armed,
And joyful sighted women he led.
The mounted gave a passing sign
To gentleness and pleasures by,
When, to his astonished men
Appeared the form of Guinevere.

IX

Beyond the wicket wall she stood,
Attired the mistress of the wood,
Surrendered her then, her robes were art,
And with her hand she held her heart.
Her eyes were on him, her heart was on him,
And a soft smile upon her lip
"How good," she said, "and how good,
That we are met at this hour."
"How good," he said, "and how good,
That we are met at this hour."
"No," she said, "I am not," she said,
"But we are met at this hour."
"No," she said, "I am not," she said,
"But we are met at this hour."
"No," she said, "I am not," she said,
"But we are met at this hour."
"No," she said, "I am not," she said,
"But we are met at this hour."

And she, the messenger's intention took,
The hint the messenger's intention took.

X

courteous monarch bent him low stooping down from saddlebow,
 and the cup in act to drink.
 It escaped the goblet's brink —
 as liquid fire from hell,
 on the charger's neck it fell,
 flaming with agony and fright,
 bolted twenty feet upright —
 the peasant still can show the dint on his hoofs lighted on the flint. —
 In Arthur's hand the goblet flew, leaving a shower of fiery dew burned and blighted where it fell !
 The frantic steed rushed up the dell,
 whistled from the bow the reed ;
 bit nor rein could check his speed
 till he gained the hill ;
 his breath and sinew failed apace,
 reeling from the desperate race,
 he stood exhausted, still.
 The monarch, breathless and amazed,
 on the fatal castle gazed —
 the tower nor donjon could he spy,
 rising against the morning sky ;
 on the spot where once they frowned
 the lonely streamlet brawled around the fted knoll, where dimly shone
 the remnants of rock and rifted stone.
 Lying on this strange hap the while,
 the king wends back to fair Carlisle ;
 he cares that cumber royal sway
 the memory of the past away.

XI

Fifteen years and more were sped, brought new wreaths to Arthur's head.
 Five bloody fields with glory fought the Saxons to subjection brought :
 on, the mighty giant, slain
 in good brand, relieved Bretagne :
 Pictish Gillamore in fight Roman Lucius owned his might ;
 wide were through the world renowned
 the glories of his Table Round.
 The knight who sought adventurous fame
 he bold court of Britain came,
 all who suffered causeless wrong,
 a tyrant proud or faitour strong,
 at Arthur's presence to complain,
 there for aid implored in vain.

XII

thus the king with pomp and pride
 his solemn court at Whitsuntide,

And summoned prince and peer,
 All who owed homage for their land,
 Or who craved knighthood from his hand,
 Or who had succour to demand,
 To come from far and near.
 At such high tide were glee and game
 mingled with feats of martial fame,
 For many a stranger champion came
 In lists to break a spear ;
 And not a knight of Arthur's host,
 Save that he trode some foreign coast,
 But at this feast of Pentecost
 Before him must appear.
 Ah, minstrels ! when the Table Round
 Arose with all its warriors crowned,
 There was a theme for bards to sound
 In triumph to their string !
 Five hundred years are past and gone,
 But time shall draw his dying groan
 Ere he behold the British throne
 Begirt with such a ring !

XIII

' The heralds named the appointed spot,
 As Caerleon or Camelot,
 Or Carlisle fair and free.
 At Penrith now the feast was set,
 And in fair Eamont's vale were met
 The flower of chivalry.
 There Galaad sate with manly grace,
 Yet maiden meekness in his face ;
 There Morolt of the iron mace,
 And love-lorn Tristrem there ;
 And Dinadam with lively glance,
 And Lanval with the fairy lance,
 And Mordred with his look askance,
 Brunor and Bevidere.
 Why should I tell of numbers more ?
 Sir Cay, Sir Baumier, and Sir Bore,
 Sir Carodac the keen,
 The gentle Gawain's courteous lore,
 Hector de Mares and Pellinore,
 And Lancelot, that evermore
 Looked stolen-wise on the queen.

XIV

' When wine and mirth did most abound
 And harpers played their blithest round,
 A shrilly trumpet shook the ground
 And marshals cleared the ring ;
 A maiden on a palfrey white,
 Heading a band of damsels bright,
 Paced through the circle to alight
 And kneel before the king.
 Arthur with strong emotion saw

XIX

caracoled the steeds in air,
 Lunies and pennons wanted fair,
 around the lists so wide
 oply the champions ride.
 Arthur saw with startled eye
 rwer of chivalry march by,
 370 dward of the Christian creed, ngdom's shield in hour of need.
 he thought him of the woe
 from their civil conflict flow;
 380 Al he knew they would not part id was many a gallant heart.
 tly vow he gan to rue,
 yneth then apart he drew;
 his leading-staff resigned,
 ded caution grave and kind.

XX

u see'st, my child, as promise-bound,
 he trump for tourney sound.
 hon my warder as the queen
 npire of the martial scene;
 ark thou this: — as Beauty bright
 r star to valiant knight, er word his sword he draws,
 rest guerdon her applause,
 tle maid should never ask ghthood vain and dangerous task; 390 eauty's eyes should ever be e twin stars that soothe the sea, eauty's breath should whisper peace
 d the storm of battle cease.
 hee this lest all too far knights urge tourney into war.
 at the trumpet let them go,
 irly counter blow for blow; — plings these, who succor need azed helm or falling steed. 400
 yneth, when the strife grows
 warm
 reatens death or deadly harm,
 e entreats, thy king commands,
 rop the warder from thy hands.
 hon thy father with thy fate,
 not he choose thee fitting mate;
 it said through Gyneth's pride of Arthur's chaplet died."

XXI

nd and discontented glow
 dowed Gyneth's brow of snow; 410 put the warder by: — ve thy boon, my liege," she said,
 chattered down and limited,

Debased and narrowed for a maid
 Of less degree than I.
 No petty chief but holds his heir
 At a more honored price and rare
 Than Britain's King holds me!
 Although the sun-burned maid for dower
 Has but her father's rugged tower, 420
 His barren hill and lee."
 King Arthur swore, "By crown and sword,
 As belted knight and Britain's lord,
 That a whole summer's day should strive
 His knights, the bravest knights alive!"
 "Recall thine oath! and to her glen Poor Gyneth can return agen;
 Not on thy daughter will the stain
 That soils thy sword and crown remain.
 But think not she will e'er be bride 430
 Save to the bravest, proved and tried;
 Pendragon's daughter will not fear
 For clashing sword or splintered spear,
 Nor shrink though blood should flow;
 And all too well sad Guendolen
 Hath taught the faithlessness of men
 That child of hers should pity when Their meed they undergo."

XXII

'He frowned and sighed, the monarch
 bold: —
 "I give — what I may not withhold; 440
 For, not for danger, dread, or death,
 Must British Arthur break his faith.
 Too late I mark thy mother's art
 Hath taught thee this relentless part.
 I blame her not, for she had wrong,
 But not to these my faults belong.
 Use then the warder as thou wilt;
 But trust me that, if life be spilt,
 In Arthur's love, in Arthur's grace,
 Gyneth shall lose a daughter's place." 450
 With that he turned his head aside,
 Nor brooked to gaze upon her pride,
 As with the truncheon raised she sate
 The arbitress of mortal fate;
 Nor brooked to mark in ranks disposed
 How the bold champions stood opposed,
 For shrill the trumpet-flourish fell
 Upon his ear like passing bell!
 Then first from sight of martial fray
 Did Britain's hero turn away. 460

XXIII

'But Gyneth heard the clangor high
 As hears the hawk the partridge cry.
 O, blame her not! the blood was hers

That at the trumpet's summons stirs ! —
 And e'en the gentlest female eye
 Might the brave strife of chivalry
 Awhile untroubled view;
 So well accomplished was each knight
 To strike and to defend in fight,
 Their meeting was a goodly sight 470
 While plate and mail held true.
 The lists with painted plumes were strown,
 Upon the wind at random thrown,
 But helm and breastplate bloodless shone,
 It seemed their feathered crests alone
 Should this encounter rue.
 And ever, as the combat grows,
 The trumpet's cheery voice arose,
 Like lark's shrill song the flourish flows,
 Heard while the gale of April blows 480
 The merry greenwood through.

XXIV

'But soon to earnest grew their game,
 The spears drew blood, the swords struck
 flame,
 And, horse and man, to ground there
 came
 Knights who shall rise no more !
 Gone was the pride the war that graced,
 Gay shields were cleft and crests defaced,
 And steel coats riven and helms unbraced,
 And pennons streamed with gore.
 Gone too were fence and fair array, 490
 And desperate strength made deadly way
 At random through the bloody fray,
 And blows were dealt with headlong away,
 Unheeding where they fell;
 And now the trumpet's clamors seem
 Like the shrill sea-bird's wailing scream
 Heard o'er the whirlpool's gulfing stream,
 The sinking seaman's knell !

XXV

'Seemed in this dismal hour that Fate
 Would Camlan's ruin antedate, 500
 And spare dark Mordred's crime;
 Already gasping on the ground
 Lie twenty of the Table Round,
 Of obivalry the prime.
 Arthur in anguish tore away
 From head and beard his tresses gray,
 And sho, proud Gyneth, felt dismay
 And quaked with ruth and fear;
 But still she deemed her mother's shade
 Hung o'er the tumult, and forbade 510
 The sign that had the slaughter staid,
 And chid the rising tear.

Then Brunor, Taulas, Mador, fell,
 Helias the White, and Lionel,
 And many a champion more;
 Rochemont and Dinadam are down,
 And Ferrand of the Forest Brown
 Lies gasping in his gore.
 Vanoc, by mighty Morolt pressed
 Even to the confines of the list,
 Young Vanoc of the beardless face —
 Fame spoke the youth of Merlin's race —
 O'erpowered at Gyneth's footstool bled,
 His heart's-blood dyed her sandals red.
 But then the sky was overcast,
 Then howled at once a whirlwind's blast,
 And, rent by sudden throes,
 Yawned in mid lists the quaking earth,
 And from the gulf — tremendous birth ! —
 The form of Merlin rose.

XXVI

'Sternly the Wizard Prophet eyed
 The dreary lists with slaughter dyed,
 And sternly raised his hand : —
 "Madmen," he said, "your strife for
 bear !
 And thou, fair cause of mischief, hear
 The doom thy fates demand !
 Long shall close in stony sleep
 Eyes for ruth that would not weep;
 Iron lethargy shall seal
 Heart that pity scorned to feel. 520
 Yet, because thy mother's art
 Warped thine unsuspecting heart,
 And for love of Arthur's race
 Punishment is blent with grace,
 Thou shalt bear thy penance lone
 In the Valley of Saint John,
 And this weird shall overtake thee;
 Sleep until a knight shall wake thee,
 For feats of arms as far renowned
 As warrior of the Table Round. 530
 Long endurance of thy slumber
 Well may teach the world to number
 All their woes from Gyneth's pride,
 When the Red Cross champions died."

XXVII

'As Merlin speaks, on Gyneth's eye
 Slumber's load begins to lie;
 Fear and anger vainly strive
 Still to keep its light alive.
 Twice with effort and with pause
 O'er her brow her hand she draws;
 Twice her strength in vain she tries
 From the fatal chair to rise;

agic doom is spoken,
 ath must now be wroken.
 ark-fringed eyelids fall,
 each azure ball,
 n summer eyes
 l their dusky leaves.
 y baton of command
 down her sinking hand,
 alder droops her head;
 l and golden thread
 ve her locks to flow
 m and breast of snow.
 sly seemed she there,
 l in her ivory chair,
 igry sire repenting,
 n Merlin for relenting,
 ampions for her sake
 in the contest wake;
 omantic night
 ished from their sight.

XXVIII

ears her weird alone
 ey of Saint John;
 mbalance oft will seem,
 t a champion's dream,
 ry lot to plain
 his aid to burst her chain.
 wondrous tale was new her rescue drew,
 est, and south and north,
 iffy, Thames, and Forth.
 ough in vain the glen,
 castle could they ken;
 y time or tide,
 ry eye, descried.
 gil must be borne,
 ht in watching worn,
 of mortal powers
 those magic towers.
 evering few hopeless task withdrew read the dismal threat
 n the gloomy gate.
 raved the yawning door,
 few returned no more.
 e of time forgot,
 st is Gyneth's lot;
 deep as in the tomb
 d by the trump of doom.

END OF LYULPH'S TALE

I

s, my tale; for all too soon,
 omes the hour of noon.

Already from thy lofty dome
 Its courtly inmates 'gin to roam,
 And each, to kill the goodly day
 That God has granted them, his way
 Of lazy sauntering has sought;
 Lordlings and witlings not a few,
 Incapable of doing aught,
 Yet ill at ease with nought to do. 570
 Here is no longer place for me;
 For, Lucy, thou wouldst blush to see
 Some phantom fashionably thin,
 With limb of lath and kerchiefed chin,
 And lounging gape or sneering grin,
 Steal sudden on our privacy.
 And how should I, so humbly born,
 Endure the graceful spectre's scorn?
 Faith! ill, I fear, while conjuring wand
 Of English oak is hard at hand. 630

II

Or grant the hour be all too soon
 For Hessian boot and pantaloons,
 And grant the lounge seldom strays
 Beyond the smooth and gravelled maze,
 Laud we the gods that Fashion's train
 Holds hearts of more adventurous strain.
 Artists are hers who scorn to trace
 Their rules from Nature's boundless grace,
 But their right paramount assert
 To limit her by pedant art, 640
 Damning whate'er of vast and fair
 Exceeds a canvas three feet square.
 This thicket, for their gumption fit,
 May furnish such a happy bit.
 Bards too are hers, wont to recite
 Their own sweet lays by waxen light,
 Half in the salver's tangle drowned,
 While the chasse-casse glides around;
 And such may hither secret stray
 To labor an extempore: 650
 Or sportsman with his boisterous hollo
 May here his wiser spaniel follow,
 Or stage-struck Juliet may presume
 To choose this bower for tiring-room;
 And we alike must shun regard
 From painter, player, sportsman, bard.
 Insects that skim in fashion's sky,
 Wasp, blue-bottle, or butterfly,
 Lucy, have all alarms for us,
 For all can hum and all can buzz. 660

III

But O, my Lucy, say how long
 We still must dread this trifling throng,
 And stoop to hide with coward art
 The genuine feelings of the heart!

No parents thine whose just command
Should rule their child's obedient hand;
Thy guardians with contending voice
Press each his individual choice.
And which is Lucy's? — Can it be
That puny fop, trimmed cap-a-pee, 670
Who loves in the saloon to show
The arms that never knew a foe;
Whose sabre trails along the ground,
Whose legs in shapeless boots are drowned;
A new Achilles, sure — the steel
Fled from his breast to fence his heel;
One, for the simple manly grace
That wont to deck our martial race,
Who comes in foreign trashery
Of tinkling chain and spur, 680
A walking haberdashery
Of feathers, lace, and fur:
In Rowley's antiquated phrase,
Horse-milliner of modern days?

IV

Or is it he, the wordy youth,
So early trained for statesman's
part,
Who talks of honor, faith and truth,
As themes that he has got by heart;
Whose ethics Chesterfield can teach, 690
Whose logic is from Single-speech;
Who scorns the meanest thought to vent
Save in the phrase of Parliament;
Who, in a tale of cat and mouse,
Calls 'order,' and 'divides the house,'
Who 'craves permission to reply,'
Whose 'noble friend is in his eye,'
Whose loving tender some have reckoned
A motion you should gladly second?

V

What, neither? Can there be a third,
To such resistless swains preferred? — 700
O why, my Lucy, turn aside
With that quick glance of injured pride?
Forgive me, love, I cannot bear
That altered and resentful air.
Were all the wealth of Russel mine
And all the rank of Howard's line,
All would I give for leave to dry
That dew-drop trembling in thine eye.
Think not I fear such fops can wile
From Lucy more than careless smile; 710
But yet if wealth and high degree
Give gilded counters currency,
Must I not fear when rank and birth

Stamp the pure ore of genuine worth?
Nobles there are whose martial fires
Rival the fame that raised their sires,
And patriots, skilled through storm
fate
To guide and guard the reeling state.
Such, such there are — If such should come,
Arthur must tremble and be dumb,
Self-exiled seek some distant shore,
And mourn till life and grief are o'er

VI

What sight, what signal of alarm,
That Lucy clings to Arthur's arm?
Or is it that the rugged way
Makes Beauty lean on lover's stay?
O, no! for on the vule and brake
Nor sight nor sounds of danger wake,
And this trim sward of velvet green
Were carpet for the Fairy Queen.
That pressure slight was but to tell
That Lucy loves her Arthur well,
And fain would banish from his mind
Suspicious fear and doubt unkind.

VII

But wouldst thou bid the demons fly
Like mist before the dawning sky,
There is but one resistless spell —
Say, wilt thou guess or must I tell?
'T were hard to name in minstrel phrase
A landaulet and four blood-bays,
But hards agree this wizard band
Can but be bound in Northern land.
'T is there — nay, draw not back
hand! —

'T is there this slender finger round
Must golden amulet be bound,
Which, blessed with many a holy prayer,
Can change to rapture lovers' care,
And doubt and jealousy shall die,
And fears give place to ecstasy.

VIII

Now, trust me, Lucy, all too long
Has been thy lover's tale and song.
O, why so silent, love, I pray?
Have I not spoke the livelong day?
And will not Lucy deign to say
One word her friend to bless?
I ask but one — a simple sound,
Within three little letters bound —
O, let the word be YES!

CANTO THIRD

INTRODUCTION

I

I, long wooed, and lately won,
 Lost hope, and now mine own I
 In this rude and Alpine glen
 My favorite haunts again?
 In semblance we can trace,
 'Tis of every softer grace,
 Though warrior's brow may bear
 To a sister fair.
 Divided our Highland host
 Wild pass on foot be crossed, 10
 And Ben-Cruach's mighty base
 In slow steeds and lingering
 And
 Old carle, with Scottish pride
 His glen and mountains wide;
 Bears for nature's face,
 The woman's lovely grace.
 In mean degree we find
 Scot's observing mind;
 In chariot nor the train
 Of vulgar wonder gain, 20
 Old Allan would expound
 To praise the Celtic sound,
 Doffed and bow applied
 To my bonny bride;
 She blushed beneath his eye,
 And cautious, shrewd and sly.

II

him. — Now, ere we lose,
 The vale, the distant views,
 O my love! look back once
 On
 On lake's retiring shore. 30
 Both breast the shadows seem
 As in a morning dream,
 The slumberer is aware
 And all the vision's air:
 Yonder liquid lawn,
 Bright reflection drawn,
 The shaggy mountains lie,
 The rocks, distinct the sky;
 The clouds so plain we note
 Might count each dappled spot: 40
 And we admire, yet know
 Is all delusive show.
 As of bliss would Arthur draw
 His Lucy's form he saw,
 And sickened as he drew,
 They could e'er prove true!

III

But, Lucy, turn thee now to view
 Up the fair glen our destined way:
 The fairy path that we pursue,
 Distinguished but by greener hue, 50
 Winds round the purple brae,
 While Alpine flowers of varied dye
 For carpet serve or tapestry.
 See how the little runnels leap
 In threads of silver down the steep
 To swell the brooklet's moan!
 Seems that the Highland Naiad grieves,
 Fantastic while her crown she weaves
 Of rowan, birch, and alder leaves,
 So lovely and so lone. 60
 There's no illusion there; these flowers,
 That wailing brook, these lovely bowers,
 Are, Lucy, all our own;
 And, since thine Arthur called thee wife,
 Such seems the prospect of his life,
 A lovely path on-winding still
 By gurgling brook and sloping hill.
 'Tis true that mortals cannot tell
 What waits them in the distant dell;
 But be it hap or be it harm, 70
 We tread the pathway arm in arm.

IV

And now, my Lucy, wot'st thou why
 I could thy bidding twice deny,
 When twice you prayed I would again
 Resume the legendary strain
 Of the bold knight of Triermain?
 At length you peevish vow you swore
 That you would sue to me no more,
 Until the minstrel fit drew near
 And made me prize a listening ear. 80
 But, loveliest, when thou first didst pray
 Continuance of the knightly lay,
 Was it not on the happy day
 That made thy hand mine own?
 When, dazzled with mine ecstasy,
 Nought past, or present, or to be,
 Could I or think on, hear, or see,
 Save, Lucy, thee alone!
 A giddy draught my rapture was
 As ever chemist's magic gas. 90

V

Again the summons I denied
 In yon fair capital of Clyde:
 My harp — or let me rather choose
 The good old classic form — my Muse —
 For harp's an over-scutched phrase,
 Worn out by bards of modern days —

1. The first part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

2. The second part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

3. The third part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

4. The fourth part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

5. The fifth part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

6. The sixth part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

7. The seventh part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

8. The eighth part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

9. The ninth part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

10. The tenth part of the document is a list of names and addresses, which appears to be a directory or a list of contacts. The names are written in a cursive script, and the addresses are listed below them.

1. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)
 2. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)
 3. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)
 4. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)
 5. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)
 6. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)
 7. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)
 8. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)
 9. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)
 10. Amphispiza bilineata (Aud.)

1000

1. The ... .. the ...
 2. ... ..
 3. ... ..
 4. ... ..
 5. ... ..
 6. ... ..
 7. ... ..
 8. ... ..
 9. ... ..
 10. ... ..
 11. ... ..
 12. ... ..
 13. ... ..
 14. ... ..
 15. ... ..
 16. ... ..
 17. ... ..
 18. ... ..
 19. ... ..
 20. ... ..
 21. ... ..
 22. ... ..
 23. ... ..
 24. ... ..
 25. ... ..
 26. ... ..
 27. ... ..
 28. ... ..
 29. ... ..
 30. ... ..
 31. ... ..
 32. ... ..
 33. ... ..
 34. ... ..
 35. ... ..
 36. ... ..
 37. ... ..
 38. ... ..
 39. ... ..
 40. ... ..
 41. ... ..
 42. ... ..
 43. ... ..
 44. ... ..
 45. ... ..
 46. ... ..
 47. ... ..
 48. ... ..
 49. ... ..
 50. ... ..
 51. ... ..
 52. ... ..
 53. ... ..
 54. ... ..
 55. ... ..
 56. ... ..
 57. ... ..
 58. ... ..
 59. ... ..
 60. ... ..
 61. ... ..
 62. ... ..
 63. ... ..
 64. ... ..
 65. ... ..
 66. ... ..
 67. ... ..
 68. ... ..
 69. ... ..
 70. ... ..
 71. ... ..
 72. ... ..
 73. ... ..
 74. ... ..
 75. ... ..
 76. ... ..
 77. ... ..
 78. ... ..
 79. ... ..
 80. ... ..
 81. ... ..
 82. ... ..
 83. ... ..
 84. ... ..
 85. ... ..
 86. ... ..
 87. ... ..
 88. ... ..
 89. ... ..
 90. ... ..
 91. ... ..
 92. ... ..
 93. ... ..
 94. ... ..
 95. ... ..
 96. ... ..
 97. ... ..
 98. ... ..
 99. ... ..
 100. ... ..
 101. ... ..
 102. ... ..
 103. ... ..
 104. ... ..
 105. ... ..
 106. ... ..
 107. ... ..
 108. ... ..
 109. ... ..
 110. ... ..
 111. ... ..
 112. ... ..
 113. ... ..
 114. ... ..
 115. ... ..
 116. ... ..
 117. ... ..
 118. ... ..
 119. ... ..
 120. ... ..
 121. ... ..
 122. ... ..
 123. ... ..
 124. ... ..
 125. ... ..
 126. ... ..
 127. ... ..
 128. ... ..
 129. ... ..
 130. ... ..
 131. ... ..
 132. ... ..
 133. ... ..
 134. ... ..
 135. ... ..
 136. ... ..
 137. ... ..
 138. ... ..
 139. ... ..
 140. ... ..
 141. ... ..
 142. ... ..
 143. ... ..
 144. ... ..
 145. ... ..
 146. ... ..
 147. ... ..
 148. ... ..
 149. ... ..
 150. ... ..
 151. ... ..
 152. ... ..
 153. ... ..
 154. ... ..
 155. ... ..
 156. ... ..
 157. ... ..
 158. ... ..
 159. ... ..
 160. ... ..
 161. ... ..
 162. ... ..
 163. ... ..
 164. ... ..
 165. ... ..
 166. ... ..
 167. ... ..
 168. ... ..
 169. ... ..
 170. ... ..
 171. ... ..
 172. ... ..
 173. ... ..
 174. ... ..
 175. ... ..
 176. ... ..
 177. ... ..
 178. ... ..
 179. ... ..
 180. ... ..
 181. ... ..
 182. ... ..
 183. ... ..
 184. ... ..
 185. ... ..
 186. ... ..
 187. ... ..
 188. ... ..
 189. ... ..
 190. ... ..
 191. ... ..
 192. ... ..
 193. ... ..
 194. ... ..
 195. ... ..
 196. ... ..
 197. ... ..
 198. ... ..
 199. ... ..
 200. ... ..
 201. ... ..
 202. ... ..
 203. ... ..
 204. ... ..
 205. ... ..
 206. ... ..
 207. ... ..
 208. ... ..
 209. ... ..
 210. ... ..
 211. ... ..
 212. ... ..
 213. ... ..
 214. ... ..
 215. ... ..
 216. ... ..
 217. ... ..
 218. ... ..
 219. ... ..
 220. ... ..
 221. ... ..
 222. ... ..
 223. ... ..
 224. ... ..
 225. ... ..
 226. ... ..
 227. ... ..
 228. ... ..
 229. ... ..
 230. ... ..
 231. ... ..
 232. ... ..
 233. ... ..
 234. ... ..
 235. ... ..
 236. ... ..
 237. ... ..
 238. ... ..
 239. ... ..
 240. ... ..
 241. ... ..
 242. ... ..
 243. ... ..
 244. ... ..
 245. ... ..
 246. ... ..
 247. ... ..
 248. ... ..
 249. ... ..
 250. ... ..
 251. ... ..
 252. ... ..
 253. ... ..
 254. ... ..
 255. ... ..
 256. ... ..
 257. ... ..
 258. ... ..
 259. ... ..
 260. ... ..
 261. ... ..
 262. ... ..
 263. ... ..
 264. ... ..
 265. ... ..
 266. ... ..
 267. ... ..
 268. ... ..
 269. ... ..
 270. ... ..
 271. ... ..
 272. ... ..
 273. ... ..
 274. ... ..
 275. ... ..
 276. ... ..
 277. ... ..
 278. ... ..
 279. ... ..
 280. ... ..
 281. ... ..
 282. ... ..
 283. ... ..
 284. ... ..
 285. ... ..
 286. ... ..
 287. ... ..
 288. ... ..
 289. ... ..
 290. ... ..
 291. ... ..
 292. ... ..
 293. ... ..
 294. ... ..
 295. ... ..
 296. ... ..
 297. ... ..
 298. ... ..
 299. ... ..
 300. ... ..
 301. ... ..
 302. ... ..
 303. ... ..
 304. ... ..
 305. ... ..
 306. ... ..
 307. ... ..
 308. ... ..
 309. ... ..
 310. ... ..
 311. ... ..
 312. ... ..
 313. ... ..
 314. ... ..
 315. ... ..
 316. ... ..
 317. ... ..
 318. ... ..
 319. ... ..
 320. ... ..
 321. ... ..
 322. ... ..
 323. ... ..
 324. ... ..
 325. ... ..
 326. ... ..
 327. ... ..
 328. ... ..
 329. ... ..
 330. ... ..
 331. ... ..
 332. ... ..
 333. ... ..
 334. ... ..
 335. ... ..
 336. ... ..
 337. ... ..
 338. ... ..
 339. ... ..
 340. ... ..
 341. ... ..
 342. ... ..
 343. ... ..
 344. ... ..
 345. ... ..
 346. ... ..
 347. ... ..
 348. ... ..
 349. ... ..
 350. ... ..

1. The first step is to identify the main topic of the document.
 2. The second step is to identify the main purpose of the document.
 3. The third step is to identify the main audience of the document.
 4. The fourth step is to identify the main message of the document.
 5. The fifth step is to identify the main conclusion of the document.

and were investigated both in the low flying and high flying and
the

the dwelling of his aristocratic he did not find it all there as he, the author of "The Vase" (written in an earlier style in 1888) had not yet just (written) then the smaller place at which he had his home was a small well.

88

2. up to 1000 feet and 11 in. diameter.
N. side of the mountain the Washington structure.

I attended a lecture on the subject of the life of the in the afternoon and was very much interested in the lecture given by the Rev. Mr. [unclear]
The lecture was very interesting and was well attended.

Kept the old dream for
 Which I had not forgotten.
 And then to at last see
 That I had to be done
 It was a final deception all,
 And I was left to find

Expands the glowing eye
 When, gazing on the smoking fire,
 And work, and battlement, and spire
 In the red gulf we spy
 Far, seen by moon of middle night,
 Or by the blaze of noon-tide bright,
 Or by the dawn of morning light,
 Or evening's western flame,
 In every tide, at every hour,
 In mist, in sunshine, and in shower,
 The rocks remained the same

IV

(11) he traced the charmed mound.
(12) climbed its crest or passed it round.

Yet nothing might expect,
Save that the wings so much faded,
A distance would resemble wild
For a rough bottom here
Yet still has such the warmest beam,
Kindly here in space, can warmest rays
And smile, but a far off
Know he is the water in the
And, when the evening sun is still
The water is warm and
The bottom, that is not the same,

is Ave and his Creed,
every saint at need
to burst his spell.

V

The moon her orb has hid
lled to a silver thread,
in middle heaven,
its curve careering fast fury of the blast
night clouds are driven.
let raved, for on the hills
d showers had swoln the rills in the torrents came;
the distant thunder dread,
ent o'er the vale was spread of lightning flame.
within his mountain cave —
step the storm durst brave — meditation gave cultry of soul,
l by distant torrent sound
ad winds that whistled round, thoughts in musing drowned
n slumber stole.

VI

It was heard a heavy sound — strange and fearful there to hear, esert hills where leagues around ut the goresock and the deer.
g from his couch of fern,
heard in clangor stern
ep and solemn swell,
oes in measured tone it spoke,
proud minster's pealing clock
s larum-bell.
ught was Roland's first when ep wilderness the knell
e startled ear?
warrior were I loath,
I hold my minstrel troth —
thought of fear.

VII

was the mingled thrill
ad that momentary chill,
e's keen wish was there,
Hope, and Valor high,
roud glow of Chivalry
rned to do and dare.
n the cave the warrior rushed,
he mountain-voice was hushed
swered to the knell;

For long and far the unwonted sound,
Eddying in echoes round and round,
Was tossed from fell to fell;
And Glaramara answer flung,
And Grisdale-pike responsive rung,
And Legbert heights their echoes swung
As far as Derwent's dell.

VIII

Forth upon trackless darkness gazed
The knight, bedeaftened and amazed,
Till all was hushed and still,
Save the swoln torrent's sullen roar,
And the night-blast that wildly bore
Its course along the bill.
Then on the northern sky there came
A light as of reflected flame,
And over Legbert-head,
As if by magic art controlled,
A mighty meteor slowly rolled
Its orb of fiery red;
Thou wouldst have thought some demon dire
Came mounted on that car of fire
To do his errand dread.
Far on the sloping valley's course,
On thicket, rock, and torrent hoarse,
Shingle and Seræ, and Fell and Force,
A dusky light arose:
Displayed, yet altered was the scene;
Dark rock, and brook of silver sheen,
Even the gay thicket's summer green,
In bloody tincture glows.

IX

De Vaux had marked the sunbeams set
At eve upon the coronet
Of that enchanted mound,
And seen but crags at random flung,
That, o'er the brawling torrent hung,
In desolation frowned.
What sees he by that meteor's lour? —
A bannered castle, keep, and tower
Return the lurid gleam,
With battled walls and buttress fast,
And barbican and ballium vast,
And airy flanking towers that cast
Their shadows on the stream.
'T is no deceit! distinctly clear
Cronell and parapet appear,
While o'er the pile that meteor drear
Makes momentary pause;
Then forth its solemn path it drew,
And fainter yet and fainter grew
Those gloomy towers upon the view,
As its wild light withdraws.

X

Forth from the cave did Roland rush, O'er crag and stream, through brier and bush;

Yet far he had not sped
Ere sunk was that portentous light
Behind the hills and utter night
Was on the valley spread.
He paused perforce and blew his horn,
And, on the mountain-echoes borne,
Was heard an answering sound, 180
A wild and lonely trumpet note, —
In middle air it seemed to float
High o'er the battled mound;
And sounds were heard as when a guard
Of some proud castle, holding ward,
Pass forth their nightly round.
The valiant Knight of Triermaln
Rung forth his challenge-blast again,
But answer came there none;
And mid the mingled wind and rain 190
Darkling he sought the vale in vain,
Until the dawning shone;
And when it dawned that wondrous sight

Distinctly seen by meteor light,
It all had passed away!
And that enchanted mount once more
A pile of granite fragments bore
As at the close of day.

XI

Steeled for the deed, De Vaux's heart
Scorned from his vent'rous quest to 200
part

He walks the vale once more;
But only sees by night or day
That shattered pile of rocks so gray,
Hears but the torrent's roar:
Till when, through hills of azure borne,
The moon renewed her silver horn,
Just at the time her waning ray
Had faded in the dawning day,
A summer mist arose;
Adown the vale the vapors float, 210
And cloudy undulations moat
That tufted mound of mystic note,
As round its base they close.
And higher now the fleecy tide
Ascends its stern and shaggy side,
Until the airy billows hide
The rock's majestic isle;
It seemed a veil of filmy lawn,
By some fantastic fairy drawn
Around enchanted pile. 220

XII

The breeze came softly down the brook,
And, sighing as it blew,
The veil of silver mist it shook
And to De Vaux's eager look
Renewed that wondrous view.
For, though the loitering vapor braved
The gentle breeze, yet oft it waved
Its mantle's dewy fold;
And still when shook that filmy screen
Were towers and bastions dimly seen, 225
And Gothic battlements between
Their gloomy length unrolled.
Speed, speed, De Vaux, ere on thine eye
Once more the fleeting vision die! —
The gallant knight gave speed
As prompt and light as, when the hound
Is opening and the horn is wound,
Careers the hunter's steed.
Down the steep dell his course amain
Hath rivalled archer's shaft; 230
But ere the mound he could attain
The rocks their shapeless form regain,
And, mocking loud his labor vain,
The mountain spirits laughed.
Far up the echoing dell was borne
Their wild unearthly shout of scorn.

XIII

Wroth waxed the warrior. — 'Am I then Fooled by the enemies of men,
Like a poor hind whose homeward way
Is haunted by malicious fay? 235
Is Triermaln become your taunt,
De Vaux your scorn? False fiends, avaunt!
A weighty cartal-axe he bare;
The baleful blade so bright and square,
And the tough shaft of heben wood,
Were oft in Scottish gore imbued.
Backward his stately form he drew,
And at the rocks the weapon threw
Just where one crag's projected crest
Hung proudly balanced o'er the rest. 240
Hurled with main force the weapon's shock
Rent a huge fragment of the rock.
If by mere strength, 't were hard to tell,
Or if the blow dissolved some spell,
But down the headlong ruin came
With cloud of dust and flash of flame.
Down bank, o'er bush, its course was borne,
Crushed lay the copse, the earth was torn.
Till staid at length the ruin dread
Cumbered the torrent's rocky bed, 250

de the waters' high-swoln tide
her passage for its pride.

XIV

ceased that thunder Triermain
ed the mound's rude front again;
! the ruin had laid bare,
n the stone, a winding stair mossed and fractured steps might end
ans the summit to ascend;
whose aid the brave De Vaux
o scale these magic rocks, 280 soon a platform won the wild witchery to close,
three lances' length arose
Castle of Saint John!
ty phantom of the air,
eor-blazoned show was there;
ing splendor full and fair massive fortress shone.

XV

led high and proudly towered, by ponderous flankers, lowered 290
portal's gloomy way.
for six hundred years and more ngth had brooked the tempest's oar,
steemed emblems which it bore suffered no decay:
m the eastern battlement
t had made sheer descent,
own in recent ruin rent,
e mid torrent lay.
er the castle's brow sublime, 300
lt had passed away.
eless characters of yore,
e this stern inscription bore:

XVI

INSCRIPTION

ce waits the destined day,
h can clear the cumbered way.
e, who hast waited long,
! soul, of sinew strong,
ven to thee to gaze
pile of ancient days. 310
nortal builder's hand
during fabric planned;
d sigil, word of power,
he earth raised keep and tower.
o'er and pace it round,

Rampart, turret, battled mound.
Dare no more! To cross the gate
Were to tamper with thy fate;
Strength and fortitude were vain,
View it o'er — and turn again.' 320

XVII

'That would I,' said the warrior bold,
'If that my frame were bent and old,
And my thin blood dropped slow and cold
As icicle in thaw;
But while my heart can feel it dance
Blithe as the sparkling wine of France,
And this good arm wields sword or lance,
I mock these words of awe!'
He said; the wicket felt the sway
Of his strong hand and straight gave
way, 330
And with rude crash and jarring bray
The rusty bolts withdraw;
But o'er the threshold as he strode
And forward took the vaulted road,
An unseen arm with force amain
The ponderous gate flung close again,
And rusted bolt and bar
Spontaneous took their place once more
While the deep arch with sullen roar
Returned their surly jar. 340
'Now closed is the gin and the prey within,
By the Rood of Lanercost!
But he that would win the war-wolf's skin
May rue him of his boast.'
Thus muttering on the warrior went
By dubious light down steep descent.

XVIII

Unbarred, unlocked, unwatched, a port
Led to the castle's outer court:
There the main fortress, broad and tall,
Spread its long range of bower and hall 350
And towers of varied size,
Wrought with each ornament extreme
That Gothic art in wildest dream
Of fancy could devise;
But full between the warrior's way
And the main portal arch there lay
An inner moat;
Nor bridge nor boat
Affords De Vaux the means to cross
The clear, profound, and silent fosse. 360
His arms aside in haste he flings,
Cuirass of steel and hauberk rings,
And down falls helm and down the shield,
Rough with the dints of many a field.
Fair was his manly form and fair

XXII

strange the accents shrill
 vaulted roofs among,
 ere faint and still
 air-resounding song.
 e distant echoes roll,
 communed with his soul.
 rest I took this venturous

470 upon the rood

 stop nor turn nor rest,
 or for good.
 path too well I ween
 careful ranks between;
 armed 't is bootless hope and with fiends to cope —
 , what waits me there fire and fell despair? —
 tion let me try,
 howe'er I list, I die.
 faith and knightly fame;
 erjury and shame.
 th I hold my word!'
 drew his trusty sword,
 a banner from the wall,
 thus the fearful hall.

XXIII

wayward maiden threw arm with wild halloo!
 ; a tiger sprung — stward foe he flung aner to engage
 ; folds the brutal rage;
 d monster in mid air fiercely and so fair
 st and through spinal bone
 , blade bath sheerly gone.
 thren ramped and yelled,
 leash their rage withheld,
 , their ranks the dangerous

470 h swift the champion strode.

 llery's bound he drew,
 s open portal through;
 inst pursuit he flung
 go if the echoes rung!
 uring course he bore,
 with dying growl and roar,
 and loud hurra
 m his venturous way.

502

XXIV

! Our watch is done! 510
 more the tropic sun.

Pallid beams of northern day,
 Farewell, farewell! Hurra, hurra!

' Five hundred years o'er this cold glen Hath the pale sun come round agen;
 Foot of man till now hath ne'er
 Dared to cross the Hall of Fear.

' Warrior! thou whose dauntless heart
 Gives us from our ward to part,
 Be as strong in future trial 520
 Where resistance is denial.

' Now for Afric's glowing sky,
 Zwenga wide and Atlas high,
 Zaharak and Dahomay! —
 Mount the winds! Hurra, hurra!'

XXV

The wizard song at distance died,
 As if in ether borne astray,
 While through waste halls and chambers
 wide

The knight pursued his steady way
 Till to a lofty dome he came 530
 That flashed with such a brilliant flame
 As if the wealth of all the world
 Were there in rich confusion hurled.
 For here the gold in sandy heaps
 With duller earth incorporate sleeps;
 Was there in ingots piled, and there
 Coined badge of empery it bare;
 Yonder, huge bars of silver lay,
 Dimmed by the diamond's neighboring ray,

Like the pale moon in morning day; 540
 And in the midst four maidens stand,
 The daughters of some distant land.
 Their hue was of the dark-red dye
 That fringes oft a thunder sky;
 Their hands palmetto baskets bare,
 And cotton fillets bound their hair;
 Slim was their form, their mien was shy,

To earth they bent the humbled eye,
 Folded their arms, and suppliant kneeled,
 And thus their proffered gifts revealed. 550

XXVI

CHORUS

' See the treasures Merlin piled,
 Portion meet for Arthur's child.
 Bathe in Wealth's unbounded stream.
 Wealth that Avarice ne'er could dream!'

FIRST MAIDEN

'See these clots of virgin gold!
Severed from the sparry mould,
Nature's mystic alchemy
In the mine thus bade them lie;
And their latent sparkle can win
Kings to stoop and saints to sin.'

350

SECOND MAIDEN

'See these pearls that long have slept;
These were tears by Nanda wept
For the loss of Marinet
Till now to the silver shell
Transposed their tints have white
As the teeth of Amphitrite.'

THIRD MAIDEN

'Dew's fresher here delight?
Here's the sun's blinding light,
Here the emerald's fairy green,
And the topaz glows between,
Here the various hues unite
In the changeful chrysolite.'

370

FOURTH MAIDEN

'Loose these gems of poorer shine,
Loose them all, and loose of mine!
What! this glaze! I cannot Shed this cyphers with the hand
Mistaken, and Diamond's blaze
Blind the rash beholder's gaze.'

MOTHER

'Warrior, seize the splendid store;
Wield it, ere it's on mountains hoar!
We should not be in future story
Bran, Paro, thy perished glory.'

XXVII

Calmly and unconcerned the knight
Went forth the treasure bright -
'Oft the Madonna rose I saw
Beside the holy destined way,
For those bright halcyon days
When the last of glory had been;
And now streams of gold and gems
Were all I could afford to send
To those who sought a name and soul
So brave and true, and good and stout,
And who had been the best and truest Jesters of the world and the most
True and good, from the world
Be left unmoved the dawn of gold.

390

XXVIII

And now the morning sun was high,
De Vaux was weary, faint, and dry;
When, lo! a plashing sound he hears,
A glad some signal that he hears 400

Some frolic water-run:
And soon he reached a courtyard square
Where, dancing in the sultry air,
Tossed high aloft a fountain fair
Was sparkling in the sun.

On right and left a fair arcade
In long perspective view displayed
Alleys and bowers for sun or shade:

But full in front a door,
Low-browed and dark, seemed as it led 410

To the low dwelling of the dead
Whose memory was no more.

XXIX

Here stopped De Vaux at instant's space
To bathe his parched lips and face.

And marked with well-pleased eye,
Refracted on the fountain stream,
In rainbow hues the dazzling beam

(O that gay summer sky
His senses felt a mild control,
Like that which lull the weary soul.
From contemplation high
Relaxing when the ear receives
The music that the greenwood leaves
Make to the linnets' sigh.

420

XXX

And oft in such a dreamy mood
The half-shut eye can frame
Fair apparitions in the wood,
As if the Nymphs of field and flume
In gay procession came

Are these of such fantastic mould
Seen distant down the fair arcade,
Those maidens embowed in sister fold,
Who late in bashful distance staid
Now leaping from the greenwood shade.

430

Nearer the mimic chamberlain draw
And to a pair of scimitars
A pair stand doubtful now

At that old ruse of watching towers!
That seems to seek to please his ears,
By seems to tell us how 440

There has been of the golden glow
That came of Chancel's hostess
The white of slight diffusion flows
A tremulous fire of gay and true
Their limbs were fashioned fair and true

justest symmetry;
 studded with flowers, with odors
 sed,
 n ringlets reached the waist:
 pomp its gilding pale lent each shapely nail, 650
 irk sumah gave the eye
 d and more lustrous dye.
 as veil of misty lawn,
 disarrangement drawn
 n and bosom o'er,
 eye or tempt the touch,
 ty showed all too much — sh — yet promised more.

XXXI

ight, awhile delay,
 sung, 'thy toilsome way, 660 pay the duty due
 ster and to you.
 ice, over Fear,
 phant led thee here;
 at to us, for we
 to Love, are friends to thee.
 treasured gems have we
 on the bended knee,
 i boast nor arm nor heart
 agay or dart, 670
 rw each simple girl
 ad teeth of pearl;
 ers more you prize,
 find them in our eyes.

gentle warrior, stay,
 ening steal on day;
 ay! — in yonder bowers
 aid thy locks with flowers,
 feast and fill the wine,
 ear with sounds divine, 680
 dances till delight
 agnor, day to night.
 she you most approve
 ys that best you love,
 oasy couch shall spread,
 pillow, prop thy head,
 ary night be o'er —
 rior, wouldst thou more.
 ou more, fair warrior, — she
 Love and slave to thee.' 690

XXXII

old it for a crime
 l hero of my rhyme, xic look eet rebuke
 the heart or time;

As round the band of sirens trip,
 He kissed one damsel's laughing lip,
 And pressed another's proffered hand,
 Spoke to them all in accents bland,
 But broke their magic circle through; 700
 'Kind maids,' he said, 'adieu, adieu!
 My fate, my fortune, forward lies.'
 He said and vanished from their eyes;
 But, as he dared that darksome way,
 Still heard behind their lovely lay:
 'Fair Flower of Courtesy, depart!
 Go where the feelings of the heart
 With the warm pulse in concord move;
 Go where Virtue sanctions Love!'

XXXIII

Downward De Vaux through darksome ways 710
 And ruined vaults has gone,
 Till issue from their wildered maze
 Or safe retreat seemed none,
 And e'en the dismal path he strays
 Grew worse as he went on.
 For cheerful sun, for living air,
 Foul vapors rise and mine-fires glare,
 Whose fearful light the dangers showed
 That dogged him on that dreadful road.
 Deep pits and lakes of waters dun 720
 They showed, but showed not how to shun.
 These scenes of desolate despair,
 These smothering clouds of poisoned air,
 How gladly had De Vaux exchanged,
 Though 't were to face yon tigers ranged!
 Nay, soothful bards have said,
 So perilous his state seemed now
 He wished him under arbor bough
 With Asia's willing maid.
 When, joyful sound! at distance near 730
 A trumpet flourished loud and clear,
 And as it ceased a lofty lay
 Seemed thus to chide his lagging way.

XXXIV

'Son of Honor, theme of story,
 Think on the reward before ye!
 Danger, darkness, toil despise;
 'Tis Ambition bids thee rise.

'He that would her heights ascend,
 Many a weary step must wend;
 Hand and foot and knee he tries; 740
 Thus Ambition's minions rise.

'Lag not now, though rough the way,
 Fortune's mood brooks no delay;

Grasp the boon that's spread before ye,
Monarch's power and Conqueror's glory !'

It ceased. Advancing on the sound,
A steep ascent the wanderer found,
And then a turret stair:
Nor climbed he far its steepy round
Till fresher blew the air, 750
And next a welcome glimpse was given
That cheered him with the light of heaven.

At length his toil had won
A lofty hall with trophies dressed,
Where as to greet imperial guest
Four maidens stood whose crimson vest
Was bound with golden zone.

XXXV

Of Europe seemed the damsels all;
The first a nymph of lively Gaul
Whose easy step and laughing eye 760
Her borrowed air of awe belie;
The next a maid of Spain,
Dark-eyed, dark-haired, sedate yet bold;
White ivory skin and tress of gold
Her shy and bashful comrade told
For daughter of Almaine.
These maidens bore a royal robe,
With crown, with sceptre, and with globe,
Emblems of empire;
The fourth a space behind them stood, 770
And leant upon a harp in mood
Of minstrel ecstasy.
Of merry England she, in dress
Like ancient British Druidess,
Her hair an azure fillet bound,
Her graceful vesture swept the ground,
And in her hand displayed
A crown dais that fourth maiden hold,
But unadorned with gems and gold,
Of glossy laurel made. 780

XXXVI

At once to brave De Vaux knelt down
These foremost maidens three,
And proffered sceptre, robe, and crown,
Legendum and seignorie
Over many a region wide and fair,
Deceased, they said, for Arthur's heir:
But homage would be none —
'Rather,' he said, 'De Vaux would rule,
A warden of the Border-side
In plate and mail than robed in pride, 800
A monarch's empire own,
Rather, far rather, could he be

A free-born knight of England free
Than sit on despot's throne.'
So passed he on, when that fourth maid,
As starting from a trance,
Upon the harp her finger laid;
Her magic touch the chords obeyed,
Their soul awaked at once !

SONG OF THE FOURTH MAIDEN

'Quake to your foundations deep, 800
Stately towers, and bannered keep,
Bid your vaulted echoes moan,
As the dreaded step they own.

'Fiends, that wait on Merlin's spell,
Hear the foot-fall ! mark it well !
Spread your dusky wings abroad,
Bonne ye for your homeward road !

'It is His, the first who e'er
Dared the dismal Hall of Fear;
His, who hath the snares defied 810
Spread by Pleasure, Wealth, and Pride.

'Quake to your foundations deep,
Bastion huge, and turret steep !
Tremble, keep ! and totter, tower !
This is Gyneth's waking hour.'

XXXVII

Thus while she sung the venturous knight
Has reached a tower where milder light
Through crimson curtains fell;
Such softened shade the hall receives,
Her purple veil when twilight leaves 820
Upon its western swell.
That tower, the gazer to bewitch,
Had wondrous store of rare and rich
As e'er was seen with eye;
For there by magic skill, 'twas,
Form of each thing that living is
Was limned in proper dye.
All seemed to sleep — the timid hare
On fern, the stag upon his hair,
The eagle in her eyrie fair 830
Between the earth and sky.
But what of pictured rich and rare
Could win De Vaux's eye-glance, when,
Deep slumbering in the fatal chair,
He saw King Arthur's child !
Doubt and anger and dismay
From her brow had passed away,
Forgot was that fell morning-day,
For as she slept she smiled.

that the repentant Seer of many a hundred year
idle dreams beguiled.

XXXVIII

of maiden loveliness, childhood and 'twixt youth,
chair, that sylvan dress,
and ankles bare, express
ph's tale the truth.
her garment's hem
ood made purple gem,
arder of command
still her sleeping hand;
ark looks dishevelled flow
if pearl o'er breast of snow;
r the slumberer seems
aux impeached his dreams,
and void of might,
f her charms from sight.
awhile he stands,
rms and clasps his hands,
in his fitful joy,
ow he should destroy
during spell;
oo, when slowly rise
ed lids of Gyneth's eyes, ese eyes shall tell. — rge! Saint Mary! can it be will kindly look on me!

XXXIX

! the warrior kneels,
lovely hand he steals,
and soft to clasp —
order leaves her grasp;
g flashes, rolls the thunder!
rtles from her sleep,
ver, and trembles keep,
e castle-walls asunder!
frequent were the shocks, —
magic halls away; —
h their mystic rocks,
s of bold De Vaux
princess lay;
ree from magic power,
he the rose's flower
to the day;
l the champion's brows were ad
that Druidess had wound
reen laurel-bay.
as what remained of all of each enchanted hall,

840

The Garland and the Dame:
But where should warrior seek the meed 850
Due to high worth for daring deed
Except from LOVE and FAME!

850

860

CONCLUSION

I

MY Lucy, when the maid is won
The minstrel's task, thou know'st, is done;
And to require of bard
That to his dregs the tale should run
Were ordinance too hard.
Our lovers, briefly be it said,
Wedded as lovers wont to wed,
When tale or play is o'er;
Lived long and blest, loved fond and true,
And saw a numerous race renew 10
The honors that they bore.
Know too that when a pilgrim strays
In morning mist or evening maze
Along the mountain lone,
That fairy fortress often mooks
His gaze upon the castled rocks
Of the Valley of Saint John;
But never man since brave De Vaux
The charmed portal won.
'T is now a vain illusive show 20
That melts where'er the sunbeams glow,
Or the fresh breeze hath blown.

II

But see, my love, where far below
Our lingering wheels are moving slow,
The whiles, up-gazing still,
Our menials eye our steepy way,
Marvelling perchance what whim can stay
Our steps when eve is sinking gray
On this gigantic hill.
So think the vulgar — Life and time 30
Ring all their joys in one dull chime
Of luxury and ease;
And O, beside these simple knaves,
How many better born are slaves
To such coarse joys as these,
Dead to the nobler sense that glows
When nature's grander scenes unclose!
But, Lucy, we will love them yet,
The mountain's misty coronet,
The greenwood and the wold; 40
And love the more that of their maze
Adventure high of other days
By ancient bards is told,

Bringing perchance, like my poor tale,
Some moral truth in fiction's veil:
Nor love them less that o'er the hill
The evening breeze as now comes chill; —

My love shall wrap her warm,
And, fearless of the slippery way
While safe she trips the heathy brae,
Shall hang on Arthur's arm.

THE LORD OF THE ISLES

A POEM IN SIX CANTOS

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

When The Lord of the Isles was published, Scott wrote of it to Lady Abercorn: 'I think it is my last poetical venture, at least upon a large scale. I swear not, because I do not make any positive resolution, but I think I have written enough, and it is unlikely I shall change my opinion.' With his healthy mind, Scott was not likely to misread the signs of nature, or the movement which his intellectual interest was likely to take. When he wrote these words he had published Waverley, and was projecting Guy Mannering, and the wider range which fiction could take to include the experiences of life which most appealed to him was too evident to permit him ever to return to any considerable poetic effort.

As in the case of his earlier work, he drove two horses abreast and was at work alternately on this poem and on the novel, whose early draft he stumbled on at this time. The poem, indeed, had been projected earlier, — before Rokeby was written, — but in the final heat it was despatched with great rapidity, for, begun at Abbotsford in the autumn of 1814, it was ended at Edinburgh the 10th of December, and published January 2, 1815. 'It may be mentioned,' says the anonymous editor of the British Poets Edition, 'that those parts of the poem which were written at Abbotsford, were composed almost all in the presence of Sir Walter Scott's family, and many in that of casual visitors also: the original cottage which he then occupied not affording him any means of retirement. Neither conversation nor music seemed to disturb him.' When he was in the midst of his work, he wrote to Morritt: 'My literary tormentor is a certain Lord of the Isles, famed for his tyranny of yore, and not unjustly. I am bothering some tale of him I have had long by me into a sort of romance. I think you will like it: it is Scottified up to the and somehow I feel myself like the chiefs of the Rolliad, "who boast the tivo philabeg restored." I believe the one can cut in this loose garb are all as by you Saasenachs to the real agility, wearer, and not the brave, free, and independent character of his clothing. It is, in the real Highland fling, and no one is able to dance it but a native.' The poet this advertisement when it was printed.

ADVERTISEMENT

The Scene of this Poem lies, at first, Castle of Ardnish, on the coast of Argyll and, afterwards, in the Islands of Skye, Arran, and upon the coast of Ayrshire. It is laid near Stirling. The story opens in the spring of the year 1307, when Bruce, having been driven out of Scotland by the English and the Barons who adhered to that interest, returned from the Island of Ireland on the coast of Ireland, again to assert his claim to the Scottish crown. Many of the persons and incidents introduced are of historical celebrity. The authorities used are chiefly of the venerable Lord Hailes, as well as to be called the restorer of Scottish history by Bruce the restorer of Scottish Monarchy of Archdeacon Barbour; a correct edition of whose Metrical History of Robert Bruce, I trust, appear, under the care of my learned friend, the Rev. Dr. Jamieson.

ABBOTSFORD, 10th December, 1814.

The edition of 1833 had the following introduction, those passages being omitted which relate to The Bridal of Triermain and Harold the Dauntless, since they are put in connection with those poems.

INTRODUCTION

I could hardly have chosen a subject more popular in Scotland than anything connected with the Bruce's history, unless I had attempted that of Wallace. But I am decidedly in favour of a popular, or what is called a national, title, though well qualified to ensure men against loss, and clear their shelves of original impression, is rather apt to be tedious than otherwise to the reputation of author. He who attempts a subject of diminished popularity has not the privilege of keeping the enthusiasm of his audience; on the contrary, it is already awakened, and glows, may be, more ardently than that of the author self. In this case the warmth of the author is inferior to that of the party whom he addresses, who has therefore little chance of being in Bayes's phrase, 'elevated and surprised' that he has thought of with more enthusiasm than the writer. The sense of this risk, added to the consciousness of striving against a low tide, made the task of composing the proposed Poem somewhat heavy and hopeless; like the prize-fighter in As You Like It, as to wrestle for my reputation, and not get any advantage. In a most agreeable fore-voyage, which I have tried to incorporate in the Introduction to the new one of the Pirate. I visited, in social and friendly company, the coasts and islands of Scotland, and made myself acquainted with localities of which I meant to treat. But the voyage, which was in every other respect so profitable, was in its conclusion saddened by the loss of those strokes of fate which so often befall themselves with our pleasures. The accomplished and excellent person who had recommended to me the subject for The Lay of the Last Minstrel, (Harriet, Duchess of Buccleuch) and to whom I proposed to inscribe what I already suspected might be the close of my poetical labors, was unexpectedly removed from the world, which she seemed only to have visited for purposes of kindness and benevolence. It is needless to say how the author's feelings, or the composition of his trifling work, were affected by a circumstance which occasioned so many tears and so much sorrow. True it is, that The Lord of the Isles was concluded, unwillingly and in haste, under the painful feeling of one who has a task which must be finished, rather than with the ardor of one who endeavors to perform that task well. Although the Poem cannot be said to have made a favorable impression on the public, the sale of fifteen thousand copies enabled the Author to retreat from the field with the honors of war.

In the mean time, what was necessarily to be considered as a failure was much reconciled to my feelings by the success attending my attempt in another species of composition. Waverley had, under strict incognito, taken its flight from the press, just before I set out upon the voyage already mentioned; it had now made its way to popularity, and the success of that work and the volumes which followed was sufficient to have satisfied a greater appetite for applause than I have at any time possessed.

.....
 AMSTERDAM, April, 1830.

CANTO FIRST

AUTUMN departs — but still his mantle's fold
 Rests on the groves of noble Somerville,
 Beneath a shroud of russet drooped with gold
 Tweed and his tributaries mingle still;
 Hoarser the wind and deeper sounds the rill,
 Yet lingering notes of sylvan music swell,
 The deep-toned cushat and the redbreast shrill;
 And yet some tints of summer splendor tell
 When the broad sun sinks down on Ettrick's western fell.

Autumn departs — from Gala's fields no more
 Come rural sounds our kindred banks to cheer;
 Blent with the stream and gale that wafts it o'er,
 No more the distant reaper's mirth we hear.
 The last blithe shout hath died upon our ear,
 And harvest-home hath hushed the clanging wain,
 On the waste hill no forms of life appear,
 Save where, sad laggard of the autumnal strain,
 Some age-struck wanderer gleams few ears of scattered grain.

Deem'st thou these saddened scenes have pleasure still,
 Lov'st thou through Autumn's fading realms to stray,
 To see the heath-flower withered on the hill,

per with their silvery tone
 she loves yet fears to own.
 and on the harp-strings died
 ins of flattery and of pride;
 t, more low, more tender fell 100
 of love he bade them tell.

IV

Maid of Lorn ! the moments fly
 yet that maiden-name allow;
 maiden, wake ! the hour is nigh
 love shall claim a plighted vow.
 thy bosom's fluttering guest,
 pe, that soon shall fears remove,
 hee break the bonds of rest,
 ake thee at the call of Love !

Edith, wake ! in yonder bay 110
 any a galley gayly manned,
 the merry pibroch's play,
 the streamers' silken band.
 eftain's praise these pibrochs swell,
 crest is on these banners wove,
 the minstrel, dare not tell — idle must be read by Love !

V

er maiden train among,
 Lorn received the song, 115
 d the minstrel's pride had been her cold demeanor seen;
 pon her cheek awoke
 of pride when Flattery spoke,
 d their tenderest numbers bring responsive to the string.
 ' bad her maidens vied
 o deck the princely bride.
 t in dark-brown length arrayed,
 of 'Une, 't was thine to braid;
 va with meet reverence drew 130
 ght foot the silken shoe,
 the ankle's slender round
 ings of pearl fair Bertha wound ached Lochryan's depths within,
 usky still on Edith's skin.
 va, of experience old,
 ghtiest task — the mantle's fold an artful plait she tied the form it seemed to hide,
 a floor descending rolled 140
 of crimson blent with gold.

VI

here now so cold a maid,
 in beauty's pomp arrayed,

In beauty's proudest pitch of power,
 And conquest won — the bridal hour —
 With every charm that wins the heart,
 By Nature given, enhanced by Art,
 Could yet the fair reflection view
 In the bright mirror pictured true,
 And not one dimple on her cheek 150
 A telltale consciousness bespeak ? —
 Lives still such maid ? — Fair damsels, say,
 For further vouches not my lay
 Save that such lived in Britain's isle
 When Lorn's bright Edith scorned to smile.

VII

But Morag, to whose fostering care
 Proud Lorn had given his daughter fair,
 Morag, who saw a mother's aid
 By all a daughter's love repaid —
 Strict was that bond, most kind of all, 160
 Inviolable in Highland hall —
 Gray Morag sate a space apart,
 In Edith's eyes to read her heart.
 In vain the attendant's fond appeal
 To Morag's skill, to Morag's zeal;
 She marked her child receive their care,
 Cold as the image sculptured fair —
 Form of some sainted patroness —
 Which cloistered maids combine to dress;
 She marked — and knew her nursing's 170
 heart

In the vain pomp took little part.
 Wistful awhile she gazed — then pressed
 The maiden to her anxious breast
 In finished loveliness — and led
 To where a turret's airy head,
 Slender and steep and battled round,
 O'erlooked, dark Mull, thy mighty Sound,
 Where thwarting tides with mingled roar
 Part thy swarth hills from Morven's shore.

VIII

' Daughter,' she said, 'these seas behold, 180
 Round twice a hundred islands rolled,
 From Hirt that hears their northern roar
 To the green Hay's fertile shore;
 Or mainland turn where many a tower
 Owns thy bold brother's feudal power,
 Each on its own dark cape reclined
 And listening to its own wild wind,
 From where Mingarry sternly placed
 O'erawes the woodland and the waste, 185
 To where Dunstaffnage hears the raging
 Of Connal with its rocks engaging.
 Think'st thou amid this ample round

A single brow but thine has frowned,
To soothe this suspicious morn
Thine into the daughter of high Lorn
Impledge her spousal faith to wed
The hero of august Scotland?
Ronald, from many a hero sprung,
The fair, the valiant, and the young,
Lord of the Isles, whose lofty name
A thousand bards have given to fame,
The voice of monarchs, and allied
On equal terms with England's pride. —
From chieftain's tower to bondsman's
out.

Who hears the tale, and triumphs not?
The damsel does her best attire,
The abashed virgin has belated fire,
Joy! joy! each warrior's horn hath rung,
Joy! joy! each matin bell hath rung;
The holy priest says graceful mass,
Lord shouts each harp; galls-glass,
No mountain den holds untraced door
Of heart in dull of soul or gear,
But he hath sung his task o'er,
And claimed this morn for holy-tide;
Yet, ere the end of this joyful day,
Edith is not while all are gay.

IX

Perch'd Edith's soul came to her eye,
Remembrance checked the struggling sigh.
Her hurrying hand involuntarily
The burning tears of injured pride —
"Mourning, farewell! or lend thy peace
To swell my kindling impetuous lays;
Make to you make thy boast of power,
That they may waste a wandering hour
Telling of banners proudly borne,
Of pealing bell and bugle horn.
Oh, those more dear, of robes of price,
Gems and gold of rare device.
But thou, experienced as thou art,
Think it then with these to cheat the heart
That bound in strong affection's chain,
Looks for return and looks in vain?
No! can those Edith's wretched lot
In these brief words — He loves her not!

X

"Debate it not — too long I strove
To call his cold obsequance love,
All blinded by the league that styled
Edith of Lorn — while yet a child
She tropp'd the heath by Morag's
side —
The brave Lord Ronald's destined bride.

Ere yet I saw him, while afar
His broadsword blazed in Scotland's war,
Trained to baffle our fates the same,
My bosom throbb'd when Ronald's name
Came gracing Fame's heroic tale,
Like perfume on the summer gale.
What pilgrim sought our halls nor told
Of Ronald's deeds in battle bold;
Who touch'd the harp to heroes' praise
But his achievements swell'd the lays?
Even Morag — not a tale of fame
Was hers but clos'd with Ronald's name.
He came! and all that had been told
Of his high worth seem'd poor and cold,
Tame, lifeless, mid of energy,
Unjust to Ronald and to me!

XI

"Since then, what thought had Edith's
heart
And gave not pledged love its part! —
And what requital? cold delay —
Excuse that stained the spousal day, —
It dawns and Ronald is not here! —
Hunts be Ronald's nimble deer,
Or hunters be in secret dail
To bid some lighter love farewell,
And swear that though he may not scorn
A daughter of the House of Lorn,
Yet, when these formal rites are o'er,
Again they meet to part no more?"

XII

"Hush, daughter, hush! thy doubts re-
more.
More nobly think of Ronald's love.
Look where beneath the castle gray
His fleet armour from Aras bay
See'st not each galley's tugmost bend
As on the yards the sails ascend?
Holding the dark-blue land they rise,
Like the white clouds on April skies;
The shouting vessels man the oars,
Behind them sink Mull's mountain shores,
Onward their merry course they keep Through whistling breeze and foaming
deep.

And mark the headmost, seaward cast,
Stoop to the freshening gale her mast,
As if she veiled its bannered pride
To greet afar her prince's bride!
The Ronald comes, and while in speed
His galley meets the flying steed,
He cries her death! — Fair Edith sigh'd,
Blush'd, sadly smil'd, and thus replied:

XIII

thought, but vain! — No, Morag!
mark,
f his course, yon lonely bark,
ft hath shifted helm and sail
its way against the gale.
eep of morn my vacant eyes iewed by fits the course she tries;
hough the darkening scud comes
on,
wn's fair promises be gone,
ough the weary crew may see ltering haven on their lee,
mer to the rising wind
rive her shivering sail to bind, arer to the shelves' dread verge
y tack her course they urge,
ey feared Artornish more dverse winds and breakers' roar.'

290

300

XIV

poke the maid. Amid the tide skiff she marked lay tossing sore,
ifted oft her stooping side,
ary tack from shore to shore.
her destined course no more e gained of forward way
what a minstrel may compare e poor meed which peasants share
to toil the livelong day;
such the risk her pilot braves
at oft, before she wore,
oltspit kissed the broken waves
e in white foam the ocean raves
on the shelving shore.
to their destined purpose true,
anted toiled her hardy crew,
r looked where shelter lay,
or Artornish Castle drew,
r steered for Aros bay.

310

320

XV

hile they strove with wind and seas, award by the willing breeze,
Ronald's fleet swept by,
red with silk and tricked with
gold,
with the noble and the bold
land chivalry.
their prow the ocean roars,
ifes beneath their thousand oars,
ears them on their way:
e the war-horse in his might dward bears some valiant knight,
till both bit and boss are white,

310

310

But foaming must obey.

On each gay deck they might behold
Lances of steel and crests of gold,
And hauberks with their burnished fold
That shimmered fair and free;
And each proud galley as she passed
To the wild cadence of the blast
Gave wilder minstrelsy.
Full many a shrill triumphant note
Saline and Scallastle bade float
Their misty shores around;
And Morven's echoes answered well,
And Duart heard the distant swell
Come down the darksome Sound.

350

XVI

So bore they on with mirth and pride,
And if that laboring bark they spied,
'T was with such idle eye
As nobles cast on lowly boor
When, toiling in his task obscure,
They pass him careless by.
Let them sweep on with heedless eyes!
But had they known what mighty prize
In that frail vessel lay,
The famished wolf that prowls the wold
Had scathless passed the unguarded fold,
Ere, drifting by these galleys bold,
Unchallenged were her way!
And thou, Lord Ronald, sweep thou on
With mirth and pride and minstrel tone!
But hadst thou known who sailed so
nigh,
Far other glance were in thine eye!
Far other flush were on thy brow,
That, shaded by the bonnet, now
Assumes but ill the blithesome cheer
Of bridegroom when the bride is near!

370

XVII

Yes, sweep they on! — We will not leave,
For them that triumph, those who grieve.
With that armada gay
Be laughter loud and jocund shout,
And hards to cheer the wassail rout
With tale, romance, and lay;
And of wild mirth each clamorous art,
Which, if it cannot cheer the heart,
May stupefy and stun its smart
For one loud busy day.
Yes, sweep they on! — But with that skiff
Abides the minstrel tale,
Where there was dread of surge and cliff,
Labor that strained each sinew stiff,
And one sad maiden's wail.

380

XVIII

All day with fruitless strife they toiled,
 With ebb the ebbing currents boiled
 More fierce from strait and lake;
 And midway through the channel met 290
 Conflicting tides that foam and fret,
 And high their mingled billows jet,
 As spears that in the battle set
 Spring upward as they break.
 Then too the lights of eve were past,
 And louder sung the western blast
 On rocks of Innimore;
 Rent was the sail, and strained the mast,
 And many a leak was gaping fast,
 And the pale steersman stood aghast 400
 And gave the conflict o'er.

XIX

'T was then that One whose lofty look
 Nor labor dulled nor terror shook Thus to the leader spoke:—
 'Brother, how hop'st thou to abide
 The fury of this wildered tide,
 Or how avoid the rock's rude side
 Until the day has broke?
 Dost thou not mark the vessel reel 400
 With quivering planks and groaning keel
 At the last billow's shock?
 Yet how of better counsel tell,
 Though here thou see'st poor Isabel
 Half dead with want and fear;
 For look on sea, or look on land,
 Or yon dark sky, on every hand
 Despair and death are near.
 For her alone I grieve—on me
 Danger sits light by land and sea,
 I follow where thou wilt; 420
 Either to bide the tempest's hour,
 Or wend to yon unfriendly tower,
 Or rush amid their naval power,
 With war-ery wale their wassail-hour,
 And die with hand on hilt.'

XX

That elder leader's calm reply
 In steady voice was given.
 'In man's most dark extremity
 Oft succor dawns from heaven.
 Edward, trim thou the shattered sail, 430
 The helm be mine, and down the gale
 Let our free course be driven;
 So shall we scape the western bay,
 The hostile fleet, the unequal fray,
 So safely hold our vessel's way

Beneath the castle wall;
 For if a hope of safety rest,
 'T is on the sacred name of guest,
 Who seeks for shelter storm-distressed
 Within a chieftain's hall.
 If not—it best beseems our worth,
 Our name, our right, our lofty birth,
 By noble hands to fall.'

XXI

The helm, to his strong arm consigned,
 Gave the reefed sail to meet the wind,
 And on her altered way
 Fierce bounding forward sprung the ship,
 Like greyhound starting from the ship
 To seize his flying prey.
 Awaked before the rushing prow 40
 The mimic fires of ocean glow.
 Those lightnings of the wave;
 Wild sparkles crest the broken tides,
 And flashing round the vessel's sides
 With eldich lustre lave,
 While far behind their livid light
 To the dark billows of the night
 A gloomy splendor gave,
 It seems as if old Ocean shakes
 From his dark brow the lucid flakes 40
 In envious pageantry,
 To match the meteor-light that streaks
 Grim Hecla's midnight sky.

XXII

Nor lacked they steadier light to keep
 Their course upon the darkened deep;—
 Artornish, on her frowning steep
 Twixt cloud and ocean hung,
 Glanced with a thousand lights of glee,
 And landward far, and far to sea
 Her festal radiance flung. 40
 By that blithe beacon-light they steered,
 Whose lustre mingled well
 With the pale beam that now appeared,
 As the cold moon her head upreared
 Above the eastern fell.

XXIII

Thus guided, on their course they bore
 Until they neared the mainland shore,
 When frequent on the hollow blast
 Wild shouts of merriment were cast,
 And wind and wave and sea-birds' cry 40
 With wassail sounds in concert vie,
 Like funeral shrieks with revelry,
 Or like the battle-shout
 By peasants heard from cliffs on high

When Triumph, Rage, and Agony
Madden the fight and rout.
Now nearer yet through mist and storm
Dimly arose the castle's form
And deepened shadow made,
Far lengthened on the main below, 490
Where dancing in reflected glow
A hundred torches played,
Spaungling the wave with lights as vain
As pleasures in this vale of pain,
That dazzle as they fade.

XXIV

Beneath the castle's sheltering lee
They staid their course in quiet sea.
Hewn in the rock, a passage there
Sought the dark fortress by a stair,
So strait, so high, so steep, 500
With peasant's staff one valiant hand
Might well the dizzy pass have manned
'Gainst hundreds armed with spear and
brand

And plunged them in the deep.
His bugle then the helmsman wound:
Loud answered every echo round
From turret, rock, and bay;
The postern's hinges crash and groan,
And soon the warder's cresset shone
On those rude steps of slippery stone, 510
To light the upward way.
'Thrice welcome, holy Sire!' he said;
'Full long the spousal train have staid,
And, vexed at thy delay,
Feared lest amidst these wildering seas
The darksome night and freshening breeze
Had driven thy bark astray.' —

XXV

'Warder,' the younger stranger said,
'Thine erring guess some mirth had made
In mirthful hour; but nights like these, 520
When the rough winds wake western seas,
Brook not of glee. We crave some aid
And needful shelter for this maid
Until the break of day;
For to ourselves the deck's rude plank
Is easy as the mossy bank
That 's breathed upon by May.
And for our storm-tossed skiff we seek Short shelter in this leeward creek, 530
Prompt when the dawn the east shall streak
Again to bear away.'
Answered the warder, 'In what name
Assert ye hospitable claim?
Whence come or whither bound?

Hath Erin seen your parting sails,
Or come ye on Norwegian gales?
And seek ye England's fertile vales,
Or Scotland's mountain ground?'

XXVI

'Warriors — for other title none
For some brief space we list to own, 540
Bound by a vow — warriors are we;
In strife by land and storm by sea
We have been known to fame;
And these brief words have import dear,
When sounded in a noble ear,
To harbor safe and friendly cheer
That gives us rightful claim.
Grant us the trivial boon we seek,
And we in other realms will speak
Fair of your courtesy; 550
Deny — and be your niggard hold
Scorned by the noble and the bold,
Shunned by the pilgrim on the wold
And wanderer on the lea!'

XXVII

'Bold stranger, no — 'gainst claim like thine
No bolt revolves by hand of mine,
Though urged in tone that more expressed
A monarch than a suppliant guest.
Be what ye will, Artornish Hall
On this glad eve is free to all. 560
Though ye had drawn a hostile sword
'Gainst our ally, great England's Lord,
Or mail upon your shoulders borne
To battle with the Lord of Lorn,
Or outlawed dwelt by greenwood tree
With the fierce Knight of Ellerslie,
Or aided even the murderous strife
When Comyn fell beneath the knife
Of that fell homicide the Bruce,
This night had been a term of truce. — 570
Ho, vassals! give these guests your care,
And show the narrow postern stair.'

XXVIII

To land these two bold brethren leapt —
The weary crew their vessel kept —
And, lighted by the torches' flare
That seaward flung their smoky glare,
The younger knight that maiden bare
Half lifeless up the rock;
On his strong shoulder leaned her head,
And down her long dark tresses shed, 580
As the wild vine in tendrils spread
Droops from the mountain oak.

Him followed close that elder lord,
And in his hand a sheathed sword
Such as few arms could wield;
But when he bouned him to such task
Well could it cleave the strongest casque
And rend the surest shield.

XXIX

The raised portcullis' arch they pass,
The wicket with its bars of brass, 590
The entrance long and low,
Flanked at each turn by loop-holes strait,
Where bowmen might in ambush wait —
If force or fraud should burst the gate —
To gall an entering foe.
But every jealous post of ward
Was now defenceless and unbarred,
And all the passage free
To one low-browed and vaulted room
Where squire and yeoman, page and 600
groom,
Plied their loud revelry.

XXX

And 'Rest ye here,' the warder bade,
'Till to our lord your suit is said. —
And, comrades, gaze not on the maid
And on these men who ask our aid,
As if ye ne'er had seen
A damsel tired of midnight bark
Or wanderers of a moulding stark
And bearing martial mien.' 610
But not for Eachin's reproof
Would page or vassal stand aloof,
But crowded on to stare,
As men of courtesy untaught,
Till Fiery Edward roughly caught
From one the foremost there
His chequered plaid, and in its shroud,
To hide her from the vulgar crowd,
Involved his sister fair.
His brother, as the clansman bent
His aullen brow in discontent, 620
Made brief and stern excuse:
'Vassal, were thine the cloak of pall
That decks thy lord in bridal hall,
'T were honored by her use.'

XXXI

Proud was his tone but calm; his eye
Had that compelling dignity,
His mien that bearing haught and high,
Which common spirits fear;
Needed not word nor signal more,
Nod, wink, and laughter, all were o'er; 630

Upon each other back they bore
And gazed like startled deer.
But now appeared the seneschal,
Commissioned by his lord to call
The strangers to the baron's hall,
Where feasted fair and free
That Island Prince in nuptial tide
With Edith there his lovely bride,
And her bold brother by her side,
And many a chief, the flower and pride 640
Of Western land and sea.

Here pause we, gentles, for a space;
And, if our tale hath won your grace,
Grant us brief patience and again
We will renew the minstrel strain.

CANTO SECOND

I

FILL the bright goblet, spread the festive board!
Summon the gay, the noble, and the
fair!
Through the loud hall in joyous concert
poured,
Let mirth and music sound the dirge of Care!
But ask thou not if Happiness be there,
If the loud laugh disguise convulsive
throe,
Or if the brow the heart's true livery
wear;
Lift not the festal mask! — enough to
know,
No scene of mortal life but teems with mortal woe.

II

With beakers' clang, with harpers' lay, 650
With all that olden time deemed gay,
The Island Chieftain feasted high;
But there was in his troubled eye
A gloomy fire, and on his brow
Now sudden finshed and faded now
Emotions such as draw their birth
From deeper source than festal mirth.
By fits he paused, and harper's strain
And jester's tale went round in vain,
Or fell but on his idle ear
Like distant sounds which dreamers hear.
Then would he rouse him, and employ
Each art to aid the clamorous joy,
And call for pledge and lay,

brief space, of all the crowd,
the loudest of the loud,
the gayest of the gay.

III

Light amidst the bridal throng
in brief mirth or musing long;
at brow, the unlistening ear, 30
to thoughts of raptures near,
large starts of sudden glee bursts of bridegroom's ecstasy.
alone misjudged the crowd,
O Lorn, suspicious, proud,
as of his honored line,
keen knight, De Argentine — gland sent on errand high arm league more firm to tie — wed in Ronald's mood to find 40 transport-troubled mind.
sad heart, one tearful eye,
peer through the mystery,
wed with agony and fear
ward bridegroom's varied cheer.

IV

Wed — yet feared to meet his
ance,
shunned hers; — till when by
ance
the point of foeman's lance even a milder pang!
the intolerable smart 50
wed; — then sternly manned his art
his hard but destined part,
on the table sprang.
the mighty cup,' he said,
wed by royal Somerled!
l on the studded brim
gold the bubbles swim, gem of varied shine
bly bright in rosy wine!
, brave lord, and brother mine, 60
orn, this pledge I drink —
tion of Our House with thine,
his fair bridal-link!

V

as round!' quoth he of Lorn, good time — that wedded horn
of the abbot tell;
and monk is come at last.
ald heard the bugle-blast,
se floor at random cast
tasted goblet fell. 70

But when the warden in his car
Tells other news, his blither cheer
Returns like sun of May
When through a thunder-cloud it beams! —
Lord of two hundred isles, he seems
As glad of brief delay
As some poor criminal might feel
When from the gibbet or the wheel
Respited for a day.

VI

'Brother of Lorn,' with hurried voice 80
He said, 'and you, fair lords, rejoice!
Here, to augment our glee,
Come wandering knights from travel far,
Well proved, they say, in strife of war
And tempest on the sea. —
Ho! give them at your board such place
As best their presences may grace,
And bid them welcome free!' —
With solemn step and silver wand,
The seneschal the presence scanned 90
Of these strange guests, and well he knew
How to assign their rank its due;
For though the costly furs
That erst had decked their caps were torn,
And their gay robes were over-worn,
And soiled their gilded spurs,
Yet such a high commanding grace
Was in their mien and in their face
As suited best the princely dais
And royal canopy; 100
And there he marshalled them their place,
First of that company.

VII

Then lords and ladies spake aside,
And angry looks the error chide
That gave to guests unnamed, unknown,
A place so near their prince's throne;
But Owen Erraught said,
'For forty years a seneschal,
To marshal guests in bower and hall
Has been my honored trade. 110
Worship and birth to me are known,
By look, by bearing, and by tone,
Not by furred robe or brodered zone;
And 'gainst an oaken bough
I'll gage my silver wand of state
That these three strangers oft have sate
In higher place than now.'

VIII

'I too,' the aged Ferrand said,
'Am qualified by minstrel trade

Of rank and place to tell; — 120
 Marked ye the younger stranger's eye,
 My mates, how quick, how keen, how
 high,

How fierce its flashes fell,
 Glancing among the noble rout
 As if to seek the noblest out,
 Because the owner might not brook
 On any save his peers to look ?

And yet it moves me more,
 That steady, calm, majestic brow,
 With which the elder chief even now 130

Scanned the gay presence o'er,
 Like being of superior kind,
 In whose high-toned impartial mind
 Degrees of mortal rank and state
 Seem objects of indifferent weight.

The lady too — though closely tied
 The mantle veil both face and eye,
 Her motions' grace it could not hide,
 Nor cloud her form's fair symmetry.'

IX

Suspicious doubt and lordly scorn 140
 Loured on the haughty front of Lorn.
 From underneath his brows of pride
 The stranger guests he sternly eyed,
 And whispered closely what the ear
 Of Argentine alone might hear;

Then questioned, high and brief,
 If in their voyage aught they knew
 Of the rebellious Scottish crew
 Who to Rath-Erin's shelter drew

With Carrick's outlawed Chief ? 150
 And if, their winter's exile o'er,
 They harbored still by Ulater's shore,
 Or launched their galleys on the main
 To vex their native land again ?

X

That younger stranger, fierce and high,
 At once confronts the chieftain's eye

With look of equal scorn:
 'Of rebels have we nought to show;
 But if of royal Bruce thou'dst know,
 I warn thee he has sworn, 160
 Ere thrice three days shall come and go,
 His banner Scottish winds shall blow,
 Despite each mean or mighty foe,
 From England's every bill and bow
 To Allaster of Lorn.'

Kindled the mountain chieftain's ire,
 But Ronald quenched the rising fire:
 'Brother, it better suits the time

To chase the night with Ferrand's rhyme
 Than wake midst mirth and wine the jars 170

That flow from these unhappy wars.'
 'Content,' said Lorn; and spoke apart
 With Ferrand, master of his art,
 Then whispered Argentine,
 'The lay I named will carry smart
 To these bold strangers' haughty heart,
 If right this guess of mine.'

He ceased, and it was silence all
 Until the minstrel waked the hall.

XI

THE BROOCH OF LORN

'Whence the brooch of burning gold 180
 That clasps the chieftain's mantle-fold,
 On the varied tartans beaming,
 Wrought and chased with rare device,
 Studded fair with gems of price,
 As, through night's pale rainbow gleam-
 ing,

Fainter now, now seen afar,
 Fitful shines the northern star ?

'Gem ! ne'er wrought on Highland mountain,

Did the fairy of the fountain
 Or the mermaid of the wave 190
 Frame thee in some coral cave ?
 Did, in Iceland's darksome mine,
 Dwarf's swart hands thy metal twine ?
 Or, mortal-moulded, comest thou here
 From England's love or France's fear ?

XII

SONG CONTINUED

'No ! — thy splendors nothing tell
 Foreign art or fairy spell.
 Moulded thou for monarch's use,
 By the overweening Bruce,
 When the royal robe he tied 200
 O'er a heart of wrath and pride;
 Thence in triumph wert thou torn
 By the victor hand of Lorn !

'When the gem was won and lost,
 Widely was the war-cry tossed !
 Rung aloud Bendourish fell,
 Answered Douchart's sounding dell,
 Fleed the deer from wild Teyndrum,
 When the homicide o'ercome
 Hardly 'scaped with scathe and scorn, 210
 Left the pledge with conquering Lorn !

XIII

SONG CONCLUDED

was then the Douglas brand,
 he Campbell's vaunted hand,
 Kirkpatrick's bloody dirk,
 g sure of murder's work;
 down fled fast away,
 he fiery De la Haye,
 this brooch triumphant borne
 ed upon the breast of Lorn.

rest fled its former lord,
 is men to brand and cord,
 brand of Highland steel,
 in gibbet, axe, and wheel.
 on fly from coast to coast,
 d by Comyn's vengeful ghost,
 his spoils in triumph worn shall grace victorious Lorn !

XIV

ures the tiger on his foes,
 sed in by hunters, spears, and bows,
 are he bounds upon the ring, s the object of his spring, —
 in the bard, now on his lord, ward glared and grasped his sword —
 ern his brother spoke, 'Be still.
 I art thou yet so wild of will,
 high deeds and sufferings long,
 me thee for a menial's song ? — hast thou framed, old man, thy strains,
 aise the hand that pays thy pains !
 omething might thy song have told 240
 en's three vassals, true and bold, rent their lord from Bruce's hold derneath his knee he lay,
 died to save him in the fray.
 heard the Bruce's cloak and clasp clenched within their dying grasp, time a hundred foemen more
 d in and back the victor bore,
 after Lorn had left the strife,
 glad to 'scape with limb and life. — 250
 gh of this — and, minstrel, hold astrel-hire this chain of gold,
 ture lays a fair excuse
 eak more nobly of the Bruce.' —

XV

, by Columba's shrine, I swear,
 very saint that's buried there,
 be himself !' Lorn sternly cries,

'And for my kinsman's death he dies.'
 As loudly Ronald calls, 'Forbear !
 Not in my sight while brand I wear, 260
 O'ermatched by odds, shall warrior fall,
 Or blood of stranger stain my hall !
 This ancient fortress of my race
 Shall be misfortune's resting-place,
 Shelter and shield of the distressed,
 No slaughter-house for shipwrecked guest.'
 'Talk not to me,' fierce Lorn replied,
 'Of odds or match ! — when Comyn died,
 Three daggers clashed within his side !
 Talk not to me of sheltering hall, 270
 The Church of God saw Comyn fall !
 On God's own altar streamed his blood,
 While o'er my prostrate kinsman stood
 The ruthless murderer — e'en as now —
 With armed hand and scornful brow ! —
 Up, all who love me ! blow on blow !
 And lay the outlawed felons low !'

XVI

Then up spraog many a mainland lord,
 Obedient to their chieftain's word.
 Barcaldine's arm is high in air, 280
 And Kinloch-Alline's blade is bare,
 Black Murthok's dirk has left its sheath,
 And clenched is Dermid's hand of death.
 Their muttered threats of vengeance swell
 Into a wild and warlike yell;
 Onward they press with weapons high,
 The affrighted females shriek and fly,
 And, Scotland, then thy brightest ray
 Had darkened ere its noon of day,
 But every chief of birth and fame 290
 That from the Isles of Ocean came
 At Ronald's side that hour withstood
 Fierce Lorn's relentless thirst for blood.

XVII

Brave Torquil from Dunvegan high,
 Lord of the misty hills of Skye,
 Mac-Niel, wild Bara's ancient thane,
 Duart of bold Clan-Gillian's strain,
 Fergus of Canna's castled bay,
 Mac-Duffith, Lord of Colonsay, 299
 Soon as they saw the broadsword's glance,
 With ready weapons rose at once,
 More prompt that many an ancient feud,
 Full oft suppressed, full oft renewed,
 Glowed 'twixt the chieftains of Argyle,
 And many a lord of ocean's isle.
 Wild was the scene — each sword was bare,
 Back streamed each chieftain's shaggy hair,

mes our feuds to reconcile,
sted man from sainted isle;
ill his holy doom abide,
bbot shall our strife decide.'

XXII

ly this fair accord was o'er through the wide revolving door 410
black-stoled brethren wind;
e sandalled monks who relics bore,
many a torch-bearer before many a cross behind.
unk each fierce uplifted hand,
agger bright and flashing brand
pped swiftly at the sight;
anished from the Churchman's eye,
oting stars that glauce and die t from the vault of night. 420

XXIII

shot on the threshold stood,
his hand the holy rood;
in his shoulders flowed his hood,
torch's glaring ray
d in its red and flashing light
thered cheek and amice white, ne eye glistening cold and bright,
resses scant and gray.
Lords,' he said, 'Our Lady's love, nce be with you from above, 430
, Benedicite! —
what means this? — no peace is
here! —
ks unsheathed suit bridal cheer?
re these naked brands
aly show for Churchman's sight be comes summoned to unite othed hearts and hands?'

XXIV

clonking hate with fiery zeal,
Lorn first answered the appeal:
m com'st, O holy man, 440
ons of blessed church to greet,
the deeming here to meet retch beneath the ban
pe and Church for murder done in the sacred altar-stone — mayst thou wonder we should know miscreant here, nor lay him low,
am of greeting, peace, or truce,
excommunicated Bruce!
ill I grant, to end debate, 450
nted voice decide his fate.'

XXV

Then Ronald pled the stranger's cause,
And knighthood's oath and honor's laws;
And Isabel on bended knee Brought prayers and tears to back the plea;
And Edith lent her generous aid,
And wept, and Lorn for mercy prayed.
'Hence,' he exclaimed, 'degenerate maid!
Was 't not enough to Ronald's bower
I brought thee, like a paramour, 460
Or bond-maid at her master's gate,
His careless cold approach to wait? —
But the bold Lord of Cumberland,
The gallant Clifford, seeks thy hand;
His it shall be — Nay, no reply!
Hence! till those rebel eyes be dry.'
With grief the abbot heard and saw,
Yet nought relaxed his brow of awe.

XXVI

Then Argentine, in England's name,
So highly urged his sovereign's claim 470
He waked a spark that long suppressed
Had smouldered in Lord Ronald's breast;
And now, as from the flint the fire,
Flashed forth at once his generous ire.
'Enough of noble blood,' he said,
'By English Edward had been shed,
Since matchless Wallace first had been
In mockery crowned with wreaths of green,
And done to death by felon hand
For guarding well his father's land. 480
Where 's Nigel Bruce? and De la Haye,
And valiant Seton — where are they?
Where Somerville, the kind and free?
And Fraser, flower of chivalry?
Have they not been on gibbet bound,
Their quarters flung to hawk and bound,
And hold we here a cold debate
To yield more victims to their fate?
What! can the English Leopard's mood
Never be gorged with northern blood? 490
Was not the life of Athole shed
To soothe the tyrant's sickened bed?
And must his word till dying day
Be nought but quarter, hang, and slay! —
Thou frown'st, De Argentine, — my gage
Is prompt to prove the strife I wage.'

XXVII

'Nor deem,' said stout Dunvegan's knight,
'That thou shalt brave alone the fight!
By saints of isle and mainland both,

By Woden wild — my grandsire's oath —
 Let Home and England do their worst,
 Home or attacked or assailed,
 If Bruce shall ever find friends again
 Open more to brave a battle-plain,
 If Douglas couch again his lance,
 Or Randolph dare another chance,
 Or Torquil will not be to lack
 With twice a thousand at his back —
 Nay, what not at my hearing hold,
 Good stout! for thou know'st of old,
 Torquil a rude thought and stubborn will Smack of the wild Norwegian still;
 Nor will I hamper Freedom's cause
 For England's wealth or Rome's appeals."

XXXII

The altar veiled with awe severe.
 The harsh shadows' speech to hear;
 There on King Robert crouched the monk,
 For twice his courage came and eek,
 Confronted with the hero's look
 Toss'd till his arm, his accents shook —
 A length, wash'd in awe and hate,
 Stood he questioning him — "And thou,
 Torquil? what hast thou to plead,
 Why I denounce not on the deed
 That quells down which canons tell
 Shalt pardon and apiece sell;
 A sentence of excommunication
 I think the living with the dead,
 Bid each good angel's awe and
 And every one claim his prey —
 Expel thee from the chapel's care
 And defend Heaven against the prayer;
 Arms over head against the life.
 But all who are there in the strife
 Not much whose sunset, cold and scant,
 With sunset alone relieve the saint Haunt, the whole living, now, when dead
 Itself in the yet darker heart
 Round Heaven's sentence from the hearth,
 Seals for the best the holy verse,
 And sends thy corpse from hallowed
 ground
 Flung like a carrier to the bound
 Spun in the dice and desperate down
 For strategy doomed to Rome
 And met the unbelieved deed
 Of thine unhalloved, ruthless deed."

XXXIII

"Alas!" the Bruce replied "thy charge
 I heed not to dispute at large

This much, howe'er, I bid thee know,
 No selfish vengeance dealt the blow,
 For Comyn died his country's foe.
 Nor blame I friends whose ill-timed speed
 Fulfilled my soon-repent'd deed,
 Nor censure those from whose stern tongue
 The dire anathema has rung.
 I only blame mine own wild ire,
 By Scotland's wrongs incensed to fire.
 Heaven knows my purpose to atone,
 Far as I may, the evil done,
 And bears a penitent's appeal
 From papal curse and prelate's zeal.
 My first and dearest task achieved,
 Fair Scotland from her thrall relieved,
 Shall many a potent in cope and stole Say requiem for Red Comyn's soul,
 While I the blessed cross advance
 And expiate this unhappy chance
 In Palestine with sword and lance.
 But while content the Church should know
 My conscience owns the debt I owe,
 I see De Argentine and born
 The name of traitor I return.
 Bid then defiance stern and high,
 And give them in their throats the lie!
 These brief words spoke, I speak no more.
 Do what thou wilt, my shrift is o'er."

XXXIV

Like man he proudly amazed,
 Upon the king the altar gazed;
 Then did his pale features glance
 Conscious of certain trance.
 His breathing came more thick and fast,
 And from his pale blue eyes were cast
 Strange rays of wild and wandering light;
 Deep as his looks of silver white,
 Flashed in his hair, through every vein
 He saw the currents strain,
 And undistinguished accents broke
 The awful silence ere he spoke.

XXXV

"De Bruce! I now with purpose dread
 To speak my curse upon thy head,
 And give thee as an earnest o'er
 To him who burns to shed the gore; —
 But like the Muses of old
 Who sang on Zephyrus, Heaven-controlled,
 I feel within mine aged breast
 A power that will not be repressed
 It prompts me, Bruce, it swells my veins,
 It bids a maiden's constraints —
 De Bruce, thy carnal blows

t God's altar slain thy foe: 600
 astered yet by high behest,
 thee, and thou shalt be blessed !'
 ke, and o'er the astonished throng
 lence, awful, deep, and long.

XXXII

that light has fired his eye,
 his form swells bold and high,
 oken voice of age is gone,
 gorous manhood's lofty tone:
 s vanquished on the battle-plain,
 lowers slaughtered, fled, or ta'en, 610
 ed wanderer on the wild,
 sign shores a man exiled,
 ed, deserted, and distressed,
 thee, and thou shalt be blessed !
 l in the hall and in the field,
 the mantle as the shield.
 r of thy country's shame,
 r of her injured fame,
 l in thy sceptre and thy sword,
 ee, fair Scotland's rightful lord, 620
 l in thy deeds and in thy fame,
 enghened honors wait thy name !
 ant ages sire to son
 ill thy tale of freedom won,
 ach his infants in the use
 iest speech to falter Bruce.
 m, triumphant ! sweep along urse, the theme of many a song !
 ver whose dictates swell my breast blessed thee, and thou shalt be blessed ! — 630
 ! — my short-lived strength de-
 cays,
 ike the momentary blaze. —
 i bath our destined purpose broke,
 re must nuptial vow be spoke;
 m, our errand here is o'er,
 k discharged. — Unmoor, unmoor !'
 ests received the exhausted monk,
 ithless in their arms he sunk.
 al his orders to obey,
 in refused all longer stay, 640
 ted, raised sail, and bore away.

CANTO THIRD

I

t thou not marked when o'er thy rtled head
 en and deep the thunder-peal has tolled,

How, when its echoes fell, a silence dead Sunk on the wood, the meadow, and the wold ?

The rye-grass shakes not on the sod-built
 fold,
 The rustling aspen's leaves are mute and
 still,
 The wall-flower waves not on the ruined
 hold,
 Till, murmuring distant first, then near
 and shrill,
 The savage whirlwind wakes and sweeps
 the groaning hill.

II

Artornish ! such a silence sunk 10
 Upon thy halls, when that gray monk
 His prophet-speech had spoke;
 And his obedient brethren's sail
 Was stretched to meet the southern gale
 Before a whisper woke.
 Then murmuring sounds of doubt and
 fear,
 Close poured in many an anxious ear,
 The solemn stillness broke;
 And still they gazed with eager guess
 Where in an oriel's deep recess 20
 The Island Prince seemed bent to press
 What Lorn, by his impatient cheer
 And gesture fierce, scarce deigned to hear.

III

Starting at length with frowning look,
 His hand he clenched, his head he shook,
 And sternly flung apart:
 'And deem'st thou me so mean of mood
 As to forget the mortal feud,
 And clasp the hand with blood imbrued
 From my dear kinsman's heart ? 30
 Is this thy rede ? — a due return
 For ancient league and friendship sworn !
 But well our mountain proverb shows
 The faith of Islesmen ebbs and flows.
 Be it even so — believe ere long
 He that now bears shall wreak the wrong. —
 Call Edith — call the Maid of Lorn !
 My sister, slaves ! — for further scorn,
 Be sure nor she nor I will stay. —
 Away, De Argentine, away ! — 40
 We nor ally nor brother know
 In Bruce's friend or England's foe.'

IV

But who the chieftain's rage can tell
 When, sought from lowest dungeon cell

To highest tower the castle round,
 No lady birth was there found !
 He shouted, ' Falsehood ! — treachery ! —
 Revenge and blood ! — a lordly need
 To him that will avenge the deed !
 A baron's lands ! ' — His frantic mood 50
 Was scarcely by the news withstood
 That Murag shared his sister's flight,
 And that in hurry of the night,
 Shaped noteless and without remark,
 Two strangers sought the abbot's bark. —
 ' Man every galley ! — fly — pursue !
 The priest his treachery shall rue !
 Ay, and the time shall quickly come
 When we shall hear the thanks that Rome
 Will pay his feigned prophecy ! ' 60
 Such was fierce Lorn's indignant cry ;
 And Cormac Doil in haste obeyed,
 Heaved his sail, his anchor weighed —
 For, glad of each pretext for spoil,
 A pirate sworn was Cormac Doil.
 But others, lingering, spoke apart,
 ' The maid has given her maiden heart
 To Ronald of the Isles,
 And, fearful lest her brother's word
 Bestow her on that English lord, 70
 She seeks Lorn's piles,
 And wisely deems it best to dwell
 A widow in the holy cell
 'Till these feuds so fierce and fell
 The abbot reconciles.'

V

As, impotent of ire, the hall
 Echoed to Lorn's impatient call —
 ' My horse, my mantle, and my train !
 Let none who honors Lorn remain ! ' —
 Courteous but stern, a bold request 80
 To Bruce De Argentine expressed :
 ' Lord Earl,' he said, ' I cannot chuse
 But yield such title to the Bruce,
 Though name and earldom both are gone
 Since he braced rebel's armor on —
 But, earl or serf — rude phrase was thine
 Of late, and launched at Argentine ;
 Such as compels me to demand
 Redress of honor at thy hand.
 We need not to each other tell 90
 That both can wield their weapons well ;
 Then do me but the soldier grace
 This glove upon thy helm to place
 Where we may meet in fight ;
 And I will say, as still I've said,
 Though by ambition far misled,
 Thou art a noble knight.'

VI

' And I,' the princely Bruce replied,
 ' Might term it stain on knight-hood's pride
 That the bright sword of Argentine 100
 Should in a tyrant's quarrel shine ;
 But, for your brave request,
 Be sure the honored pledge you gave
 In every battle-field shall wave
 Upon my helmet-crest ;
 Believe that if my hasty tongue
 Hath done thine honor causeless wrong,
 It shall be well redressed.
 Not dearer to my soul was glove
 Bestowed in youth by lady's love 110
 Than this which thou hast given !
 Thus then my noble foe I greet ;
 Health and high fortune till we meet,
 And then — what pleases Heaven.'

VII

Thus parted they — for now, with sound
 Like waves rolled back from rocky ground,
 The friends of Lorn retire ;
 Each mainland chieftain with his train
 Draws to his mountain towers again, 120
 Pondering how mortal schemes prove vain
 And mortal hopes expire.
 But through the castle double guard
 By Ronald's charge kept wakeful ward,
 Wicket and gate were trebly barred
 By beam and bolt and chain ;
 Then of the guests in courteous sort
 He prayed excuse for mirth broke short,
 And bade them in Artornish fort
 In confidence remain.
 Now torch and menial tendance led 130
 Chieftain and knight to bower and bed,
 And beads were told and Aves said,
 And soon they sunk away
 Into such sleep as wont to shed
 Oblivion on the weary head
 After a toilsome day.

VIII

But soon aroused, the monarch cried
 To Edward slumbering by his side,
 ' Awake, or sleep for aye !
 Even now there jarred a secret door — 140
 A taper-light gleams on the floor —
 ' Up, Edward ! up, I say !
 Some one glides in like midnight ghost —
 Nay, strike not ! 't is our noble host.
 Advancing then his taper's flame,
 Ronald stepped forth, and with him came regan's chief — each bent the knee true in sign of fealty

 and proffered him his sword, hailed him in a monarch's style 150
 ing of mainland and of isle and Scotland's rightful lord.
 'O,' said Ronald, 'Owned of Heaven!
 my erring youth forgiven,
 ehood's arts from duty driven,
 rebel falchion drew,
 or to thy deeds of fame,
 'hile I strove against thy claim, homage just and true?' —
 'dear youth, the unhappy time,' 160
 'ed the Bruce, 'must bear the crime
 'guiltier far than you,
 '— he paused; for Falkirk's woes
 is conscious soul arose.
 'ftain to his breast he pressed,
 a sigh concealed the rest.

IX

suffered aid by arms and might assess him in his right;
 'll their counsels must be weighed mers raised and musters made, 170
 glish hire and Lorn's intrigues many chiefs in southern leagues.
 'er Bruce his purpose bold
 'ew vassals frankly told:
 'inter worn in exile o'er,
 'd for Carrick's kindred shore.
 'ht upon my native Ayr
 'ged to see the burly faro
 'lifford makes, whose lordly call
 'oes through my father's hall. 180
 'd my course to Arran led
 'valiant Lennox gathers head,
 'the sea by tempest tossed,
 'rks dispersed, our purpose crossed,
 'wn, a hostile sail to shun,
 'in her destined course had run,
 'hat wise will which masters ours
 'led us to your friendly towers.'

X

Torquil spoke: 'The time craves
 speed!
 'st not linger in our deed, 190
 'nt pray our sovereign liege
 't the perils of a siege.
 'teful Lorn with all his powers
 't too near Artornish towers,
 'gland's light-armed vessels ride
 'ant far the waves of Clyde,

Prompt at these tidings to unmoor,
 And sweep each strait and guard each
 shore.

Then, till this fresh alarm pass by,
 Secret and safe my liege must lie 200
 In the far bounds of friendly Skye,
 Torquil thy pilot and thy guide.' —
 'Not so, brave chieftain,' Ronald cried;
 'Myself will on my sovereign wait,
 And raise in arms the men of Sleate,
 Whilst thou, renowned where chiefs debate,
 Shalt sway their souls by council sage
 And awe them by thy locks of age.' —
 'And if my words in weight shall fail, 209
 This ponderous sword shall turn the scale.'

XI

'The scheme,' said Bruce, 'contents me
 well;
 Meantime, 't were best that Isabel
 For safety with my bark and crew
 Again to friendly Erin drew.
 There Edward too shall with her wend,
 In need to cheer her and defend
 And muster up each scattered friend.'
 Here seemed it as Lord Ronald's ear
 Would other counsel gludlier hear;
 But, all achieved as soon as planned, 220
 Both barks, in secret armed and manned,
 From out the haven bore;
 On different voyage forth they ply,
 This for the coast of winged Skye
 And that for Erin's shore.

XII

With Bruce and Ronald bides the tale. —
 To favoring winds they gave the sail Till Mull's dark headlands scarce they knew
 And Ardnamurchan's hills were blue. 229
 But then the squalls blew close and hard,
 And, fain to strike the galley's yard
 And take them to the oar,
 With these rude seas in weary plight
 They strove the livelong day and night,
 Nor till the dawning had a sight
 Of Skye's romantic shore.
 Where Coolin stoops him to the west,
 They saw upon his shivered crest
 The sun's arising gleam;
 But such the labor and delay, 240
 Ere they were moored in Scavigh bay —
 For calmer heaven compelled to stay —
 He shot a western beam.
 Then Ronald said, 'If true mine eye,

These are the savage wilds that lie
North of Strathnurdill and Dunakye;

No human foot comes here,
And, since these adverse breezes blow,
If my good liege love hunter's bow,
What hinders that on land we go

And strike a mountain-deer? 250
Allan, my page, shall with us wend;
A bow full deftly can be bend,
And, if we meet a herd, may send
A shaft shall mend our cheer.'

Then each took bow and bolts in hand,
Their row-boat launched and leapt to land,
And left their skiff and train,
Where a wild stream with headlong shock
Came brawling down its bed of rock 260
To mingle with the main.

XIII

Awhile their route they silent made,
As men who stalk for mountain-deer,
Till the good Bruce to Ronald said, —
'Saint Mary! what a scene is here!

I've traversed many a mountain-strand,
Abroad and in my native land,
And it has been my lot to tread
Where safety more than pleasure led; 260
Thus, many a waste I've wandered o'er,
Clomb many a crag, crossed many a moor,

But, by my halidome,
A scene so rude, so wild as this,
Yet so sublime in barrenness,
Ne'er did my wandering footsteps press
Where'er I hopped to roam.'

XIV

No marvel thus the monarch spake;
For rarely human eye has known
A scene so stern as that dread lake
With its dark ledge of barren stone. 280

Seems that primeval earthquake's sway
Hath rent a strange and shattered way
Through the rude bosom of the hill,
And that each naked precipice,
Sable ravine, and dark abyss,

Tells of the outrage still.
The wildest glen but this can show
Some touch of Nature's genial glow;
On high Benmore green mosses grow,
And heath-bells bud in deep Glencroe, 290

And copse on Cruchan-Ben;
But here, — above, around, below,
On mountain or in glen,
Nor tree, nor shrub, nor plant, nor flower,
Nor aught of vegetative power,

The weary eye may ken.
For all is rocks at random thrown,
Black waves, bare crags, and banks of
stone,

As if were here denied 290
The summer sun, the spring's sweet dew,
That clothe with many a varied hue
The bleakest mountain-side.

XV

And wilder, forward as they wound,
Were the proud cliffs and lake profound.
Huge terraces of granite black
Afforded rude and cumbered track;

For from the mountain hoar,
Hurled headlong in some night of fear,
When yelled the wolf and fled the deer,
Loose crags had toppled o'er; 310

And some, chance-poised and balanced, lay
So that a stripling arm might sway
A mass no host could raise,
In Nature's rage at random thrown
Yet trembling like the Druid's stone
On its precarious base.

The evening mists with ceaseless change
Now clothed the mountains' lofty range,
Now left their foreheads bare, 310
And round the skirts their mantle furled,
Or on the sable waters curled;
Or on the eddying breezes whirled,
Dispersed in middle air.

And oft condensed at once they lower
When, brief and fierce, the mountain
shower

Pours like a torrent down,
And when return the sun's glad beams,
Whitened with foam a thousand streams
Leap from the mountain's crown.

XVI

'This lake,' said Bruce, 'whose barriers
drear 320

Are precipices sharp and sheer,
Yielding no track for goat or deer
Save the black shelves we tread,
How term you its dark waves? and how Yon northern mountain's pathless brow,

And yonder peak of dread
That to the evening sun uplifts
The griesly gulfs and slaty rifts
Which seam its shivered head?' —

'Coriskin call the dark lake's name, 340
Coolin the ridge, as bards proclaim,
From old Cuchullin, chief of fame.
But bards, familiar in our isles

th Nature's frowns than smiles, air careless humors please
 e names from scenes like these.
 d Torquil were to show
 ms with their breasts of snow, y noble liege were nigh
 s Nurse sing lullaby! — 350
 ds — tall cliffs with breakers te,
 s — a torrent's roaring might — ur eye could see the mood
 rekin's whirlpool rude,
 s the Hag her whitened hood —
 our islesmen's fancy frames
 so stern fantastic names.'

XVII

the Bruce, 'And musing mind
 e a graver moral find.
 thy cliffs that heave on high 360
 id brows to middle sky,
 t to the sun or snow,
 ight can fade and nought can w
 not mark a monarch's fate, —
 th mid storms of strife and state,
 e's lowlier pleasures placed,
 rock, his heart a waste?
 and love and fear aloft
 his crowned head — But soft!
 ernaeth yon jutting crag 370
 rs and a slaughtered stag.
 they be? But late you said hese desert regions tread?' —

XVIII

— and believed in sooth,
 plied, 'I spoke the truth.
 spy, by yonder stone,
 — they mark us and come on;
 air badge on bonnet borne em of the land of Lorn,
 y liege.' — 'So let it be; 380 worse odds than five to three — or page can little aid;
 or battle thus arrayed,
 passage they contest;
 with two, I'll match the rest.' —
 y liege — for, by my life,
 I shall meet the treble strife;
 th, my skill in arms, more small,
 he loss should Ronald fall. en soon to soldiers grow, 390
 sword as well as bow,
 my monarch's order given,

Two shafts should make our number even.' —

'No! not to save my life!' he said;
 'Enough of blood rests on my head
 Too rashly spilled — we soon shall know,
 Whether they come as friend or foe.'

XIX

Nigh came the strangers and more nigh; —
 Still less they pleased the monarch's eye.
 Men were they all of evil mien, 400
 Down-looked, unwilling to be seen;
 They moved with half-resolved pace,
 And bent on earth each gloomy face.
 The foremost two were fair arrayed
 With brogue and bonnet, trews and plaid,
 And bore the arms of mountaineers, Daggers and broadswords, bows and spears.

The three that lagged small space behind
 Seemed serfs of more degraded kind;
 Goat-skins or deer-hides o'er them cast 410
 Made a rude fence against the blast;
 Their arms and feet and heads were bare,
 Matted their beards, unshorn their hair;
 For arms the caitiffs bore in hand
 A club, an axe, a rusty brand.

XX

Onward still mute, they kept the track; —
 'Tell who ye be, or else stand back,'
 Said Bruce; 'in deserts when they meet,
 Men pass not as in peaceful street.'
 Still at his stern command they stood, 420
 And proffered greeting brief and rude,
 But acted courtesy so ill
 As seemed of fear and not of will.
 'Wanderers we are, as you may be;
 Men hither driven by wind and sea,
 Who, if you list to taste our cheer,
 Will share with you this fallow deer.' —
 'If from the sea, where lies your bark?' —
 'Ten fathom deep in ocean dark!
 Wrecked yesternight: but we are men 430
 Who little sense of peril ken.
 The shades come down — the day is shut —
 Will you go with us to our hut?' —
 'Our vessel waits us in the bay;
 Thanks for your proffer — have good-
 day.' —
 'Was that your galley, then, which rode Not far from shore when evening glowed?' —
 'It was.' — 'Then spare your needless pain,

There will she now be sought in vain,
We saw her from the mountain head 440
When, with Saint George's blazon red
A southern vessel bore in sight,
And yours raised sail and took to flight.' —

XXI

'Now, by the road, unwelcome nows !'
Thus with Lord Ronald communed Bruce;
'Nor rests there light enough to show
It may their tale be true or no.
The men seem bred of churlish kind,
Yet mellow note have hardest rind;
We will go with them — food and fire 450
And sheltering roof our wants require.
Sure guard against treachery will we keep,
And watch by our own comrades' sleep. —
Good fellows, thanks, your guests we'll be,
And well will pay the courtesy
Come, lead us where your lodging lies —
Nay, wait ! we mix not company. —
Show us the path o'er crag and stone,
And we will follow you; — lead on.'

XXII

They reached the duncy cabin, made 460
Of oak against a rock displayed,
And there on entering found
A slender boy, whose form and mien
Blended with such savage scene,
In cap and cloak of velvet green,
Lone seated on the ground.
His garb was such as minstrels wear,
Dark velvet hose, and dark his hair,
His mouth and cheek was tanned by care,
His eyes in sorrow drowned. 470
'Whence, this poor boy ?' — As Ronald spoke.

The trace of anguish broke;
As if he had from ginsies dream,
He turned his head with start and scream,
And wildly gazed around;
Then to the wall his face he turned,
And his dark neck with blushes burned.

XXIII

'Whose is the boy ?' again he said.
'By chance I was our captive's maid;
He may be yours, if you should mind 480
That those his more than mine have found;
For though from earliest childhood mine,
The boy's heart never loved the mine,
And so he will not run away
And will not drive the mine away
For those who love each other.

For me the favoring breeze, when loud
It pipes upon the galley's shroud,
Makes blither melody.' —

'Hath he, then, sense of spoken sound ?' —
'Ay; so his mother bade us know, 490
A crows in our late shipwreck drowned,
And hence the silly stripling's woe.
More of the youth I cannot say,
Our captive but since yesterday;
When wind and weather waxed so grim,
We little listed think of him —
But why waste time in idle words ?
Sit to your cheer — unbelt your swords.'
Sudden the captive turned his head, 500
And one quick glance to Ronald sped.
It was a keen and warning look,
And well the chief the signal took.

XXIV

'Kind host,' he said, 'our needs require
A separate board and separate fire;
For know that on a pilgrimage
Wend I, my comrade, and this page.
And, sworn to vigil and to fast
Long as this halloved task shall last,
We never sluff the blade or sword, 510
Or feast us at a stranger's board,
And never share one common sleep,
But one must still his vigil keep.
Thus, for our separate use, good friend,
We'll hold this hut's remoter end' —
'A churlish vow,' the older said,
'And hard, methinks, to be altered.
How say you, I, to break the scorn
That pays our business men return.
We should refuse to share our meal' — 520
'Then say we that our swords are steel !
And our bow limbs is not to rest
Where gold or silver may buy rest' —
Their host's dark brow grew keen and
fell.

His teeth are clenched, his features swell;
Yet sink his brow's kindly gle.
Hence Lord Ronald's glance of fire,
Nor could his craven courage bide
The moment's entrance of his look.
With laugh constrained — 'Let every
man 530

Follow the fashion of his clan !
Each to his separate quarters keep,
And food or fast, at wake or sleep.

XXV

Their fire at separate distance burns,
By turns they eat, sleep guard by turns;

vil seemed that old man's eye,
 and designing, fierce yet shy.
 he avoided forward look,
 low and circumspectly took cling, never-ceasing glance, 540
 subt and cunning marked at once,
 h shot a mischief-boding ray under eyebrows shagged and gray.
 younger, too, who seemed his son,
 that dark look the timid shun;
 half-clad serfs behind them sate, cowed a glare 'twixt fear and hate —
 ll, as darkness onward crept, sed down, and seemed to sleep or slept.
 he, that boy, whose powerless
 tongue 550
 trust his eyes to wail his wrong,
 ger watch of sorrow made,
 stretched his limbs to slumber laid.

XXVI

a his dangerous host confides
 ing, but wary watch provides.
 d keeps ward till midnight past,
 wakes the king, young Allan last;
 ranked, to give the youthful page
 est required by tender age.
 is Lord Ronald's wakeful thought 560 use the languor toil had brought? — seem not that he deigned to throw care upon such coward foe — inks of lovely Isabel at her foeman's feet she fell,
 ess when, placed in princely selle,
 lanced on him with favoring eyes
 oodstock when he won the prize.
 fair in joy, in sorrow fair,
 de of place as mid despair, 570
 she alone engross his care.
 oughs to his betrothed bride,
 lith, turn — O, how decide,
 here his love and heart are given,
 there his faith stands plight to Heaven!
 owsy ward 't is his to keep,
 ldom lovers long for sleep.
 ang his midnight hymn the owl,
 ered the dog-fox with his howl,
 waked the king — at his request, 580
 Ronald stretched himself to rest.

XXVII

apell was good King Robert's, say,
 ive the weary night away?

His was the patriot's burning thought
 Of freedom's battle bravely fought,
 Of castles stormed, of cities freed,
 Of deep design and daring deed,
 Of England's roses reft and torn,
 And Scotland's cross in triumph worn,
 Of rout and rally, war and truce, — 590
 As heroes think, so thought the Bruce.
 No marvel, mid such musings high Sleep shunned the monarch's thoughtful
 eye.
 Now over Coolin's eastern head
 The grayish light begins to spread,
 The otter to his cavern drew,
 And clamored shrill the wakening mew;
 Then watched the page — to needful rest
 The king resigned his anxious breast.

XXVIII

To Allan's eyes was harder task 600
 The weary watch their safeties ask.
 He trimmed the fire and gave to shine
 With bickering light the splintered pine;
 Then gazed awhile where silent laid
 Their hosts were shrouded by the plaid.
 But little fear waked in his mind,
 For he was bred of martial kind,
 And, if to manhood he arrive,
 May match the boldest knight alive.
 Then thought he of his mother's tower, 610
 His little sister's greenwood bower,
 How there the Easter-gambols pass,
 And of Dan Joseph's lengthened mass.
 But still before his weary eye
 In rays prolonged the blazes die —
 Again he roused him — on the lake
 Looked forth where now the twilight-flake
 Of pale cold dawn began to wake.
 On Coolin's cliffs the mist lay furled,
 The morning breeze the lake had curled, 620
 The short dark waves, heaved to the land,
 With ceaseless plash kissed cliff or sand; —
 It was a slumbrous sound — he turned
 To tales at which his youth had burned,
 Of pilgrim's path by demon crossed,
 Of sprightly elf or yelling ghost,
 Of the wild witch's baneful cot,
 And mermaid's alabaster grot,
 Who bathes her limbs in sunless well
 Deep in Strathaird's enchanted cell. 630
 Thither in fancy rapt he flies,
 And on his sight the vaults arise;
 That hut's dark walls he sees no more,
 His foot is on the marble floor,
 And o'er his head the dazzling spars

Gleam like a firmament of stars! —
Hark! hears he not the sea-nymph speak
Her anger in that thrilling shriek! —
No! all too late, with Allan's dream
Mingled the captive's warning scream. 640
As from the ground he strives to start,
A ruffian's dagger finds his heart!
Upwards he casts his dizzy eyes —
Murmurs his master's name — and dies!

XXIX

Not so awoke the king! his hand
Snatched from the flame a knotted brand,
The nearest weapon of his wrath;
With this he crossed the murderer's path
And avenged young Allan well!
The spattered brain and bobbing blood 650
Hissed on the half-extinguished wood,
The miscreant gasped and fell!
Nor rose in peace the Island Lord;
One cavalier died upon his sword,
And one beneath his grasp lies prone
In mortal grapple overthrown.
But while Lord Ronald's dagger drank
The life-blood from his panting flank,
The father-ruffian of the band
Behind him rears a coward hand! — 660
O for a moment's aid,
Till Bruce, who deals no double blow,
Dash to the earth another foe,
Above his comrade laid! —
And it is gained — the captive sprung
On the raised arm and closely clung,
And ere he shook him loose,
The mastered felon pressed the ground,
And gasped beneath a mortal wound,
While o'er him stands the Bruce. 670

XXX

'Miscreant! while lasts thy fitting spark,
Give me to know the purpose dark
That armed thy hand with murderous knife
Against offenceless stranger's life?' —
'No, stranger thou!' with accent fell,
Murmured the wretch; 'I know thee well,
And know thee for the foe-man sworn
Of my high chief, the mighty Lorn' —
'Speak yet again, and speak the truth
For thy soul's sake! — from whence this
death?' 680
His country, birth, and name declare,
And thus one evil deed repair.' —
'Yet me no more! — my blood runs
cold —

No more I know than I have told.
We found him in a bark we sought
With different purpose — and I thought' —
Fate cut him short; in blood and broil,
As he had lived, died Cormac Doil.

XXXI

Then resting on his bloody blade,
The valiant Bruce to Ronald said, 690
'Now shame upon us both! — that boy
Lifts his mate's face to heaven
And clasps his hands, to testify
His gratitude to God on high
For strange deliverance given.
His speechless gesture thanks hath paid,
Which our free tongues have left unsaid!'
He raised the youth with kindly word,
But marked him shudder at the sword:
He cleansed it from its hue of death, 700
And plunged the weapon in its sheath.
'Alas, poor child! unfitting part
Fate doomed when with so soft a heart
And form so slight as thine
She made thee first a pirate's slave,
Then in his stead a patron gave
Of wayward lot like mine;
A landless prince, whose wandering life
Is but one scene of blood and strife —
Yet scant of friends the Bruce shall be, 710
But be 'till find resting-place for thee. —
Come, noble Ronald! o'er the dead
Enough thy generous grief is paid,
And well has Allan's fate been wroked;
Come, wend we hence — the day has broke
Seek we our bark — I trust the tale
Was false that she had hoisted sail.'

XXXII

Yet, ere they left that charnel-cell,
The Island Lord bade sad farewell
To Allan: 'Who shall tell this tale,' 720
He said, 'in halls of Donagale?'
O, who his widowed mother tell
That, ere his bloom, her fairest fell? —
Rest thee, poor youth! and trust my care
For mass and knell and funeral prayer;
While o'er those cavaliers where they lie
The wolf shall snarl, the raven cry!'
And now the eastern mountain's head
On the dark lake threw lustre red;
Bright gleams of gold and purple streak 730
Ravine and precipice and peak —
So earthly power at distance shows;
Reveals his splendour, hides his woes.
O'er sheets of granite, dark and broad,

Rent and unequal, lay the road.
In sad discourse the warriors wind,
And the mute captive moves behind.

CANTO FOURTH

I

STRANGER! if e'er thine ardent step hath traced
The northern realms of ancient Caledon,
Where the proud Queen of Wilderness hath placed
By lake and cataract her lonely throne,
Sublime but sad delight thy soul hath
known,
Gazing on pathless glen and mountain
high,
Listing where from the cliffs the torrents
thrown
Mingle their echoes with the eagle's cry,
And with the sounding lake and with the mouning sky.

Yes! 't was sublime, but sad. — The loneliness<sup>10</sup>
Loaded thy heart, the desert tired thine
eye;
And strange and awful fears began to press
Thy bosom with a stern solemnity.
Then hast thou wished some woodman's
cottage nigh,
Something that showed of life, though
low and mean;
Glad sight, its curling wreath of smoke
to spy,
Glad sound, its cock's blithe carol would have been,
Or children whooping wild beneath the willows green.

Such are the scenes where savage grandeur wakes
An awful thrill that softens into sighs;<sup>20</sup>
Such feelings rouse them by dim Ran-noch's lakes,
In dark Glencoe such gloomy raptures
rise:
Or farther, where beneath the northern
skies
Chides wild Loch-Eribol his caverns
hoar —
But, be the minstrel judge, they yield the prize

Of desert dignity to that dread shore
That sees grim Coolin rise and hears Coriskin roar.

II

Through such wild scenes the champion
passed,
When bold halloo and bugle-blast
Upon the breeze came loud and fast.<sup>30</sup>
'There,' said the Bruce, 'rung Edward's
horn!
What can have caused such brief return?
And see, brave Ronald, — see him dart
O'er stock and stone like hunted hart,
Precipitate, as is the use,
In war or sport, of Edward Bruce.
He marks us, and his eager cry
Will tell his news ere he be nigh.'

III

Loud Edward shouts, 'What make ye
here,
Warring upon the mountain-deer,<sup>40</sup>
When Scotland wants her king?
A bark from Lennox crossed our track,
With her in speed I hurried back,
These joyful news to bring —
The Stuart stirs in Teviotdale,
And Douglas wakes his native vale;
Thy storm-tossed fleet hath won its way
With little loss to Brodick-Bay,
And Lennox with a gallant band
Waits but thy coming and command<sup>50</sup>
To waft them o'er to Carrick strand.
There are blithe news! — but mark the
close!
Edward, the deadliest of our foes,
As with his host he northward passed,
Hath on the borders breathed his last.'

IV

Still stood the Bruce — his steady cheek
Was little wont his joy to speak,
But then his color rose: —
'Now, Scotland! shortly shalt thou see,
With God's high will, thy children free<sup>60</sup>
And vengeance on thy foes!
Yet to no sense of selfish wrongs,
Bear witness with me, Heaven, belongs
My joy o'er Edward's bier;
I took my knighthood at his hand,
And lordship held of him and land,
And well may vouch it here,
That, blot the story from his page
Of Scotland ruined in his rage,

You read a monarch brave and sage 70
 And to his people dear.' —
 'Let London's burghers mourn her lord
 And Croydon monks his praise record,'
 The eager Edward said;
 'Eternal as his own, my hate
 Surmounts the bounds of mortal fate
 And dies not with the dead!
 Such hate was his on Solway's strand
 When vengeance clenched his palsied hand,
 That pointed yet to Scotland's land, 80
 As his last accents prayed
 Disgrace and curse upon his heir
 If he one Scottish head should spare
 Till stretched upon the bloody lair
 Each rebel corpse was laid!
 Such hate was his when his last breath
 Renounced the peaceful house of death,
 And bade his bones to Scotland's coast
 Be borne by his remorseless host,
 As if his dead and stony eye 90
 Could still enjoy her misery!
 Such hate was his — dark, deadly, long;
 Mine — as enduring, deep, and strong!' —

V

'Let women, Edward, war with words,
 With curses monks, but men with swords:
 Nor doubt of living foes to sate
 Deepest revenge and deadliest hate.
 Now to the sea! Behold the beach,
 And see the galley's pendants stretch
 Their fluttering length down favoring 100
 gale!
 Aboard, aboard! and hoist the sail.
 Hold we our way for Arran first,
 Where meet in arms our friends dispersed;
 Lennox the loyal, De la Haye,
 And Boyd the bold in battle fray.
 I long the hardy band to lead,
 And see once more my standard spread. —
 Does noble Ronald share our course,
 Or stay to raise his island force?' —
 'Come woe, come woe, by Bruce's 110
 side.'
 Replied the chief, 'will Ronald bide.
 And since two galleys yonder ride,
 Be mine, to please my bege, dismissed
 To wake to arms the clans of Uist,
 And all who hear the Minche's roar
 On the Long Island's lonely shore,
 The nearer Isles with slight delay
 Ourselves may summon in our way;
 And soon on Arran's shore shall meet 120
 With Torquil's and a gallant fleet,

If aught avails their chieftain's best
 Among the ialesmen of the west.'

VI

Thus was their venturous council said.
 But, ere their sails the galleys spread,
 Coriskin dark and Coolin high
 Echord the dirge's doleful cry.
 Along that sable lake passed slow —
 Fit scene for such a sight of woe —
 The sorrowing islesmen as they bore 130
 The murdered Allan to the shore.
 At every pause with dismal shout
 Their coronach of grief rung out,
 And ever when they moved again
 The pipes resumed their clamorous strain,
 And with the pibroch's shrilling wail
 Mourned the young heir of Donagaile.
 Round and around, from cliff and cave
 His answer stern old Coolin gave,
 Till high upon his misty side 140
 Languished the mournful notes and died.
 For never sounds by mortal made
 Attained his high and haggard head,
 That echoes but the tempest's moan
 Or the deep thunder's rending groan.

VII

Merrily, merrily bounds the bark,
 She bounds before the gale,
 The mountain breeze from Ben-na-daroh
 Is joyous in her sail!
 With fluttering sound like laughter hoarse
 The cords and canvas strain, 150
 The waves, divided by her force.
 In rippling eddies chased her course,
 As if they laughed again.
 Not down the breeze more blithely flew,
 Skimming the wave, the light sea-mew
 Than the gay galley bore
 Her course upon that favoring wind,
 And Coolin's crest has sunk behind
 And Slapin's caverned shore.
 'T was then that warlike signals wake 160
 Dunseath's dark towers and Eisdor's lake,
 And soon from Cavigarnagh's head Thick wreaths of eddying smoke were spread:
 A summons these of war and wrath
 To the brave clans of Sleat and Strath,
 And ready at the sight
 Each warrior to his weapon sprang
 And targe upon his shoulder flung,
 Impatient for the fight.
 Mac-Kianon's chief, in warfare gray, 170 to muster their array their barks to Brodick Bay.

VIII

Ronald's high command,
gleamed o'er sea and land
na's tower, that, steep and gray,
nest o'erhangs the bay.
he giddy crag to climb
the turret scathed by time;
of doubt and fear
out goat or mountain-deer. 180
thee on the silver beach,
the aged herdsman teach
de of former day;
a wild clamor he shall chide,
thy seat by ocean's side
ried plaid display;
d how with their chieftain came at times a foreign dame
nder turret gray.
her lord's suspicious mind 190
rude a jail confined and fair a thrall!
ben moon on ocean slept
y lady sate and wept
e castle-wall,
d her eye to southern climes,
ht perchance of happier times,
ed her lute by fits, and sung
is in her native tongue.
hen on the cliff and bay 200
pale the moonbeams play,
ry breeze is mute,
one Hebridean's ear
range pleasure mixed with fear, n that cliff he seems to hear mur of a lute
as of a captive lone rns her woes in tongue un-
wn. —
the tale — but all too long
th it staid the song — 210
may pass them by,
and tower in ruins gray,
ir hapless tenant pay
ute of a sigh?

IX

merrily bounds the bark broad ocean driven,
y Ronin's mountains dark roman's hand hath given.
s mountains dark have sent aters to the shore, 220

And each his ashen bow unbent,
And gave his pastime o'er,
And at the Island Lord's command
For hunting spear took warrior's brand.
On Scooreigg next a warning light
Summoned her warriors to the fight;
A numerous race ere stern MacLeod
O'er their bleak shores in vengeance
strode,
When all in vain the ocean-cave
Its refuge to his victims gave. 230
The chief, relentless in his wrath,
With blazing heath blockades the path;
In dense and stifling volumes rolled,
The vapor filled the caverned hold!
The warrior-threat, the infant's plain,
The mother's screams, were heard in vain;
The vengeful chief maintains his fires
Till in the vault a tribe expires!
The bones which strew that cavern's gloom
Too well attest their dismal doom. 240

X

Merrily, merrily goes the bark
On a breeze from the northward free,
So shoots through the morning sky the lark,
Or the swan through the summer sea.
The shores of Mull on the eastward lay,
And Ulva dark and Colonsay,
And all the group of islets gay
That guard famed Staffa round.
Then all unknown its columns rose
Where dark and undisturbed repose 250
The cormorant had found,
And the shy seal had quiet home
And weltered in that wondrous dome
Where, as to shame the temples decked
By skill of earthly architect,
Nature herself, it seemed, would raise
A minster to her Maker's praise!
Not for a meaner use ascend
Her columns or her arches bend;
Nor of a theme less solemn tells 260
That mighty surge that ebbs and swells,
And still, between each awful pause,
From the high vault an answer draws
In varied tone prolonged and high
That mocks the organ's melody.
Nor doth its entrance front in vain
To old Iona's holy fane,
That Nature's voice might seem to say,
'Well hast thou done, frail child of clay!
Thy humble powers that stately shrine 270
Tasked high and hard — but witness mine!'

XI

Merrily, merrily goes the bark,
Before the gale she bounds;
So darts the dolphin from the shark,
Or the deer before the hounds.
They left Loch-Iua on their lee,
And they awakened the men of the wild

Three,
And the chief of the sandy Coll;
They passed not at Columba's isle. 25
Though peaked the bells from the holy poles,

With long and measured toll;
No time for woe or for mirth,
And the sounds of the holy summons pass
Away in the hollow's roll.

Loathsome's thence and warlike lord
That signal saw and grasped his sword,
And whispering lay called her lord.
And the clans of Iona's rugged coast
Heard Ronald's call afar.

And Neala's isle, whose tortured shore 30
Still rings to Columba's roar,
And moody Colonsay, —

Scarcely e'er he here who sings no more!
His bright and hoarse career is o'er,

And mute his coward strains,
Quenched is his lamp of varied love
That lit the light of song to pour;
A martyr and a deathly shore.

His LADYMAN'S cold remains!

XII

From the breast blows merrily, 35
For a gale ploughs to meet the sea.
Long wandering, wild Cantors, they meet
The southern frontier's watchful fleet.

Their hair untroubled now,
On Tairn's western lake they bave,
Then dragged their bark the wretched o'er,
As far as Kilmacmillan's shore

Under the ocean lay
I saw a woman, light to see,
Tremble and purple glaze her face, 40
High raised above the greenwood tree,

As in the last the pale moon
Pierced the night and older groves
Deep regions from the silent sign

The moon's mountain overdrive,
For ancient legend told the tale
The woman was her church's coil
That Kilmacmillan's moon

Oh, after death a light prevail
And ever for death's fair and good 45
Before her silver Cross.

XIII

Now launched once more, the inland sea
They furrow with fair angury,
And steer for Arran's isle;

The sun, ere yet he sunk behind
Ben-Ghool, 'the Mountain of the Wind,'
Gave his grim peaks a greeting kind,
And bade Loch Ranza smile.

Thither their destined course they drew;
It seemed the isle her monarch knew, 50
So brilliant was the landward view,

The ocean so serene:
Each part wave in diamonds rolled
O'er the calm deep where hues of gold
With azure strove and green.

The hill, the vale, the tree, the tower,
Gleamed with the tints of evening's hour,
The heart was silver shewn.

The wind breathed soft as lover's sigh,
And oft renewed seemed oft to die, 55
With breathless pause between.

O, who with speed of war and woe
Would wish to break the soft repose
Of such enchanting scene?

XIV

Is it of war Lord Ronald speaks?

The blood that gives his manly cheeks,
The tinge look, and downward eye,

And faltering voice the theme deny
And good King Robert's brow expressed
His pondered, e'er some high request, 60
As doubtful it appears.

Yet is his eye and lip the while Dwelt the half-smiling glance and smile
Which maddens, grace, maim beguile
What lover's tale of love.

Answered him the Lord Ronald pled;
And for my head, he said, to sail,

My love has been the rumour spread
Of love from Arran's head

The hand he said — I claim no right 65
To blame her for her heart's flight.

He too has happiness he said —
He who has lost the husband's hand

And love reveals his promise slight
In the reproachful shadow's sign —

When I told me father's hand,
I thought of all I could — my hand —

I was reproachful with count
Mine heart, which I must assert,

And more the feelings of my heart, 70
In the old tale, my father's hand.

After the silence Lord

XV

g Lord,' the royal Bruce replied, question must the Church decide;
sm it hard, since rumors state
takes Clifford for her mate, ry tie which she hath broke
e should still be binding yoke.
r my sister Isabel — ood of woman who can tell? 380
s the Champion of the Rock,
ious in the tourney shock,
might unknown to whom the prize
alt, — had favor in her eyes;
ce our brother Nigel's fate,
ined house and hapless state,
worldly joy and hope estranged,
is the hapless mourner changed.
nce,' here smiled the noble King, tale may other musings bring. 390
hall we know — yon mountains hide
tle convent of Saint Bride;
sent by Edward, she must stay
te shall give more prosperous day;
ither will I bear thy suit,
ill thine advocate be mute.'

XVI

as they talked in earnest mood,
peechless boy beside them stood.
uped his head against the mast,
itter sobs came thick and fast, 400
f that would not be repressed
emed to burst his youthful breast.
nds against his forehead held
y force his tears repelled, rough his fingers long and slight illed the drops of crystal bright.
d, who walked the deck apart,
pied this conflict of the heart.
ttless as brave, with bluntness kind ight to cheer the sorrower's mind; 410 ce the slender hand he drew those poor eyes that streamed with
dew.
his hold the stripling strove —
s a rough grasp, though meant in love —
his tears the warrior swept,
de shame on him that he wept.
dd to Heaven thy helpless tongue tell me who hath wrought thee
wrong!
ere he of our crew the best,
suit went not unredressed. 420
sheer thee; thou art now of age

To be a warrior's gallant page;
Thou shalt be mine! — a palfrey fair
O'er hill and holt my boy shall bear,
To hold my bow in hunting grove,
Or speed on errand to my love;
For well I wot thou wilt not tell
The temple where my wishes dwell.'

XVII

Bruce interposed, 'Gay Edward, no,
This is no youth to hold thy bow, 430
To fill thy goblet, or to bear
Thy message light to lighter fair.
Thou art a patron all too wild
And thoughtless for this orphan child.
See'st thou not how apart he steals,
Keeps lonely couch, and lonely meals?
Fitter by far in yon calm cell
To tend our sister Isabel,
With father Augustine to share
The peaceful change of convent prayer, 440
Than wander wild adventures through With such a reckless guide as you.' — 'Thanks, brother!' Edward answered
gay,

'For the high laud thy words convey!
But we may learn some future day,
If thou or I can this poor boy
Protect the best or best employ.
Meanwhile, our vessel nears the strand;
Launch we the boat and seek the land.'

XVIII

To land King Robert lightly sprung, 450
And thrice aloud his bugle rung
With note prolonged and varied strain
Till bold Ben-Ghoil replied again.
Good Douglas then and De la Hays
Had in a glen a hart at bay,
And Lennox cheered the laggard hounds,
When waked that horn the greenwood bounds.
'It is the foe!' cried Boyd, who came In breathless haste with eye of flame, —
'It is the foe! — Each valiant lord 460
Fling by his bow and grasp his sword!'
'Not so,' replied the good Lord James,
'That blast no English bugle claims.
Oft have I heard it fire the fight,
Cheer the pursuit, or stop the flight.
Dead were my heart and deaf mine ear,
If Bruce should call nor Douglas hear!
Each to Loch Ranza's margin spring;
That blast was winded by the king!'

XIX

Fast to their mates the tidings spread, 470
 And fast to shore the warriors sped.
 Bursting from glen and greenwood tree,
 High waked their loyal jubilee !
 Around the royal Bruce they crowd,
 And clasped his hands, and wept aloud.
 Veterans of early fields were there,
 Whose helmets pressed their hoary hair,
 Whose swords and axes bore a stain
 From life-blood of the red-haired Dane;
 And boys whose hands scarce brooked to
 wield 480

The heavy sword or bossy shield.
 Men too were there that bore the scars
 Impressed in Albyn's woful wars,
 At Falkirk's fierce and fatal fight,
 Teyndrum's dread rout, and Methven's flight;

The might of Douglas there was seen,
 There Lennox with his graceful mien;
 Kirkpatrick, Closeburn's dreaded Knight;
 The Lindsay, fiery, fierce, and light;
 The heir of murdered De la Haye. 490
 And Boyd the grave, and Seton gay.
 Around their king regained they pressed,
 Wept, shouted, clasped him to their breast,
 And young and old, and serf and lord,
 And he who ne'er unsheathed a sword,
 And he in many a peril tried,
 Alike resolved the brunt to bide,
 And live or die by Bruce's side !

XX

O War ! thou hast thy fierce delight,
 Thy gleams of joy, intensely bright ! 500
 Such gleams as from thy polished shield
 Fly dazling o'er the battle-field !
 Such transports wake, severe and high,
 Amid the pealing conquest cry;
 Scarce less, when after battle lost
 Muster the remnants of a host.
 And as each comrade's name they tell
 Who in the well-fought conflict fell,
 Knitting stern brow o'er flashing eye,
 Vow to avenge them or to die ! — 510
 Warriors ! — and where are warriors found,
 If not on martial Britain's ground ?
 And who, when waked with note of fire,
 Love more than they the British lyre ? —
 Know ye not, — hearts to honor dear !
 That joy, deep-thrilling, stern, severe,
 At which the heart-strings vibrate high,
 And wake the fountains of the eye ?

And blame ye then the Bruce if trace
 Of tear is on his manly face 520
 When, scanty relics of the train
 That hailed at Scone his early reign,
 This patriot hand around him hung,
 And to his knees and bosom clung ? — Blame ye the Bruce ? — His brother blamed,

But shared the weakness, while ashamed
 With haughty laugh his head he turned,
 And dashed away the tear he scorned.

XXI

'T is morning, and the convent bell
 Long time had ceased its matin knell 530
 Within thy walls, Saint Bride !
 An aged sister sought the cell
 Assigned to Lady Isabel,
 And hurriedly she cried,
 'Haste, gentle Lady, haste ! — there waits
 A noble stranger at the gates;
 Saint Bride's poor votaress ne'er has seen
 A knight of such a princely mien;
 His errand, as he bade me tell,
 Is with the Lady Isabel.' 540
 The princess rose, — for on her knee
 Low bent she told her rosary, —
 'Let him by thee his purpose teach;
 I may not give a stranger speech.' —
 'Saint Bride forefend, thou royal maid !'
 The portress crossed herself and said,
 'Not to be Prioress might I Debate his will, his suit deny.' —
 'Has earthly show then, simple fool,
 Power o'er a sister of thy rule ? 550
 And art thou, like the worldly train,
 Subdued by splendors light and vain ?'

XXII

'No, lady ! in old eyes like mine,
 Gauds have no glitter, gems no shine;
 Nor grace his rank attendants vain,
 One youthful page is all his train.
 It is the form, the eye, the word,
 The bearing of that stranger lord;
 His stature, manly, bold, and tall,
 Built like a castle's battled wall, 560
 Yet moulded in such just degrees,
 His giant-strength seems lightsome ease.
 Close as the tendrils of the vine
 His locks upon his forehead twine,
 Jet-black save where some touch of gray
 Has ta'en the youthful hue away.
 Weather and war their rougher trace
 Have left on that majestic face ; —

a dignity of eye !
 suppliant, would I fly, 570
 d danger, wrongs, and grief,
 hy, redress, relief —
 e, if guilty, would I dread
 the doom that spoke me dead !
 enough,' the Princess cried,
 land's hope, her joy, her pride !
 front was ne'er assigned ary o'er the common mind —
 thy high designs to aid,
 O Heaven ! how long de- 580 id ! —
 na, haste, to introduce y brother, royal Bruce !'

XXIII

like friends who part in pain,
 in doubtful hope again.
 subdued that fitful swell, surveyed the humble cell —
 is thine, poor Isabel ! —
 t-couch and naked wall,
 f state and bed of pall;
 robes and jewels rare, 590
 f beads and zone of hair;
 a trumpet's sprightly call
 r banquet, grove or hall,
 grim voice divides thy care, rs of penitence and prayer ! —
 ee, my royal claim
 First David's sainted name !
 thee, that while he sought thy brother feebly fought !'

XXIV

these vain regrets aside, 600
 s unshaken Bruce !' she cried ;
 I glory to have shared thy venturous spirit dared,
 ing first thy valiant band
 f thy native land,
 fair Fortune set me down
 r of an empire's crown.
 s not that on pleasure's stream
 drive in giddy dream,
 n the erring pilot knew, 610
 the gulf the vessel drew,
 with judgments stern and great,
 s ruin, thy defeat,
 l's death, till tamed I own
 are fixed on Heaven alone;
 all earthly prospects win
 to this vain world of sin.'

XXV

'Nay, Isabel, for such stern choice
 First wilt thou wait thy brother's voice;
 Then ponder if in convent scene 620
 No softer thoughts might intervene —
 Say they were of that unknown knight,
 Victor in Woodstock's tourney-fight —
 Nay, if his name such blush you owe,
 Victorious o'er a fairer foe !
 Truly his penetrating eye
 Hath caught that blush's passing dye, —
 Like the last beam of evening thrown
 On a white cloud, — just seen and gone.
 Soon with calm cheek and steady eye 630
 The princess made composed reply:
 'I guess my brother's meaning well;
 For not so silent is the cell
 But we have heard the islemen all
 Arm in thy cause at Ronald's call,
 And mine eye proves that knight unknown
 And the brave Island Lord are one.
 Had then his suit been earlier made,
 In his own name with thee to aid —
 But that his plighted faith forbade — 640
 I know not — But thy page so near ? —
 This is no tale for menial's ear.'

XXVI

Still stood that page, as far apart
 As the small cell would space afford;
 With dizzy eye and bursting heart
 He leant his weight on Bruce's sword,
 The monarch's mantle too he bore,
 And drew the fold his visage o'er.
 'Fear not for him — in murderous strife,'
 Said Bruce, 'his warning saved my life; 650
 Full seldom parts he from my side,
 And in his silence I confide,
 Since he can tell no tale again.
 He is a boy of gentle strain,
 And I have purposed he shall dwell
 In Augustine the chaplain's cell
 And wait on thee, my Isabel. —
 Mind not his tears; I've seen them flow,
 As in the thaw dissolves the snow.
 'T is a kind youth, but fanciful, 660
 Unfit against the tide to pull,
 And those that with the Bruce would
 sail
 Must learn to strive with stream and gale.
 But forward, gentle Isabel —
 My answer for Lord Ronald tell.'

XXVII

'This answer be to Ronald given —
 The heart he asks is fixed on heaven.
 My love was like a summer flower
 That withered in the wintry hour,
 Even bud of vanity and pride,
 And with these sunny visions died.
 If further press his suit — then say
 He should his plighted truth obey.
 Truth plighted both with ring and word,
 And sworn on crucifix and sword. —
 O, shame thee, Robert! I have seen Thou hast a woman's guardian been!
 Even in extremity's dread hour,
 When pressed on thee the Southern power,
 And safety, to all human sight,
 Was only found in rapid flight,
 Thou heard'st a wretched female plain
 In agony of travail-pain,
 And thou didst bid thy little band
 Upon the instant turn and stand,
 And dare the worst the foe might do
 Rather than, like a knight untrue,
 Leave to pursuers merciless
 A woman in her last distress.
 And wilt thou now deny thine aid
 To an oppressed and injured maid,
 Even plead for Ronald's perfidy
 And press his fickle faith on me? —
 So witness Heaven, as true I vow,
 Had I those earthly feelings now
 Which could my former bosom move
 Ere taught to set its hopes above,
 I'd spurn each proffer he could bring
 Till at my feet he laid the ring,
 The ring and spousal contract both.
 And fair acquittal of his oath.
 By her who brooks his perjured scorn,
 The ill-requited Maid of Lorn!'

XXVIII

With sudden impulse forward sprung
 The page and on her neck he hung;
 Then, recollected instantly,
 His head he stooped and bent his knee,
 Kissed twice the hand of Isabel.
 Arose, and sudden left the cell —
 The princess, loosened from his hold,
 Blushed angry at his bearing bold;
 But good King Robert cried,
 'Chafe not — by signs he speaks his mind,
 He heard the plan my care designed,
 Nor could his transports hide —
 But, sister, now bethink thee well;
 No easy choice the convent cell;

Trust, I shall play no tyrant part,
 Either to force thy hand or heart,
 Or suffer that Lord Ronald scorn
 Or wrong for thee the Maid of Lorn.
 But think, — not long the time has been,
 That thou wert wont to sigh unseen,
 And wouldst the dainties best approve
 That told some lay of hapless love.
 Now are thy wishes in thy power,
 And thou art bent on cloister bower!
 O, if our Edward knew the change,
 How would his busy satire range,
 With many a sarcasm varied still
 On woman's wish and woman's will!'

XXIX

'Brother, I well believe,' she said,
 'Even so would Edward's part be played
 Kindly in heart, in word severe,
 A foe to thought and grief and fear,
 He holds his humor uncontrolled;
 But thou art of another mould.
 Say then to Ronald, as I say,
 Unless before my feet he lay
 The ring which bound the faith
 I swore,
 By Edith freely yielded o'er.
 He moves his suit to me no more.
 Nor do I promise, even if now
 He stood absolved of spousal vow,
 That I would change my purpose made
 To shelter me in holy shade. —
 Brother, for little space, farewell!
 To other duties warns the bell.'

XXX

'Lost to the world,' King Robert said,
 When he had left the royal maid,
 'Lost to the world by lot severe,
 O, what a gem lies buried here,
 Nipped by misfortune's cruel frost,
 The buds of fair affection lost! —
 But what have I with love to do?
 Far sterner cares my lot pursue.
 Pent in this isle we may not lie,
 Nor would it long our wants supply.
 Right opposite, the mainland towers
 Of my own Turnberry court our power;
 Might not my father's bondsman hour,
 Unlibert, who dwells upon the shore,
 Kindle a signal-flame to show
 The true propitious for the blow?
 It shall be so — some friend shall bear
 Our mandate with despatch and care;

Edward shall find the messenger.
 That fortress ours, the island fleet
 May on the coast of Carrick meet. —
 O Scotland I shall it e'er be mine 770
 To wreak thy wrongs in battle-line,
 To raise my victor-head, and see
 Thy hills, thy dales, thy people free, —
 That glance of bliss is all I crave
 Betwixt my labors and my grave !'
 Then down the hill he slowly went,
 Oft pausing on the steep descent,
 And reached the spot where his bold
 train
 Held rustic camp upon the plain.

CANTO FIFTH

I

On fair Loch-Ranza streamed the early
 day,
 Thin wreaths of cottage-smoke are upward curled
 From the lone hamlet which her inland
 bay
 And circling mountains sever from the world.
 And there the fisherman his sail unfurled,
 The goat-herd drove his kids to steep
 Ben-Ghoil,
 Before the hut the dame her spindle
 twirled,
 Courting the sunbeam as she plied her
 toil, —
 For, wake where'er he may, man wakes to care and coil.
 But other duties called each convent
 maid, 10
 Roused by the summons of the moss-grown bell;
 Sung were the matins and the mass was
 said,
 And every sister sought her separate
 cell,
 Such was the rule, her rosary to tell.
 And Isabel has knelt in lonely prayer;
 The sunbeam through the narrow lattice
 fell
 Upon the snowy neck and long dark
 hair,
 As stooped her gentle head in meek devotion there.

II

She raised her eyes, that duty done,
 When glanced upon the pavement-stone, 20
 Gemmed and enchased, a golden ring,
 Bound to a scroll with silken string,
 With few brief words inscribed to tell,
 'This for the Lady Isabel.'
 Within the writing farther bore,
 'T was with this ring his plight he swore,
 With this his promise I restore;
 To her who can the heart command
 Well may I yield the plighted hand.
 And O, for better fortune born, 30
 Grudge not a passing sigh to mourn
 Her who was Edith once of Lorn !'
 One single flash of glad surprise
 Just glanced from Isabel's dark eyes,
 But vanished in the blush of shame
 That as its penance instant came.
 'O thought unworthy of my race !
 Selfish, ungenerous, mean, and base,
 A moment's throb of joy to own
 That rose upon her hopes o'erthrown ! — 40
 Thou pledge of vows too well believed,
 Of man ingrate and maid deceived,
 Think not thy lustre here shall gain
 Another heart to hope in vain !
 For thou shalt rest, thou tempting gaud,
 Where worldly thoughts are overawed,
 And worldly splendors sink debased.'
 Then by the cross the ring she placed.

III

Next rose the thought, — its owner far,
 How came it here through bolt and bar ? — 50
 But the dim lattice is ajar.
 She looks abroad, — the morning dew
 A light short step had brushed anew,
 And there were footprints seen
 On the carved buttress rising still,
 Till on the mossy window-sill
 Their track effaced the green.
 The ivy twigs were torn and frayed,
 As if some climber's steps to aid. —
 But who the hardy messenger 60 Whose venturous path these signs infer ? —
 'Strange doubts are mine ! — Mona, draw
 nigh ; —
 Nought 'scapes old Mona's curious eye —
 What strangers, gentle mother, say,
 Have sought these holy walls to-day ?'
 'None, lady, none of note or name ;

al clasp their harness light,
 nking spears, and axes bright,
 l helmets flashing high.
 o with unaccustomed ears 170 nage much unmeet he hears, ile, hastening all on board,
 rmy as the swelling surge nixed its roar, the leaders urge followers to the ocean verge in many a haughty word.

VIII

that wild throng the father
 ased,
 shed the royal Bruce at last.
 against a stranded boat approaching tide must float, 180
 nted every rippling wave
 r yet her sides they lave,
 the distant fire he eyed,
 er yet his hauberk tied,
 ened in its sheath his brand.
 and Lennox were at hand,
 and Ronald had the care
 liers to the barks to share. —
 nk approached and homage paid;
 t thou come,' King Robert said, 190 to bless us ere we part? — ge, and with a loyal heart! —
 r charge I have to tell, — ke the best of Isabel.
 y Saint Giles,' the monarch cried, moves me much! — this morning
 ide
 e stripling to Saint Bride
 y commandment there to bide.'
 r he came the portress showed, 199
 e, my liege, made brief abode.' —

IX

I,' said Edward, 'found employ r import for the boy.
 ndering in my anxious mind,
 g messenger to find thy written mandate o'er bert on the Carrick shore,
 d at early dawn to pass
 pel gate to snatch a mass.
 the stripling on a tomb
 ted, weeping for the doom 210
 ve his youth to convent gloom.
 y purpose and his eyes
 joyful at the glad surprise.
 ded to the skiff, the sail
 ead before a prosperous gale,

And well my charge he hath obeyed;
 For see! the ruddy signal made
 That Clifford with his merry-men all 219 Guards carelessly our father's hall.'

X

'O wild of thought and hard of heart!'
 Answered the monarch, 'on a part
 Of such deep danger to employ
 A mute, an orphan, and a boy!
 Unfit for flight, unfit for strife,
 Without a tongue to plead for life!
 Now, were my right restored by Heaven,
 Edward, my crown I would have given
 Ere, thrust on such adventure wild,
 I perilled thus the helpless child.'
 Offended half and half submiss, — 230
 'Brother and liege, of blame like this,'
 Edward replied, 'I little dreamed.
 A stranger messenger, I deemed,
 Might safest seek the beadsman's cell
 Where all thy squires are known so well.
 Noteless his presence, sharp his sense,
 His imperfection his defence.
 If seen, none can his errand guess;
 If ta'en, his words no tale express —
 Methinks, too, yonder beacon's shine 240
 Might expiate greater fault than mine.'
 'Rash,' said King Robert, 'was the deed —
 But it is done. Embark with speed! —
 Good father, say to Isabel
 How this unhappy chance befell;
 If well we thrive on yonder shore,
 Soon shall my care her page restore.
 Our greeting to our sister bear,
 And think of us in mass and prayer.'

XI

'Ay!' said the priest, 'while this poor
 hand 250
 Can chalice raise or cross command,
 While my old voice has accents' use,
 Can Augustine forget the Bruce!
 Then to his side Lord Ronald pressed,
 And whispered, 'Bear thou this request,
 That when by Bruce's side I fight
 For Scotland's crown and freedom's right,
 The princess grace her knight to bear
 Some token of her favoring care;
 It shall be shown where England's best 260
 May shrink to see it on my crest.
 And for the boy — since weightier care
 For royal Bruce the times prepare,
 The helpless youth is Ronald's charge,
 His couch my plaid, his fence my targe.'

He ceased: for many an eager hand
Had urged the lances from the strand.
Their number was a score and ten,
They bore thrice threescore chosen men.
With such small force did Bruce at last 270
The die for death or empire cast!

XII

Now on the darkening main afloat,
Ready and manned rocks every boat;
Beneath their oars the ocean's might
Was dashed to sparks of glimmering light.
Faint and more faint, as off they bore,
Their armor glanced against the shore,
And, mangled with the dashing tide,
Their murmuring voices distant died. —
‘God speed them!’ said the priest, as dark
On distant billows glides each bark; 280
‘O Heaven! when swords for freedom shine

And monarch's right, the cause is thine!
Edge doubly every patriot blow!
Beat down the banners of the foe!
And be it to the nations known,
That victory is from God alone!’
As up the hall his path he drew,
He turned his blessings to renew,
Oft turned till on the darkened coast 290
All traces of their course were lost;
Then slowly bent to Brodick tower
To shelter for the evening hour.

XIII

In night the fairy prospects sink
Where Cumray's isles with verdant link
Close the fair entrance of the Clyde;
The woods of Bute, no more desied,
Are gone — and on the placid sea
The rowers ply their task with glee,
While hands that knightly lances bore 300
Impatient and the laboring oar.
The half-faced moon shone dim and pale,
And glanced against the whitened sail;
But on that ruddy beacon-light
Each steersman kept the helm aright,
And oft, for such the king's command,
That all at once might reach the strand,
From boat to boat loud shout and hail
Warned them to crowd or slacken sail.
South and by west the armada bore, 310
And near at length the Carrick shore.
As less and less the distance grows,
High and more high the beacon rose;
The light that seemed a twinkling star
Now blazed portentous, fierce, and far.

Dark-red the heaven above it glowed,
Dark-red the sea beneath it flowed,
Red rose the rocks on ocean's brim,
In blood-red light her islets swim;
Wild scream the daziled sea-fowl gave,
Dropped from their crags on plashing wave
The deer to distant covert drew,
The black-cock deemed it day and crew.
Like some tall castle given to flame,
O'er half the land the lustre came.
‘Now, good my liege and brother sage,
What think ye of mine elfin page?’ —
‘Row on!’ the noble king replied,
‘We'll learn the truth whate'er betide;
Yet sure the beadsman and the child
Could ne'er have waked that beacon wild

XIV

With that the boats approached the land,
But Edward's grounded on the sand;
The eager knight leaped in the sea
Waist-deep and first on shore was he,
Though every barge's hardy band
Contented which should gain the land,
When that strange light, which seen afar
Seemed steady as the polar star,
Now, like a prophet's fiery chair,
Seemed travelling the realms of air.
Wide o'er the sky the splendor glows
As that portentous meteor rose;
Helm, axe, and falchion glittered bright,
And in the red and dusky light
His comrade's face each warrior saw,
Nor marvelled it was pale with awe.
Then high in air the beams were lost,
And darkness sunk upon the coast. —
Ronald to Heaven a prayer addressed,
And Douglas crossed his dauntless breast
‘Saint James protect us!’ Lennox cried
But reckless Edward spoke aside,
‘Deem'st thou, Kirkpatrick, in that flame
Red Comyn's angry spirit came,
Or would thy dauntless heart endure
Once more to make assurance sure?’ ‘Hush!’ said the Bruce; ‘we soon shall
know

If this be sorcerer's empty show
Or stratagem of southern foe.
The moon shines out — upon the sand
Let every leader rank his band.’

XV

Faintly the moon's pale beams supply
That ruddy light's unnatural dye;
The dubious cold reflection lay wet sands and quiet bay.

 h the rocks King Robert drew ttered files to order due,
 eld compact and serried spear
 ool light shone blue and clear. 370 own a path that sought the tide eechless page was seen to glide;
 It him lowly on the sand,
 ve a scroll to Robert's hand.
 th, the monarch cried, 'What, ho I all we Cuthbert's tidings know.'
 l news the letters bear, Clifford's force was strong and ware,
 nted too, that very morn,
 intaineers who came with Lorn. 380
 arrowed by oppressor's hand,
 e and faith had fled the land,
 er Carrick, dark and deep,
 nk dejection's iron sleep. —
 rt had seen that beacon flame,
 ing from what source it came.
 al of perilous event,
 l's mute messenger he sent,
 e deceived should venture o'er,
 n him from the fatal shore. 390

XVI

id the torch the leaders crowd,
 ead these chilling news aloud.
 council, nobles, have we now? —
 ash us in greenwood bough, re the chance which fate may send g our enterprise to end?
 l we turn us to the main is, and embark again?'
 ed fierce Edward, 'Hap what may,
 ick Carrick's lord must stay. 400
 l not minstrels told the tale
 e or meteor made us quail.'
 ed the Douglas, 'If my liege
 n you walls by storm or siege, ere each brave and patriot heart
 l of new for loyal part.'
 ed Lord Ronald, 'Not for shame
 I that aged Torquil came and, for all our empty boast,
 t a blow we fled the coast. 410
 ot credit that this land, ed for warlike heart and hand,
 tse of Wallace and of Bruce,
 ag with tyrants hold a truce.'
 we our fate: the brunt we'll bide I'
 l and Hays and Lennox cried;
 , so vowed the leaders all;
 e resolved: 'And in my hall

Since the bold Southern make their home,
 The hour of payment soon shall come, 420
 When with a rough and rugged host
 Clifford may reckon to his cost.
 Meantime, through well-known bosk and
 dell
 I'll lead where we may shelter well.'

XVII

Now ask you whence that wondrous light,
 Whose fairy glow beguiled their sight? —
 It ne'er was known — yet gray-haired old
 A superstitious credence hold
 That never did a mortal hand
 Wake its broad glare on Carrick strand; 430
 Nay, and that on the selfsame night
 When Bruce crossed o'er still gleams the
 light.
 Yearly it gleams o'er mount and moor
 And glittering wave and crimsoned shore —
 But whether beam celestial, lent
 By Heaven to aid the king's descent,
 Or fire hell-kindled from beneath
 To lure him to defeat and death,
 Or were it but some meteor strange
 Of such as oft through midnight range, 440
 Startling the traveller late and lone,
 I know not — and it ne'er was known.

XVIII

Now up the rocky pass they drew,
 And Ronald, to his promise true,
 Still made his arm the stripling's stay,
 To aid him on the rugged way.
 'Now cheer thee, simple Amadine!
 Why throbs that silly heart of thine?' —
 That name the pirates to their slave —
 In Gaelic 't is the Changeling — gave — 450
 'Dost thou not rest thee on my arm?
 Do not my plaid-folds hold thee warm?
 Hath not the wild bull's treble hide
 This targe for thee and me supplied?
 Is not Clan-Colla's sword of steel?
 And, trembler, canst thou terror feel?
 Cheer thee, and still that throbbing heart;
 From Ronald's guard thou shalt not
 part.' —
 O! many a shaft at random sent Finds mark the archer little meant! 460
 And many a word at random spoken
 May soothe or wound a heart that's broken!
 Half soothed, half grieved, half terrified,
 Close drew the page to Ronald's side;
 A wild delirious thrill of joy

Was in that hour of agony,
As up the steepy pass he strove,
Fear, toil, and sorrow, lost in love !

XIX

The barrier of that iron shore,
The rock's steep ledge, is now climbed

And from the castle's distant wall,
From tower to tower the warders call;
The sound swings over land and sea,
And marks a watchful enemy —
They gained the Chase, a wide domain
Left for the castle's sylvan reign —
Soot not the scene; the axe, the plough,
The harrow's dull fence, have marred it now,
But then soft swept in velvet green
The plain with many a glade between, 460
Whose tangled allers far invade
The depth of the brown forest shade.
Here the tall fern obscured the lawn,
Far shales for the sportive fawn.
There, nestled close with copsewood green,
Was many a swelling hillock seen;
And all around was verdure meet
For pressure of the farmer's feet.
The glossy holly loved the park,
The yew-tree lent its shadow dark, 470
And many an old oak, worn and bare,
With all its shivered boughs was there.
Lowly between, the moonbeams fell
On lawn and hillock, glade and dell.
The gallant monarch sighed to see
Those glades so loved in childhood free,
Beside him that as outlaw now
He ranged beneath the forest bough.

XX

Fast o'er the moonlight Chase they sped.
Well knew the band that measured
tread 480
When, in retreat or in advance,
The hurried warriors move at once;
And ever wary the look if down
They passed them on the open lawn.
Crosses they traverse, brooks they cross,
Stands up the bank and o'er the moss.
From the exhausted page's brow
Cold drops at last are streaming now;
With effort faint and lengthened pause,
His weary step the stripling draws, 490
'Nay, droop not yet !' the warrior said;
'Come, let me give thee ease and aid !
Strong are to no arms, and little ours —
A weight so slight as thine to bear —

What ! wilt thou not ? — capricious boy ! —
Then thine own limbs and strength employ.
Pass but this night and pass thy care,
I 'll place thee with a lady fair,
Where thou shalt tune thy lute to tell
How Ronald loves fair Isabel !'
Worn out, disheartened, and dismayed,
Here Amadine let go the plaid;
His trembling limbs their aid refuse,
He sunk among the midnight dews !

XXI

What may be done ? — the night is gone —
The Bruce's band moves swiftly on —
Eternal shame if at the brunt
Lord Ronald grace not battle's front ! —
'See yonder oak within whose trunk
Decay a darkened cell hath sunk ; 500
Enter and rest thee there a space,
Wrap in my plaid thy limbs, thy face.
I will not be, believe me, far,
But must not quit the ranks of war.
Well will I mark the bosky bourn,
And soon, to guard thee hence, return —
Nay, weep not so, thou simple boy !
But sleep it peace and wake in joy.'
In sylvan lodging close bestowed,
He placed the page and onward strode 510
With strength put forth o'er moss and
brook,
And soon the marching band o'ertook.

XXII

Thus strangely left, long sobbed and wept
The page till wearied out he slept —
A rough voice waked his dream — 'Nay,
here,
Here by this thicket passed the deer —
Beneath that oak old Ryno stand —
What have we here ?' — A Scottish plaid
And in its folds a stripling laid ? — Come forth ! thy name and business
tell ! 520
What, silent ? — then I guess thee well,
The spee that sought old Cuthbert's cell,
Wasted from Arran yester morn —
Come, comrades, we will straight return.
Our lord may choose the rack should teach
To the young lurcher use of speech.
The bow-string, till I lend him fast ! —
'Nay, but he weeps and stands aghast ;
I bound we 'll lend him, fear a not ;
'Tis a fax-stripling, though a Scot !' 530
The hunters to the castle sped,
And there the hapless captive led.

XXIII

Stout Clifford in the castle-court
 Prepared him for the morning sport;
 And now with Lorn held deep discourse,
 Now gave command for hound and horse.
 War-steeds and palfreys pawed the ground,
 And many a deer-dog howled around.
 To Amadine Lorn's well-known word
 Replying to that Southern lord, 570
 Mixed with this clanging din, might seem
 The phantasm of a fevered dream.
 The tone upon his ringing ears
 Came like the sounds which fancy hears
 When in rude waves or roaring winds
 Some words of woe the musér finds,
 Until more loudly and more near
 Their speech arrests the page's ear.

XXIV

'And was she thus,' said Clifford, 'lost?
 The priest should rue it to his cost! 580
 What says the monk?' — 'The holy sire
 Owns that in masquer's quaint attire
 She sought his skiff disguised, unknown
 To all except to him alone.
 But, says the priest, a bark from Lorn
 Laid them aboard that very morn,
 And pirates seized her for their pray.
 He proffered ransom gold to pay
 And they agreed — but ere told o'er,
 The winds blow loud, the billows roar; 590
 They severed and they met no more.
 He deems — such tempests vexed the coast —
 Ship, crew, and fugitive were lost.
 So let it be, with the disgrace
 And scandal of her lofty race!
 Thrice better she had ne'er been born
 Than brought her infamy on Lorn!'

XXV

Lord Clifford now the captive spied; —
 'Whom, Herbert, hast thou there?' he cried.
 'A spy we seized within the Chase, 600
 A hollow oak his lurking-place.' —
 'What tidings can the youth afford?' —
 'He plays the mute.' — 'Then noose a cord —
 Unless brave Lorn reverse the doom
 For his plaid's sake.' — 'Clan-Colla's loom,'
 Said Lorn, whose careless glances trace
 Rather the vesture than the face,

'Clan-Colla's dames such tartans twine;
 Wearer nor plaid claims care of mine.
 Give him, if my advice you crave, 610
 His own seathed oak; and let him wave
 In air unless, by terror wrung,
 A frank confession find his tongue. —
 Nor shall he die without his rite;
 Thou, Angus Roy, attend the sight,
 And give Clan-Colla's dirge thy breath
 As they convey him to his death.' —
 'O brother! cruel to the last!
 Through the poor captive's bosom passed
 The thought, but, to his purpose true, 620
 He said not, though he sighed, 'Adieu!'

XXVI

And will he keep his purpose still
 In sight of that last closing ill,
 When one poor breath, one single word,
 May freedom, safety, life, afford?
 Can he resist the instinctive call
 For life that bids us barter all? — Love, strong as death, his heart hath steeled,
 His nerves hath strung — he will not
 yield!
 Since that poor breath, that little word, 630
 May yield Lord Ronald to the sword. —
 Clan-Colla's dirge is pealing wide,
 The grisly headsman's by his side;
 Along the greenwood Chase they bend,
 And now their march has ghastly end!
 That old and shattered oak beneath,
 They destine for the place of death.
 What thoughts are his, while all in vain
 His eye for aid explores the plain?
 What thoughts, while with a dizzy ear 640
 He hears the death-prayer muttered near?
 And must he die such death accurst,
 Or will that bosom-secret burst?
 Cold on his brow breaks terror's dew,
 His trembling lips are livid blue;
 The agony of parting life
 Has nought to match that moment's strife!

XXVII

But other witnesses are nigh,
 Who mock at fear, and death defy!
 Soon as the dire lament was played 650
 It waked the lurking ambuscade.
 The Island Lord looked forth and spied
 The cause, and loud in fury cried,
 'By Heaven, they lead the page to die,
 And mock me in his agony!
 They shall aby it!' — On his arm

Bruce laid strong grasp, 'They shall not harm

A ringlet of the stripling's hair;
But till I give the word forbear. —
Douglas, lead fifty of our force 660
Up yonder hollow water-course,
And couch thee midway on the wold,
Between the flyers and their hold:
A spear above the copse displayed,
Be signal of the ambush made. —
Edward, with forty spearmen straight
Through yonder copse approach the gate,
And when thou hear'st the battle-din
Rush forward and the passage win,
Secure the drawbridge, storm the port, 670
And man and guard the castle-court. —
The rest move slowly forth with me,
In shelter of the forest-tree,
Till Douglas at his post I see.'

XXVIII

Like war-horse eager to rush on,
Compelled to wait the signal blown,
Hid, and scarce hid, by greenwood bough,
Trembling with rage stands Ronald now,
And in his grasp his sword gleams blue,
Soon to be dyed with deadlier hue. — 680
Meanwhile the Bruce with steady eye
Saw the dark death-train moving by,
And heedful measures oft the space
The Douglas and his hand must trace,
Ere they can reach their destined ground.
Now sinks the dirge's wailing sound,
Now cluster round the direful tree
That slow and solemn company,
While hymn mistuned and muttered
prayer

The victim for his fate prepare. — 690
What glances o'er the greenwood shade?
The spear that marks the ambushade! —
'Now, noble chief! I leave thee loose;
Upon them, Ronald!' said the Bruce.

XXIX

'The Bruce! the Bruce!' to well-known
cry

His native rocks and woods reply.
'The Bruce! the Bruce!' in that dread
word

The knell of hundred deaths was heard.
The astonished Southern gazed at first
Where the wild tempest was to burst 700
That waked in that presaging name.
Before, behind, around it came!
Half-armed, surprised, on every side

Hemmed in, hewed down, they bled and died.

Deep in the ring the Bruce engaged,
And fierce Clan-Colla's broadsword raged!
Full soon the few who fought were sped,
Nor better was their lot who fled
And met mid terror's wild career
The Douglas's redoubted spear! 710
Two hundred yeomen on that morn
The castle left, and none return.

XXX

Not on their flight pressed Ronald's brand,
A gentler duty claimed his hand.
He raised the page where on the plain
His fear had sunk him with the slain:
And twice that morn surprise well near
Betrayed the secret kept by fear;
Once when with life returning came
To the boy's lip Lord Ronald's name, 720
And hardly recollection drowned
The accents in a murmuring sound;
And once when scarce he could resist
The chieftain's care to loose the vest
Drawn tightly o'er his laboring breast.
But then the Bruce's bugle blew,
For martial work was yet to do.

XXXI

A harder task fierce Edward waits.
Ere signal given the castle gates
His fury had assailed; 730
Such was his wonted reckless mood,
Yet desperate valor oft made good,
Even by its daring, venture rude
Where prudence might have failed.
Upon the bridge his strength he threw,
And strook the iron chain in two,
By which its planks arose;
The warler next his axe's edge
Struck down upon the threshold ledge,
Twixt door and post a ghastly wedge! 740
The gate they may not close.

Well fought the Southern in the fray,
Clifford and Lorn fought well that day,
But stubborn Edward forced his way
Against a hundred foes.
Loud came the cry, 'The Bruce! the Bruce!'

No hope or in defence or trace, —
Fresh combatants pour in,
Mead with success and drunk with gore,
They drive the struggling foe before 750
And wait or win, they win.
Unsparring was the vengeful sword, limbs were lopped and life-blood

poured,
cry of death and conflict roared,
fearful was the din!
artling horses plunged and flung,
red the dogs till turrets rung, sunk the fearful cry
at a foeman was there found save those who on the ground sneaked in their agony! 760

XXXII

valiant Clifford is no more;
mald's broadsword streamed his gore.
After hap had he of Lorn,
by the foeman backward borne,
lined with slender train the port lay his bark beneath the fort,
cut the cable loose.
were his shrift in that debate,
hour of fury and of fate, 770
corn encountered Bruce!
long and loud the victor shout turret and from tower rung out,
rugged vaults replied;
rom the donjon tower on high men of Carrick may desery Andrew's cross in blazonry silver waving wide!

XXXIII

ruce bath won his father's hall! — come, brave friends and comrades all, come to mirth and joy! 781
at, the last, is welcome here, lord and chieftain, prince and peer,
his poor speechless boy.
God! once more my sire's abode
— behold the floor I trode ottering infancy!
ere the vaulted arch whose sound
d my joyous shout and bound hood, and that rung around 790
ruth's unthinking glee!
t to thee, all-gracious Heaven,
to my friends, my thanks be
given!' —
used a space, his brow he crossed — on the board his sword he tossed, saming hot; with Southern gore
hilt to point 't was crimsoned o'er.

XXXIV

g here,' he said, 'the mazers four ble fathers loved of yore.

Thrice let them circle round the board, 800
The pledge, fair Scotland's rights restored!

And he whose lip shall touch the wine
Without a vow as true as mine,
To hold both lands and life at nought
Until her freedom shall be bought, —
Be brand of a disloyal Scot
And lasting infamy his lot!
Sit, gentle friends! our hour of glee
Is brief, we'll spend it joyously!
Blithest of all the sun's bright beams, 810
When betwixt storm and storm he gleams.
Well is our country's work begun,
But more, far more, must yet be done.
Speed messengers the country through;
Arouse old friends and gather new;
Warn Lanark's knights to gird their mail,
Rouse the brave sons of Teviotdale,
Let Ettrick's archers sharp their darts,
The fairest forms, the truest hearts!
Call all, call all! from Reedswair-Path 820
To the wild confines of Cape-Wrath;
Wide let the news through Scotland
ring, —
The Northern Eagle claps his wing!

CANTO SIXTH

I

O who that shared them ever shall forget
The emotions of the spirit-rousing time,
When breathless in the mart the couriers
met
Early and late, at evening and at prime;
When the loud cannon and the merry
chime
Hailed news on news, as field on field was
won,
When Hope, long doubtful, soared at length sublime,
And our glad eyes, awake as day begun,
Watched Joy's broad banner rise to meet the rising sun!

O these were hours when thrilling joy repaid 830
A long, long course of darkness, doubts,
and fears!
The heart-sick faintness of the hope delayed,

The waste, the woe, the bloodshed, and
the tears,
That tracked with terror twenty rolling
years,
All was forgot in that blithe jubilee !
Her downcast eye even pale Affliction
rears,
To sigh a thankful prayer amid the glee
That hailed the Despot's fall, and peace and liberty !

Such news o'er Scotland's hills triumphant rode
When 'gainst the invaders turned the battle's scale,
When Bruce's banner had victorious
flowed
O'er Loudoun's mountain and in Ury's
vale;
When English blood oft deluged Douglas-dale,
And fiery Edward routed stout Saint
John,
When Randolph's war-cry swelled the southern gale,
And many a fortress, town, and tower
was won,
And Fame still sounded forth fresh deeds of glory done.

II

Blithe tidings flew from baron's tower
To peasant's cot, to forest-bower,
And waked the solitary cell
Where lone Saint Bride's recluse dwell.
Princess no more, fair Isabel,
A votaress of the order now,
Say, did the rule that bid thee wear
Dim veil and woollen scapulare,
And reft thy locks of dark-brown hair,
That stern and rigid vow,
Did it condemn the transport high
Which glistened in thy watery eye
When minstrel or when palmer told
Each fresh exploit of Bruce the bold ? —
And whose the lovely form that shares
Thy anxious hopes, thy fears, thy prayers ?
No sister she of convent shade;
So say these locks in lengthened braid,
So say the blushes and the sighs,
The tremors that unhidden rise,
When, mingled with the Bruce's fame,
The brave Lord Ronald's praises came.

III

Believe, his father's castle won
And his bold enterprise begun,
That Bruce's earliest cares restore
The speechless page to Arran's shore:
Nor think that long the quaint disguise
Concealed her from a sister's eyes;
And sister-like in love they dwell
In that lone convent's silent cell.
There Bruce's slow assent allows
Fair Isabel the veil and vows;
And there, her sex's dress regained,
The lovely Maid of Lorn remained,
Unnamed, unknown, while Scotland far
Resounded with the din of war;
And many a month and many a day
In calm seclusion wore away.

IV

These days, these months, to years had worn
When tidings of high weight were borne
To that lone island's shore;
Of all the Scottish conquests made
By the First Edward's ruthless blade
His son retained no more,
Northward of Tweed, but Stirling's towers,
Beleaguered by King Robert's powers;
And they took term of truce,
If England's King should not relieve
The siege ere John the Baptist's eve,
To yield them to the Bruce.
England was roused — on every side
Courier and post and herald hied
To summon prince and peer,
At Berwick-bounds to meet their liege,
Prepared to raise fair Stirling's siege
With buckler, brand, and spear.
The term was nigh — they mustered fast,
By beacon and by bugle-blast
Forth marshalled for the field;
There rode each knight of noble name,
There England's hardy archers came,
The land they trod seemed all on flame
With banner, blade, and shield !
And not famed England's powers alone,
Renowned in arms, the summons own;
For Neustria's knights obeyed,
Gasconne hath lent her horsemen good,
And Cambria, but of late subdued,
Sent forth her mountain-multitude,
And Connought poured from waste and
wood

ired tribes, whose sceptre rude
Eth O'Connor swayed.

V

devoted Caledon 100
in of war rolls slowly on menace deep and dread;
ark clouds with gathering power awhile the threatened shower, y peak and summit lower
the pale pilgrim's head.
such pilgrim's startled eye
bert marked the tempest nigh!
ed the brunt to bide,
l summons warned the land 110
who owned their king's command stant take the spear and brand abat at his side.
nay tell the sons of fame
King Robert's bidding came tle for the right!
eviot to the shores of Ross,
lway-Sands to Marshal's-Moss,
aned them for the fight.
n the royal courier tells 120
se to rouse dark Arran's dells;
er tidings must the ear l in secret hear.
her cloister walk next morn
red she with the Maid of Lorn:—

VI

th, can I tell how dear course of hearts sincere een to Isabel?— en the sorrow of my heart must say the words, We part! 130
eerless convent-cell
sweet maiden, made for thee;
where thy vocation free
ppier fortunes fell.
th, judge thyself betrayed,
Robert knows that Lorn's high
aid
poor silent page were one.
a the fickle heart of man,
and anxious hath he looked 139
ald's heart the message brooked
e him with her last farewell
ge of Sister Isabel, upon thy better right
p the faith his promise plight.
him for thy sister's sake
f vain repinings wake—
face that mood is gone:

Now dwells he on thy juster claims,
And oft his breach of faith he blames—
Forgive him for thine own!— 150

VII

'No! never to Lord Ronald's bower
Will I again as paramour'—
'Nay, hush thee, too impatient maid,
Until my final tale be said!—
The good King Robert would engage
Edith once more his elfin page,
By her own heart and her own eye
Her lover's penitence to try—
Safe in his royal charge and free,
Should such thy final purpose be, 160
Again unknown to seek the cell,
And live and die with Isabel.'
Thus spoke the maid—King Robert's eye
Might have some glance of policy;
Dunstaffnage had the monarch ta'en,
And Lorn had owned King Robert's reign;
Her brother had to England fled,
And there in banishment was dead;
Ample, through exile, death, and flight,
O'er tower and land was Edith's right; 170
This ample right o'er tower and land
Were safe in Ronald's faithful hand.

VIII

Embarrassed eye and blushing cheek
Pleasure and shame and fear bespeak!
Yet much the reasoning Edith made:
'Her sister's faith she must upbraid,
Who gave such secret, dark and dear,
In council to another's ear.
Why should she leave the peaceful cell?—
How should she part with Isabel?— 180
How wear that strange attire agen?—
How risk herself midst martial men?—
And how be guarded on the way?—
At least she might entreat delay.'
Kind Isabel with secret smile
Saw and forgave the maiden's wile,
Reluctant to be thought to move
At the first call of truant love.

IX

O, blame her not!—when zephyrs wake 189
The aspen's trembling leaves must shake;
When beams the sun through April's
shower
It needs must bloom, the violet flower;
And Love, howe'er the maiden strive,
Must with reviving hope revive!
A thousand soft excuses came

To plead his cause 'gainst virgin shame.
 Pledged by their sires in earliest youth,
 He had her plighted faith and truth —
 Then, 't was her liege's strict command,
 And she beneath his royal hand 200
 A ward in person and in land: —
 And, last, she was resolved to stay
 Only brief space — one little day —
 Close hidden in her safe disguise
 From all, but most from Ronald's eyes —
 But once to see him more! — nor blame
 Her wish — to hear him name her name! —
 Then to bear back to solitude
 The thought he had his falsehood rued! —
 But Isabel, who long had seen 210
 Her pallid cheek and pensive mien,
 And well herself the cause might know,
 Though innocent, of Edith's woe,
 Joyed, generous, that revolving time
 Gave means to expiate the crime.
 High glowed her bosom as she said,
 'Well shall her sufferings be repaid!'
 Now came the parting hour — a band
 From Arran's mountains left the land;
 Their chief, Fitz-Louis, had the care 220
 The speechless Amadine to bear
 To Bruce with honor, as behoved
 To page the monarch dearly loved.

X

The king had deemed the maiden bright
 Should reach him long before the fight,
 But storms and fate her course delay:
 It was on eve of battle-day
 When o'er the Gillie's-hill she rode.
 The landscape like a furnace glowed,
 And far as e'er the eye was borne 230
 The lances waved like autumn-corn.
 In battles four beneath their eye
 The forces of King Robert lie
 And one below the hill was laid,
 Reserved for rescue and for aid;
 And three advanced formed vaward-line,
 'Twixt Bannock's brook and Ninian's shrine.
 Detached was each, yet each so nigh
 As well might mutual aid supply.
 Beyond, the Southern host appears, 240
 A boundless wilderness of spears,
 Whose verge or rear the anxious eye
 Strove far, but strove in vain, to spy.
 Thick flashing in the evening beam,
 Glaives, lances, bills, and banners gleam;
 And where the heaven joined with the hill,
 Was distant armor flashing still,
 So wide, so far, the boundless host
 Seemed in the blue horizon lost.

XI

Down from the hill the maiden passed,
 At the wild show of war aghast;
 And traversed first the rearward host.
 Reserved for aid where needed most
 The men of Carrick and of Ayr,
 Lennox and Lanark too, were there,
 And all the western land;
 With these the valiant of the Isles
 Beneath their chieftains ranked their file
 In many a plaided band.
 There in the centre proudly raised,
 The Bruce's royal standard blazed,
 And there Lord Ronald's banner bore
 A galley driven by sail and oar.
 A wild yet pleasing contrast made
 Warriors in mail and plate arrayed
 With the plumed bonnet and the plaid
 By these Hebrideans worn;
 But O, unseen for three long years.
 Dear was the garb of mountaineers
 To the fair Maid of Lorn!
 For one she looked — but he was far
 Busied amid the ranks of war —
 Yet with affection's troubled eye
 She marked his banner boldly fly,
 Gave on the countless foe a glance,
 And thought on battle's desperate chance.

XII

To centre of the vaward-line
 Fitz-Louis guided Amadine.
 Armed all on foot, that host appears
 A serried mass of glimmering spears.
 There stood the Marchers' warlike band,
 The warriors there of Lodon's land;
 Ettrick and Liddell bent the yew,
 A band of archers fierce though few;
 The men of Nith and Annan's vale,
 And the bold Spears of Teviotdale; —
 The dauntless Douglas these obey,
 And the young Stuart's gentle sway.
 Northeastward by Saint Ninian's shrine
 Beneath fierce Randolph's charge, on line
 The warriors whom the hardy North
 From Tay to Sutherland sent forth.
 The rest of Scotland's war-array
 With Edward Bruce to westward lay,
 Where Bannock with his broken bank
 And deep ravine protects their flank.
 Behind them, screened by sheltering wood
 The gallant Keith, Lord Marshal, stood;
 His men-at-arms bare mace and lance,
 And plumes that wave and helms
 glance.

r divided by the king,
 and right and leftward wing and his front; nor distant far was reserve to aid the war.
 as to front of this array
 as and Edith made their way.

XIII

at they pause; for, in advance
 as one might pitch a lance,
 arch rode along the van,
 as approaching force to scan, 370
 as to marshal and to range,
 as to square, and fronts to change.
 as rode — from head to heel
 as in his ready arms of steel;
 as mounted yet on war-horse wight,
 as more near the shock of fight,
 as a palfrey low and light.
 as of gold was set
 as is bright steel basinet, as ped within its glittering twine 380
 as is the glove of Argentine;
 as on or leading staff he lacks,
 as instead a battle-axe.
 as led his soldiers for the fight
 as and thus, in open sight
 as the host. — Three bowshots far,
 as he deep front of England's war,
 as led on their arms awhile,
 as and rank their warlike file,
 as in high council if that night 390
 as knew the strife or dawning light.

XIV

et fearful to behold,
 with steel and rough with gold,
 ristled o'er with bills and spears,
 mes and pennons waving fair,
 t bright battle-front! for there England's king and peers:
 as, that saw that monarch ride,
 dom battled by his side,
 en his direful doom foretell! — 340
 as his seat in knightly selle, as is sprightly eye was set ark of the Plantagenet.
 as light and wandering was his
 as eye,
 as led at sight of shield and lance.
 as t thou, he said, 'De Argentine, as fight who marshals thus their as se?' — as ens on his helmet tell as he, my liege: I know him well.' —

'And shall the audacious traitor brave 350
 The presence where our banners wave?' —
 'So please my liege,' said Argentine,
 'Were he but horsed on steed like mine,
 To give him fair and knightly chance,
 I would adventure forth my lance.' —
 'In battle-day,' the king replied,
 'Nice tourney rules are set aside. —
 Still must the rebel dare our wrath?
 Set on him — Sweep him from our path!'
 And at King Edward's signal soon 360
 Dashed from the ranks Sir Henry Boune.

XV

Of Hereford's high blood he came,
 A race renowned for knightly fame.
 He burned before his monarch's eye
 To do some deed of chivalry.
 He spurred his steed, he couched his lance,
 And darted on the Bruce at once.
 As motionless as rocks that bide
 The wrath of the advancing tide,
 The Bruce stood fast. — Each breast beat 370
 high
 And dazzled was each gazing eye —
 The heart had hardly time to think,
 The eyelid scarce had time to wink,
 While on the king, like flash of flame,
 Spurred to full speed the war-horse came!
 The partridge may the falcon mock,
 If that slight palfrey stand the shock —
 But, swerving from the knight's career,
 Just as they met, Bruce shunned the spear.
 Onward the baffled warrior bore 380
 His course — but soon his course was
 o'er!

High in his stirrups stood the king,
 And gave his battle-axe the swing.
 Right on De Boune the whiles he passed Fell that stern dint — the first — the last! —
 Such strength upon the blow was put
 The helmet crashed like hazel-nut;
 The axe-shaft with its brazen clasp
 Was shivered to the gauntlet grasp.
 Springs from the blow the startled 390
 horse,
 Drops to the plain the lifeless corse;
 First of that fatal field, how soon,
 How sudden, fell the fierce De Boune!

XVI

One pitying glance the monarch sped
 Where on the field his foe lay dead;
 Then gently turned his palfrey's head,

[illegible]

11

XVIII

[illegible]

29

[illegible]

an England's host the cry
 t of wassail revelry,
 the Scottish legions pass
 red prayer, the early mass! — ars had presumption given; 500 a o'ermatched sought aid from ten.

XX

till, whose height commands held, fair Edith stands ad page unfit for war,
 conflict from afar.
 t doubtful agony
 dawning tint the sky! —
 Ochils gleams the sun,
 s now Demayet dun;
 ark that carols shrill, 510
 o bittern's early hum?
 stant but increasing still,
 upet's sound swells up the se deep murmur of the drum.

 from the Scottish host,
 and bugle-sound were tossed,
 and brow each soldier crossed
 ed from the ground;
 arrayed for instant fight, 519
 , spearman, squire and knight,
 pomp of battle bright
 i battalia frowned.

XXI

land in open view
 as ranks of England drew,
 f like the ocean-tide rough west bath chafed his
 ,
 p roar sends challenge wide
 t bars his way!
 gallant archers rode,
 arms behind them rode, 530
 st of the phalanx broad reh held his sway.
 many a war-horse fumes,
 waves a sea of plumes,
 f a knight in battle known,
 ho spurs had first braced on d that fight should see them

ard's bests obey.
 he attends his side, 539
 De Valence, Pembroke's pride, mpions from the train
 m his bridle-rein.

Upon the Scottish foe he gazed —
 At once before his sight amazed
 Sunk banner, spear, and shield;
 Each weapon-point is downward sent,
 Each warrior to the ground is bent.
 'The rebels, Argentine, repent!
 For pardon they have kneeled.' —
 'Ay! — but they bend to other powers, 550
 And other pardon sue than ours!
 See where yon barefoot abbot stands
 And blesses them with lifted hands!
 Upon the spot where they have kneeled
 These men will die or win the field.' —
 'Then prove we if they die or win!
 Bid Gloster's Earl the fight begin.'

XXII

Earl Gilbert waved his truncheon high
 Just as the Northern ranks arose,
 Signal for England's archery 560
 To halt and bend their bows.
 Then stepped each yeoman forth a pace,
 Glanced at the intervening space,
 And raised his left hand high;
 To the right ear the cords they bring —
 At once ten thousand bow-strings ring,
 Ten thousand arrows fly!
 Nor paused on the devoted Scot
 The ceaseless fury of their shot;
 As fiercely and as fast 570
 Forth whistling came the gray-goose wing
 As the wild hailstones pelt and ring
 Adown December's blast.
 Nor mountain targe of tough bull-hide,
 Nor lowland mail, that storm may bide;
 Woe, woe to Scotland's bannered pride,
 If the fell shower may last!
 Upon the right behind the wood,
 Each by his steed dismounted stood
 The Scottish chivalry; — 580
 With foot in stirrup, hand on mane,
 Fierce Edward Bruce can scarce restrain
 His own keen heart, his eager train,
 Until the archers gained the plain;
 Then, 'Mount, ye gallants free!'
 He cried; and vaulting from the ground
 His saddle every horseman found.
 On high their glittering crests they toss,
 As springs the wild-fire from the moss;
 The shield hangs down on every breast, 590
 Each ready lance is in the rest,
 And loud shouts Edward Bruce,
 'Forth, Marshal! on the peasant foe!
 We'll tame the terrors of their bow,
 And cut the bow-string loose!'

XXIII

Then spurs were dashed in chargers' flanks,

They rushed among the archer ranks,
No spears were there the shock to let,
No stakes to turn the charge were set,
And how shall yeoman's armor slight 600
Stand the long lance and mace of might?
Or what may their short swords avail
'Gainst barbed horse and shirt of mail?
Amid their ranks the chargers sprung,
High o'er their heads the weapons swung,
And shriek and groan and vengeful shout
Gave note of triumph and of rout!
Awhile with stubborn hardihood
Their English hearts the strife made good.
Borne down at length on every side, 610
Compelled to flight they scatter wide. —
Let stags of Sherwood leap for glee,
And bound the deer of Dallom-Lee!
The broken vows of Bannock's shore
Shall in the greenwood ring no more!
Round Wakefield's merry May-pole now
The maids may twine the summer bough,
May northward look with longing glance
For those that wont to lead the dance,
For the blithe archers look in vain! 620
Broken, dispersed, in flight o'erta'en,
Pierced through, trode down, by thousands
slain,

They cumber Bannock's bloody plain.

XXIV

The king with scorn beheld their flight.
'Are these,' he said, 'our yeomen wight?
Each braggart churl could boast before
Twelve Scottish lives his baldric bore!
Fitter to plunder chase or park
Than make a manly foe their mark. —
Forward, each gentleman and knight! 630
Let gentle blood show generous might
And chivalry redeem the fight!
To rightward of the wild affray,
The field showed fair and level way;
But in mid-space the Bruce's care
Had bored the ground with many a pit,
With turf and brushwood hidden yet,
That formed a ghastly snare.
Rushing, ten thousand horsemen came,
With spears in rest and hearts on flame 640
That panted for the shock!
With blazing crests and banners spread,
And trumpet-clang and clamor dread,
The wide plain thundered to their tread
As far as Stirling rock.

Down! down! in headlong overthrow,
Horseman and horse, the foremost go,
Wild floundering on the field!

The first are in destruction's gorge,
Their followers wildly o'er the urge; —

The knightly helm and shield,
The mail, the acorn, and the spear,
Strong hand, high heart, are useless here
Loud from the mass confused the cry
Of dying warriors swells on high,
And steeds that shriek in agony!
They came like mountain-torrent red
That thunders o'er its rocky bed;
They broke like that same torrent's wave
When swallowed by a darksome cave.
Billows on billows burst and boil,
Maintaining still the stern turmoil,
And to their wild and tortured groan
Each adds new terrors of his own!

XXV

Too strong in courage and in might
Was England yet to yield the fight.

Her noblest all are here;
Names that to fear were never known,
Bold Norfolk's Earl De Brotherton,
And Oxford's famed De Vere.
There Gloucester plied the bloody sword,
And Berkley, Grey, and Hereford,
Bottetourt and Sanzavere,
Ross, Montague, and Mauley came,
And Courtenay's pride, and Percy's fame.
Names known too well in Scotland's wars
At Falkirk, Methven, and Dunbar,
Blazed broader yet in after years
At Cressy red and fell Poitiers.
Pembroke with these and Argentine
Brought up the rearward battle-line.
With caution o'er the ground they tread
Slippery with blood and piled with dead,
Till hand to hand in battle set,
The bills with spears and axes met,
And, closing dark on every side,
Raged the full contest far and wide.
Then was the strength of Douglas tried,
Then proved was Randolph's generous
pride,
And well did Stewart's actions grace
The sire of Scotland's royal race!
Firmly they kept their ground;
As firmly England onward pressed,
And down went many a noble crest,
And rent was many a valiant breast,
And Slaughter revelled round.

XXVI

ing foot 'gainst foot was set,
 eg blow by blow was met;
 roans of those who fell owned amid the shriller clang 700 in the blades and harness rang,
 the battle-yell.
 they fell, unheard, forgot,
 ither fierce and hardy Scot;
 amid that waste of life
 rious motives fired the strife !
 ring noble bled for fame,
 iot for his country's claim;
 ght his youthful strength to prove,
 : to win his lady's love: 710
 ight from ruffian thirst of blood, bit some or hardihood.
 an stern and soldier good,
 ble and the slave,
 rious cause the same wild road,
 ame bloody morning, trode
 t dark inn, the grave !

XXVII

of strife to flag begins,
 neither loses yet nor wins.
 es the sun, thick rolls the dust, 720
 ilder speeds the blow and thrust.
 leans on his war-sword now,
 dolph wipes his bloody brow;
 had toiled each Southern knight rn till mid-day in the fight.
 'gremont for air must gasp,
 np undoes his visor-clasp,
 itague must quit his spear,
 a thy falchion, bold De Vere !
 rs of Berkley fall less fast, 730
 ant Pembroke's bugle-blast
 ost its lively tone;
 rgentine, thy battle-word,
 y's shout was fainter heard, — rry-men, fight on !

XXVIII

ith the pilot's wary eye,
 ening of the storm could spy.
 rt more and Scotland's free !
 he Isles, my trust in thee
 as Ailsa Rock; 740
 with Highland sword and targe,
 y Carrick spearmen charge;
 orward to the shock !
 he spears were forward thrown,
 he sun the broadswords shone;
 ech lent its maddening tone,

And loud King Robert's voice was known —

'Carrick, press on — they fail, they fail !
 Press on, brave sons of Innisgail,
 The foe is fainting fast ! 750
 Each strike for parent, child, and wife,
 For Scotland, liberty, and life, —
 The battle cannot last !'

XXIX

The fresh and desperate onset bore
 The foes three furlongs back and more,
 Leaving their noblest in their gore.
 Alone, De Argentine
 Yet bears on high his red-cross shield,
 Gathers the relics of the field,
 Renews the ranks where they have reeled, 760

And still makes good the line.
 Brief strife but fierce his efforts raise,
 A bright but momentary blaze.
 Fair Edith heard the Southern shout,
 Beheld them turning from the rout,
 Heard the wild call their trumpets sent
 In notes 'twixt triumph and lament.
 That rallying force, combined anew,
 Appeared in her distracted view
 To hem the Islesmen round; 770
 'O God ! the combat they renew,
 And is no rescue found !
 And ye that look thus tamely on,
 And see your native land o'erthrown,
 O, are your hearts of flesh or stone ?'

XXX

The multitude that watched afar,
 Rejected from the ranks of war,
 Had not unmoved beheld the fight
 When strove the Bruce for Scotland's right;
 Each heart had caught the patriot spark, 780
 Old man and stripling, priest and clerk,
 Bondsman and serf; even female hand
 Stretched to the hatchet or the brand;

But when mute Amadine they heard
 Give to their zeal his signal-word
 A frenzy fired the throng; —
 'Portents and miracles impeach
 Our sloth — the dumb our duties teach —

And he that gives the mute his speech
 Can bid the weak be strong. 790
 To us as to our lords are given
 A native earth, a promised heaven;
 To us as to our lords belongs

The vengeance for our nation's wrongs;
The choice 'twixt death or freedom, warms
Our breasts as theirs—To arms! to arms!

To arms they flew, — axe, club, or spear—
And tainie ensigns high they rear,
And, like a bannered host afar,
Hear down on England's wearied war. 300

XXXI

Already scattered o'er the plain,
Reproof, command, and counsel vain,
The rearward squadrons fled amain
Or made but doubtful stay;—
But when they marked the seeming show
Of fresh and fierce and marshalled foe,
The boldest broke array.

O, give their hapless prince his due!
In vain the royal Edward threw
His person mid the spears, 310

Cried 'Light!' to terror and despair,
Menaced and wept and tore his hair,
And cursed their crafty fears;

Till Pembroke turned his bridle rein
And forced him from the fatal plain.

With them rode Argentine until
They gained the summit of the hill,

But quitted there the train—

'In yonder field a gage I left,
I must not live of fame bereft; 320

I needs must turn again
Speed hence, my liege, for on your trace
The fiery Douglas takes the chase,
I knew his banner well.

God send my sovereign joy and bliss,
And many a happier field than this!—

Once more, my liege, fare-well!
XXXII

Again he faced the battle-field—
Wells they fly, are slain, or yield.

'Now then,' he said, and couched his spear, 330

'My course is run, the goal is near;

One effort more, one brave career,

Must close this race of mine—

Then on his stirrups rising high,

He shouted loud his battle-cry.

'Saint James for Argentine!

And on the bold pursuers four

The gallant knight, from saddle bore,

Has not unharm'd—a later's point

Has found his breastplate's loosened joint, 340

And as he raised his crest,

Yet still on Colonsay's fierce lord,

Who pressed the chase with gory sword,

He rode with spear in rest,

And through his bloody tartans bored

And through his gallant breast

Nailed to the earth, the mountaineer

Yet writhed him up against the spear,

And swung his broadsword round!

Stirrup, steel-boot, and cuish gave way 350

Beneath that blow's tremendous sway,

The blood gushed from the wound;

And the grim Lord of Colonsay

Hath turned him on the ground,

And laughed in death-pang that his blade

The mortal thrust so well repaid.

XXXIII

Now toiled the Bruce, the battle done,

To use his conquest boldly won;

And gave command for horse and spear

To press the Southron's scattered rear, 360

Nor let his broken force combine,

When the war-ery of Argentine

Fell faintly on his ear;

'Save, save his life,' he cried, 'O, save

The kind, the noble, and the brave!'

The squadrons round free passage gave,

The wounded knight drew near;

He raised his red-cross shield no more,

Helm, cuish, and breastplate streamed with
gore, 370

Yet, as he saw the king advance,

He strove even then to couch his lance—

The effort was in vain!

The spur-stroke failed to rouse the horse;

Wounded and weary, in mid course

He stumbled on the plain.

Then foremost was the generous Bruce

To raise his head, his helm to loose;—

'Lord Earl, the day is thine!

My sovereign's charge and adverse fate

Have made our meeting all too late; 380

Yet this may Argentine

As soon from ancient comrade crave—

A Christian's mass, a soldier's grave.'

XXXIV

Bruce pressed his dying hand—its grasp

Kindly, repaid, but in his clasp,

It stiffened and grew cold—

'And, O fare-well! the victor cried,

'Of clearest the flower and pride,

The arm in battle bold,

The courteous mien, the noble race,

The stainless faith, the manly face!—

Red Norway's sunset light their shroud

For late-wake of De Argentine.

O'er better knight on death-bier laid
Torch never gleamed nor mass was said !'

XXXV

Nor for De Argentine alone
Through Ninian's church these torches shone

And rose the death-prayer's awful tone.
That yellow lustre glimmered pale
On broken plate and bloodied mail, 900
Rent crest and shattered coronet,
Of baron, earl, and banneret;
And the best names that England knew
Claimed in the death-prayer dismal due.
Yet mourn not, Land of Fame !
Though ne'er the Leopards on thy shield
Retreated from so sad a field
Since Norman William came.
Oft may thine annals justly boast
Of battles stern by Scotland lost; 910
Grudge not her victory
When for her freeborn rights she strove;
Rights dear to all who freedom love,
To none so dear as thee !

XXXVI

Turn we to Bruce whose curious ear
Must from Fitz-Louis tidings hear;
With him a hundred voices tell
Of prodigy and miracle,
'For the mute page had spoke.' —
'Page !' said Fitz-Louis, 'rather say 920
An angel sent from realms of day
To burst the English yoke.
I saw his plume and bonnet drop
When hurrying from the mountain top;
A lovely brow, dark locks that wave,
To his bright eyes new lustre gave,
A step as light upon the green,
As if his pinions waved unseen !'
'Spoke he with none ?' — 'With none —
one word
Burst when he saw the Island Lord 930
Returning from the battle-field.' —
'What answer made the chief ?' — 'He kneeled,
Durst not look up, but muttered low
Some mingled sounds that none might
know,
And greeted him 'twixt joy and fear
As being of superior sphere.'

XXXVII

Even upon Bannock's bloody plain
Heaped then with thousands of the slain,

Mid victor monarch's musings high,
Mirth laughed in good King Robert's
eye: — 940

'And bore he such angelic air,
Such noble front, such waving hair ?
Hath Ronald kneeled to him ?' he said;
'Then must we call the church to aid —
Our will be to the abbot known
Ere these strange news are wider blown,
To Cambuskenneth straight he pass
And deck the church for solemn mass,
To pay for high deliverance given
A nation's thanks to gracious Heaven. 950
Let him array besides such state,
As should on princes' nuptials wait.
Ourself the cause, through fortune's spite,
That once broke short that spousal rite,
Ourself will grace with early morn
The bridal of the Maid of Lorn.'

CONCLUSION

Go forth, my Song, upon thy venturous
way;
Go boldly forth; nor yet thy master
blame
Who chose no patron for his humble lay,
And graced thy numbers with no friendly
name
Whose partial zeal might smooth thy path
to fame.
There was — and O, how many sorrows
crowd
Into these two brief words ! — there was a claim
By generous friendship given — had fate allowed,
It well had bid thee rank the proudest of the proud !

All angel now — yet little less than all
While still a pilgrim in our world below !
What 'vails it us that patience to recall
Which hid its own to soothe all other woes;
What 'vails to tell how Virtue's purest
glow
Shone yet more lovely in a form so fair:
And, least of all, what 'vails the world should know
That one poor garland, twined to deck thy hair,
Is hung upon thy hearse to droop and wither there !

THE FIELD OF WATERLOO

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

The brief Advertisement which was the sole produce Scott ever wrote to The Field of Waterloo intimates the circumstances under which it was written and the immediate purpose of its publication. It may be some apology for the imperfections of this poem, that it was composed hastily and during a short tour upon the Continent, when the author's labors were hindered by frequent interruptions; but its best apology is that it was written for the purpose of assisting the Waterloo Subscription.

The battle of Waterloo was fought in June, 1815, and Scott fired by a spirited letter from one of the engineers on the field to a brother in Edinburgh, suddenly resolved in the middle of July to go to Brussels and visit the battle-field. As an illustration of the character of some of the times it may be noted that though he was in company with Edinburgh, 25 July they did not reach Brussels till 4 August when they fired a shot to take them to Helvetia. The excursion was minutely chronicled in the poem Scott's Letter to a Friend and gave rise to some animated personal letters printed in Luckhart. The poem also appears to have been begun and indeed practically completed en route.

Scott wrote to Mr. Morritt under date of 21 December 1815, the poem "will be out this week and you shall have a copy to the Earl of Leinster when your judge favours, and remember it is no always the grandest actions which are best adapted for the eye of poetry; and painting I believe I shall give offence to my friends the Whites, &c. no condoning what Bunsen says. Since his sentence of transportation, he has begun to look wonderfully cool in their eyes. I would the bad hangings for the hangings have done a perfect Adams. Lockhart is the close of chapter xix. gives a transcript of some notes written on the margin of the first sheets of the poem. John Ballantyne was at Altona when the poem was read, as his brother James sent the sheet to him with his own comments, and John entertained himself with recording below James's notes the remarks which Scott made. Some of the more interesting of these points will be found in the Notes at the end of the volume.

The timeliness of the publication, and in manner in it appeared in October 1815, in a small volume gave it immediate popularity. In writing to Lady Louisa Stuart, who had praised it enthusiastically, Scott was not disposed to be much elated by his success. "I need hardly say he writes, that your applause is always gratifying to me but more particularly so when it encourages to hope I have got over a hazardous escape. The Duke of Wellington himself told me there was nothing so dreadful as a battle over excepting only a battle lost. And lost or won, I can answer for it they are almost as severe upon the hard war celebrators as the warrior who fights them. But I have committed myself in the present case, and like many a hot-headed man, has got into the midst of the fray without considering well how I was to clear myself out of it." Scott went on in his letter to speak of the other task that had been employing him, concluding: "If you ask me what I do these things, I would be much at a loss to give a good answer. I have been tempted to write for fame and there have been periods when I have been compelled to write for money. Neither of these motives now exist—in fortune though moderate, sufficient in wishes, and I have heard a man blast from the trumpet of Fame with good and evil that I am hardly tempted to admit her notice anew. But the habit of throwing my ideas into rhyme is not easily conquered and so like Bayly, I go on bestowing my verses upon the public." The poem was issued in a cheap form and quickly succeeded in circulation both of the very long poem which was treated in the memory of readers' Notes, and The Lord of the Isles.

THE FIELD OF WATERLOO

Though Valois braved young Edward's gentle hand,
 And Albert rushed on Henry's way-worn band,
 With Europe's chosen sons, in arms renowned,
 Yet not on Vere's bold archers long they looked,
 Nor Audley's squires nor Mosbray's yeomen brooked, —
 They saw their standard fall, and left their monarch bound.

AKENSIDE.

TO HER GRACE
 THE DUCHESS OF WELLINGTON,
 PRINCESS OF WATERLOO,
 &C., &C., &C.,
 THE FOLLOWING VERSES ARE MOST RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED BY
 THE AUTHOR.

ADVERTISEMENT

It may be some apology for the imperfections of this poem, that it was composed hastily, and during a short tour upon the Continent, when the Author's labors were liable to frequent interruption; but its best apology is, that it was written for the purpose of assisting the Waterloo Subscription.

ABBOTSFORD, 1815.

I
 FAIR BRUSSELS, thou art far behind,
 Though, lingering on the morning wind,
 We yet may hear the hour
 Pealed over orchard and canal,
 With voice prolonged and measured fall,
 From proud Saint Michael's tower;
 Thy wood, dark Soignies, holds us now,
 Where the tall beeches' glossy bough
 For many a league around,
 With birch and darksome oak between, 10
 Spreads deep and far a pathless screen
 Of tangled forest ground.
 Stems planted close by stems defy
 The adventurous foot — the curious eye
 For access seeks in vain;
 And the brown tapestry of leaves,
 Strewed on the blighted ground, receives
 Nor sun nor air nor rain.

No opening glade dawns on our way,
 No streamlet glancing to the ray 20
 Our woodland path has crossed;
 And the straight causeway which we tread
 Prolongs a line of dull arcade,
 Unvarying through the unvaried shade
 Until in distance lost.

II

A brighter, livelier scene succeeds;
 In groups the scattering wood recedes,
 Hedge-rows, and huts, and sunny meads,
 And corn-fields glance between;
 The peasant at his labor blithe 30
 Plies the hooked staff and shortened
 scythe: —
 But when these cars were green,
 Placed close within destruction's scope,
 Full little was that rustic's hope

Their ripening to have seen !
 And lo ! a hamlet and its fane : —
 Not hot the gaze with disdain
 Their architecture view ;
 For yonder rude ungraceful shrine
 And disproportioned spire are thine,
 Immortal WATERLOO !

III

Dear not the heat, though full and high
 The sun has scorched the autumn sky,
 And scarce a forest straggler now
 To shade us spreads a greenwood bough ;
 These fields have seen a hotter day
 Than e'er was fired by sunny ray.
 Yet one mile on — yon shattered hedge Crests the soft hill whose long smooth ridge

Leads on the field below,
 And marks so purely on the dale
 That was the folds of Beauty's veil
 In earlier curves our fire
 Bent space from thence the ground again
 Ascending steep from the plain
 Forms an opposing screen,
 Which, with its crest of upland ground
 Shuts the horizon all around.

The softened vale between
 Slopes smooth and fair for courser's tread :
 Not the most timid mind need dread
 To gaze here where white paltry head
 On this wide stubble-ground,
 Nor voice nor too nor hoof are there,
 Her course to intercept or scare.

Not fence nor fence are found,
 Save where from out her shattered bowers
 Rise Bougemonde's dismantled towers.

IV

Now see'st thou augh in this lone scene
 One relic of the when late hath been ? —
 A stranger might reply
 " The bare extent of steel-bled plain
 Seemeth dead lightness of its grain,
 And scarce a cold track remains

Marks of the passing, countless wain
 When harvest-home was nigh,
 Or those broad spots of trampled ground
 Beside the mistle-dances' such round

As the sun used to draw ;
 And where the earth seems scorched by
 flame,

T' deem the homely fence that came
 And that of the lowly village dame
 Around her fire of straw.

V

So deem'st thou — so each mortal deems
 Of that which is from that which seems : —
 But other harvest here

Than that which peasant's scythe demands
 Was gathered in by sterner hands,
 With bayonet, blade, and spear.
 No vulgar crop was theirs to reap,
 No stinted harvest thin and cheap !
 Heroes before each fatal sweep
 Fell thick as ripened grain ;
 And ere the darkening of the day,
 Piled high as autumn shocks there lay
 The ghastly harvest of the fray,
 The corpses of the slain.

VI

Ay, look again — that line so black
 And triumph marks the invasion,
 Yon deep-graved runs the artillery's track,
 So often lost and won ;

And close beside the hardened mud
 Still shows where, fetlock-deep in blood,
 The fierce dragon through battle's flood Dashed the hot war-horse on.

These spots of excavation tell
 The ravage of the bursting shell —
 And feel'st thou not the tainted steam
 That reeks against the sultry beam
 From condor trenches' mound ?

The pestilential fumes declare
 That carnage has replenished there
 Her garner-house profound.

VII

Far other harvest-home and feast
 Than claims the hour from scythe released
 On these scorched fields were known !
 Death hovered o'er the maddening rout,
 And in the thrilling battle-shout
 Sent for the blood-banquet out

A summons of his own,
 Through edling smoke the Demon's eye
 Glared, and, and destined guest aspy,
 Who could his ear in ecstasy
 Discern such secret tone

That fills the alarm of the fray —
 From cannon-rare and trumpet-bray,
 From charging squadrons' wild hurra,
 From the wild clang that marked their
 war.

Down to the dying groan
 And the last sob of life's agony
 When breath was all but flown

VIII

m, stern foe of mortal life,
 m! — but think not that a strife such promiscuous carnage rife racted space may last;
 adly tug of war at length
 imits find in human strength, cease when these are past.
 ope! — that morn's o'erclouded sun
 the wild shout of fight begun 140
 he attained his height, rough the war-smoke volumed high als that unremitted cry,
 igh now he stoops to night.
 long hours of doubt and dread,
 ueors from the extended head er hill the contest fed;
 down the slope they drew,
 arge of columnus paused not,
 eed the storm of shell and shot; 150 ill that war could do
 l and force was proved that day,
 ned not yet the doubtful fray
 loody Waterloo.

IX

rassels! then what thoughts were
 thine,
 enseless from the distant line
 inued thunders came!
 urther held his breath to hear ore-runners of havoc near,
 spine and of flame. 160
 hasty sights were thine to meet,
 rolling through thy stately street,
 anded showed their mangled plight
 n of the unfinished fight,
 m each anguish-laden wain
 od-drops laid thy dust like rain!
 ten in the distant drum
 it thou the fell invader come,
 Ruin, shouting to his band, 169
 igh her torch and gory brand! — bee, fair city! From yon stand at still his outstretched hand
 e to his prey in vain,
 addening in his eager mood
 unwont to be withstood,
 res the fight again.

X

On! 'twas still his stern exclaim;
 on the battery's jaws of flame!
 on the levelled gun!

My steel-clad cuirassiers, advance! 180
 Each Hulan forward with his lance,
 My Guard — my chosen — charge for France,

France and Napoleon!

Loud answered their acclaiming shout,
 Greeting the mandate which sent out
 Their bravest and their best to dare
 The fate their leader shunned to share.
 But HE, his country's sword and shield,
 Still in the battle-front revealed
 Where danger fiercest swept the field, 190
 Came like a beam of light,
 In action prompt, in sentence brief —
 'Soldiers, stand firm!' exclaimed the chief,
 'England shall tell the fight!'

XI

On came the whirlwind — like the last
 But fiercest sweep of tempest-blast —
 On came the whirlwind — steel-gleams
 broke
 Like lightning through the rolling smoke;
 The war was waked anew, 199
 Three hundred cannon-mouths roared loud,
 And from their throats with flash and
 cloud

Their showers of iron threw.

Beneath their fire in full career
 Rushed on the ponderous cuirassier,
 The lancer couched his ruthless spear,
 And hurrying as to havoc near
 The cohorts' eagles flew.
 In one dark torrent broad and strong
 The advancing onset rolled along.
 Forth harbingered by fierce acclaim, 210
 That from the shroud of smoke and flame
 Pealed wildly the imperial name.

XII

But on the British heart were lost
 The terrors of the charging host;
 For not an eye the storm that viewed Changed its proud glance of fortitude,
 Nor was one forward footstep staid,
 As dropped the dying and the dead.
 Fast as their ranks the thunders tear, 219
 Fast they renewed each serried square;
 And on the wounded and the slain
 Closed their diminished files again,
 Till from their lines scarce spears' lengths
 three

Emerging from the smoke they see
 Helmet and plume and panoply —
 Then waked their fire at once!

Each musketeer's revolving knell,
As fast, as regularly fell,
As when they practise to display
Their discipline on festal day. 230

Then down went helm and lance,
Down were the eagle banners sent,
Down reeling steeds and riders went,
Corselets were pierced and pennons rent;
And to augment the fray,
Wheeled full against their staggering
flanks,

The English horsemen's foaming ranks
Forced their resistless way.
Then to the musket-knell succeeds
The clash of swords, the neigh of steeds, 240

As plies the smith his clanging trade,
Against the cuirass rang the blade;
And while amid their close array
The well-served cannon rent their way,
And while amid their scattered band
Raged the fierce rider's bloody brand,
Recoiled in common rout and fear
Lancer and guard and cuirassier,
Horsemen and foot, — a mingled host,
Their leaders fallen, their standards
lost. 250

XIII

Then, WELLINGTON ! thy piercing eye
This crisis caught of destiny —
The British host had stood That morn 'gainst charge of sword and
lance
As their own ocean-rocks hold stance,
But when thy voice had said, 'Advance !'
They were their ocean's flood. —
O thou whose inauspicious aim
Hath wrought thy host this hour of shame, Think'st thou thy broken bands will
bide 260

The terrors of yon rushing tide ?
Or will thy chosen brook to feel
The British shock of levelled steel ?
Or dost thou turn thine eye
Where coming squadrons gleam afar,
And fresher thunders wake the war,
And other standards fly ? —

Think not that in yon columns file
Thy conquering troops from distant Dyle —

Is Blücher yet unknown ? 270
Or dwells not in thy memory still,
Heard frequent in thine hour of ill,
What notes of hate and vengeance thrill

In Prussia's trumpet tone ? —
What yet remains ? — shall it be thine
To head the relics of thy line
In one dread effort more ? —
The Roman lore thy leisure loved,
And thou canst tell what fortune proved
That chieftain who of yore 280
Ambition's dizzy paths essayed,
And with the gladiators' aid
For empire enterprised —
He stood the east his rashness played,
Left not the victims he had made,
Dug his red grave with his own blade,
And on the field he lost was laid,
Abhorred — but not despised.

XIV

But if revolves thy fainter thought
On safety — howsoever bought — 290
Then turn thy fearful rein and ride,
Though twice ten thousand men have died
On this eventful day,
To gild the military fame
Which thou for life in traffic tame
Wilt barter thus away.

Shall future ages tell this tale
Of inconsistency faint and frail ?
And art thou he of Lodi's bridge,
Marengo's field, and Wagram's ridge ! 300
Or is thy soul like mountain-tide
That, swelled by winter storm and shower,
Rolls down in turbulence of power
A torrent fierce and wide;
Reft of these aids, a rill obscure,
Shrinking unnoticed, mean and poor,
Whose channel shows displayed
The wrecks of its impetuous course,
But not one symptom of the force
By which these wrecks were made ! 310

XV

Spur on thy way ! — since now thine ear
Has brooked thy veterans' wish to hear,
Who as thy sight they eyed
Exclaimed — while tears of anguish came,
Wrung forth by pride and rage and
shame —
'O, that he had but died !'
But yet, to sum this hour of ill,
Look ere thou leavest the fatal hill
Back on yon broken ranks —
Upon whose wild confusion gleams 320
The moon, as on the troubled streams
When rivers break their banks,

the ruined peasant's eye
 A half seen roll swiftly by,
 In the dread current hurled —
 A single banner, wain, and gun,
 The tumultuous flight rolls on Warriors who when morn begun
 Led a banded world.

XVI

— frequent to the hurrying rout, 330
 Etern pursuers' vengeful shout
 That upon their broken rear
 The Prussian's bloody spear.
 All a shriek was none
 Beresina's icy flood
 Melted and thawed with flame and blood
 Pressing on thy desperate way,
 Left oft and long their wild hurra
 Children of the Don.
 Hear no yell of horror cleft 340
 Inous when, all bereft
 The valiant Polack left —
 Left by thee — found soldier's grave
 A psalm's corpse-encumbered wave.
 In these various perils past,
 Led thee still some future cast;
 Dread die thou now hast thrown
 Not a single field alone,
 The campaign — thy martial fame,
 Empire, dynasty, and name, 350
 We felt the final stroke;
 Now o'er thy devoted head
 All stern vial's wrath is shed,
 Last dread seal is broke.

XVII

Live thou wilt — refuse not now
 To these demagogues to bow,
 Objects of thy scorn and hate,
 Shall thy once imperial fate
 A wordy theme of vain debate. —
 All we say thou stoop'st at less low 360
 King refuge from the foe,
 At whose heart in prosperous life
 Hand hath ever held the knife?
 A homage hath been paid
 A man and by Grecian voice,
 Here were honor in the choice,
 That were freely made.
 Safely come — in one so low, —
 But, — we cannot own a foe;
 Oh dear experience bid us end, 370
 We we ne'er can hail a friend. —

Come, howsoever — but do not hide
 Close in thy heart that germ of pride
 Erewhile by gifted bard capied,

That 'yet imperial hope';
 Think not that for a fresh rebound,
 To raise ambition from the ground,
 We yield thee means or scope.
 In safety come — but ne'er again
 Hold type of independent reign; 380

No islet calls thee lord,
 We leave thee no confederate band,
 No symbol of thy lost command,
 To be a dagger in the hand
 From which we wrenched the sword.

XVIII

Yet, even in yon sequestered spot,
 May worthier conquest be thy lot
 Than yet thy life has known;
 Conquest unbought by blood or harm,
 That needs nor foreign aid nor arm, 390
 A triumph all thine own.
 Such waits thee when thou shalt control
 Those passions wild, that stubborn soul,
 That marred thy prosperous scene: —
 Hear this — from no unmoved heart,
 Which sighs, comparing what THOU ART
 With what thou MIGHTST HAVE BEEN!

XIX

Thou too, whose deeds of fame renewed
 Bankrupt a nation's gratitude,
 To thine own noble heart must owe 400
 More than the meed she can bestow.
 For not a people's just acclaim,
 Not the full hail of Europe's fame,
 Thy prince's smiles, thy state's decrees,
 The ducal rank, the gartered knee,
 Not these such pure delight afford
 As that, when hanging up thy sword,
 Well mayst thou think, 'This honest steel
 Was ever drawn for public weal;
 And, such was rightful Heaven's de- 410
 cree,
 Ne'er sheathed unless with victory!'

XX

Look forth once more with softened heart
 Ere from the field of fame we part;
 Triumph and sorrow border near,
 And joy oft melts into a tear.
 Alas! what links of love that morn
 Has War's rude hand asunder torn!
 For ne'er was field so sternly fought,
 And ne'er was conquest dearer bought.

Here piled in common slaughter sleep 420
 Those whom affection long shall weep:
 Here rests the sire that ne'er shall strain
 His orphans to his heart again;
 The son whom on his native shore
 The parent's voice shall bless no more;
 The bridegroom who has hardly pressed
 His blushing consort to his breast;
 The husband whom through many a year
 Long love and mutual faith endear.
 Thou canst not name one tender tie 430
 But here dissolved its relics lie!
 O, when thou see'st some mourner's veil
 Shroud her thin form and visage pale,
 Or mark'st the matron's bursting tears
 Stream when the stricken drum she hears,
 Or see'st how manlier grief suppressed
 Is laboring in a father's breast, —
 With no inquiry vain pursue
 The cause, but think on Waterloo!

XXI

Period of honor as of woes, 440
 What bright careers 't was thine to
 close! —
 Marked on thy roll of blood what names
 To Briton's memory and to Fame's
 Laid there their last immortal claims!
 Thou saw'st in seas of gore expire
 Redoubted PICTON's soul of fire —
 Saw'st in the mingled carnage lie
 All that of PONSONBY could die —
 DE LANCEY change Love's bridal-wreath
 For laurels from the hand of Death — 450
 Saw'st gallant MILLER's failing eye
 Still bent where Albion's banners fly,
 And CAMERON in the shock of steel
 Die like the offspring of Lochiel;
 And generous GORDON mid the strife
 Fall while he watched his leader's life. —
 Ah! though her guardian angel's shield
 Fenced Britain's hero through the field,
 Fate not the less her power made known Through his friends' hearts to pierce his own! 460

XXII

Forgive, brave dead, the imperfect lay!
 Who may your names, your numbers,
 say?
 What high-strung harp, what lofty line,
 To each the dear-earned praise assign,
 From high-born chiefs of martial fame
 To the poor soldier's lowlier name?
 Lightly ye rose that dawning day

From your cold couch of swamp and clay,
 To fill before the sun was low
 The bed that morning cannot know. — 470
 Oft may the tear the green sod steep,
 And sacred be the heroes' sleep
 Till time shall cease to run;
 And ne'er beside their noble grave
 May Briton pass and fail to crave
 A blessing on the fallen brave
 Who fought with Wellington!

XXIII

Farewell, sad field! whose blighted face
 Wears desolation's withering trace;
 Long shall my memory retain 480
 Thy shattered huts and trampled grain,
 With every mark of martial wrong
 That scathe thy towers, fair Hougoumont!
 Yet though thy garden's green arcade
 The marksman's fatal post was made,
 Though on thy shattered beeches fell
 The blended rage of shot and shell,
 Though from thy blackened portals torn
 Their fall thy blighted fruit-trees mourn,
 Has not such havoc bought a name 490
 Immortal in the rolls of fame?
 Yes — Agincourt may be forgot,
 And Cressy be an unknown spot,
 And Blenheim's name be new;
 But still in story and in song,
 For many an age remembered long,
 Shall live the towers of Hougoumont
 And Field of Waterloo.

CONCLUSION

STERN tide of human time! that know'st
 not rest,
 But, sweeping from the cradle to the tomb,
 Bear'st ever downward on thy daky
 breast
 Successive generations to their doom;
 While thy capacious stream has equal
 room
 For the gay bark where Pleasure's streamers sport
 And for the prison-ship of guilt and
 gloom,
 The fisher-skiff and barge that bears a court,
 Still wafting onward all to one dark silent port; —

side of time! through what mys-erious change<sup>10</sup> and fear have our frail barks been driven!
 or before vicissitude so strange
 the race of Adam's offspring given.
 the such varied change of sea and
 ven,
 expected bursts of joy and woe, arful strife as that where we have
 ven,
 ing ages ne'er again shall know wful term when thou shalt cease
 low.

rt thou stood, my Country! — the ve fight
 ll maintained through good ret and ill;<sup>10</sup>
 ast cause and in thy native might,
 Heaven's grace and justice const still;
 r the banded prowess, strength,
 skill
 the world against thee stood ayed,
 with better views and freer will thee Europe's noblest drew the le,
 ous in arms the Ocean Queen to rt thou now repaid — though rly rose,

 agged long with mists thy blaze
 ame,
 like the dawn that in the orient ra<sup>30</sup> broad wave its earlier lustre
 se;

Then eastern Egypt saw the growing
 flame,
 And Maids's myrtles gleamed beneath its ray,
 Where first the soldier, stung with generous shame,
 Rivalled the heroes of the watery way,
 And washed in foemen's gore unjust reproach away.

Now, Island Empress, wave thy crest on
 high,
 And bid the banner of thy Patron flow,
 Gallant Saint George, the flower of chivalry,
 For thou hast faced like him a dragon
 foe,<sup>40</sup>
 And rescued innocence from overthrow,
 And trampled down like him tyrannic
 might,
 And to the gazing world mayst proudly
 show
 The chosen emblem of thy sainted knight,
 Who quelled devouring pride and vindicated right.

Yet mid the confidence of just renown,
 Renown dear-bought, but dearest thus acquired,
 Write, Britain, write the moral lesson
 down:
 'Tis not alone the heart with valor fired,
 The discipline so dreaded and admired,
 In many a field of bloody conquest known; —<sup>50</sup>
 Such may by fame be lured, by gold be hired —
 'Tis constancy in the good cause alone
 Best justifies the meed thy valiant sons have won.

HAROLD THE DAUNTLESS

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

Introduction to The Lord of the Isles, prefixed to the 1830 edition of his it refers to the mystification which it on the public by the anonymous
Bridal of Triermain, and the at-tacher it on Lord Kinnedder. He ' Upon another occasion I sent up these trifles, which, like schoolboys' id to show how the wind of popular mting. The manner was supposed f a rude minstrel or Scald, in opposition to The Bridal of Triermain, which was designed to belong rather to the Italian school.

 This new fugitive piece was called Harold the Dauntless; and I am still astonished at my having committed the gross error of selecting the very name which Lord Byron had made so famous. It encountered rather an odd fate.
 My ingenious friend, Mr. James Hogg, had published, about the same time, a work called
The Poetic Mirror, containing imitations of the principal living poets. There was in it a very good imitation of my own style, which bore such a resemblance to Harold the Dauntless that there was no discovering the original from the imitation; and I believe that many who took the trouble of thinking upon the subject were rather of opinion that my ingenious friend was the true, and not the fictitious, Simon Pure. Since this period, which was in the year 1817, the Author has not been an intruder on the public by any poetical work of importance.

Harold the Dauntless was indeed the last poem of any length that Scott wrote. When it appeared, in January, 1817, Scott was deep in the multitudinous interests which swept him away from poetry, — the enlargement of his domain, the writing of the Waverley Novels, contributions to the Annual Register and the various literary enterprises into which he was drawn by the Ballantynes. He kept Harold by him, after finishing the Bridal, some two years, making a plaything of it, something to take up, as Lockhart says, 'whenever the coach brought no proof-sheets to jog him as to serious matters;' and poetry written under such conditions is hardly likely to repay the writer or to treat him otherwise than as a jealous mistress treats her lover.

It was published simply as by 'the author of The Bridal of Triermain,' and no effort seems to have been made to turn aside attention to Erskine, Gillies, or any one else. Although Scott professed in one or two instances an interest in his work, it is pretty evident that it appealed but slightly to his mind, now so absorbed in larger ventures. 'I begin,' he wrote to Morritt, 'to get too old and stupid, I think, for poetry, and will certainly never again adventure on a grand scale;' and the next day he wrote to Lady Louisa Stuart: 'I thought once I should have made it something clever, but it turned rapid upon my imagination; and I finished it at last with hurry and impatience. Nobody knows, that has not tried the feverish trade of poetry, how much it depends upon mood and whim; I don't wonder, that in dismissing all the other deities of Paganism, the Muses should have been retained by common consent; for, in sober reality, writing good verses seems to depend upon something separate from the volition of the author.'

HAROLD THE DAUNTLESS

A POEM IN SIX CANTOS

INTRODUCTION

THERE is a mood of mind we all have known
On drowsy eve or dark and lowering day,
When the tired spirits lose their sprightly tone
And nought can chase the lingering hours away.
Dull on our soul falls Fancy's dazzling ray,
And Wisdom holds his steadier torch in vain,
Obscured the painting seems, mistuned the lay,
Nor dare we of our listless load complain,
For who for sympathy may seek that cannot tell of pain?

The jolly sportsman knows such dreariness
When bursts in deluge the autumnal rain,
Clouding that morn which threatens the heath-cock's brood;
Of such in summer's drought the anglers plain,
Who hope the soft mild southern shower in vain;
But more than all the discontented fair,
Whom father stern and sterner aunt restrain
From county-ball or race occurring rare,
While all her friends around their vestments gay prepare.

Ennui! — or, as our mothers called thee, Spleen!
To thee we owe full many a rare device; —
Thine is the sheaf of painted cards, I ween,
The rolling billiard-ball, the rattling dice,
The turning lathe for framing gimcrack nice;

The amateur's blotched pallet thou mayst claim,
Retort, and air-pump, threatening frogs and mice —
Murders disguised by philosophic name —
And much of trifling grave and much of buxom game.

Then of the books to catch thy drowsy glance
Compiled, what hard the catalogue may quote !
Plays, poems, novels, never read but once ; —
But not of such the tale fair Edgeworth wrote,
That bears thy name and is thine antidote ;
And not of such the strain my Thomson sung,
Delicious dreams inspiring by his note,
What time to Indolence his harp he strung ; —
O, might my lay be ranked that happier list among !

30

Each hath his refuge whom thy cares assail.
For me, I love my study-fire to trim,
And con right vacantly some idle tale,
Displaying on the couch each listless limb,
Till on the drowsy page the lights grow dim
And doubtful slumber half supplies the theme ;
While antique shapes of knight and giant grim,
Damsel and dwarf, in long procession gleam,
And the romancer's tale becomes the reader's dream.

40

'T is thus my malady I well may bear,
Albeit outstretched, like Pope's own Paridel,
Upon the rack of a too-easy chair ;
And find to cheat the time a powerful spell
In old romaunts of errantry that tell,
Or later legends of the Fairy-folk,
Or Oriental tale of Afrite fell,
Of Genii, Talisman, and broad-winged Roc,
Though taste may blush and frown, and sober reason mock.

50

Oft at such season too will rhymes unsought
Arrange themselves in some romantic lay,
The which, as things unfitting graver thought,
Are burnt or blotted on some wiser day. —
These few survive — and, proudly let me say,
Court not the critic's smile nor dread his frown ;
They well may serve to while an hour away,
Nor does the volume ask for more renown
Than Ennui's yawning smile, what time she drops it down.

60

CANTO FIRST

1 to the valorous deeds that were done told the Dauntless, Count Witikind's

son !

Witikind came of a regal strain,
wed with his Norsemen the land and the main.

Woe to the realms which he coasted ! for
there

Was shedding of blood and rending of hair,
Rape of maiden and slaughter of priest,
Gathering of ravens and wolves to the feast :
When he hoisted his standard black,
Before him was battle, behind him wrack, 10
And he burned the churches, that heathen
Dane,
To light his band to their barks again.

II

On Erin's shores was his outrage known,
The winds of France had his banners blown;
Little was there to plunder, yet still
His pirates had forayed on Scottish hill:
But upon merry England's coast
More frequent he sailed, for he won the most.

So wide and so far his ravage they knew,
If a sail but gleamed white 'gainst the welkin blue, 20

Trumpet and bugle to arms did call,
Burghers hastened to man the wall,
Peasants fled inland his fury to 'scape,
Beacons were lighted on headland and cape,
Bells were tolled out, and aye as they rung
Fearful and faintly the gray brothers sung.
'Hless us, Saint Mary, from flood and from
fire,
From famine and pest, and Count Witikind's ire !'

III

He liked the wealth of fair England so well
That he sought in her bosom as native to dwell. 30

He entered the Humber in fearful hour
And disembarked with his Danish power.
'Three curls came against him with all their
train, —

Two hath he taken and one hath he slain.
Count Witikind left the Humber's rich
strand,

And he wasted and warred in Northumber-
land.

But the Saxon king was a sire in age,
Weak in battle, in council sage;
Peace of that heathen leader he sought,
Gifts he gave and quiet he bought; 40
And the count took upon him the peaceable style

Of a vassal and liegeman of Briton's broad isle.

IV

Time will rust the sharpest sword,
Time will consume the strongest cord;
That which moulders hemp and steel
Mortal arm and nerve must feel.
Of the Danish band whom Count Witikind
led

Many waxed aged and many were dead:
Himself found his armor full weighty to
bear, 49
Witubed his brows grew and hoary his hair;

He leaned on a staff when his step went abroad,
And patient his palfrey when steed he bestrode.

As he grew feebler, his wildness ceased,
He made himself peace with prelate and priest,

Made his peace, and stooping his head
Patiently listed the counsel they said:
Saint Cuthbert's Bishop was holy and
grave,

Wise and good was the counsel he gave.

V

'Thou hast murdered, robbed, and spoiled.
Time it is thy poor soul were assoiled; —
Priests didst thou slay and churches burn,
Time it is now to repentance to turn;
Fiends hast thou worshipped with fiendish
rite,

Leave now the darkness and wend into light;
O, while life and space are given,
Turn thee yet, and think of Heaven !'

That stern old heathen his head he raised,
And on the good prelate he steadfastly gazed;

'Give me broad lands on the Wear and the Tyne,
My faith I will leave and I'll cleave unto thine.' 50

VI

Broad lands he gave him on Tyne and
Wear,

To be held of the church by bridle and spear,
Part of Monkwearmouth, of Tynedale part,
To better his will and to soften his heart:
Count Witikind was a joyful man,
Less for the faith than the lands that he won.
The high church of Durham is dressed for the day,

The clergy are ranked in their solemn array:
There came the count, in a bear-skin warm,
Leaning on Hilda his concubine's arm. —
He knoeled before Saint Cuthbert's shrine
With patience unwonted at rites divine;
He abjured the gods of heathen race
And he bent his head at the font of grace.
But such was the grisly old proselyte's look,
That the priest who baptized him grew pale and shook;

And the old monks muttered beneath their
hood,

'Of a stem so stubborn can never spring
good !'

VII

an arose that grim convertite, <sup>89</sup> toward he hied him when ended the rite;
 prelate in honor will with him ride
 least in his castle on Tyne's fair side.
 ers and banderols danced in the wind,
 as rode before them and spearmen
 behind;
 and they passed, till fairly did abine
 on and cross on the bosom of Tyne;
 full in front did that fortress tour some strength with its buttress and tower:
 he castle gate was young Harold
 there,
 Witikind's only offspring and heir.

VIII

g Harold was feared for his hardi-hood, <sup>101</sup>
 strength of frame and his fury of mood.
 he was and wild to behold,
 neither collar nor bracelet of gold,
 of vair nor rich array,
 as should grace that festal day:
 doublet of bull's hide was all un-braced,
 covered his head and his sandal un-
 laced:
 shaggy black locks on his brow hung
 low,
 his eyes glanced through them a swarthy glow; <sup>110</sup>
 ish club in his hand he bore,
 pikes were clotted with recent gore;
 s back a she-wolf and her wolf-cubs
 twain,
 e dangerous chase that morning slain.
 was the greeting his father he made,
 to the bishop, — while thus he
 said: —

IX

at priest-led hypocrite art thou thy humbled look and thy monkish
 brow,
 a shaveling who studies to cheat his vow?
 thou be Witikind the Waster
 known, <sup>120</sup>
 Eric's fearless son,
 thy Gunhilda's haughtier lord,
 won his bride by the axe and sword;
 the shrine of Saint Peter the chalice who tore,

And melted to bracelets for Freya and Thor;
 With one blow of his gauntlet who burst
 the skull,
 Before Odin's stone, of the Mountain
 Bull?
 Then ye worshipped with rites that to war-
 gods belong,
 With the deed of the brave and the blow
 of the strong;
 And now, in thine age to dotage sunk, <sup>130</sup>
 Wilt thou patter thy crimes to a shaven monk,
 Lay down thy mail-shirt for clothing of
 hair, —
 Fasting and scourge, like a slave, wilt thou
 bear?
 Or, at best, be admitted in slothful bower
 To batten with priest and with paramour?
 O, out upon thine endless shame!
 Each Scald's high harp shall blast thy
 fame,
 And thy son will refuse thee a father's name!

X

Ireful waxed old Witikind's look,
 His faltering voice with fury shook: — <sup>140</sup>
 'Hear me, Harold of hardened heart!
 Stubborn and wilful ever thou wert.
 Thine outrage insane I command thee to cease,
 Fear my wrath and remain at peace: —
 Just is the debt of repentance I've paid,
 Richly the church has a recompense made,
 And the truth of her doctrines I prove with my blade,
 But reckoning to none of my actions I owe,
 And least to my son such accounting will
 show.
 Why speak I to thee of repentance or truth, <sup>150</sup>
 Who ne'er from thy childhood knew reason or ruth?
 Hence! to the wolf and the bear in her den;
 These are thy mates, and not rational men.'

XI

Grimly smiled Harold and coldly replied,
 'We must honor our sires, if we fear when they chide.
 For me, I am yet what thy lessons have
 made,
 I was rocked in a buckler and fed from a
 blade;

HAROLD THE DAUNTLESS

As when was taught to clasp hands and
 To shout the words of the tower when the flame
 In the midst of slain loemen my finger to
 And ring with its purple my cheek and my
 It is this hour 't not truth, that hast bar-rained in old
 For a pause the leave faith that thine as-surements hold.
 When the wolf — and the carcass he flung on the plain —
 'Shall make and give food to her sucklings
 again.
 'The face of his father will Harold review;
 Tell then, aged brethren, young Christian, adieu!'

XII

Priest, monk, and prelate stood aghast,
 As through the pagament the heathen passed.
 A sword-bearer out of his saddle he flung,
 And his hand on the pommel and into it sprung.
 'And was the dark and deep the groan
 When the body sign on the earth was thrown!
 The fierce old count undaunted his brand,
 But the valiant prelate stayed his hand.
 'You may pass free! — Heaven knows its will —
 But he must own repentance's power,
 And sweep and penance bear,
 As he is bound by the Tyne and the Wear.
 'Thus he came and in wrath from his father Young Harold the Dauntless, Count Wit-
 kind's son.

XIII

Harold the Dauntless in Witkind's hall,
 With his brothers, soldiers, and pagans, and
 With the bishop was fain to endure
 The time and instruction
 He deemed, at the first
 As a half-christened
 And the ale was

Wild was the laughter, the song, and the
 cry;
 With Kyrie Eleison came chorically —
 The war-songs of Danesmen, Norwegians,
 and Finn,
 Till man after man the consecration gave
 o'er.
 Outstretched on the rushes that strewed
 the hall floor.
 And the trumpet waken, having ceased its wild rout.
 Gave place to the trumpet that thundered without.

XIV

Apart from the wassail in turret alone
 Lay flaxen-haired Gunnar, old Ermengarde's
 son;
 In the train of Lord Harold that page was the first,
 For Harold in childhood had Ermengarde
 nursed;
 And grieved was young Gunnar his master should run.
 Unbowed and unfriended, an exile from home.
 He heard the deep thunder, the plashing of
 rain.
 He saw the red lightning through shot-hole
 and pane;
 'And O!' said the page, 'on the shelterless
 world
 Lord Harold is wandering in darkness and
 cold!
 What though he was stubborn and wayward and wild,
 He endered me because I was Ermengarde's child,
 And often from dawn till the set of the sun
 In the chase by his stirrup unbidden I ran;
 I would I were older, and knighthood could
 bear.
 I would soon quit the banks of the Tyne
 and the Wear:
 For my mother's command with her last parting breath
 Bade me follow her nursing in life and to death.

XV

'It pours and it thunders, it lightens again,
 As if Lok the Destroyer had burst from his chain!
 Accursed by the church and expelled by his sire,

Christian nor Dane give him shelter
 or fire,
 If this tempest what mortal may house-
 less endure?
 Aided, unmantled, he dies on the moor!
 Ere comes of Gunnar, he tarries not
 here.' 230
 He leapt from his couch and he grasped to his spear,
 Right the hall of the feast. Undisturbed
 by his tread,
 The wassailers slept fast as the sleep of
 the dead:
 Ingrateful and bestial! his anger broke forth,
 He forget mid your goblets the pride of
 the North!
 If you, ye cowed priests who have plenty
 in store,
 At give Gunnar for ransom a palfrey and ore.'

XVI

He, heeding full little of ban or of curse,
 Has seized on the Prior of Jorvaux's purse:
 At Mencholt's Abbot next morning has missed 230
 The mantle, deep furred from the cape to
 the wrist:
 The seneschal's keys from his belt he has
 ta'en —
 All drenched on that eve was old Hilde-brand's brain —
 In the stable-yard he made his way
 He mounted the bishop's palfrey gay,
 The dle and hamlet behind him has cast
 A right on his way to the moorland has passed.
 He snorted the palfrey, unused to face
 weather so wild at so rash a pace;
 Long he snorted, so long he neighed, 240
 Ere answered a steed that was bound beside,
 At the red flash of lightning showed there where lay
 The master, Lord Harold, outstretched on the clay.

XVII

He started and thundered out, 'Stand!
 I raised the club in his deadly hand.
 The flaxen-haired Gunnar his purpose told,
 He wed the palfrey and proffered the gold.
 Back, back, and home, thou simple boy!

Thou canst not share my grief or joy:
 Have I not marked thee wail and cry 250
 When thou hast seen a sparrow die?
 And canst thou, as my follower should,
 Wade ankle-deep through foe-man's blood,
 Dare mortal and immortal foe,
 The gods above, the fiends below,
 And man on earth, more hateful still,
 The very fountain-head of ill?
 Desperate of life and careless of death,
 Lover of bloodshed and slaughter and scathe,
 Such must thou be with me to roam, 260
 And such thou canst not be — back, and home!'

XVIII

Young Gunnar shook like an aspen bough,
 As he heard the harsh voice and beheld
 the dark brow,
 And half he repented his purpose and vow.
 But now to draw back were bootless shame,
 And he loved his master, so urged his
 claim:
 'Alas! if my arm and my courage be weak,
 Bear with me awhile for old Ermengarde's
 sake;
 Nor deem so lightly of Gunnar's faith
 As to fear he would break it for peril of
 death. 270
 Have I not risked it to fetch thee this
 gold,
 This surcoat and mantle to fence thee from
 cold?
 And, did I bear a baser mind,
 What lot remains if I stay behind?
 The priests' revenge, thy father's wrath,
 A dungeon, and a shameful death.'

XIX

With gentler look Lord Harold eyed
 The page, then turned his head aside;
 And either a tear did his eyelash stain,
 Or it caught a drop of the passing rain. 280
 'Art thou an outcast, then?' quoth he;
 'The meeter page to follow me.'
 'T were bootless to tell what climes they sought,
 Ventures achieved, and battles fought;
 How oft with few, how oft alone,
 Fierce Harold's arm the field hath won.
 Men swore his eye, that flashed so red
 When each other glance was quenched with
 dread,

Bore oft a light of deadly flame
 That ne'er from mortal courage came. 290
 Those limbs so strong, that mood so stern,
 That loved the couch of heath and fern,
 Afar from hamlet, tower, and town,
 More than to rest on driven down;
 That stubborn frame, that sullen mood,
 Men deemed must come of aught but good;
 And they whispered the great Master Fiend was at one
 With Harold the Dauntless, Count Witikind's son.

XX

Years after years had gone and fled,
 The good old prelate lies lapped in lead; 300
 In the chapel still is shown
 His sculptured form on a marble stone,
 With staff and ring and scapulaire,
 And folded hands in the act of prayer.
 Saint Cuthbert's mitre is resting now
 On the haughty Saxon, bold Aldingar's
 brow;
 The power of his crosier he loved to extend O'er whatever would break or whatever would bend;
 And now hath he clothed him in cope and
 in pall,
 And the Chapter of Durham has met at his
 call. 310
 'And bear ye not, brethren,' the proud bishop said,
 'That our vassal, the Danish Count Witikind's dead?
 All his gold and his goods hath he given
 To holy Church for the love of Heaven,
 And hath founded a chantry with stipend and dole
 That priests and that beadsmen may pray
 for his soul:
 Harold his son is wandering abroad,
 Dreaded by man and abhorred by God;
 Meet it is not that such should heir
 The lands of the Church on the Tyne and the Wear, 320
 And at her pleasure her hallowed hands
 May now resume these wealthy lands.'

XXI

Answered good Eustace, a canon old, —
 'Harold is tameless and furious and bold;
 Ever Renown blows a note of fame
 And a note of fear when she sounds his

name

Much of bloodshed and much of scathe
 Have been their lot who have waked his wrath.

Leave him these lands and lordships still,
 Heaven in its hour may change his will; 330
 But if reft of gold and of living bare,
 An evil counsellor is despair.
 More had he said, but the prelate frowned,
 And murmured his brethren who sat
 around,
 And with one consent have they given their doom
 That the Church should the lands of Saint Cuthbert resume.
 So willed the prelate; and canon and dean
 Gave to his judgment their loud amen.

CANTO SECOND

I

'Tis merry in greenwood — thus runs the old lay —
 In the gladsome month of lively May,
 When the wild birds' song on stem and spray
 Invites to forest bower;
 Then rears the ash his airy crest,
 Then shines the birch in silver vest,
 And the beech in glistening leaves is drest,
 And dark between shows the oak's proud
 breast
 Like a chieftain's frowning tower;
 Though a thousand branches join their screen, 30
 Yet the broken sunbeams glance between
 And tip the leaves with lighter green,
 With brighter tints the flower:
 Dull is the heart that loves not then
 The deep recess of the wildwood glen,
 Where roe and red-deer find sheltering den
 When the sun is in his power.

II

Less merry perchance is the fading leaf
 That follows so soon on the gathered sheaf
 When the greenwood loses the name; 30
 Silent is then the forest bound,
 Save the redbreast's note and the rustling
 sound
 Of frost-nipt leaves that are dropping
 round,
 Or the deep-mouthed cry of the distant
 horn
 That opens on his game:

Yet then too I love the forest wide,
 Whether the sun in splendor ride
 And gild its many-colored side,
 Or whether the soft and silvery haze 39
 In vapory folds o'er the landscape strays,
 And half involves the woodland maze,
 Like an early widow's veil,
 Where wimpling tissue from the gaze
 The form half hides and half betrays
 Of beauty wan and pale.

III

Fair Metelill was a woodland maid,
 Her father a rover of greenwood shade,
 By forest statutes undismayed,
 Who lived by bow and quiver;
 Well known was Wulfstane's archery 40
 By merry Tyne both on moor and lea,
 Through wooded Weardale's glens so free,
 Well beside Stanhope's wildwood tree,
 And well on Ganlease river.
 Yet free though he trespassed on woodland game,
 More known and more feared was the wizard fame
 Of Jutta of Rookhope, the Outlaw's dame; Feared when she frowned was her eye of
 flame,
 More feared when in wrath she laughed;
 For then, 't was said, more fatal true 50
 To its dread aim her spell-glance flew
 Than when from Wulfstane's banded yew
 Sprung forth the gray-goose shaft.

IV

Yet had this fierce and dreaded pair,
 So Heaven decreed, a daughter fair;
 None brighter crowned the bed,
 In Britain's bounds, of peer or prince,
 Nor hath perchance a lovelier since
 In this fair isle been bred.
 And nought of fraud or ire or ill 60
 Was known to gentle Metelill, —
 A simple maiden she;
 The spells in dimpled smile that lie,
 And a downcast blush, and the darts that fly
 With the sidelong glance of a hazel eye,
 Were her arms and witchery.
 So young, so simple was she yet,
 She scarce could childhood's joys forget,
 And still she loved, in secret set
 Beneath the greenwood tree, 70
 To plait the rushy coronet

And braid with flowers her locks of jet,
 As when in infancy; —
 Yet could that heart so simple prove
 The early dawn of stealing love:
 Ah! gentle maid, beware!
 The power who, now so mild a guest,
 Gives dangerous yet delicious zest
 To the calm pleasures of thy breast,
 Will soon, a tyrant o'er the rest, 80
 Let none his empire share.

V

One morn in kirtle green arrayed
 Deep in the wood the maiden strayed,
 And where a fountain sprung
 She sat her down unseen to thread
 The scarlet berry's mimic braid,
 And while the beads she strung,
 Like the blithe lark whose carol gay
 Gives a good-morrow to the day,
 So lightsomely she sung. 90

VI

SONG

'Lord William was born in gilded bower,
 The heir of Wilton's lofty tower;
 Yet better loves Lord William now
 To roam beneath wild Rookhope's brow;
 And William has lived where ladies fair
 With gawds and jewels deck their hair,
 Yet better loves the dew-drops still
 That pearl the locks of Metelill.

'The pious palmer loves, iwis, 99
 Saint Cuthbert's hallowed beads to kiss;
 But I, though simple girl I be,
 Might have such homage paid to me;
 For did Lord William see me suit
 This necklace of the bramble's fruit,
 He fain — but must not have his will —
 Would kiss the beads of Metelill.

'My nurse has told me many a tale,
 How vows of love are weak and frail;
 My mother says that courtly youth
 By rustic maid means seldom sooth. 110
 What should they mean? it cannot be
 That such a warning's meant for me,
 For nought — O, nought of fraud or ill
 Can William mean to Metelill!'

VII

Sudden she stops — and starts to feel
 A weighty hand, a glove of steel,

Upon her shrinking shoulders laid;
 Fearful she turned, and saw dismayed
 A knight in plate and mail arrayed,
 His crest and bearing worn and frayed, 130
 His surcoat soiled and riven,
 Formed like that giant race of yore
 Whose long-continued crimes outwore
 The sufferance of Heaven.
 Stern accents made his pleasure known,
 Though then he used his gentlest tone:
 'Maiden,' he said, 'sing forth thy glea.
 Start not — sing on — it pleases me.'

VIII

Secured within his powerful hold,
 To bend her knee, her hands to fold, 135
 Was all the maiden might;
 And 'O, forgive,' she faintly said,
 'The terrors of a simple maid,
 If thou art mortal wight!
 But if — of such strange tales are told —
 Unearthly warrior of the wild,
 Thou comest to chide mine accents bold,
 My mother, Jutta, knows the spell
 At noon, and midnight pleasing well
 The disembodied ear; 140
 O, let her powerful charms atone
 For aught my rashness may have done,
 And cease thy grasp of fear.'
 Then laughed the knight — his laughter's
 sound
 Hilt in the hollow helmet drowned;
 His barred visor then he raised,
 And steady on the maiden gazed.
 He smooched his brows, as best he might,
 To the dread calm of autumn night,
 When sinks the tempest roar, 150
 Yet still the cautious fisher's eye
 The clouds and fear the gloomy sky,
 And haul their barks on shore.

IX

'Damsel,' he said, 'be wise, and learn
 Matters of weight and deep concern.
 From distant realms I come,
 And wanderer long at length have planned
 In this my native Northern land
 To seek myself a home,
 Not that done — I write I seek; 160
 She must be gentle, soft, and meek, —
 No lovely dame for me.
 Myself am something rough of mood
 And feel the fire of royal blood,
 And therefore do not hold it good

To match in my degree.
 Then, since coy maidens say my face
 Is harsh, my form devoid of grace,
 For a fair lineage to provide
 'Tis meet that my selected bride 170
 In lineaments be fair;
 I love thine well — till now I ne'er
 Looked patient on a face of fear,
 But now that tremulous sob and tear
 Become thy beauty rare.
 One kiss — nay, damsel, coy it not! —
 And now go seek thy parents' cot,
 And say a bridegroom soon I come
 To woo my love and bear her home.'

X

Home sprung the maid without a pause, 180
 As leveret scaped from greyhound's jaws;
 But still she locked, how'er distressed,
 The secret in her boding breast:
 Dreading her sire, who oft forbade
 Her steps should stray to distant glade.
 Night came — to her accustomed nook
 Her distaff aged Jutta took,
 And by the lamp's imperfect glow Rough Wulfstane trimmed his shafts and
 bow. 190
 Sudden and clamorous from the ground
 Upstart slumbering brach and hound;
 Loud knocking next the lodge alarms
 And Wulfstane snatches at his arms,
 When open flew the yielding door
 And that grim warrior pressed the floor.

XI

'All peace be here — What! none replies?
 Dismiss your tears and your surprise.
 'Tis I — that maid hath told my tale, —
 Or, trembler, did thy courage fail?
 It reeks not — it is I demand 200
 Fair Metelil in marriage band;
 Harold the Dauntless I, whose name
 Is brave men's boast and traitor's shame.
 The parents sought each other's eyes
 With awe, resentment, and surprise;
 Wulfstane, to quarrel prompt, began
 The stranger's size and thews to scan;
 But as he scanned his courage sunk,
 And from unequal strife he shrunk,
 Then forth to blight and blench flies 210
 The harmful curse from Jutta's eyes;
 Yet, fatal howsoever, the spell
 On Harold innocently fell!
 And disappointment and amaze
 Were in the witan's wildered gaze.

XII

on the wit of woman woke,
 o the warrior mild she spoke:
 child was all too young.' — 'A toy,
 efuge of a maiden coy.'
 'A powerful baron's heir 220
 s in her heart an interest fair.'
 iffe — whisper in his ear
 Harold is a suitor here! —
 d at length she sought delay:
 ld not the knight till morning stay?
 was the hour — he there might rest
 orn, their lodge's honored guest.
 were her words — her craft might east
 onored guest should sleep his last:
 ot to-night — but soon,' he swore, 230
 ould return, nor leave them more.'
 reshhold then his huge stride crost,
 oon he was in darkness lost.

XIII

led awhile the parents stood,
 changed their fear to angry mood,
 oremost fell their words of ill
 resisting Metelill:
 he not cautioned and forbid,
 arned, implored, accused, and chid,
 ust she still to greenwood roam 240
 rshal such misfortune home?
 e, minion — to thy chamber hence — prudence learn and penitence.
 ent — her lonely couch to steep
 rs which absent lovers weep;
 she gained a troubled sleep,
 Harold's suit was still the theme error of her feverish dream.

XIV

was she gone, her dame and sire
 each other bent their ire; 250
 odsman thou and hast a spear, ouldst thou such an insult bear?'
 he said, 'A man contends men, a witch with sprites and fiends;
 mere mortal wight belong
 loomy brow and frame so strong,
 ou — is this thy promise fair,
 our Lord William, wealthy heir
 rick, Baron of Witten-le-Wear, Metelill to altar bear? 260
 the spells thou boast'st as thine
 but to slay some peasant's kine,
 ain in autumn's storms to steep,
 rough fog and fen to sweep

And hag-ride some poor rustic's sleep?
 Is such mean mischief worth the fame
 Of sorceress and witch's name?
 Fame, which with all men's wish conspires,
 With thy deserts and my desires,
 To damn thy corpse to penal fires? 270
 Out on thee, witch! aroint! aroint!
 What now shall put thy schemes in joint?
 What save this trusty arrow's point,
 From the dark dingle when it flies
 And he who meets it gasps and dies?'

XV

Stern she replied, 'I will not wage
 War with thy folly or thy rage;
 But ere the morrow's sun be low,
 Wulfstane of Rookhope, thou shalt know
 If I can venge me on a foe. 280
 Believe the while that whatso'er
 I spoke in ire of bow and spear,
 It is not Harold's destiny
 The death of pilfered deer to die.
 But he, and thou, and yon pale moon —
 That shall be yet more pallid soon,
 Before she sink behind the dell —
 Thou, she, and Harold too, shall tell
 What Jutta knows of charm or spell.'
 Thus muttering, to the door she bent 290
 Her wayward steps and forth she went,
 And left alone the moody sire
 To cherish or to slake his ire.

XVI

Far faster than belonged to age
 Has Jutta made her pilgrimage.
 A priest has met her as she passed,
 And crossed himself and stood aghast:
 She traced a hamlet — not a cur
 His throat would ope, his foot would stir;
 By crouch, by trembling, and by groan, 300
 They made her hated presence known!
 But when she trode the sable fell,
 Were wilder sounds her way to tell, —
 For far was heard the fox's yell,
 The black-cock waked and faintly crew,
 Screamed o'er the moss the scared curlew;
 Where o'er the cataract the oak
 Lay slant, was heard the raven's croak;
 The mountain-cat which sought his prey
 Glared, screamed, and started from her
 way. 310
 Such music cheered her journey lone
 To the deep dell and rocking stone:
 There with unhallowed hymn of praise
 She called a god of beathen days.

XVII

INVOCATION

'From thy Pomeranian throne,
Hewn in rock of living stone,
Where, to thy godhead faithful yet,
Bend Esthonian, Finn, and Lett,
And their swords in vengeance whet,
That shall make thine altars wet,
Wet and red for ages more
With the Christian's hated gore, —
Hear me, Sovereign of the Rock !
Hear me, mighty Zernebock !

120

' Mightiest of the mighty known,
Here thy wonders have been shown;
Hundred tribes in various tongue
Oft have here thy praises sung;
Down that stone with Runic seamed
Hundred victims' blood hath streamed !
Now one woman comes alone
And but wets it with her own,
The last, the feeblest of thy flock, —
Hear — and be present, Zernebock !

130

'Hark ! he comes ! the night-blast cold
Wilder sweeps along the wold;
The cloudless moon grows dark and dim,
And bristling hair and quaking limb
Proclaim the Master Demon nigh, —
Those who view his form shall die !
Lo ! I stoop and veil my head;
Thou who ridest the tempest dread,
Shaking hill and rending oak —
Spare me ! spare me, Zernebock !

140

'He comes not yet ! Shall cold delay
Thy votaress at her need repay ?
Thou — shall I call thee god or fiend ? —
Let others on thy mood attend
With prayer and ritual — Jutta's arms
Are necromantic words and charms ;
Mine is the spell that uttered once
Shall wake thy Master from his trance,
Shake his red mansion-house of pain
And burst his seven-times-twisted chain ! —

150

So ! com'st thou ere the spell is spoke ?
I own thy presence, Zernebock ! —

XVIII

'Daughter of dust,' the Deep Voice
said —
Shook while it spoke the vale for dread,
Rocked on the base that massive stone,

The Evil Deity to own, —
'Daughter of dust ! not mine the power
Thou seek'st on Harold's fatal hour.
'Twixt heaven and hell there is a strife
Waged for his soul and for his life,
And fain would we the combat win
And snatch him in his hour of sin.
There is a star now rising red
That threatens him with an influence dread:
Woman, thine arts of malice whet,
To use the space before it set.
Involve him with the church in strife,
Push on adventurous chance his life;
Ourself will in the hour of need,
As best we may, thy counsels speed.'
So ceased the Voice; for seven leagues
round

160

170

Each hamlet started at the sound,
But slept again as slowly died
Its thunders on the hill's brown side.

XIX

'And is this all,' said Jutta stern,
'That thou canst teach and I can learn ?
Hence ! to the land of fog and waste,
There fittest is thine influence placed,
Thou powerless, sluggish Deity !
But ne'er shall Briton bend the knee
Again before so poor a god.'
She struck the altar with her rod;
Slight was the touch as when at need
A damsel stirs her tardy steed;
But to the blow the stone gave place,
And, starting from its balanced base,
Rolled thundering down the moonlight
dell, —
Re-echoed moorland, rock, and fell;
Into the moonlight tarn it dashed,
Their shores the sounding surges lashed,
And there was ripple, rage, and foam;
But on that lake, so dark and lone,
Placid and pale the moonbeam shone
As Jutta hied her home.

180

CANTO THIRD

I

GRAY towers of Durham ! there was once a time
I viewed your battlements with such vague hope
As brightens life in its first dawning prime;

Not that e'en then came within fancy's scope
A vision vain of mitre, throne, or cope;
Yet, gazing on the venerable hall,
Her flattering dreams would in perspective ope
Some reverend room, some prebendary's
stall, —
And thus Hope me deceived as she de-ceiveth all.

Well yet I love thy mixed and massive piles,
Half church of God, half castle 'gainst
the Scot,
And long to roam these venerable aisles,
With records stored of deeds long since forgot;
There might I share my Surtees' happier
lot,
Who leaves at will his patrimonial field
To ransack every crypt and hallowed spot,
And from oblivion rend the spoils they
yield,
Restoring priestly chant and clang of knightly shield.

Vain is the wish — since other cares demand
Each vacant hour, and in another
clime;
But still that northern harp invites my
hand
Which tells the wonder of thine earlier
time;
And fain its numbers would I now command
To paint the beauties of that dawning
fair
When Harold, gazing from its lofty
stand
Upon the western heights of Beaurepaire,
Saw Saxon Eadmer's towers begirt by winding Wear.

II

Fair on the half-seen streams the sunbeams danced,
Betraying it beneath the woodland bank,
And fair between the Gothic turrets glanced
Broad lights, and shadows fell on front
and flank,

Where tower and buttress rose in martial rank,
And girdled in the massive donjon keep,
And from their circuit pealed o'er bush
and bank
The matin bell with summons long and
deep,
And echo answered still with long-resounding sweep.

III

The morning mists rose from the ground,
Each merry bird awakened round
As if in revelry;
Afar the bugle's clanging sound
Called to the chase the lagging hound;
The gale breathed soft and free,
And seemed to linger on its way
To catch fresh odors from the spray,
And waved it in its wanton play
So light and gamesomely.
The scenes which morning beams reveal,
Its sounds to hear, its gales to feel
In all their fragrance round him steal,
It melted Harold's heart of steel,
And, hardly wotting why,
He doffed his helmet's gloomy pride
And hung it on a tree beside,
Laid mace and falchion by,
And on the greensward sate him down
And from his dark habitual frown
Relaxed his rugged brow —
Whoever hath the doubtful task
From that stern Dane a boon to ask
Were wise to ask it now.

IV

His place beside young Gunnar took
And marked his master's softening look,
And in his eye's dark mirror spied
The gloom of stormy thoughts subside,
And cautious watched the fittest tide
To speak a warning word.
So when the torrent's billows shrink,
The timid pilgrim on the brink
Waits long to see them wave and sink
Ere he dare brave the ford,
And often after doubtful pause
His step advances or withdraws;
Fearful to move the slumbering ire
Of his stern lord, thus stood the squire
Till Harold raised his eye,
That glanced as when athwart the shroud
Of the dispersing tempest-cloud
The bursting sunbeams fly.

V

'Arouse thee, son of Ermengarde,
 Offspring of prophetess and bard ! 80
 Take harp and greet this lovely prime
 With some high strain of Runic rhyme,
 Strong, deep, and powerful ! Peal it round
 Like that loud bell's sonorous sound,
 Yet wild by fits, as when the lay
 Of bird and bugle hail the day.
 Such was my grandsire Eric's sport
 When dawn gleamed on his martial court.
 Heymar the Scald with harp's high sound
 Summoned the chiefs who slept around ; 90
 Couched on the spoils of wolf and bear,
 They roused like lions from their lair,
 Then rushed in emulation forth
 To enhance the glories of the north. —
 Proud Eric, mightiest of thy race,
 Where is thy shadowy resting-place ?
 In wild Valhalla hast thou quaffed
 From foeman's skull metheglin draught,
 Or wanderest where thy cairn was piled
 To frown o'er oceans wide and wild ? 100
 Or have the milder Christians given
 Thy refuge in their peaceful heaven ?
 Where'er thou art, to thee are known
 Our toils endured, our trophies won,
 Our wars, our wanderings, and our woes.'
 He ceased, and Gunnar's song arose.

VI

SONG

'Hawk and osprey screamed for joy
 O'er the beetling cliffs of Hoy,
 Crimson foam the beach o'erspread,
 The heath was dyed with darker red, 110
 When o'er Eric, Ingvar's son,
 Dane and Northman piled the stone,
 Singing wild the war-song stern,
 " Rest thee, Dweller of the Cairn ! "

'Where eddying currents foam and boil
 By Bersa's burgh and Gremsay's isle,
 The seaman sees a martial form
 Half-mingled with the mist and storm.
 In anxious awe he bears away
 To moor his bark in Stromna's bay, 120
 And murmurs from the bounding stern,
 " Rest thee, Dweller of the Cairn ! "

'What cares disturb the mighty dead ?
 Each honored rite was duly paid ;
 No daring hand thy helm unlaced,

Thy sword, thy shield, were near thee placed ;

Thy flinty couch no tear profaned :
 Without, with hostile blood 't was stained ;
 Within, 't was lined with moss and fern, —
 Then rest thee, Dweller of the Cairn ! 130

'He may not rest: from realms afar
 Comes voice of battle and of war,
 Of conquest wrought with bloody hand
 On Carmel's cliffs and Jordan's straud,
 When Odin's warlike son could daunt
 The turbaned race of Termagaunt.'

VII

'Peace,' said the knight, 'the noble Scald
 Our warlike fathers' deeds recalled,
 But never strove to soothe the son
 With tales of what himself had done. 140

At Odin's board the bard sits high
 Whose harp ne'er stooped to flattery,
 But highest he whose daring lay
 Hath dared unwelcome truths to say.'
 With doubtful smile young Gunnar eyed
 His master's looks and nought replied —
 But well that smile his master led
 To construe what he left unsaid.

'Is it to me, thou timid youth, 149
 Thou fear'st to speak unwelcome truth !
 My soul no more thy censure grieves
 Than frosts rob laurels of their leaves.
 Say on — and yet — beware the rude
 And wild distemper of my blood ;
 Loath were I that mine ire should wrong
 The youth that bore my shield so long,
 And who, in service constant still,
 Though weak in frame, art strong in
 will.' —

'O !' quoth the page, 'even there depends 159

My counsel — there my warning tends —
 Oft seems as of my master's breast
 Some demon were the sudden guest ;
 Then at the first misconstrued word
 His hand is on the mace and sword,
 From her firm seat his wisdom driven,
 His life to countless dangers given.
 O, would that Gunnar could suffice
 To be the fiend's last sacrifice.
 So that, when glutted with my gore,
 He fled and tempted thee no more !' 170

VIII

Then waved his hand and shook his head
 The impatient Dane while thus he said :

at, youth — it is not thine
 he spirit of our line —
 berserker's rage divine, whose inspiring deeds are ought
 a strength and human thought.
 upon his gloomy soul
 ion feels the influence roll, the lake, he leaps the wall — 180
 the depth, nor plumbs the l, mail-less, on he goes inst a host of foes;

 as he holds like withered reeds,
 like maiden's silken weeds;
 t a hundred will he strive,
 less wounds and yet survive.
 the eagles to his cry
 er and of victory, —
 he quaffs like Odin's bowl, 190 is his sword, — deep drinks his

;
 it meet him in his ire
 o ruin, rout, and fire;
 gorged lion, seeks some den
 as till he's man agen. —
 'st the signs of look and limb s that rage to overbrim — w'at when I am moved and
 ;
 thou sec'st me roll mine eye,
 th thus, and stamp my foot, 200
 r safety and be mute;
 eak boldly out whate'er
 at a knight should hear.
 , youth. Thy lay has power ark and sullen hour; —
 in monks are wont to say old were charmed away;
 not I will rashly deem peech, whate'er the theme.' 209

IX

me strait in doubt and dread ful pilot drops the lead,
 xas in the midst to steer,
 ag channel sounds with fear;
 dangerous ground he swerved,
 his master's brow observed, intervals to fling
 n the melodious string, moody breast apply
 ng charm of harmony,
 ed half, and half express, 220
 ng song conveyed the rest. —

SONG

' Ill fares the bark with tackle riven,
 And ill when on the breakers driven, —
 Ill when the storm-sprite shrieks in air,
 And the scared mermaid tears her hair;
 But worse when on her helm the hand
 Of some false traitor holds command.

' Ill fares the fainting palmer, placed
 Mid Hebron's rocks or Rana's waste, —
 Ill when the scorching sun is high, 230
 And the expected font is dry, —
 Worse when his guide o'er sand and heath,
 The barbarous Copt, has planned his death.

' Ill fares the knight with buckler cleft,
 And ill when of his helm bereft, —
 Ill when his steed to earth is flung,
 Or from his grasp his falchion wrung;
 But worse, of instant ruin token,
 When he lists rede by woman spoken.' —

X

' How now, fond boy? — Canst thou think ill,' 240
 Said Harold, ' of fair Metelill? '

' She may be fair,' the page replied
 As through the strings he ranged, —
 ' She may be fair; but yet,' he cried,
 And then the strain he changed, —

SONG

' She may be fair,' he sang, ' but yet
 Far fairer have I seen
 Than she, for all her locks of jet
 And eyes so dark and sheen.
 Were I a Danish knight in arms, 250
 As one day I may be,
 My heart should own no foreign charms —
 A Danish maid for me !

' I love my father's northern land,
 Where the dark pine-trees grow,
 And the bold Baltic's echoing strand
 Looks o'er each grassy oo.
 I love to mark the lingering sun,
 From Denmark loath to go,
 And leaving on the billows bright, 260
 To cheer the short-lived summer night,
 A path of ruddy glow.

' But most the northern maid I love,
 With breast like Denmark's snow

And form as fair as Denmark's pine,
Who loves with purple beath to twine
Her locks of sunny glow;
And sweetly blend that shade of gold
With the cheek's rosy hue,
And Faith might for her mirror hold
That eye of matchless blue.

270

'T is hers the manly sports to love
That southern maidens fear,
To bend the bow by stream and grove,
And lift the hunter's spear.
She can her chosen champion's flight
With eye undazzled see,
Clasp him victorious from the strife,
Or on his corpse yield up her life, —
A Danish maid for me !'

280

XI

Then smiled the Dane: 'Thou canst so well,
The virtues of our maidens tell,
Hail could I wish my choice had been
Blue eyes, and hair of golden sheen,
And lofty soul; — yet what of all
Hast thou to charge on Matilda ?'
'Nothing on her,' young Gannar said,
'But her base sire's ignoble trade.
Her mother too — the general fame
Hath given to Jutta evil name.
And in her gray eye is a flame
Art cannot hide nor fear can tame. —
That wicked woodman's peasant out
Twice have thine honored footsteps sought,
And twice returned with such ill omen
As sent thee on some desperate deed.'

290

XII

'Thou err'st: Jutta wisely said,
He that comes sutor to a maid,
Ere linked in marriage, should provide
Lands and a dwelling for his bride —
My father's by the Tyne and Wear
I have retained.' — 'O, all too dear
And all too dangerous the prize,
E'en were it won,' young Gannar cries; —
And then the Jutta's fresh feature
Drew 'thou shouldst seek a heathen Dane,
From Denmark's shores a boon to gain
When thou hast left their vassal land
In their own hands.' — Flashed Harold's
eye,
Thundered his voice — 'False page, you do !'
The castle, wall and tower is mine,
Built by old Wulfstan at Tyne.

300

The wild-cat will defend his den,
Fights for her nest the timid wren;
And think'st thou I'll forego my right
For dread of monk or monkish knight ? —
Up and away, that deepening bell
Doth of the bishop's conclave tell.
Thither will I in manner due,
As Jutta bade, my claim to sue;
And if to right me they are loath,
Then woe to church and chapter both !'
Now shift the scene and let the curtain fall,
And our next entry be Saint Cathbert's hall.

310

CANTO FOURTH

I

FULL many a hard hath sung the solemn gloom
Of the long Gothic aisle and stone-ribbed
roof,
O'er-canopying shrine and gorgeous work,
Carved screen, and altar glimmering far
aloof
And bleeding with the shade — a matchless proof
Of high devotion, which hath now wasted
cold;
Yet legends say that Luxury's brute hand
Intruded oft within such sacred land,
Like step of Bell's false priest tracked in his fane of old.

Well pleased am I, howe'er, that when the hour
Of our rude neighbors' whilom designed to come,
Uncalled and ere unwise, to sweep out
And cleanse our chamber from the rags of Rome,
They spake not on our ancient fane the demon
To whom their hugot and gave o'er their
own,
But spared the martyred saint and stored
them,
Through papal vicaries had graced the
stone,
And through the walls still loved the organ's swelling tone.

And deem not, though 't is now our part to paint
A picture swayed by love of power and gold.

320

That all who wore the mitre of our Saint
Like to ambitious Aldingar I hold;
Since both in modern times and days of
old

It sate on those whose virtues might atone

Their predecessors' frailties trebly told:
Matthew and Morton we as such may
own —

And such — if fame speak truth — the honored Barrington.

II

But now to earlier and to ruder times,
As subject meet, I tune my rugged rhymes,

Telling how fairly the chapter was met,
And rood and books in seemly order set;
Huge brass-clasped volumes which the
hand

Of studious priest but rarely scanned,
Now on fair carved desk displayed,
'T was theirs the solemn scene to aid.
O'erhead with many a scutcheon graced
And quaint devices interlaced,
A labyrinth of crossing rows,
The roof in lessening arches shows;
Beneath its shade placed proud and
high

With footstool and with canopy,
Sate Aldingar — and prelate ne'er
More haughty graced Saint Cuthbert's chair;

Canons and deacons were placed below,
In due degree and lengthened row.
Unmoved and silent each sat there,
Like image in his oaken chair;
Nor head nor hand nor foot they stirred,
Nor lock of hair nor tress of beard;
And of their eyes severe alone

The twinkle showed they were not stone.

III

The prelate was to speech addressed,
Each head sunk reverent on each breast;
But ere his voice was heard — without Arose a wild tumultuous shout,
Offspring of wonder mixed with fear,
Such as in crowded streets we hear
Hailing the flames that, bursting out,
Attract yet scare the rabble rout.
Ere it had ceased a giant hand

Shook oaken door and iron band
Till oak and iron both gave way,
Clashed the long bolts, the hinges bray,

And, ere upon angel or saint they can
call,
Stands Harold the Dauntless in midst of the hall.

IV

'Now save ye, my masters, both rocket and rood,

From bishop with mitre to deacon with hood!

For here stands Count Harold, old Witikind's son,

Come to sue for the lands which his ancestors won.'

The prelate looked round him with sore
troubled eye,

Unwilling to grant yet afraid to deny;

While each canon and deacon who heard
the Dane speak,

To be safely at home would have fasted a week: —

Then Aldingar roused him and answered
again,

'Thou suest for a boon which thou canst not obtain;

The Church hath no fiefs for an unchristened Dane.

Thy father was wise, and his treasure hath
given

That the priests of a chantry might hymn him to heaven;

And the fiefs which whilome he possessed
as his due

Have lapsed to the Church, and been granted anew

To Anthony Conyers and Alberic Vere,
For the service Saint Cuthbert's blest banner to bear

When the bands of the North come to foray
the Wear;

Then disturb not our conclave with wrangling or blame,

But in peace and in patience pass hence as ye came.'

V

Loud laughed the stern Pagan, 'They're free from the care

Of fief and of service, both Conyers and Vere, —

Six feet of your chancel is all they will need,

A buckler of stone and a corselet of lead. —
Ho, Gunnar! — the tokens!' — and, severed anew,

A head and a hand on the altar he threw.
 Then shuddered with terror both canon and monk,
 They knew the glazed eye and the countenance shrunk,
 And of Anthony Conyers the half-grizzled
 hair,
 And the scar on the hand of Sir Alberic
 Vere.
 There was not a churchman or priest that was there
 But grew pale at the sight and betook him to prayer.

VI

Count Harold laughed at their looks of
 fear:

'Was this the hand should your banner
 bear?'

Was that the head should wear the casque
 In battle at the Church's task?

Was it to such you gave the place
 Of Harold with the heavy mace?
 Find me between the Wear and Tyne
 A knight will wield this club of mine, —
 Give him my fiefs, and I will say
 There's wit beneath the cowl of gray.'

He raised it, rough with many a stain
 Caught from crushed skull and spouting
 brain;

He wheeled it that it shrilly sung
 And the aisles echoed as it swung,
 Then dashed it down with sheer descent
 And split King Osric's monument. —

'How like ye this music? How trow ye the hand

That can wield such a mace may be reft of its land?

No answer? — I spare ye a space to agree,
 And Saint Cuthbert inspire you, a saint if he be.

Ten strides through your chancel, ten strokes on your bell,

And again I am with you — grave fathers, farewell.'

VII

He turned from their presence, he clashed
 the oak door,

And the clang of his stride died away on the floor;

And his head from his bosom the prelate
 uprears

With a ghost-seer's look when the ghost disappears:

'Ye Priests of Saint Cuthbert, now give me your rede,
 For never of counsel had bishop more
 need!

Were the arch-fiend incarnate in flesh and
 in bone,

The language, the look, and the laugh were his own.

In the bounds of Saint Cuthbert there is not a knight

Dare confront in our quarrel yon goblin
 sight;

Then rede me aright to his claim to reply,

'Tis unlawful to grant and 't is death to deny.'

VIII

On venison and malmsey that morning had fed

The Cellarer Vinsauf — 't was thus that he
 said:

'Delay till to-morrow the Chapter's reply:
 Let the feast be spread fair and the wine
 be poured high:

If he's mortal he drinks, — if he drinks,
 he is ours —

His bracelets of iron, — his bed in our towers.'

This man had a laughing eye,
 Trust not, friends, when such you spy;

A beaker's depth he well could drain,
 Revel, sport, and jest amain —

The haunch of the deer and the grape's bright dye

Never bard loved them better than I;
 But sooner than Vinsauf filled me my
 wine,

Passed me his jest, and laughed at mine,
 Though the buck were of Bearpark, of Bordeaux the vine,

 With the dullest hermit I'd rather dine

On an oaken cake and a draught of the Tyne.

IX

Walwayn the leech spoke next — he knew
 Each plant that loves the sun and dew,

But special those whose juice can gain
 Dominion o'er the blood and brain;

The peasant who saw him by pale moon-
 beam

Gathering such herbs by bank and stream
 Deemed his thin form and soundless tread

Were those of wanderer from the dead. —

'thy wine,' he said, 'hath power, as are heavy, strong our tower;
 drops from this flask of mine, strong than dungeons, gyves, or ne,
 e him prison under ground
 rk, more narrow, more profound.
 le, good rede, let Harold have — leath and a heathen's grave.'
 in on a sick man's bed,
 g for hours for the leech's tread,
 eemed that his presence alone
 power to bid my pain begone;
 sted his words of comfort given,
 racles from heaven; 160
 nited his steps from my chamber
 or,
 sed them when they were heard
 more; — er than Walwayn my sick couch
 ould nigh,
 e were by leech-craft unaided to e.

X

rrice done in fervent zeal
 reb may pardon and conceal, stful prelate said, 'but ne'er mel ere the act should hear. —
 f Jarrow, advise us now,
 ip of wisdom is on thy brow; 180
 t, thy nights, in cloister pent, to mystic learning lent; —
 f Jarrow, in thee is my hope, ll mayst give counsel to prelate or pe.'

XI

3 the prior, — 'Tis wisdom's use elay what we dare not refuse;
 ting the boon he comes hither to k,
 r the giant gigantic task;
 ee how a step so sounding can ead
 of darkness, danger, and dread; 190 not, he will not, impugn our decree
 s but for proof of his chivalry;
 e Guy to return or Sir Bevis the
 song,
 le have adventure might cumber
 em long — tle of Seven Shields' — 'Kind aselm, no more!
 ) of the Pagan approaches the
 or.'

The churchmen were hushed. — In his mantle of skin
 With his mace on his shoulder Count
 Harold strode in.
 There was foam on his lips, there was fire
 in his eye,
 For, chafed by attendance, his fury was
 nigh. 200
 'Ho! Bishop,' he said, 'dost thou grant me my claim?
 Or must I assert it by falchion and flame?'

XII

'On thy suit, gallant Harold,' the bishop
 replied,
 In accents which trembled, 'we may not decide
 Until proof of your strength and your valor we saw —
 'Tis not that we doubt them, but such is the law.' —
 'And would you, Sir Prelate, have Harold make sport
 For the cowls and the shavelings that herd
 in thy court?
 Say what shall he do? — From the shrine shall he tear
 The lead bier of thy patron and heave it in
 air, 210
 And through the long chancel make Cuthbert take wing
 With the speed of a bullet dismissed from the sling?' —
 'Nay, spare such probation,' the cellarer
 said,
 'From the mouth of our minstrels thy task shall be read.
 While the wine sparkles high in the goblet
 of gold
 And the revel is loudest, thy task shall be told;
 And thyself, gallant Harold, shall, bearing it, tell
 That the bishop, his cowls, and his shave-lings, meant well.'

XIII

Loud revelled the guests and the goblets loud rang,
 But louder the minstrel, Hugh Meneville,
 sang; 220
 And Harold, the hurry and pride of whose
 soul,
 E'en when verging to fury, owned music's control,

stan then wended

rite gray.

lies are to shall wave

Northumber-

mbro' shall melt in

are be perilled and won.

xv

my probation? ' wild Harold

ad,

a lone castle to press a lone

ed?—

en, my lord bishop, — Saint Cuthert to borrow,

lle of Seven Shields receives me

tomorrow.'

CANTO FIFTH

I

ark's sage courtier to her princely outh,

ing his cloud an ousel or a whale,

though unwittingly, a partial uth;

antasy embroiders Nature's veil.

nts of ruddy eye or dawning pale,

a swart thunder-cloud or silver

are,

at the ground-work of the rich dell

Which Fantasy with pencil wild portrays, Blending what seems and is in the wrapt
muser's gaze.

Nor are the stubborn forms of earth and
stone

Less to the Sorceress's empire given;

Nor not with unsubstantial lines alone,

light from the varying surge of vacant

aven,

bursting sunbeam or from flashing

evin,

limas her pictures: on the earth, as

air,

Arise her castles and her car is driven;

And never gazed the eye on scene so fair,

But of its boasted charms gave Fancy half the share.

II

Up a wild pass went Harold, bent to
prove,

Hugh Meneville, the adventure of thy
lay;

Gunnar pursued his steps in faith and
love,

Ever companion of his master's way.

Midward their path, a rock of granite
gray

From the adjoining cliff had made descent, —

A barren mass — yet with her drooping
spray

Had a young birch-tree crowned its battlement,

Twisting her fibrous roots through cranny,
flaw, and rent.

This rock and tree could Gunnar's thought engage

Till Fancy brought the tear-drop to his
eye,

And at his master asked the timid
page,

'What is the emblem that a bard should
spy

In that rude rock and its green canopy?'

And Harold said, 'Like to the helmet
brave

Of warrior slain in fight it seems to
lie,

And these same drooping boughs do o'er
it wave

Not all unlike the plume his lady's favor
gave.'

'Ah, no!' replied the page; 'the ill-starred love
Of some poor maid is in the emblem shown,
Whose fates are with some hero's interwoven,
And rooted on a heart to love unknown.
And as the gentle dews of heaven alone
Nourish those drooping boughs, and as the scathe
Of the red lightning roods both tree and stone,
So fares it with her unrequited faith, —
Her soul's relief is tears — her only refuge death.'

III

'Then art a fond fastidious boy,'
Harold replied, 'to females say,
Yet pressing still of love,
Even so amid the clash of war
I know thou lovest to keep afar,
Though destined by thy soul's star
With one like me to roam,
Whose business and whose joys are found
Upon the bloody battle-ground.
Yet foolish trembling as thou art,
Thou hast a nook of my rude heart,
And thou and I will never part: —
Harold would wrap the world in flame
For injury on Guinnar's name.'

IV

The grateful page made no reply,
But turned to heaven his gentle eye,
And clasped his hands as one who said,
'My toil — my wandering — am I repaid?'
That it a golden lighter strain,
Compelled him forced to speak again:
And as they flowed along,
He ceased not cadence soft and slow,
And hushed, like discoloured snow,
They melted into song.

'What thought through field of carnage Went,
I may not follow Harold's stride,
To see what fate Guinnar's pride
Lies Harold's feet are on —
And aware that the crowd of men
He loves the best of grey wolf's den,
When clattering, he saw Harold's side
In forest, field, or lee

VI

'Break off!' said Harold, in a tone
Where hurry and surprise were shown,
With some slight touch of fear,
'Break off, we are not here alone;
A palmer form comes slowly on!
By cowl and staff and mantle known,
My monitor is near.
Now mark him, Gunnar, heedfully;
He pauses by the blighted tree —
Dost see him, youth? — Thou couldst not see
When in the vale of Galilee
I first beheld his form,
Nor when we met that other while
In Cephalonia's rocky isle
Before the fearful storm. —
Dost see him now?' — The page, distraught
With terror, answered, 'I see nought,
And there is nought to see.
Sure that the oak's scathed boughs
Down
Upon the path a shadow lower
That, like a pilgrim's dusky gown,
Waves with the waving tree.'

VII

Count Harold gazed upon the oak
As if his eyes were would have broke,
And then resolutely said,
'He whom it will you phantom gray —
Nor heaven nor hell shall ever say
That for their shadows from his way
Count Harold turned dismayed
I'll speak him, though his accents fill
My hear with that unwelcome thrill
What vulgar mind can fear
I will subdue it.' Fort he strode, Paused where the blighted oak-tree showed
Its sad shadow on the road,
And, folding at his bosom breast
His arms, said, 'Speak — I hear.'

VIII

The deep voice said, 'O will of will,
Furnish thy purpose to fulfil —
Harrow-scarcs are unrepentant still,
How long, O Harold, and the tread
Distant to slumber a the dead?
Hast ever it th with we two walked
The ash of the dead, the wicket,
Am down a thicket old the wall
The hands of blood are a wealth
In the thorn bush, the thorn tree, near!
For life is brief and judgement near.'

IX

ceased the Voice. — The Dane replied where awe and inborn pride story strove, 'In vain ye chide
 If for ravaging the flock, its hardness taunt the rock, — 130
 they — my Danish strain
 streams of fire through every vein.
 by realms of goule and ghost,
 the fame of Eric lost,
 ilkind's the Waster, known fame or spoil was to be won;
 galleys ne'er bore off a shore left not black with flame? —
 my sire, — and, sprung of him, ever merciless and grim, 140
 I be soft and tame?
 once and with my crimes no more
 upbraid me,
 hat Waster's son and am but what he made me.'

X

phantom groaned; — the mountain hook around,
 wn and wild-doe started at the
 sound,
 rise and fern did wildly round them
 wave,
 me sudden storm the impulse gave.
 ou hast said is truth — yet on the
 dead
 bad sire let not the charge be laid like thee, with unrelenting pace 150 rave to cradle ran the evil race: —
 as in his avarice and ire, as and towns he gave to sword and ire;
 ood like water, wasted every land,
 destroying angel's burning brand;
 I whate'er of ill might be invented,
 all these things he did — he did,
 but he REPENTED!
 ice it is part of his punishment still his offspring pursues his example of
 ill.
 as, when thy tempest of wrath shall next shake thee, 160
 y loins for resistance, my son, and awake thee;
 yield'st to thy fury, how tempted
 never,
 be of repentance shall ope for thee
 NEVER!

XI

'He is gone,' said Lord Harold and gazed as he spoke;
 'There is nought on the path but the shade
 of the oak.
 He is gone whose strange presence my feeling oppressed,
 Like the night-hag that sits on the slum-
 berer's breast.
 My heart beats as thick as a fugitive's
 tread,
 And cold dews drop from my brow and my head. —
 Ho! Gunnar, the flasket yon almoner
 gave; 170
 He said that three drops would recall from the grave.
 For the first time Count Harold owns leechcraft has power,
 Or, his courage to aid, lacks the juice of a flower!'
 The page gave the flasket, which Walwayn had filled
 With the juice of wild roots that his heart had distilled —
 So baneful their influence on all that had breath,
 One drop had been frenzy and two had been
 death.
 Harold took it, but drank not; for jubilee
 shrill
 And music and clamor were heard on the hill,
 And down the steep pathway o'er stock and o'er stone 180
 The train of a bridal came blithesomely
 on;
 There was song, there was pipe, there was timbrel, and still
 The burden was, 'Joy to the fair Metelill!'

XII

Harold might see from his high stance
 Himself unseen, that train advance,
 With mirth and melody; —
 On horse and foot a mingled throng,
 Measuring their steps to bridal song
 And bridal minstrelsy;
 And ever when the blithesome rout 190
 Lent to the song their choral shout,
 Redoubling echoes rolled about,
 While echoing cave and cliff sent out
 The answering symphony
 Of all those mimic notes which dwell
 In hollow rock and sounding dell.

His deadly arm is up to smite !
But, as the mace aloft he swung, 390
To stop the blow young Gunnar sprang,
Around his master's knees he clang,

And cried, 'In mercy spare !
O, think upon the words of fear
Spoke by that visionary Seer,
The crisis he foretold is here, —
Grant mercy, — or despair !'

This word suspended Harold's mood,
Yet still with arm upraised he stood,
And visage like the headsman's rude 300
That pauses for the sign.

'O mark thee with the blessed rood,'
The page implored: 'Speak word of
good,

Resist the fiend or be subdued !'

He signed the cross divine —
Instant his eye bath human light,
Less red, less keen, less fiercely bright;
His brow relaxed the obdurate frown,
The fatal mace sinks gently down,

He turns and strides away; 310

Yet oft, like revellers who leave
Unfinished feast, looks back to grieve,
As if repenting the reprieve

He granted to his prey.

Yet still of forbearance one sign hath he
given,

And fierce Witikind's son made one step towards heaven.

XVIII

But though his dreaded footsteps part,
Death is behind and shakes his dart;
Lord William on the plain is lying,
Beside him Metelill seems dying ! — 320
Bring odors — essences in haste —
And lo ! a flasket richly chased, —

But Jutta the elixir proves
Ere pouring it for those she loves —
Then Walwayn's potion was not wasted,
For when three drops the hag had tasted

So dismal was her yell,
Each bird of evil omen woke,
The raven gave his fatal croak,
And shrieked the night-crow from the oak, 330

The screech-owl from the thicket broke,
And fluttered down the dell !

So fearful was the sound and stern,
The slumbers of the full-gorged erne
Were startled, and from furze and fern
Of forest and of fell

The fox and famished wolf replied —

For wolves then prowled the Cheviot
side —

From mountain head to mountain head
The unhallowed sounds around were sped; 340

But when their latest echo fled
The sorceress on the ground lay dead.

XIX

Such was the scene of blood and woes
With which the bridal morn arose

Of William and of Metelill;

But oft, when dawning 'gins to spread,
The summer morn peeps dim and red
Above the eastern hill,

Ere, bright and fair, upon his road
The king of splendor walks abroad; 350
So, when this cloud had passed away,
Bright was the noontide of their day
And all serene its setting ray.

CANTO SIXTH

I

WELL do I hope that this my minstrel
tale

Will tempt no traveller from southern fields,

Whether in tilbury, barouche, or mail,
To view the Castle of these Seven Proud Shields.

Small confirmation its condition yields
To Meneville's high lay, — no towers are
seen

On the wild heath but those that Fancy builds,

And, save a fosse that tracks the moor
with green,

Is nought remains to tell of what may there
have been.

And yet grave authors, with the no small waste 30

Of their grave time, have dignified the spot
By theories, to prove the fortress placed
By Roman bands to curb the invading Scot.

Hutchinson, Horseley, Camden, I might quote,

But rather choose the theory less civil
Of boors, who, origin of things forgot,
Refer still to the origin of evil,

And for their master-mason choose that master-fiend the Devil.

II

Therefore, I say, it was on head-built towers
 Not stout Count Harold bent his wondering gaze
 When evening dew was on the heather flowers,
 And the last sunbeams made the mountain blaze
 And lit the battlements of other days
 With the bright level light ere sinking down Flashed them, the lightning Dene surrounded.
 The Norman found Sharps that o'er the gates were
 And on their helmets traced high marks of old renown.

A cool North Wind laid on his summerbreeze
 And blew of Persimmon's crimson stain, Stripped from its strange autumn robe a crimson stain.
 Down in the hollows a rustling map
 A cornucopia gill was under autumn's
 map.
 A dagger - dagger was in Harold's
 hand.
 Yarethunna's hand gave a one-hand
 map.
 Surrounded by a stone - and signs were
 given
 Upon these antique shields, all vantage was and given.

II

Three answers, I say: Harold, says: the milk-and
 When ponderous bolts were rattled to
 down
 Ye all that bear adventures' dought:
 Harold
 The unadorned message to each How strong their armor, weapons, is
 given
 And answered men, save that but a hat
 And the north Tower in the While separation, we turned to see
 With the of other words: that words also.
 As: still more the put and have: the answer was.

Vain now those spells; for soon with heavy clank
 The feebly-fastened gate was inward pushed,
 And as it oped, through that embossed
 rank
 Of antique shields the wind of evening rushed
 With sound most like a groan and then was hushed.
 Is none who on such spot such sounds could hear
 But to his heart the blood had faster
 rushed.
 Yet to him Harold's words that there
 was none —
 In spite of danger signs, but had no sound of fear.

71

Yet Harold and his page no sign were
 traced
 Within the castle that of danger showed,
 For still the hulk and marble were still
 and whole,
 As through their precincts the adventures went.
 The wren high towers rose stark, tall
 and whole.
 Each tower presenting to their sur-
 round
 A hall in which a king might make abode,
 And but beams, partitioned hall great
 and high.
 Was there a tower for rest: a want a king might be.

As it is: there a' late that hour,
 Indeed, from the table it said: perhaps had:
 And so: it was: two hundred years: I
 mean.
 Now did a last: unadorned festival
 Flashed: and over: see, standing cap was: all
 Of: tarnished, gold, or silver: making
 ring:
 With: there: there: are: canopy: a: tall.
 And: there: there: the: wall: with fragment: one —
 From: a: the: center: there: did: that: the: the were: given:

V

In every bower, as round a hearse, was hung
 A dusky crimson curtain o'er the bed,
 And on each couch in ghastly wise were flung
 The wasted relics of a monarch dead;
 Barbaric ornaments around were spread,
 Vests twined with gold and chains of precious stone,
 And golden circlets, meet for monarch's head;
 While grinned, as if in scorn amongst them thrown,
 The wearer's fleshless skull, alike with dust bestrewn.

For these were they who, drunken with delight,
 On pleasure's opiate pillow laid their head,
 For whom the bride's shy footstep, slow and light,
 Was changed ere morning to the murderer's tread.
 For human bliss and woe in the frail thread
 Of human life are all so closely twined
 That till the shears of Fate the texture shred
 The close succession cannot be disjoined,
 Nor dare we from one hour judge that which comes behind.

VI

But where the work of vengeance had been done,
 In that seventh chamber, was a sterner sight;
 There of the witch-brides lay each skeleton,
 Still in the posture as to death when dight.
 For this lay prone, by one blow slain outright;
 And that, as one who struggled long in dying;
 One bony hand held knife, as if to smite;
 One bent on fleshless knees, as mercy crying;
 One lay across the door, as killed in act of flying.

The stern Dane smiled this charnel-house to see, —
 For his chafed thought returned to Metell; —
 And 'Well,' he said, 'hath woman's perfidy,
 Empty as air, as water volatile,
 Been here avenged. — The origin of ill
 Through woman rose, the Christian doctrine saith;
 Nor deem I, Gunnar, that thy minstrel skill
 Can show example where a woman's breath
 Hath made a true-love vow, and tempted kept her faith.'

VII

The minstrel - boy half smiled, half sighed,
 And his half-filling eyes he dried,
 And said, 'The theme I should but wrong,
 Unless it were my dying song —
 Our Scalds have said, in dying hour
 The Northern harp has treble power —
 Else could I tell of woman's faith,
 Defying danger, scorn, and death.
 Firm was that faith — as diamond stone
 Pure and unflawed — her love unknown
 And unrequited; — firm and pure,
 Her stainless faith could all endure;
 From clime to clime, from place to place,
 Through want and danger and disgrace,
 A wanderer's wayward steps could trace.
 All this she did, and guerdon none
 Required save that her burial-stone
 Should make at length the secret known,
 "Thus hath a faithful woman done." —
 Not in each breast such truth is laid,
 But Eivir was a Danish maid.'

VIII

'Thou art a wild enthusiast,' said
 Count Harold, 'for thy Danish maid;
 And yet, young Gunnar, I will own
 Hers were a faith to rest upon.
 But Eivir sleeps beneath her stone
 And all resembling her are gone.
 What maid e'er showed such constancy
 In plighted faith, like thine to me?
 But couch thee, boy; the darksome shade

Falls thickly round, nor be dismayed 140

Because the dead are by.
They were as we; our little day
Overspent, and we shall be as they.
Yet near me, Gunnar, be thou laid,
Thy couch upon my mantle made,
That thou mayst think, should fear invade,

Thy master slumbers nigh.
Thus couched they in that dread abode,
Until the beams of dawning glowed.

IX

An altered man Lord Harold rose, 150
When he beheld that dawn unclose —

There 's trouble in his eyes,
And traces on his brow and cheek
Of mingled awe and wonder speak:
'My page,' he said, 'arise; —
Leave me this place, my page.' — No
more

He entered till the castle door
They crossed — but there he paused and saw.

'My witness hath awaked the dead —
Disturbed the sacred tomb! she Methought this night I stood on high
Where Hecla roars in middle sky,
And in her caverned guts could spy
The central place of doom:
And there before my mortal eye
Souls of the dead came flitting by,
Whom, hands with many a fiendish cry
Bore to that evil den!

My eyes grew dizzy and my brain
Was whirled as the wheel turns 160
With shriek and howl dragged an unman
Those who had late been men

X

'With haggard eyes and streaming hair,
In the Sorcerer's van they came,
And they passed Wulfstan lately slain,
A crushed and foul with blood stain —
Mark him! I seen him this morn:
A valiant and wild and swift the snows;
And wild and swift as when a need
A champion stirs his horse to speed as These words, brights met, as, who lead
Caravan: a solid stand
Sable that harness and, there came Through their close ranks sparks of
flame.

The fire proclaimed in words of fear
'Harold the Dauntless, welcome here!'

The next cried, "Jubilee! we've won Count Witikind the Waster's son!"
And the third rider sternly spoke,
"Mount, in the name of Zernebock!
From us, O Harold, were thy powers
Thy strength, thy dauntlessness,

ours;
Nor think, a vassal thou of hell,
With hell can strive." The fiend ap-
true!

My inmost soul the summons knew,
As captives know the knell
That says the headman's sword is he
And with an accent of despair
Commands them quit their cell.
I felt resistance was in vain,
My foot had that fell stirrup ta'en,
My hand was on the fatal mane,
When to my rescue sped
That palmer's visionary form,
And — like the passing of a storm —
The demons yelled and fled!

XI

'His sable cowling flung back revealed
The features it before concealed;
And, Gunnar, I could find
In him whose counsels strive to stay
So oft my course on wild way
My father Witikind'

Doomed for his sins and doomed for me
A wanderer upon earth to pine
Until his sin shall turn to grace
And smooth for him a resting-place.
Gunnar, in must not hunt in vain
This world of wretchedness and pain:
I'll tame my wilful heart; I'll live
In peace — to pity and forgive —
And thou, for so the Vision said,
Must in thy Lord's repentance aid.
The mother was a prophetess.

He said, who by her skill could guess
How close the fate's textures join,
What knit the thread of life with
Then dart to hint of danger.
She framed to cheer her curious eyes
That no a moment might divide
The fatal footstep from my side.
Methought, while thus my sire did
I caught the meaning of his speech,
Yet, seem it purport doubtful now.
His hand that taught me thought long —

Then ere he marked that in the inn
He gave me, left, at waking morn.

XII

Trembling at first and deadly pale,
 Had Gunnar heard the visioned tale;
 But when he learned the dubious close
 He blushed like any opening rose, 240
 And, glad to hide his tell-tale cheek,
 Hid back that glove of mail to seek;
 When soon a shriek of deadly dread
 Summoned his master to his aid.

XIII

What sees Count Harold in that bower
 So late his resting-place? —
 The semblance of the Evil Power,
 Adored by all his race!
 Odin in living form stood there,
 His cloak the spoils of Polar bear; 250
 For plummy crest a meteor shed
 Its gloomy radiance o'er his head,
 Yet veiled its haggard majesty
 To the wild lightnings of his eye.
 Such height was his as when in stone
 O'er Upsal's giant altar shown:
 So flowed his hoary beard;
 Such was his lance of mountain-pine,
 So did his sevenfold buckler shine;
 But when his voice he reared, 260
 Deep without harshness, slow and strong,
 The powerful accents rolled along,
 And while he spoke his hand was laid
 On captive Gunnar's shrinking head.

XIV

'Harold,' he said, 'what rage is thine
 To quit the worship of thy line,
 To leave thy Warrior-God? —
 With me is glory or disgrace,
 Mine is the onset and the chase,
 Embattled hosts before my face 270
 Are withered by a nod.
 Wilt thou then forfeit that high seat
 Deserved by many a dauntless feat
 Among the heroes of thy line,
 Eric and fiery Thorarine? —
 Thou wilt not. Only I can give
 The joys for which the valiant live,
 Victory and vengeance — only I
 Can give the joys for which they die,
 The immortal tilt — the banquet full, 280
 The brimming draught from foeman's skull.
 Mine art thou, witness this thy glove,
 The faithful pledge of vassal's love.'

XV

'Tempter,' said Harold, firm of heart,
 'I charge thee, hence! whate'er thou art,
 I do defy thee — and resist
 The kindling frenzy of my breast,
 Waked by thy words; and of my mail
 Nor glove nor buckler, splint nor nail,
 Shall rest with thee — that youth release,
 And, God or Demon, part in peace.' — 291
 'Eivir,' the Shape replied, 'is mine,
 Marked in the birth-hour with my sign.
 Think'st thou that priest with drops of
 spray
 Could wash that blood-red mark away?
 Or that a borrowed sex and name
 Can abrogate a Godhead's claim?'
 Thrilled this strange speech through Harold's brain,
 He clenched his teeth in high disdain,
 For not his new-born faith subdued 300
 Some tokens of his ancient mood. —
 'Now, by the hope so lately given
 Of better trust and purer heaven,
 I will assail thee, fiend!' — Then rose
 His mace, and with a storm of blows
 The mortal and the demon close.

XVI

Smoke rolled above, fire flashed around,
 Darkened the sky and shook the ground;
 But not the artillery of hell,
 The bickering lightning, nor the rock 310
 Of turrets to the earthquake's shock,
 Could Harold's courage quell.
 Sternly the Dane his purpose kept,
 And blows on blows resistless heaped,
 Till quailed that demon form,
 And — for his power to hurt or kill
 Was bounded by a higher will —
 Evanesced in a storm.
 Nor paused the Champion of the North,
 But raised and bore his Eivir forth 320
 From that wild scene of feudish strife
 To light, to liberty, and life!

XVII

He placed her on a bank of moss,
 A silver rannel bubbled by,
 And new-born thoughts his soul engross,
 And tremors yet unknown across
 His stubborn sinews fly,
 The while with timid hand the dew
 Upon her brow and neck he threw,
 And marked how life with rosy hue 330

On her pale cheek revived anew
 And glimmered in her eye.
 Inly he said, 'That silken tress —
 What blindness mine that could not guess!
 Or how could page's rugged dress
 That bosom's pride belie?
 O, dull of heart, through wild and wave
 In search of blood and death to rave,
 With such a partner nigh!'

XVIII

Then in the mirrored pool he peered, <sup>340</sup>
 Blamed his rough locks and shaggy beard,
 The stains of recent conflict cleared, —
 And thus the Champion proved
 That he fears now who never feared,
 And loves who never loved.
 And Eivir — life is on her cheek
 And yet she will not move or speak,
 Nor will her eyelid fully ope;
 Perchance it loves, that half-shut eye,
 Through its long fringe, reserved and shy, <sup>350</sup>
 Affection's opening dawn to spy;
 And the deep blush, which bids its dye
 O'er cheek and brow and bosom fly,
 Speaks shamefacedness and hope.

XIX

But vainly seems the Dane to seek
 For terms his new-born love to speak, —
 For words, save those of wrath and
 wrong,
 Till now were strangers to his tongue;
 So, when he raised the blushing maid,

In blunt and honest terms he said — <sup>355</sup>
 'T were well that maids, when lovers
 woo,
 Heard none more soft, were all as true —
 'Eivir! since thou for many a day
 Hast followed Harold's wayward way,
 It is but meet that in the line
 Of after-life I follow thine.
 To-morrow is Saint Cuthbert's tide,
 And we will grace his altar's side,
 A Christian knight and Christian bride:
 And of Witikind's son shall the marvel be said <sup>360</sup>
 That on the same morn he was christened and wed.'

CONCLUSION

AND now, Ennni, what ails thee, weary
 maid?
 And why these listless looks of yawning sorrow?
 No need to turn the page as if 't were lead,
 Or fling aside the volume till to-morrow. —
 Be cheered — 't is ended — and I will not borrow,
 To try thy patience more, one anecdote
 From Bartholine or Perinskiold or Snorro.
 Then pardon thou thy minstrel, who hath wrote
 A tale six cantos long, yet scorned to add a note. <sup>365</sup>

MISCELLANEOUS POEMS

From the time when Scott wrote the first of his long poems, The Lay of the Last Minstrel, till he deliberately abandoned the writing of long poems in Harold the Dauntless, twelve years later, he wrote about two-score poems, and in the twelve years which then followed till he ceased writing altogether, only a dozen more, and a large number of these were occasional. This does not take account, however, of the bits of verse interspersed in the novels, some of which were among his most characteristic pieces. In 1806, after publishing The Lay of the Last Minstrel and before publishing Marmion, Scott issued a collection of Ballads and Lyrical Pieces, containing most of the matter included in our division, Early Ballads and Lyrics; but not again was any collection made till his distribution of all his writings toward the end of his life. It has seemed best, in our arrangement, not to interrupt the series of long poems by inserting these scattered verses between them, but to group them all in this general division, in as closely chronological order as seemed practicable.

THE DYING BARD

The Welsh tradition,' says Scott, 'bears that bard, on his death-bed, demanded his harp, played the air [Daffwdz Gangwen] to which these verses are adapted, requesting that it might be performed at his funeral.' Published 1806.

AS EMLINN, lament; for the moment is
nigh,
then mute in the woodlands thine echoes
shall die:
more by sweet Teivi Cadwallon shall rave,
and mix his wild notes with the wild dashing wave.

spring and in autumn thy glories of
shade honored shall flourish, unhonored shall fade;
soon shall be lifeless the eye and the
tongue
at viewed them with rapture, with rapture that sung.

7 sons, Dinas Emlinn, may march in their pride,
I chase the proud Saxon from Prestatyn's
side;
where is the harp shall give life to their name?
I where is the bard shall give heroes
their fame?

I O, Dinas Emlinn! thy daughters so
fair,
so heave the white bosom and wave the dark hair;
what tuneful enthusiast shall worship their
eye,
when half of their charms with Cadwallon
shall die?

adieu, silver Teivi! I quit thy loved join the dim choir of the bards who
have been;
Lewarch, and Meilor, and Merlin
the Old.
I sage Taliessin, high harping to hold.
adieu, Dinas Emlinn! still green be thy shades,

Unconquered thy warriors and matchless
thy maids!
And thou whose faint warblings my weakness can tell,
Farewell, my loved harp! my last treasure, farewell!

THE NORMAN HORSE-SHOE

The Welsh, inhabiting a mountainous country, and possessing only an inferior breed of horses, were usually unable to encounter the shock of the Anglo-Norman cavalry. Occasionally, however, they were successful in repelling the invaders; and the following verses are supposed to celebrate a defeat of Clare,
Earl of Striguil and Pembroke, and of Neville, Baron of Chepstow, Lords-Marchers of Mon-mouthshire. Published in 1806.

RED glows the forge in Striguil's bounds,
And hammers din, and anvil sounds,
And armorers with iron toil
Barb many a steed for battle's broil.
Foul fall the hand which bends the steel
Around the courser's thundering heel,
That e'er shall dint a sable wound
On fair Glamorgan's velvet ground!

From Chepstow's towers ere dawn of morn
Was heard afar the bugle-horn,
And forth in banded pomp and pride
Stout Clare and fiery Neville ride.
They swore their banners broad should
gleam
In crimson light on Rymny's stream;
They vowed Caerphilly's sod should feel
The Norman charger's spurning heel.

And sooth they swore — the sun arose,
And Rymny's wave with crimson glows;
For Clare's red banner, floating wide,
Rolled down the stream to Severn's tide!
And sooth they vowed — the trampled
green
Showed where hot Neville's charge had been:
In every sable hoof-tramp stood
A Norman horseman's curdling blood!

Old Chepstow's brides may curse the toil
That armed stout Clare for Cambrian broil;
Their orphans long the art may rue,
For Neville's war-horse forged the shoe.

No more the stamp of armed steed
Shall dint Glamorgan's velvet mead;
Nor trace be there in early spring
Save of the Fairies' emerald ring.

THE MAID OF TORO

A later draft, 1806, of a song from 'The House of Aspen.' See above, p. 10.

O, low shone the sun on the fair lake of Toro,
And weak were the whispers that waved
the dark wood,
All as a fair maiden, bewildered in sorrow,
Sorely sighed to the breezes and wept to the flood.
'O saints, from the mansions of bliss lowly bending!
Sweet Virgin, who hearest the suppliant's
cry!
Now grant my petition in anguish ascending,
My Henry restore or let Eleanor die!

All distant and faint were the sounds of the battle,
With the breezes they rise, with the breezes they fail,
Till the shout and the groan and the con-
flict's dread rattle,
And the chase's wild clamor, came loading the gale.
Breathless she gazed on the woodlands so dreary;
Slowly approaching a warrior was seen;
Life's ebbing tide marked his footsteps so weary,
Cleft was his helmet and woe was his mien.

'O, save thee, fair maid, for our armies are flying!
O, save thee, fair maid, for thy guardian is low!
Deadly cold on yon heath thy brave Henry is lying,
And fast through the woodland approaches the foe.'
Scarce could he falter the tidings of sorrow,
And scarce could she hear them, benumbed with despair:
And when the sun sunk on the sweet lake
of Toro,
Forever he set to the Brave and the Fair.

THE PALMER

Published, 1806, in Haydn's Collection of Scottish Airs.

'O OPEN the door, some pity to show,
Keen blows the northern wind!
The glen is white with the drifted snow,
And the path is hard to find.

'No outlaw seeks your castle gate,
From chasing the king's deer,
Though even an outlaw's wretched state
Might claim compassion here.

'A weary Palmer, worn and weak,
I wander for my sin;
O, open, for Our Lady's sake!
A pilgrim's blessing win!

'I'll give you pardons from the Pope,
And reliques from o'er the sea, —
Or if for these you will not ope,
Yet open for charity.

'The hare is crouching in her form,
The hart beside the hind;
An aged man amid the storm,
No shelter can I find.

'You hear the Ettrick's sullen roar,
Dark, deep, and strong is he,
And I must ford the Ettrick o'er,
Unless you pity me.

'The iron gate is bolted hard,
At which I knock in vain;
The owner's heart is closer barred,
Who hears me thus complain.

'Farewell, farewell! and Mary grant,
When old and frail you be,
You never may the shelter want
That's now denied to me.'

The ranger on his couch lay warm,
And heard him plead in vain;
But oft amid December's storm
He'll hear that voice again:

For lo! when through the vapors dank
Morn shone on Ettrick fair,
A corpse amid the alders rank,
The Palmer weltered there.

MAID OF NEIDPATH

Is a tradition in Tweeddale,' says it, when Neidpath Castle, near Peebles, inhabited by the Earls of March, a passion subsisted between a daughter of the family and a son of the Laird of law, in Ettrick Forest. As the all-thought unsuitable by her parents, man went abroad. During his absence she fell into a consumption; and at the only means of saving her life, consented that her lover should be On the day when he was expected to come, she was carried to the balcony of the castle, on the road to Tushietown, though much exhausted, to see him as he rode past. Her eagerness gave such force to her feet that she is said to have distinguished his footsteps at an incredible distance. He, unprepared for the change in her appearance, and not expecting to see her, rode on without recognizing her, quickening his pace. The lady was so disappointed that she fainted, and after a short time she died in the arms of her attendants.' 1806, in Haydn's Collection of Scottish Airs.

Her eyes are sharp to see,
Her ears in hearing;
In life's extremity
And an hour of cheering.
And been in Mary's bower,
Now decay from mourning,
Now she sits on Neidpath's tower
To see her love's returning.

And dim her eyes so bright,
Now decayed by pining,
And her wasted hand at night
With the taper shining;
And sultry hectic hue
Her cheek were flying;
Ashy pale she grew,
And she thought her dying.

And powers to see and hear
In her frame residing;
The watch-dog pricked his ear,
And her lover's riding;
And a distant form was kenned,
Now, and waved to greet him;
The battlement did bend,
To meet him.

He came — he passed — an heedless gaze,
As o'er some stranger glancing;
Her welcome, spoke in faltering phrase,
Lost in his courser's prancing —
The castle arch, whose hollow tone
Returns each whisper spoken,
Could scarcely catch the feeble moan
Which told her heart was broken.

WANDERING WILLIE

Published, 1806, in Haydn's Collection of Scottish Airs.

ALL joy was bereft me the day that you left me,
And climbed the tall vessel to sail you
Wide sea;
O weary betide it! I wandered beside it,
And bann'd it for parting my Willie and me.

Far o'er the wave hast thou followed thy fortune,
Oft fought the squadrons of France and of Spain;
As kiss of welcome's worth twenty at parting,
Now I hae gotten my Willie again.

When the sky it was mirk, and the winds they were wailing,
I sat on the beach wi' the tear in my ee,
And thought o' the bark where my Willie was sailing,
And wished that the tempest could a' blaw on me.

Now that thy gallant ship rides at her mooring,
Now that my wanderer's in safety at hame,
Music to me were the wildest winds' roaring,
That e'er o'er Inch-Keith drove the dark ocean faem.

When the lights they did blaze, and the guns they did rattle,
And blithe was each heart for the great victory,
In secret I wept for the dangers of battle,
And thy glory itself was scarce comfort to me.

But now shalt thou tell, while I eagerly listen,

Of each bold adventure and every brave
deed;

And trust me, I'll smile, though my son
thou dost glisten.

For sweet after danger's the tale of the
war.

And O, how we doubt when there's distance between lovers,

When there's nothing to speak to the heart close to us!

How often the kindest and warmest prove
so cold,

And the love of the faithfullest obli-vion's slave!

Till at times — could I help it? — I pine and I ponder

If love could change notes like the bird
on the tree.

Nay, I'll not ask if thine eyes may have wandered!

Though thy love heart has been constant to me.

Well, I'll leave sleeping o'er sea and through channel

Hardships and danger despising for
love.

Parting stops for glory's bright angel.

Well, my wanderer, to Jeanie and
happy!

Far, far the stars in appeal of glory.

He's the noblest of riders, Francis Holman, on Sam.

Nay, I'll not ask thee, please me no more how thou lovest me.

I never will meet with my Willie again.

1844. TO THE LORD MELVILLE

By the Countess of

Thou art the noblest of riders, Francis Holman, on Sam. I'll not ask thee, please me no more how thou lovest me. I never will meet with my Willie again.

all the charges involving his personal honor, complete, it must now be allowed that the investigation brought out many circumstances by no means creditable to his discretion; and the rejoicings of his friends ought not, therefore, to have been scornfully jubilant. Such they were, however — at least in Edinburgh, and Scott took his share in them by inditing a song, which was sung by James Ballantyne, and received with clamorous applauses, at a public dinner given in honor of the event, on the 27th of June, 1806. — Lockhart's Life of Scott, Chapter xvi.

SINCE here we are set in array round the table,

Five hundred good fellows well met in a
hall,

Come, lads, brave boys, and I'll sing as I'm able,

How innocence triumphed and pride got a fall.

But push round, the claret —

Come, stewards, don't spare it —

With raptures too, I drink to the toast that I give,

Here boys,

Off with it merrily —

Melville for ever, and long may he live!

What were the Wings doing what mischief pursuing,

Fits banishment, Rebellion, gave Treason a
string,

Why, they were sworn to their honor, for Arthur's Champion

And fought him for Despatch against country and king

Well, they were known here,

Pitt and Melville were seen here,

And the triumph was raised, by the friends
of Reform,

And were

Well, it was memory,

For the old John that weathered the storm!

And you, don't you mind when the first time were passing,

And a certain good thing the house
was doing then,

When William and Catherine, French and English,

Then, when the first table was set for the first time.

Our hearts they grew bolder
 When master in absolute,
 Stepped forth our old Statesmen example
 To give

Come, boys, never fear,
 Drink the Blue grenadier — Here's to our Harry, and long may he live!

They would turn us adrift, though rely,
 Sir, upon it.

Our own faithful chronicles warrant us that

The free mountaineer and his bonny blue bonnet

Have oft gone as far as the regular's
 hat

We laugh at their taunting,

For all we are wanting

Is license our life for our country to give.

Off with it merrily

Horse, foot, and artillery,

Each loyal Volunteer, long may he live!

'T is not us alone, boys — the Army and Navy

Have each got a slap 'mid their politic
 pranks;

Cornwallis cashiered, that watched winters
 to save ye,

And the Cape called a banble unworthy of thanks.

But vain is their taunt,

No soldier shall want

The thanks that his country to valor can give:

Come, boys,

Drink it off merrily, —

Sir David and Popham, and long may they live!

And then our revenue — Lord knows how they viewed it,

While each petty statesman talked lofty and big;

But the beer-tax was weak, as if Whitbread had brewed it,

And the pig-iron duty a shame to a pig:

In vain is their vaunting,

Too surely there's wanting

What judgment, experience, and steadiness
 give:

Come, boys,

Drink about merrily, —
 Health to sage Melville, and long may he live!

Our King, too — our Princess — I dare not say more, sir, —

May Providence watch them with mercy and might!

While there's one Scottish hand that can wag a claspnet, sir,

They shall ne'er want a friend to stand up for their right.

Be damned be that dare not, —

For my part, I'll spare not

To beauty affixed a tribute to give.

Fill it up steadily.

Drink it off readily —

Here's to the Princess, and long may she live!

And since we must not set Auld Reekie in glory,

And make her brown visage as light as her heart;

Till each man illumine his own upper story,

Nor law-book nor lawyer shall force us
 to part.

In Grenville and Spencer,

And some few good men, sir,

High talents we honor, slight difference
 forgive;

But the Brewer we'll hoax,

Tallyho to the Fox,

And drink Melville for ever, as long as we live!

HUNTING SONG

Published in Edinburgh Annual Register, 1806.

WAKEN, lords and ladies gay,

On the mountain dawns the day,

All the jolly chase is here,

With hawk and horse and hunting-spear!

Hounds are in their couples yelling,

Hawks are whistling, horns are knelling,

Merrily, merrily, mingle they,

'Waken, lords and ladies gay.'

Waken, lords and ladies gay,

The mist has left the mountain gray,

Springlets in the dawn are steaming,

Diamonds on the brake are gleaming:

And sometimes they have been
To teach the birds in kinder games;
Now we come to drink our lay,
"Water, birds and fishes gay."

Water, birds and fishes gay,
To the green-wood birds away;
We can show you where he lies,
Flock of him and tail of his.
We can show the marks in water,
When games he and his waters played;
In what we him brought to lay,
"Water, birds and fishes gay."

Water, birds and fishes gay,
To the green-wood birds away;
We can show you where he lies,
Flock of him and tail of his.
We can show the marks in water,
When games he and his waters played;
In what we him brought to lay,
"Water, birds and fishes gay."

SONG

short

Oh, say not my love, with that certified air,
That your spring-time of passion is flown.

Not but we to make that our younger Signer.

For those captives that still are there
Are.

Though I feel his temples may weaken
With the wine,

His conduct is always correct.

"It is the order of August measures on the vine."

When the silent willows the world

Though the form that was fashioned as light as a fly's

Has assumed a proportion more solid

And the flame that was bright as a fal-con's at gaze

Lies smothered now on the ground —

Enough, after absence to meet me again

The eyes still with sunny rays;

Enough, that those dear sober phrases remain

For all the kind language of love.

THE RESOLVE

WRITTEN IN Imitation of an old
LONDON TOWN, 1811.

Some words of this to his brother Thomas who had guessed its intention, when I was published anonymously. It is mine — and I am — it is to be less significant, it is an old fragment, which I dropped up into its present state with the purpose of getting some judges of poetry who have been celebrated as lightest and noblest that in living poet words were in the same language now.

My wayward fate I should must guess.

Though sometimes in the dream;

I dream and was lulled again.

For all was but a dream.

For in her arm was surely set,

So it was surely given.

No more I had in future to find,

But only death mine.

No more my heart's light then would was e'er

My heart's light then.

By lightning word in dream's time.

By gesture, but in mine.

No more I had the heart's light then,

For it was surely given.

No more I had in future to find —

I had only death mine.

And undimmed light I had only

In dream or mine or mine.

And from the gaze of woman's eye

Is what is woman's eye.

I had only light the heart's light then,

For it was surely given.

I had only light the heart's light then,

For it was surely given.

The lightning word then mine mine mine,

The lightning word then mine mine mine,

The lightning word then mine mine mine,

The lightning word then mine mine mine,

And from the gaze of woman's eye

Is what is woman's eye.

I had only light the heart's light then,

For it was surely given.

No more I had in future to find —

I had only death mine.

No more I had in future to find —

I had only death mine.

No more I had in future to find —

I had only death mine.

No more I had in future to find —

I had only death mine.

Nor shall wild passion trouble it, —
I'll rather dwell alone.

And thus I'll hush my heart to rest, —
Thy loving labor's lost;
Thou shalt no more be wildly blest,
To be so strangely crost:
The widowed turtles mateless die,
The phoenix is but one;
They seek no loves — no more will I —
I'll rather dwell alone.'

EPITAPH

DESIGNED FOR A MONUMENT IN LICH-FIELD CATHEDRAL, AT THE BURIAL-PLACE OF THE FAMILY OF MISS SEWARD

1809

AMID these aisles where once his precepts
showed —
The heavenward pathway which in life he trode,
This simple tablet marks a Father's bier,
And those he loved in life in death are
near;
For him, for them, a Daughter bade it rise,
Memorial of domestic charities.
Still wouldst thou know why o'er the marble spread
In female grace the willow droops her
head;
Why on her branches, silent and unstrung,
The minstrel harp is emblematic hung;
What poet's voice is smothered here in dust
Till waked to join the chorus of the just, —
Lo! one brief line an answer sad supplies,
Honored, beloved, and mourned, here
SEWARD lies!
Her worth, her warmth of heart, let friendship say, —
Go seek her genius in her living lay.

PROLOGUE

TO MISS BAILLIE'S PLAY OF 'THE FAMILY LEGEND'

'The enclosed jangling verses,' Scott writes to Lady Abercorn from Edinburgh January 21, 1810, 'are the only effort I have made in rhyme since I came to Edinburgh for the winter. They were written within this hour and are to be spoken to a beautiful tragedy of Joanna Baillie, founded upon a Highland story of the Old Time.'

'T is sweet to hear expiring Summer's
sigh,
Through forests tinged with russet, wail
and die;
'T is sweet and sad the latest notes to hear
Of distant music, dying on the ear;
But far more sadly sweet on foreign strand
We list the legends of our native land,
Linked as they come with every tender tie,
Memorials dear of youth and infancy.

Chief thy wild tales, romantic Caledon,
Wake keen remembrance in each hardy

Whether on India's burning coasts he toil
Or till Acadia's winter-fettered soil,
He hears with throbbing heart and mois-tened eyes,

And, as he hears, what dear illusions rise!
It opens on his soul his native dell,
The woods wild waving and the water's swell;

Tradition's theme, the tower that threatens
the plain,

The mossy cairn that hides the hero slain;
The cot beneath whose simple porch were told

By gray-haired patriarch the tales of old,
The infant group that hushed their sports
the while,

And the dear maid who listened with a smile.

The wanderer, while the vision warms his
brain,

Is denizen of Scotland once again.

Are such keen feelings to the crowd confined,

And sleep they in the poet's gifted mind?
O no! For she, within whose mighty
page

Each tyrant Passion shows his woe and rage,

Has felt the wizard influence they inspire,
And to your own traditions tuned her lyre.
Yourselves shall judge — whoe'er has raised the sail

By Mull's dark coast has heard this evening's tale.

The plaided boatman, resting on his oar,
Points to the fatal rock amid the roar

Of whitening waves, and tell what'er tomorrow
Our double stage shall offer to your sight;
Proudly preferred that first our efforts
give become glowing from her pen to breathe
and live;
More proudly yet, should Caledon approve
The final token of a daughter's love.

THE POACHER

This imitation of Crabbe was published along with The Bridal of Triermain and Harold the Immortal in the Edinburgh Annual Register for 1803. See supra p. 263. Crabbe on seeing the verses said: 'This man, whoever he is, can do all that I can, and something more.'

WILSON, grave stranger, to our green retreats
Where health with exercise and freedom
meets!
Thine welcome, sage, whose philosophic plan
By nature's limits marks the rights of
man;
Generous as he who now for freedom
lives,
Now gives full value for true Indian shawls:
O'er court, o'er custom-house, his shoe
who flings,
Now talks enclosures and now bullies
kings.
Like his, I ween, thy comprehensive mind
Holds laws as mouse-traps baited for mankind:
Thine eye appraising each sly vermin sees,
That talks the snare yet battens on the cheese;
Thine ear has heard with scorn instead of awe
Our buckskinned justices expound the law,
Wire-draw the acts that fix for wires the juin,
And for the netted partridge noose the swain;
And thy vindictive arm would fain have
broke
The last light fetter of the feudal yoke,
To give the denizens of wood and wild,
Nature's free race, to each her free-born
child.

Hence hast thou marked with grief the London's race,
Mocked with the boom of one poor Easter
chase,
And longed to send them forth as free as when Poured o'er Chantilly the Parisian train,
When musket, pistol, blunderbuss, combined,
And scarce the field-pieces were left behind!
A squadron's charge each leveret's heart
dismayed,
On every covey fired a bold brigade;
La Douce Humanité approved the sport,
For great the alarm indeed, yet small the hurt;
Shouts patriotic solemnized the day,
And Seine re-echoed Vive la Liberté!
But mad Citoyen, meek Monsieur again,
With some few added links resumes his
chain.
Then, since such scenes to France no more
are known,
Come, view with me a hero of thine own,
One whose free actions vindicate the cause
Of sylvan liberty o'er feudal laws.

Seek we yon glades where the proud oak o'ertops
Wide-waving seas of birch and hazel copse,
Leaving between deserted isles of land
Where stunted heath is patched with ruddy
sand,
And lonely on the waste the rew is seen,
Or straggling hollies spread a brighter
green.
Here, little worn and winding dark and
steep,
Our scarce marked path descends yon
dingle deep:
Follow — but heedful, cautious of a trip —
In earthly wire philosophy may slip,
Step slow and wary o'er that swampy
stream,
Till, guided by the charcoal's smothering
steam,
We reach the frail yet barricaded dwe
Of bovel formed for poorest of the poor;
No hearth the fire, no vent the smoke receives.
The walls are wattles and the covering
leaves;
For, if such but, our forest statutes say,
Rise in the progress of one night and day —

Though placed where still the Conqueror's bests o'erawe,
 And his son's stirrup shines the badge of law —
 The builder claims the unenviable boon,
 To tenant dwelling, framed as slight and soon
 As wigwam wild that shrouds the native
 fire
 On the bleak coast of frost-barred Labrador.

Approach and through the unlatticed window peep —
 Nay, shrink not back, the inmate is asleep;
 Sunk mid yon sordid blankets till the sun
 Stoop to the west, the plunderer's toils are done.
 Loaded and primed and prompt for desperate hand,
 Rifle and fowling-piece beside him stand;
 While round the hut are in disorder laid
 The tools and booty of his lawless trade; 70
 For force or fraud, resistance or escape,
 The crow, the saw, the bludgeon, and the crape.
 His pilfered powder in yon nook he boards,
 And the filched lead the church's roof affords —
 Hence shall the rector's congregation fret,
 That while his sermon's dry his walls are wet.
 The fish-spear barbed, the sweeping net are
 there,
 Doe-hides, and pheasant plumes, and skins
 of hare,
 Cordage for toils and wiring for the snare.
 Bartered for game from chase or warren
 won, 80
 Yon cask holds moonlight, run when moon
 was none;
 And late-snatched spoils lie stowed in hutch
 apart
 To wait the associate higgler's evening cart.

Look on his pallet foul and mark his rest:
 What scenes perturbed are acting in his
 breast!
 His sable brow is wet and wrung with pain,
 And his dilated nostril toils in vain;
 For short and scant the breath each effort draws,
 And 'twixt each effort Nature claims a pause.
 Beyond the loose and sable neckcloth
 stretched, 90

His sinewy throat seems by convulsion
 twitched,
 While the tongue falters, as to utterance
 loath,
 Sounds of dire import — watchword, threat,
 and oath.
 Though, stupefied by toil and drugged with gin,
 The body sleep, the restless guest within
 Now plies on wood and woid his lawless trade,
 Now in the fangs of justice wakes dismayed. —

'Was that wild start of terror and despair,
 Those bursting eyeballs and that wildered
 air, 90
 Signs of compunction for a murdered hare?
 Do the locks bristle and the eyebrows arch
 For grouse or partridge massacred in March?'

No, scoff, no! Attend, and mark with awe,
 There is no wicket in the gate of law!
 He that would e'er so lightly set ajar
 That awful portal must undo each bar:
 Tempting occasion, habit, passion, pride,
 Will join to storm the breach and force the barrier wide.

That ruffian, whom true men avoid and
 dread,
 Whom bruisers, poachers, smugglers, call
 Black Ned, 110
 Was Edward Mansell once; — the lightest
 heart
 That ever played on holiday his part!
 The leader he in every Christmas game,
 The harvest-feast grew blither when he
 came,
 And liveliest on the chords the bow did
 glance
 When Edward named the tune and led the dance.
 Kind was his heart, his passions quick and
 strong,
 Hearty his laugh, and jovial was his song;
 And if he loved a gun, his father swore,
 'T was but a trick of youth would soon he
 o'er, 120
 Himself had done the same some thirty years before.'

But he whose humors spurn law's awful yoke
Must herd with those by whom law's bonds are broke;
The common dread of justice soon allies
The clown who robs the warren or excise
With sterner felons trained to act more
dread,
Even with the wretch by whom his fellow
bled.
Then, as in plagues the foul contagions pass,
Leavening and festering the corrupted
mass,
Guilt leagues with guilt while mutual motives draw, <sup>130</sup>
Their hope impunity, their fear the law;
Their foes, their friends, their rendezvous
the same,
Till the revenue balked or pilfered game
Flesh the young culprit, and example leads
To darker villany and direr deeds.

Wild howled the wind the forest glades
along,
And oft the owl renewed her dismal song;
Around the spot where erst he felt the
wound,
Red William's spectre walked his midnight
round.
When o'er the swamp he cast his blighting look, <sup>140</sup>
From the green marshes of the stagnant
brook
The bittern's sullen about the sedges shook!
The waning moon with storm-presaging
gleam
Now gave and now withheld her doubtful
beam;
The old Oak stooped his arms, then flung them high,
Bellowing and groaning to the troubled sky,
'T was then that, couched amid the brush-
wood sear,
In Malwood-walk young Mansell watched the deer:
The fattest buck received his deadly shot—
The watchful keeper heard and sought the spot. <sup>150</sup>
Stout were their hearts, and stubborn was their strife;
O'erpowered at length the Outlaw drew his knife.
Next morn a corpse was found upon the
fell—
The rest his waking agony may tell!

THE BOLD DRAGOON

OR, THE PLAIN OF BADAJOS

This song was written shortly after the battle of Badajos, April, 1812, for a Yeomanry Cavalry dinner.

'T WAS a Maréchal of France, and he fain
would honor gain,
And he longed to take a passing glance at Portugal from Spain;
With his flying guns this gallant gay,
And boasted corps d'armée—
O, he feared not our dragoons with their long swords boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, etc.

To Campo Mayor come, he had quietly sat
down,
Just a fricassee to pick while his soldiers
sacked the town,
When, 't was peste! morblen! mon
Général,
Hear the English bugle-call!
And behold the light dragoons with their
long swords boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, etc.

Right about went horse and foot, artillery
and all,
And, as the devil leaves a house, they tum-bled through the wall;
They took no time to seek the door,
But, best foot set before—
O, they ran from our dragoons with their long swords boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, etc.

Those valiant men of France they had scarcely fled a mile,
When on their flank there soused at once
the British rank and file;
For Long, De Grey, and Otway then
Ne'er minded one to ten,
But came on like light dragoons with their
long swords boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, etc.

Three hundred British lads they made three thousand reel,
Their hearts were made of English oak,
their swords of Sheffield steel,
Their horses were in Yorkshire bred,
And Beresford them led;

So huzza for brave dragoons with their
long swords boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, etc.

Then here's a health to Wellington, to Beresford, to Long,
And a single word of Bonaparte before I close my song:

The eagles that to fight he brings
Should serve his men with wings,
When they meet the bold dragoons with their long swords boldly riding,
Whack, fal de ral, etc.

ON THE MASSACRE OF GLENCOE

1814

'O, TELL me, Harper, wherefore flow
Thy wayward notes of wail and woe
Far down the desert of Glencoe,
Where none may list their melody?
Say, harp'at thou to the mists that fly,
Or to the dun-deer glancing by,
Or to the eagle that from high
Screams chorus to thy minstrelsy?'

'No, not to these, for they have rest, —
The mist-wreath has the mountain-crest,
The stag his lair, the erne her nest,
Abode of lone security.
But those for whom I pour the lay,
Not wild-wood deep nor mountain gray,
Not this deep dell that shrouds from
day,
Could screen from treacherous cruelty.

'Their flag was furled and mute their
drum,
The very household dogs were dumb,
Unwont to bay at guests that come
In guise of hospitality.
His blithest notes the piper plied,
Her gayest snood the maiden tied,
The dame her distaff flung aside
To tend her kindly housewifery.

'The hand that mingled in the meal
At midnight drew the felon steel,
And gave the host's kind breast to feel
Meed for his hospitality!
The friendly hearth which warmed that
head
At midnight armed it with the brand

That bade destruction's flames expand
Their red and fearful blazonry.

'Then woman's shriek was heard in vain,
Nor infancy's unpitied plain,
More than the warrior's groan, could gain
Respite from ruthless butchery!
The winter wind that whistled shrill,
The snows that night that cloaked the hill,
Though wild and pitiless, had still Far more than Southern clemency.

'Long have my harp's best notes been gone,
Few are its strings and faint their tone,
They can but sound in desert lone
Their gray-haired master's misery.
Were each gray hair a minstrel string,
Each chord should imprecations fling,
Till startled Scotland loud should ring,
"Revenge for blood and treachery!"'

SONG

FOR THE ANNIVERSARY MEETING OF THE
PITT CLUB OF SCOTLAND

1814

O, DREAD was the time, and more dreadful the omen,
When the brave on Marengo lay slaughtered in vain,
And beholding broad Europe bowed down
by her foemen,
PITT closed in his anguish the map of her reign!
Not the fate of broad Europe could bend
his brave spirit
To take for his country the safety of
shame;
O, then in her triumph remember his merit,
And hallow the goblet that flows to his
name.

Round the husbandman's head while he traces the furrow
The mists of the winter may mingle with
rain,
He may plough it with labor and sow it
in sorrow,
And sigh while he fears he has sowed it
in vain;
He may die ere his children shall reap in their gladness,
But the blithe harvest-home shall remember his claim;

And their jubilee-shout shall be softened
with sadness,
While they hallow the goblet that flows
to his name.

Though anxious and timeless his life was expended,
In toils for our country preserved by his
care,
Though he died ere one ray o'er the nations
ascended,
To light the long darkness of doubt and despair;
The storms he endured in our Britain's December,
The perils his wisdom foresaw and o'er-
came,
In her glory's rich harvest shall Britain
remember,
And hallow the goblet that flows to his
name.

Nor forget His gray head who, all dark in affliction,
Is deaf to the tale of our victories won,
And to sounds the most dear to paternal affection,
The shout of his people applauding his
SON;
By his firmness unmoved in success and disaster,
By his long reign of virtue, remember his claim !
With our tribute to PITT join the praise of his Master,
Though a tear stain the goblet that flows
to his name.

Yet again fill the wine-cup and change the sad measure,
The rites of our grief and our gratitude
paid,
To our Prince, to our Heroes, devote the bright treasure,
The wisdom that planned, and the zeal
that obeyed !
Fill WELLINGTON's cup till it beam like his
glory,
Forget not our own brave DALHOUSIE
and GREKE;
A thousand years hence hearts shall bound
at their story,
And hallow the goblet that flows to their
fame.

LINES

ADDRESSED TO RANALD MACDONALD,
ESQ., OF STAFFA

These lines were written in the album kept at the Sound of Ulva Inn, in the month of August, 1814.

STAFFA, sprung from high Macdonald,
Worthy branch of old Clan-Ranald !
Staffa ! king of all kind fellows !
Well befall thy hills and valleys,
Lakes and inlets, deeps and shallows —
Cliffs of darkness, caves of wonder,
Echoing the Atlantic thunder;
Mountains which the gray mist covers,
Where the Chieftain spirit hovers,
Passing while his pinions quiver,
Stretched to quit our land forever !
Each kind influence reign above thee !
Warmer heart 'twixt this and Staffa
Beats not than in heart of Staffa !

PHAROS LOQUITUR

Robert Stevenson, grandfather of Robert
Louis Stevenson, built, amongst others, the Bell Rock Lighthouse. Scott visited the place with Stevenson and the commissioners, July 30, 1814, and wrote these lines in the album kept there.

FAR in the bosom of the deep,
O'er these wild shelves my watch I keep;
A ruddy gem of changeful light,
Bound on the dusky brow of night,
The seaman bids my lustre hail,
And scorns to strike his timorous sail.

LETTER IN VERSE

ON THE VOYAGE WITH THE COMMISSION-ERS OF NORTHERN LIGHTS

'Of the letters which Scott wrote to his friends
during those happy six weeks, I have recovered only one, and it is, thanks to the leisure of the yacht, in verse. The strong and easy heroics of the first section prove, I think, that Mr Canning did not err when he told him that if he chose he might emulate even Dryden's command of that noble measure; and the dancing anapaests of the second show that he could with equal facility have rivalled the gay graces of Cotton, Anstey, or Moore.' — Lockhart, Life.

Chapter xxxiii.

TO HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH

LIGHTHOUSE YACHT IN THE SOUND OF LERWICK,
ZETLAND, 8th August, 1874

HEALTH to the chieftain from his clansman true!
From her true minstrel, health to fair
Buccleuch!
Health from the isles where dewy Morning weaves
Her chaplet with the tints that Twilight
leaves;
Where late the sun scarce vanished from
the sight,
And his bright pathway graced the short-lived night,
Though darker now as autumn's shades extend
The north winds whistle and the mists ascend!
Health from the land where eddying whirlwinds toss
The storm-rocked cradle of the Cape of Noss;
On outstretched cords the giddy engine
slides,
His own strong arm the bold adventurer
guides,
And he that lists such desperate feat to
try
May, like the sea-mew, skim 'twixt surf
and sky,
And feel the mid-air gales around him
blow,
And see the billows rage five hundred feet
below.

Here, by each stormy peak and desert
shore,
The hardy islesman tugs the daring oar,
Practised alike his venturous course to keep
Through the white breakers or the pathless
deep,
By ceaseless peril and by toil to gain
A wretched pittance from the niggard
main.
And when the worn-out drudge old ocean
leaves,
What comfort greets him and what but receives?
Lady! the worst your presence ere has cheered —

When want and sorrow fled as you appeared —

Were to a Zetlander as the high dome
Of proud Drumlanrig to my humble home.
Here rise no groves and here no gardens
blow,
Here even the hardy heath scarce dares to grow;
But rocks on rocks, in mist and storm
arrayed,
Stretch far to sea their giant colonnade,
With many a cavern seamed, the dreary haunt
Of the dun seal and swarthy cormorant.
Wild round their rifted brows, with frequent cry
As of lament, the gulls and gannets fly,
And from their sable base with sullen
sound
In sheets of whitening foam the waves rebound.

Yet even these coasts a touch of envy gain
From those whose land has known oppres-
sion's chain;
For here the industrious Dutchman comes,
once more
To moor his fishing craft by Bressay's
shore,
Greets every former mate and brother tar, Marvels how Lerwick 'scaped the rage of
war,
Tells many a tale of Gallie outrage done,
And ends by blessing God and Wellington.
Here too the Greenland tar, a fiercer guest,
Claims a brief hour of riot, not of rest;
Proves each wild frolic that in wine has
birth,
And wakes the land with brawls and boisterous mirth.
A sadder sight on yon poor vessel's prow
The captive Norseman sits in silent woe,
And eyes the flags of Britain as they flow.
Hard fate of war, which bade her terrors
sway
His destined course and seize so mean a
prey,
A bark with planks so warped and seams
so riven
She scarce might face the gentlest airs of
heaven:
Pensive he sits, and questions oft if none
Can list his speech and understand his morn;

Or would you be pleased but to fancy a whale?
And direct me to send it — by sea or by mail?
The season, I'm told, is nigh over, but
still
I could get you one fit for the lake at Bowhill.<sup>120</sup>
Indeed, as to whales, there's no need to be thrifty,
Since one day last fortnight two hundred and fifty,
Pursued by seven Orkney men's boats and
no more,
Betwixt Truffness and Luffness were drawn on the shore!
You'll ask if I saw this same wonderful
sight;
I own that I did not, but easily might —
For this mighty shoal of leviathans lay
On our lee-beam a mile, in the loop of the bay,
And the islesmen of Sanda were all at the
spoil,
And finching — so term it — the blubber to boil; —<sup>130</sup>
Ye spirits of lavender, drown the reflection
That awakes at the thoughts of this odor-ous dissection. —
To see this huge marvel full fain would we
go,
But Wilson, the wind, and the current said no.
We have now got to Kirkwall, and needs I must stare
When I think that in verse I have once called it fair;
'T is a base little borough, both dirty and
mean —
There is nothing to hear and there's nought to be seen,
Save a church where of old times a prelate
harangued,
And a palace that's built by an earl that was hanged.<sup>140</sup>
But farewell to Kirkwall — aboard we are going,
The anchor's a-peak and the breezes are blowing;
Our commodore calls all his band to their places,
And 't is time to release you — good-night
to your Graces!

SONGS AND VERSES FROM WAVERLEY

So much of the preceding prose is given with these separate pieces as will furnish the needed setting.

I

'AND DID YE NOT HEAR OF A MIRTH BEPELL'

To the tune of 'I have been a Fiddler,' etc.

'The following song, which has been since borrowed by the worshipful author of the famous "History of Fryar Bacon," has been with difficulty deciphered. It seems to have been sung on occasion of carrying home the bride. —
Appendix to General Preface.

AND did ye not hear of a mirth befell
The morrow after a wedding day,
And carrying a bride at home to dwell?
And away to Tewin, away, away.

The quintain was set, and the garlands were made,
'T is pity old customs should ever decay;
And woe be to him that was horsed on a jade,
For he carried no credit away, away.

We met a concert of fiddle-de-dees;
We set them a-cockhorse, and made them play
The winning of Bullen, and Upsey-frees,
And away to Tewin, away, away!

There was ne'er a lad in all the parish
That would go to the plough that day;
But on his fore-horse his wench he carries,
And away to Tewin, away, away!

The butler was quick, and the ale he did tap,
The maidens did make the chamber full
gay;
The servants did give me a fuddling cup,
And I did carry 't away, away.

The smith of the town his liquor so took,
That he was persuaded that the ground
looked blue;
And I dare boldly be sworn on a book,
Such smiths as he there's but a few.

A posset was made, and the women did sip,
And simpering said, they could eat no
more;

Full many a maiden was laid on the lip, —
I'll say no more, but give o'er, give o'er.

II

'LATE, WHEN THE AUTUMN EVENING
FELL'

From Chapter v. 'His tutor, or, I should say, Mr. Pembroke, for he scarce assumed the name of tutor, picked up about Edward's room some fragments of irregular verse, which he appeared to have composed under the influence of the agitating feelings occasioned by this sudden page being turned up to him in the book of life, i. e., his being appointed captain in a regiment of dragoons.'

LATE, when the autumn evening fell
On Mirkwood-Mere's romantic dell,
The lake returned, in chastened gleam,
The purple cloud, the golden beam:
Reflected in the crystal pool,
Headland and bank lay fair and cool;
The weather-tinted rock and tower,
Each drooping tree, each fairy flower,
So true, so soft, the mirror gave,
As if there lay beneath the wave,
Secure from trouble, toil, and care,
A world than earthly world more fair.

But distant winds began to wake,
And roused the Genius of the Lake!
He heard the groaning of the oak,
And donned at once his sable cloak,
As warrior, at the battle cry,
Invests him with his panoply:
Then, as the whirlwind nearer pressed,
He 'gan to shake his foamy crest
O'er furrowed brow and blackened cheek,
And bade his surge in thunder speak.
In wild and broken eddies whirled,
Flitted that fond ideal world;
And, to the shore in tumult tost,
The realms of fairy bliss were lost.

Yet, with a stern delight and strange,
I saw the spirit-stirring change
As warred the wind with wave and wood.
Upon the ruined tower I stood,
And felt my heart more strongly bound,
Responsive to the lofty sound,
While, joying in the mighty roar,
I mourned that tranquil scene no more.

So, on the idle dreams of youth
Breaks the loud trumpet-call of truth,
Bids each fair vision pass away,
Like landscape on the lake that lay,
As fair, as fitting, and as frail,
As that which fled the autumn gale —
For ever dead to fancy's eye
Be each gay form that glided by,
While dreams of love and lady's charms
Give place to honor and to arms!

III

'THE KNIGHT'S TO THE MOUNTAIN'

From Chapter ix. '— The questioned party replied. — and, like the witch of Thalaba, "still his speech was song."'

THE knight's to the mountain
His bogle to wind;
The lady's to greenwood
Her garland to bind.
The bower of Burd Ellen
Has moss on the floor,
That the step of Lord William
Be silent and sure.

IV

'IT'S UP GLEMBARCHAN'S BRAES I GAED'

From Chapter xi. 'Balmawhapple could hold no longer, but broke in what he called a d—d good song, composed by Gibby Caethrowit, the Piper of Cnapar; and, without wasting more time, struck up.' —

It's up Glembarchan's braes I gaed,
And o'er the bent of Killiebraid,
And mony a weary cast I made
To cullie the moor-fowl's tail.

If up a bonny black-cock should spring,
To whistle him down wi' a slug in his
wing,
And strap him on to my lunzie string,
Right seldom would I fail.

V

'HIE AWAY, HIE AWAY'

From Chapter xii. 'The stamping of horses was now heard in the court, and Davie's voice singing to the two large deer greyboulds.' —

HIE away, hie away,
Over bank and over brae.

Where the copsewood is the greenest,
Where the fountains glisten sheenest,
Where the lady-fern grows strongest,
Where the morning dew lies longest,
Where the black-cock sweetest sips it,
Where the fairy latest trips it:
Hie to haunts right seldom seen,
Lovely, lonesome, cool, and green,
Over bank and over brae,
Hie away, hie away.

VI

ST. SWITHIN'S CHAIR

From Chapter xiii. 'The view of the old tower, or fortalice, introduced some family anecdotes and tales of Scottish chivalry, which the Baron told with great enthusiasm. The projecting peak of an impending crag, which we near it, had acquired the name of St. Swithin's Chair. It was the scene of a peculiar superstition, of which Mr. Rubrick mentioned some curious particulars, which reminded Waverley of a rhyme quoted by Edgar in King Lear; and Rose was called upon to sing a little poem in which they had been interwoven by some village poet. —

"Who, nameless as the race from which he sprung, Saved other names, but left his own unsung."

'The sweetness of her voice, and the simple beauty of her music, gave all the advantage which the minstrel could have desired, and which his poetry so much wanted.'

On Hallow-Mass Eve, ere you bounse ye to rest,
Ever beware that your couch be blessed;
Sign it with cross, and saim it with bead,
Sing the Ave and say the Creed.

For on Hallow-Mass Eve the Night-Hag will ride,
And all her nine-fold sweeping on by her side,
Whether the wind sing lowly or loud,
Sailing through moonshine or swathed in the cloud.

The Lady she sate in St. Swithin's Chair,
The dew of the night has damped her hair:
Her cheek was pale, but resolved and high
Was the word of her lip and the glance of her eye.

She muttered the spell of Swithin bold,
When his naked foot traced the midnight wold,
When he stopped the Hag as she rode the night,
And bade her descend and her promise plight.

He that dare sit on St. Swithin's Chair
When the Night-Hag wings the troubled air,
Questions three, when he speaks the spell,
He may ask, and she must tell.

The Baron has been with King Robert his liege,
These three long years in battle and siege;
News are there none of his weal or his woe,
And fain the Lady his fate would know.

She shudders and stops as the charm she speaks; —
Is it the moody owl that shrieks?
Or is that sound, betwixt laughter and scream,
The voice of the Demon who haunts the stream?

The moan of the wind sunk silent and low,
And the roaring torrent had ceased to flow;
The calm was more dreadful than raging storm,
When the cold gray mist brought the ghastly form!

VII

'YOUNG MEN WILL LOVE THEE MORE FAIR AND MORE FAST'

From Chapter xiv. 'The next day Edward arose betimes, and, in a morning walk around the house and its vicinity, came suddenly upon a small court in front of the dog-kennel, where his friend Davie was employed about his four-footed charge. One quick glance of his eye recognized Waverley, when, instantly turning his back, as if he had not observed him, he began to sing part of an old ballad.'

YOUNG men will love thee more fair and more fast!
Heard ye so merry the little bird sing?

Old men's love the longest will last,
And the throstle-cock's head is under his wing.

The young man's wrath is like light straw
 on fire;
Heard ye so merry the little bird sing?
 But like red-hot steel is the old man's ire,
And the throstle-cock's head is under his wing.

The young man will brawl at the evening
 board;
Heard ye so merry the little bird sing?
 But the old man will draw at the dawning
 the sword,
And the throstle-cock's head is under his wing.

VIII

FLORA MACIVOR'S SONG

From Chapter xxii.

THERE is mist on the mountain, and night
 on the vale,
 But more dark is the sleep of the sons of the Gael.
 A stranger commanded—it sunk on the
 land,
 It has frozen each heart and benumbed
 every hand!

The dirk and the target lie sordid with
 dust,
 The bloodless claymore is but reddened
 with rust;
 On the hill or the glen if a gun should appear,
 It is only to war with the heath-cock or
 deer.

The deeds of our sires if our bards should rehearse,
 Let a blush or a blow be the meed of their verse!
 Be mute every string and be hushed every
 tone
 That shall bid us remember the fame that is flown!

But the dark hours of night and of slumber
 are past,
 The morn on our mountains is dawning at
 last;

Glenaladale's peaks are illumed with the rays,
 And the streams of Glenfinnan leap bright
 in the blaze.

O high-minded Moray!—the exiled—the
 dear!—
 In the blush of the dawning the Standard
 uprear!
 Wide, wide to the winds of the north let it
 fly,
 Like the sun's latest flash when the tempest
 is nigh!

Ye sons of the strong, when that dawning
 shall break,
 Need the harp of the aged remind you to wake?
 That dawn never beamed on your forefathers' eye,
 But it roused each high chieftain to vanquish or die.

O, sprung from the Kings who in Islay
 kept state,
 Proud chiefs of Clan-Ranald, Glengary, and Sleat!
 Combine like three streams from one mountain of snow,
 And resistless in union rush down on the foe!

True son of Sir Evan, undaunted Lochiel,
 Place thy targe on thy shoulder and burnish
 thy steel!
 Rough Keppoch, give breath to thy bugle's
 bold swell,
 Till far Coryarrick resound to the knell!

Stern son of Lord Kenneth, high chief of Kintail,
 Let the stag in thy standard bound wild in the gale!
 May the race of Clan-Gillian, the fearless and free,
 Remember Gleulivet, Harlaw, and Dundee!

Let the clan of gray Fingon, whose offspring has given
 Such heroes to earth and such martyrs to
 heaven,
 Unite with the race of renowned Rorri
 More,
 To launch the long galley and stretch to the oar!

How Mac-Shimei will joy when their chief shall display
The yew-crested bonnet o'er tresses of
gray !
How the race of wronged Alpine and murdered Glencoe
Shall shout for revenge when they pour on the foe !

Ye sons of brown Dermid, who slew the wild boar,
Resume the pure faith of the great Callum-
More !
Mac-Niel of the Islands, and Moy of the Lake,
For honor, for freedom, for vengeance
awake !

Awake on your hills, on your islands awake, Brave sons of the mountain, the frith, and
the lake !
'Tis the bugle — but not for the chase is
the call ;
'Tis the pibroch's shrill summons — but not to the hall.

'Tis the summons of heroes for conquest or
death,
When the banners are blazing on mountain and heath ;
They call to the dirk, the claymore, and the targe,
To the march and the muster, the line and the charge.

Be the brand of each chieftain like Fin's in his ire !
May the blood through his veins flow like currents of fire !
Burst the base foreign yoke as your sires
did of yore !
Or die like your sires, and endure it no
more !

IX

TO AN OAK TREE

IN THE CHURCHVARD OF —, IN THE HIGH-LANDS OF SCOTLAND, SAID TO MARK THE GRAVE OF CAPTAIN WOGAN, KILLED IN 1649.

From Chapter xxix. 'The letter from the Chief contained Flora's lines on the fate of Captain Wogan, whose enterprising character was so well drawn by Clarendon. He had originally engaged in the service of the Parliament, but had abjured that party upon the execution of Charles I. ; and upon hearing that the royal standard was set up by the Earl of Glencairn and General Middleton in the Highlands of Scotland, took leave of Charles II., who was then at Paris, passed into England, assembled a body of cavaliers in the neighbourhood of London, and traversed the kingdom, which had been so long under domination of the usurper, by marches conducted with such skill, dexterity, and spirit, that he safely united his handful of horsemen with the body of Highlanders then in arms. After several months of desultory warfare, in which Wogan's skill and courage gained him the highest reputation, he had the misfortune to be wounded in a dangerous manner, and no surgical assistance being within reach, he terminated his short but glorious career.'

EMBLEM of England's ancient faith,
Full proudly may thy branches wave,
Where loyalty lies low in death,
And valor fills a timeless grave.

And thou, brave tenant of the tomb !
Repine not if our clime deny,
Above thine honored sod to bloom,
The flowerets of a milder sky.

These owe their birth to genial May ;
Beneath a fiercer sun they pine,
Before the winter storm decay —
And can their worth be type of thine ?

No ! for 'mid storms of Fate opposing,
Still higher swelled thy dauntless heart,
And, while Despair the scene was clos-
ing,
Commenced thy brief but brilliant part.

'T was then thou sought'st on Albion's hill,
(When England's sons the strife resigned,)
A rugged race resisting still,
And unsubdued, though unrefined.

Thy death's hour heard no kindred wail,
No holy knell thy requiem rung ;
Thy mourners were the plaided Gael,
Thy dirge the clamorous pibroch sung.

Yet who, in Fortune's summer-shine
To waste life's longest term away,
Would change that glorious dawn of thine
Though darkened ere its noontide day ?

Be thine the Tree whose dauntless boughs
 Brave summer's drought and winter's gloom !
 Rome bound with oak her patriot's brows,
 As Albyn shadows Wogan's tomb.

X

'WE ARE BOUND TO DRIVE THE BULL-LOCKS'

From Chapter xxxviii. 'The clan of Mac-Farlane, occupying the fastnesses of the western side of Loch Lomond, were great depredators on the Low Country; and as their excursions were made usually by night, the moon was proverbially called their lantern. Their celebrated pibroch of Hoggil nam Bo, which is the name of their gathering tune, intimates similar practices, — the sense being '—

WE are bound to drive the bullocks,
 All by hollows, hirsts, and hillocks,
 Through the sleet and through the rain.
 When the moon is beaming low
 On frozen lake and hills of snow,
 Bold and heartily we go,
 And all for little gain.

XI

'BUT FOLLOW, FOLLOW ME'

From Chapter lxiii.

BUT follow, follow me,
 While glow-worms light the lea,
 I'll show ye where the dead should be —
 Each in his shroud,
 While winds pipe loud,
 And the red moon peeps dim through the
 cloud.

Follow, follow me:
 Brave should he be
 That treads by the night the dead man's lea.

FOR A' THAT AN' A' THAT

A NEW SONG TO AN OLD TUNE

Sung at the first meeting of the Pitt Club of Scotland and published in the Scots Magazine for July, 1814. Scott wrote two songs for the anniversary of the death of Pitt this and the one on page 409. This one, though not printed till July, 1814, was written for the celebration in December, 1813.

THOUGH right be a'ft put down
 strength,

As mony a day we saw that,
 The true and leifu' cause at length
 Shall bear the grie for a' that !
 For a' that an' a' that,
 Guns, guillotines, and a' that,
 The Fleur-de-lis, that lost her right,
 Is queen again for a' that !

We'll twine her in a friendly knot
 With England's Rose, and a' that;
 The Shamrock shall not be forgot,
 For Wellington made bra' that.
 The Thistle, though her leaf be rude,
 Yet faith we'll no misen' that,
 She sheltered in her solitude
 The Fleur-de-lis, for a' that.

The Austrian Vine, the Prussian Pine,
 (For Blucher's sake, hurra that.)
 The Spanish Olive, too, shall join,
 And bloom in peace for a' that.
 Stout Russia's Hemp, so surely twined
 Around our wreath we'll draw that.
 And he that would the cord unbind,
 Shall have it for his gra-vat !

Or, if to choke sae puir a sot,
 Your pity scorn to throw that,
 The Devil's elbo' be his lot,
 Where he may sit and claw that.
 In spite of slight, in spite of might,
 In spite of brags and a' that,
 The lads that battled for the right,
 Have won the day and a' that !

There's ae bit spot I had forgot,
 America they ca' that !
 A coward plot her rats had got
 Their father's flag to gnaw that:
 Now see it fly top-gallant high,
 Atlantic winds shall blow that,
 And Yankee loon, beware your crown,
 There's kames in hand to claw that !

For on the land, or on the sea,
 Where'er the breezes blow that,
 The British Flag shall bear the grie,
 And win the day for a' that !

FAREWELL TO MACKENZIE

HIGH CHIEF OF KINTAIL

FROM THE GAELIC

'The original verses,' says Scott, 'are arranged to a beautiful Gaelic air, of which the chorus is adapted to the double pull upon the oars of a galley, and which is therefore distinct from the ordinary jorums, or boat-songs. They were composed by the Family Bard upon the departure of the Earl of Seaforth, who was obliged to take refuge in Spain, after an unsuccessful effort at insurrection in favor of the Stuart family, in the year 1718.' Written by Scott in 1815.

FAREWELL to Mackenneth, great Earl of
the North,
The Lord of Lochcarron, Glenshiel, and Seaforth;

To the Chieftain this morning his course
who began,
Launching forth on the billows his bark like a swan.

For a far foreign land he has hoisted his
sail,

Farewell to Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

O, swift be the galley and hardy her crew,

May her captain be skilful, her mariners
true,

In danger undaunted, unwearied by toil,
Though the whirlwind should rise and the ocean should boil:

On the brave vessel's gunnel I drank his bounty,

And farewell to Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

Awake in thy chamber, thou sweet southland gale!

Like the sighs of his people, breathe soft
on his sail;

Be prolonged as regret that his vassals
must know,

Be fair as their faith and sincere as their
woe;

Be so soft and so fair and so faithful,
sweet gale,

Waiting onward Mackenzie, High Chief of
Kintail!

Be his pilot experienced and trusty and
wise,

To measure the seas and to study the
skies:

May he hoist all his canvas from streamer
to deck,

But O! crowd it higher when wafting him
back —

Till the cliffs of Skooroora and Conan's glad vale

Shall welcome Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail!

IMITATION

OF THE PRECEDING SONG

WRITTEN IN 1815

'These verses,' one of Scott's editors explains, 'were written shortly after the death of Lord Seaforth, the last male representative of his illustrious house. He was a nobleman of extraordinary talents, who must have made for himself a lasting reputation, had not his political exertions been checked by the painful natural infirmities alluded to in the fourth stanza.' The 'gentle dame' of the last stanza was Lady Hood, daughter of the last Lord Seaforth, widow of Admiral Sir Samuel Hood, and later Mrs. Stewart Mackenzie of Seaford and Glaserton.

So sung the old bard in the grief of his heart

When he saw his loved lord from his people depart.

Now mute on thy mountains, O Albion, are heard

Nor the voice of the song nor the harp of the bard;

Or its strings are but waked by the stern
winter gale,

As they mourn for Mackenzie, last Chief of Kintail.

From the far Southland Border a minstrel came forth,

And he waited the hour that some bard of
the north

His hand on the harp of the ancient should
cast,

And bid its wild numbers mix high with
the blast:

But no bard was there left in the land of
the Gael
To lament for Mackenzie, last Chief of Kintail.

'And shalt thou then sleep,' did the minstrel exclaim,

'Like the son of the lowly, unnoticed by
fame ?

No, son of Fitzgerald ! in accents of
woe

The song thou hast loved o'er thy coffin
shall flow,

And teach thy wild mountains to join in the wail

That laments for Mackenzie, last Chief of Kintail.

'In vain, the bright course of thy talents
to wrong,

Fate deadened thine ear and imprisoned
thy tongue;

For brighter o'er all her obstructions arose
The glow of the genius they could not oppose;

And who in the land of the Saxon or Gael

Might match with Mackenzie, High Chief of Kintail ?

'Thy sons rose around thee in light and in
love,

All a father could hope, all a friend could approve;

What 'vails it the tale of thy sorrows to
tell, —

In the spring-time of youth and of promise
they fell !

Of the line of Fitzgerald remains not a male

To bear the proud name of the Chief of Kintail.

'And thou, gentle dame, who must bear to thy grief

For thy clan and thy country the cares of a chief,

Whom brief rolling moons in six changes have left,

Of thy husband and father and brethren
bereft,

To thine ear of affection how sad is the
hall

That salutes thee the heir of the line of Kintail !'

WAR-SONG OF LACHLAN

HIGH CHIEF OF MACLEAN

FROM THE GARLIC

Like the preceding this was translated in 1815 and prefaced thus by Scott: 'This appears to be imperfect, or, at least, many of the early Gaelic poems, makes a transition from one subject to another in the situation, namely, of one of the daughters of the clan, who opens the song by lamenting the absence of her lover, to an eulogium on the military glories of the Chieftain. The translator has endeavored to imitate the style of the original.

A WEARY month has wandered o'er
Since last we parted on the shore;
Heaven ! that I saw thee, love, once more Safe on that shore again ! —

'T was valiant Lachlan gave the word:
Lachlan, of many a galley lord:
He called his kindred bands on board,
And launched them on the main.

Clan-Gillian is to ocean gone;
Clan-Gillian, fierce in foray known;
Rejoicing in the glory won
In many a bloody broil:
For wide is heard the thundering fray,
The rout, the ruin, the dismay,
When from the twilight glens away
Clan-Gillian drives the spoil.

Woe to the hills that shall rebound
Our bannered bag - pipes' maddening
sound !

Clan-Gillian's onset echoing round,
Shall shake their inmost cell.
Woe to the bark whose crew shall gaze
Where Lachlan's silken streamer plays,
The fools might face the lightning's blaze
As wisely and as well !

SAINT CLOUD

This poem was written at Paris, 3th Sep-ber. 1815, after an evening spent at St. Cloud with Lady Alvanley and her daughters, of whom was the songstress referred to in the stanza but one.

Soft spread the southern summer night
Her veil of darksome blue;
Ten thousand stars combined to light
The terrace of Saint Cloud.

rening breezes gently sighed,
 s breath of lover true,
 ling the deserted pride
 l wreck of sweet Saint Cloud.

rum's deep roll was heard afar,
 bugle wildly blew
 ight to Hulan and Hussar
 t garrison Saint Cloud.

artled Naiads from the shade
 h broken urns withdrew,
 leuced was that proud cascade,
 glory of Saint Cloud.

te upon its steps of stone,
 could its silence rue,
 waked to music of our own echoes of Saint Cloud.

leine might hear each lovely note
 light as summer dew,
 through the moonless air they float,
 onged from fair Saint Cloud.

re a melody more sweet waters never knew,
 h music's self was wont to meet
 h princes at Saint Cloud.

en with more delighted ear circle round her drew urs, when gathered round to hear songstress at Saint Cloud.

appy hours poor mortals pass, —
 i give those hours their due, nk among the foremost class
 evenings at Saint Cloud.

THE DANCE OF DEATH

letter to Morritt, October 2, 1815, Scott
 'Out of my Field of Waterloo has an odd, wild sort of thing, which I in-finish separately, and call it "The of Death."

and morning were at meeting
 r Waterloo;
 had sung their earliest greeting;
 t and low they crew,
 paly beam yet shone
 heights of Mount Saint John;

Tempest-clouds prolonged the away
 Of timeless darkness over day;
 Whirlwind, thunder-clap, and shower
 Marked it a predestined hour. 10
 Broad and frequent through the night
 Flashed the sheets of levin-light;
 Muskets, glancing lightnings back,
 Showed the dreary bivouac
 Where the soldier lay,
 Chill and stiff and drenched with rain,
 Wishing dawn of morn again,
 Though death should come with day.

'Tis at such a tide and hour
 Wizard, witch, and fiend have power, 20
 And ghastly forms through mist and shower

Gleam on the gifted ken;
 And then the affrighted prophet's ear
 Drinks whispers strange of fate and fear,
 Presaging death and ruin near

Among the sons of men; —
 Apart from Albyn's war-array,
 'T was then gray Allan sleepless lay;
 Gray Allan, who for many a day

Had followed stout and stern, 30
 Where, through battle's rout and reel,
 Storm of shot and edge of steel,
 Led the grandson of Lochiel,
 Valiant Fassiefern.

Through steel and shot he leads no more,
 Low laid mid friends' and foemen's gore —
 But long his native lake's wild shore,
 And Sunart rough, and high Ardgower,
 And Morven long shall tell,
 And proud Bennevis hear with awe, 40
 How upon bloody Quatre-Bras
 Brave Cameron heard the wild hurra
 Of conquest as he fell.

Lone on the outskirts of the host,
 The weary sentinel held post,
 And heard through darkness far aloof
 The frequent clang of courser's hoof,
 Where held the cloaked patrol their course
 And spurred 'gainst storm the swerving
 horse;

But there are sounds in Allan's ear 50
 Patrol nor sentinel may hear,
 And sights before his eye aghast
 Invisible to them have passed,

When down the destined plain,
 'Twixt Britain and the bands of France,
 Wild as marsh-borne meteor's glance,

Strange phantoms wheeled a revel dance
 And doomed the future slain.
 Such forms were seen, such sounds were
 heard,
 When Scotland's James his march prepared 60
 For Flodden's fatal plain;
 Such, when he drew his ruthless sword,
 As Choosers of the Slain, adored
 The yet unchristened Dance.
 An indistinct and phantom band,
 They wheeled their ring-dance hand in
 hand
 With gestures wild and dread:
 The Seer, who watched them ride the
 storm,
 Saw through their faint and shadowy form
 The lightning's flash more red; 70
 And still their ghastly roundelay
 Was of the coming battle-fray
 And of the destined dead.

SONG

Wheel the wild dance
 While lightnings glance
 And thunders rattle loud,
 And call the brave
 To bloody grave,
 To sleep without a shroud.

Our airy feet, 80
 So light and fleet,
 They do not bend the rye
 That sinks its head when whirlwinds rave,
 And swells again in eddying wave
 As each wild gust blows by;
 But still the corn
 At dawn of morn
 Our fatal steps that bore,
 At eve lies waste,
 A trampled paste 90
 Of blackening mud and gore.

Wheel the wild dance
 While lightnings glance
 And thunders rattle loud,
 And call the brave
 To bloody grave,
 To sleep without a shroud.

Wheel the wild dance!
 Brave sons of France,
 For you our ring makes room; 100

Make space full wide
 For martial pride,
 For banner, spear, and plume.
 Approach, draw near,
 Proud cuirassier!
 Room for the men of steel!
 Through crest and plate
 The broadsword's weight
 Both head and heart shall feel.

Wheel the wild dance
 While lightnings glance
 And thunders rattle loud,
 And call the brave
 To bloody grave,
 To sleep without a shroud.

Sons of the spear!
 You feel us near
 In many a ghastly dream;
 With fancy's eye
 Our forms you spy,
 And hear our fatal scream.
 With clearer sight
 Ere falls the night,
 Just when to weal or woe
 Your disembodied souls take flight
 On trembling wing — each startled
 Our choir of death shall know.

Wheel the wild dance
 While lightnings glance
 And thunders rattle loud,
 And call the brave
 To bloody grave,
 To sleep without a shroud.

Burst ye clouds, in tempest showers
 Redder rain shall soon be ours —
 See the east grows wan —
 Yield we place to sterner game,
 Ere deadlier bolts and direr flame
 Shall the welkin's thunders shame;
 Elemental rage is tame
 To the wrath of man.

At morn, gray Allan's mates with awe
 Heard of the visioned sights he saw,
 The legend heard him say;
 But the Seer's gifted eye was dim,
 Drowned his ear and stark his limb,
 Ere closed that bloody day —
 He sleeps far from his Highland bed
 But often of the Dance of Death
 His comrades tell the tale,

post when ebbs the night,
 ' watch-fires glow less bright,
 ' is glimmering pale.

ANCE OF DUNOIS

the two translations that follow ed by Scott in Paul's Letters to his 1815, the book that grew out of it to Waterloo. They were taken script collection of French songs, piled, says Scott, by some young was found stained with clay and field of Waterloo. The first is \ Partant pour la Syrie **

and the second were written and by Hortense Beauharnais, once
 land.

ois, the young and brave, was
 l for Palestine,
 made his orisons before Saint
 's shrine:
 ' immortal Queen of Heaven,
 till the soldier's prayer,
 ' prove the bravest knight and he fairest fair.'

honor on the shrine he graved
 h his sword,
 d to the Holy Land the banner
 Lord;
 ful to his noble vow, his war-
 led the air,
 l aye the bravest knight, be-
 the fairest fair.'

the conquest to his arm, and his liege-lord said, hat has for honor beat by bliss
 be repaid.
 r Isabel and thou shall be a sd pair,
 bravest of the brave, she fair-
 the fair.'

ry bound the holy knot before Mary's shrine
 a paradise on earth, if hearts
 ands combine;
 rd and lady bright that were pel there
 red be the bravest knight, be-
 the fairest fair !'

THE TROUBADOUR

GLOWING with love, on fire for fame,
 A Troubadour that hated sorrow
 Beneath his lady's window came,
 And thus he sung his last good-morrow:
 ' My arm it is my country's right,
 My heart is in my true love's bower;
 Gayly for love and fame to fight
 Befits the gallant Troubadour.'

And while he marched with helm on head
 And harp in hand, the descant rung,
 As, faithful to his favorite maid,
 The minstrel-burden still he sung:
 ' My arm it is my country's right,
 My heart is in my lady's bower;
 Resolved for love and fame to fight,
 I come, a gallant Troubadour.'

Even when the battle-roar was deep,
 With dauntless heart he hewed his way,
 Mid splintering lance and falchion-sweep,
 And still was heard his warrior-lay:
 ' My life it is my country's right,
 My heart is in my lady's bower;
 For love to die, for fame to fight,
 Becomes the valiant Troubadour.'

Alas ! upon the bloody field
 He fell beneath the foeman's glaive,
 But still reclining on his shield,
 Expiring sung the exulting stave:
 ' My life it is my country's right,
 My heart is in my lady's bower;
 For love and fame to fall in fight
 Becomes the valiant Troubadour.'

'IT CHANCED THAT CUPID ON A SEASON'

It chanced that Cupid on a season,
 By Fancy urged, resolved to wed,
 But could not settle whether Reason
 Or Folly should partake his bed.

What does he then ? — Upon my life,
 'T was bad example for a deity—
 He takes me Reason for a wife,
 And Folly for his hours of gayety.

Though thus he dealt in petty treason,
 He loved them both in equal measure;
 Fidelity was born of Reason,
 And Folly brought to bed of Pleasure.

SONG

ON THE LIFTING OF THE BANNER OF THE HOUSE OF BUCCLEUCH, AT A GREAT
FOOT-BALL MATCH ON CARTERHAUGH

The foot-ball match took place December 5, 1815. The Ettrick Shepherd also celebrated it.

FROM the brown crest of Newark its summons extending,

Our signal is waving in smoke and in
flame;

And each forester blithe, from his mountain descending,

Bounds light o'er the heather to join in the game.

Then up with the Banner, let forest winds fan her,

She has blazed over Ettrick eight
ages and more;

In sport we'll attend her, in battle defend her,

With heart and with hand, like our fathers before.

When the Southern invader spread waste
and disorder,

At the glance of her crescents he paused and withdrew,

For around them were marshalled the pride of the Border,

The Flowers of the Forest, the Bands of BUCCLEUCH.

A stripling's weak hand to our revel has borne her,

No mail-glove has grasped her, no spear-
men surround;

But ere a bold foeman should scathe or should scorn her

A thousand true hearts would be cold on the ground.

We forget each contention of civil dissension,

And hail, like our brethren, HOME,
DOUGLAS, and CAR:

And ELLIOT and PRINGLE in pastime shall mingle,

As welcome in peace as their fathers in
war.

Then strip, lads, and to it, though sharp be
the weather,

And if by mischance you should happen
to fall,

There are worse things in life than
ble on heather,
And life is itself but a game
ball.

And when it is over we'll drink measure

To each laird and each lady
nessed our fun,

And to every blithe heart that takes
our pleasure,

To the lads that have lost and that have won.

May the Forest still flourish, both and Landward,

From the hall of the peer to the ingle-nook;

And huzza! my brave hearts,
CLEUCH and his standard,

For the King and the Country, and the Duke!

Then up with the Banner, let forest winds fan her,

She has blazed over Ettrick
ages and more;

In sport we'll attend her, in battle defend her,

With heart and with hand,
fathers before.

SONGS FROM GUY MANN

Published in 1815.

I

'CANNY MOMENT, LUCKY FIT

From Chapter iii.

CANNY moment, lucky fit;
Is the lady lighter yet?

Be it lad, or be it lass,
Sign wi' cross, and sain wi' mass

Trefoil, vervain, John's-wort,
Hinders witches of their wirt;

Weel is them, that weel may Fast upon St. Andrew's day.

Saint Bride and her brat,
Saint Colme and her cat,

Saint Michael and his spear,
Keep the house frae reif and

II

ST YE, TWINE YE! EVEN SO'

From Chapter iv.

ye, twine ye! even so,
 shades of joy and woe,
 and fear and peace and strife,
 thread of human life.

the mystic twist is spinning,
 the infant's life beginning,
 seen through twilight bending,
 at varied shapes attending!

as wild and follies vain,
 res soon exchanged for pain;
 and jealousy and fear,
 magic dance appear.

they wax and now they dwindle,
 ag with the whirling spindle,
 ye, twine ye! even so,
 human bliss and woe.

III

D, WEARY, WHEREFORE STAY'

From Chapter xvii.

D, weary, wherefore stay,
 ling thus with earth and clay?
 the body pass away;—

Hark! the mass is singing.

thee doff thy mortal weed,
 Mother be thy speed,
 to help thee at thy need;—

Hark! the knell is ringing.

ot snow-drift driving fast, er hail or levin blast;
 the shroud shall lap thee fast,
 the sleep be on thee cast

That shall no'er know waking.

thee, haste thee, to be gone, fits fast, and time draws on,— thy gasp, and groan thy groan,
 Day is near the breaking.

IV

'DARK SHALL BE LIGHT'

From Chapter xlix.

DARK shall be light,
 And wrong done to right,
 When Bertram's right and Bertram's might Shall meet on Ellangowan's height.

LULLABY OF AN INFANT CHIEF

AIR—'Cadal gu lo'

The words of the air signify 'Sleep on till day.' The lullaby was written for Mr. Terry's dramatization of Guy Mannering.

O, HUSH thee, my babie, thy sire was a knight,

Thy mother a lady both lovely and bright;
 The woods and the glens, from the towers which we see,

They all are belonging, dear babie, to thee.

O ho ro, i ri ri, cadul gu lo,

O ho ro, i ri ri, etc.

O, fear not the bugle, though loudly it blows,

It calls but the warders that guard thy repose;

Their bows would be bended, their blades
 would be red,

Ere the step of a foeman draws near to thy bed.

O ho ro, i ri ri, etc.

O, hush thee, my babie, the time soon will
 come,

When thy sleep shall be broken by trumpet and drum;

Then hush thee, my darling, take rest
 while you may,

For strife comes with manhood and waking with day.

O ho ro, i ri ri, etc.

THE RETURN TO ULSTER

First published in Thomson's Collection of Irish Airs, 1816.

ONCE again,—but how changed since my wanderings began—

I have heard the deep voices of the Lagan
 and Bann,

And the pines of Clanbrassil resound to the roar
That wearies the echoes of fair Tullamore.
Alas! my poor bosom, and why shouldst
thou burn!

With the scenes of my youth can its raptures return?
Can I live the dear life of delusion again,
That flowed when these echoes first mixed with my strain?

It was then that around me, though poor
and unknown,
High spells of mysterious enchantment were thrown;

The streams were of silver, of diamond the
dew,

The land was an Eden, for fancy was new.
I had heard of our bards, and my soul was
on fire

At the rush of their verse and the sweep of their lyre:

To me 't was not legend nor tale to the
ear,

But a vision of noontide, distinguished and
clear.

Ultonia's old heroes awoke at the call,
And renewed the wild pomp of the chase
and the hall;

And the standard of Fion flashed fierce from on high,

Like a burst of the sun when the tempest
is nigh.

It seemed that the harp of green Erin
once more

Could renew all the glories she boasted of yore. —

Yet why at remembrance, fond heart,
shouldst thou burn?

They were days of delusion and cannot return.

But was she, too, a phantom, the maid who stood by,

And listed my lay while she turned from mine eye?

Was she, too, a vision, just glancing to view,

Then dispersed in the sunbeam or melted
to dew?

O, would it had been so! — O, would that her eye

Had been but a star-glance that shot through the sky,

And her voice that was moulded to
melody's thrill,
Had been but a zephyr that sighed and was still!

O, would it had been so! — not then this poor heart

Had learned the sad lesson, to love and to
part;

To bear unassisted its burden of care,
While I toiled for the wealth I had no one to share.

Not then had I said, when life's summer was done

And the hours of her autumn were fast speeding on,

'Take the fame and the riches ye brought in your train,

And restore me the dream of my springtide again.'

JOCK OF HAZELDEAN

AIR — 'A Border Melody'

The first stanza is old. The others were added to it for Campbell Albyn's Anthology.
1816.

'WHY weep ye by the tide, ladie?

Why weep ye by the tide?

I'll wed ye to my youngest son,

And ye sall be his bride:

And ye sall be his bride, ladie,

Sae comely to be seen' —

But aye she loot the tears down fa'

For Jock of Hazeldean.

'Now let this wilfu' grief be done,

And dry that cheek so pale;

Young Frank is chief of Errington

And lord of Langley-dale;

His step is first in peaceful ha',

His sword in battle keen' —

But aye she loot the tears down fa'

For Jock of Hazeldean.

'A chain of gold ye sall not lack,

Nor braid to bind your hair;

Nor mettled bound, nor managed hse <sup>wh</sup>

Nor palfrey fresh and fair;

And you, the foremost o' them a',

Shall ride our forest queen' —

But aye she loot the tears down fa'

For Jock of Hazeldean.

decked at morning-tide,
glimmered fair;
d bridegroom wait the bride,
and knight are there.
her baith by bower and ha';
was not seen!
'Border and awa'
'Hazeldean.

I OF DONALD DHU

Pìobair of Donuill Dhuidh'

was written for Albyn's Anthol. contained the following preface

ry ancient pibroch belonging to ld. and supposed to refer to the Donald Balloch, who, in 1471,
the Isles with a considerable Lochaber, and at Inverlochy put to flight the Earls of Mar though at the head of an army
own. The words of the set, dy, to which the pipe variations
n thus in Gaelic:—

Donuill Dhuidh, pìobaireachd Dhonull;
duill Dhuidh, pìobaireachd Dhonull;
duill Dhuidh, pìobaireachd Dhonull;
air falcho Inverlochi."

ons of Donald the Black,
s of Donald the Black,
l the pennon are on the gatheringverlochy."

suggests the gathering song in
of The Lady of the Lake.

of Donuill Dhu,
t of Donuill,
y wild voice anew,
n Clan Conuill.
ay, come away,
o the summons!
your war array,
s and commons.

m deep glen and mountain so rocky,
pipe and pennon
Inverlochy.
ry hill-plaid and
eart that wears one,
ry steel blade and
hand that bears one.

tended the herd,
ek without shelter;

Leave the corpse uninterred,
The bride at the altar;
Leave the deer, leave the steer,
Leave nets and barges:
Come with your fighting gear,
Broadswords and targes.

Come as the winds come when Forests are rended;
Come as the waves come when Navies are stranded:
Faster come, faster come,
Faster and faster,
Chief, vassal, page and groom,
Tenant and master.

Fast they come, fast they come;
See how they gather!
Wide waves the eagle plume,
Blended with heather.
Cast your plaids, draw your blades,
Forward each man set!
Pibroch of Donuill Dhu,
Knell for the onset!

NORA'S VOW

AIR—'Cha teid mis a chaidh'

Written for Albyn's Anthology, 1816, with this note by Scott:—

'In the original Gaelic, the Lady makes protestations that she will not go with the Red Earl's son, until the swan should build in the cliff, and the eagle in the lake—until one mountain should change places with another, and so forth. It is but fair to add, that there is no authority for supposing that she altered her mind—except the vehemence of her pro-testation.'

HEAR what Highland Nora said,
'The Earlie's son I will not wed,
Should all the race of nature die
And none be left but he and I.
For all the gold, for all the gear,
And all the lands both far and near,
That ever valor lost or won,
I would not wed the Earlie's son.'

'A maiden's vows,' old Callum spoke,
'Are lightly made and lightly broke;
The heather on the mountain's height
Begins to bloom in purple light;
The frost-wind soon shall sweep away
That lustre deep from glen and brae;

Yet Nora ere its bloom be gone
May blithely wed the Earlie's son.'

'The swan,' she said, 'the lake's clear
breast
May barter for the eagle's nest;
The Awe's fierce stream may backward
turn,
Ben-Cruaichan fall and crush Kilchurn;
Our kilted clans when blood is high
Before their foes may turn and fly;
But I, were all these marvels done,
Would never wed the Earlie's son.'

Still in the water-lily's shade
Her wonted nest the wild-swan made;
Ben-Cruaichan stands as fast as ever,
Still downward foams the Awe's fierce river;
To shun the clash of foeman's steel
No Highland brogue has turned the heel;
But Nora's heart is lost and won —
She 's wedded to the Earlie's son !

MACGREGOR'S GATHERING

Written for Albyn's Anthology, 1816.

AIR — 'Thain' a Grigalach'

THE moon 's on the lake and the mist 's on the brae,
And the Clau has a name that is nameless
by day;
Then gather, gather, gather, Grigalach!
Gather, gather, gather, etc.

Our signal for fight, that from monarchs
we drew,
Must be heard but by night in our vengeful haloo !
Then haloo, Grigalach ! haloo, Griga-
lach !
Haloo, haloo, haloo, Grigalach, etc.

Glen Orchy's proud mountains, Coalchurn
and her towers,
Glenstrae and Glenlyon no longer are ours;
We 're landless, landless, landless,
Grigalach !
Landless, landless, landless, etc.

But doomed and devoted by vassal and lord,
MacGregor has still both his heart and his
sword !

Then courage, courage, courage, Grig-alach !
Courage, courage, courage, etc.

If they rob us of name and pursue us with beagles,
Give their roofs to the flame and their flesh
to the eagles !
Then vengeance, vengeance, vengeance,
Grigalach !
Vengeance, vengeance, vengeance, etc.

While there 's leaves in the forest and foam
on the river,
MacGregor, despite them, shall flourish
forever !
Come then, Grigalach, come then,
Grigalach !
Come then, come then, come then, etc.

Through the depths of Loch Katrine the steed shall career,
O'er the peak of Ben-Lomond the galley
shall steer.
And the rocks of Craig-Royston like icicles
melt,
Ere our wrongs be forgot or our vengeance
unfelt.
Then gather, gather, gather, Griga-
lach !
Gather, gather, gather, etc.

VERSES

COMPOSED FOR THE OCCASION, ADAPTED TO HAYDN'S AIR 'GOD SAVE THE EM-PEROR FRANCIS,' AND SUNG BY A
SELECT BAND AFTER THE DINNER
GIVEN BY THE LORD PROVOST OF EDINBURGH TO THE GRAND-DUKE
NICHOLAS OF RUSSIA, AND HIS SUITE,
19TH DECEMBER, 1816.

GOD protect brave ALEXANDER,
Heaven defend the noble Czar,
Mighty Russia's high Commander,
First in Europe's banded war;
For the realms he did deliver
From the tyrant overthrown,
Thou, of every good the Giver,
Grant him long to bless his own !
Bless him, mid his land's disaster
For her rights who battled brave;
Of the land of foemen master,
Bless him who their wrongs forgave.

ntment victor,
pe's foes,
premo director,
a reign may close.
! illustrious stranger !
mountain strand;
hopes, and danger,
native land.
or false beguiling
ae'er divide,
ile peace is smiling,
a by side.

THE ANTIQUARY

ed in 1816.

I

ALOR HAD SO FIRED
EYE'

Chapter vi.

or had so fired his eye,
glittered on his thigh,
with such a load of steel,
to murder—not to

II

OU BY THAT RUINED
HALL'

Chapter x.

y that ruined hall,
so stern and gray ?
r pride recall,
passed away ?'

me ?' the Deep Voice

, so oft misused—
okle pride,
ed, and accused !

, like blazing flax,
vels pass away !
ires wane and wax,
urish, and decay.

re—the space is brief—
glass the sand—grains

by joy or grief,
thou shalt part forever !'

III

EPITAPH

From Chapter xi.

HEIR lyeth John o' ye Girnell,
Erth has ye nit and heuen ye kirnell.
In hys tyme ilk wyfe's hennis clokit, Ilka gud mannis herth wi' bairnis was stokit,
He deled a boll o' bear in firloittis fyve,
Four for ye halie kirke and ane for puir
mennis wyvia.

IV

'THE HERRING LOVES THE MERRY MOON-
LIGHT'

From Chapter xi. 'As the Antiquary lifted the latch of the but, he was surprised to hear the shrill, tremulous voice of Elspeth chanting forth an old ballad in a wild and doleful recitative:—

THE herring loves the merry moon-light,
The mackerel loves the wind,
But the oyster loves the dredging sang,
For they come of a gentle kind.

Now haud your tongue, baith wife and carle,
And listen great and sma',
And I will sing of Glenallan's Earl
That fought on the red Harlaw.

The cronach's cried on Bennachie,
And down the Don and a',
And hieland and Tawland may mournfu' be
For the sair field of Harlaw.—

They saddled a hundred milk-white steeds,
They hae bridled a hundred black,
With a chafron of steel on each horse's
head,
And a good knight upon his back.

They hadna ridden a mile, a mile,
A mile but barely ten,
When Donald came branking down the
brae
Wi' twenty thousand men.—

Their tartans they were waving wide,
Their glaives were glancing clear,

The pibrochs rung frae side to side,
Would deafen ye to hear.

The great Earl in his stirrups stood,
That Highland host to see:

‘Now here a knight that’s stout and good
May prove a jeopardie:

‘What would’st thou do, my squire so gay,
That rides beside my reyne, —
Were ye Glenallan’s Earl the day,
And I were Roland Cheyne?

‘To turn the rein were sin and shame,
To fight were wond’rous peril, —
What would ye do now, Roland Cheyne,
Were ye Glenallan’s Earl?’ —

‘Were I Glenallan’s Earl this tide,
And ye were Roland Cheyne,
The spur should be in my horse’s side,
And the bridle upon his mane.

‘If they hae twenty thousand blades,
And we twice ten times ten,
Yet they hae but their tartan plaids,
And we are mail-clad men.

‘My horse shall ride through ranks sae
rude,
As through the moorland fern, —
Then ne’er let the gentle Norman blude
Grow could for Highland kerne.’

He turned him right and round again,
Said, ‘Scorn na at my mither;
Light loves I may get mony a ane,
But minnie ne’er anither.’

VERSES FROM OLD MORTALITY

Published in 1816.

I

‘AND WHAT THOUGH WINTER WILL PINCH SEVERE’

From Chapter xix.

AND what though winter will pinch severe Through locks of gray and a cloak that’s
old,
Yet keep up thy heart, bold cavalier,
For a cup of sack shall fence the cold.

For time will rust the brightest blade,
And years will break the strongest bow;
Was never wight so starkly made,
But time and years would overthrow.

II

VERSES FOUND, WITH A LOCK OF HAIR, IN BOTHWELL’S POCKET-BOOK

From Chapter xxiii.

THY hue, dear pledge, is pure and bright
As in that well-remembered night,
When first thy mystic braid was wove,
And first my Agnes whispered love.

Since then how often hast thou pressed
The torrid zone of this wild breast,
Whose wrath and hate have sworn to dwell
With the first sin that peopled hell;
A breast whose blood’s a troubled ocean,
Each throb the earthquake’s wild commo-
tion! —

Oh, if such cline thou canst endure,
Yet keep thy hue unstained and pure,
What conquest o’er each erring thought
Of that fierce realm had Agnes wrought!
I had not wandered wild and wide,
With such an angel for my guide;
Nor heaven nor earth could then reprove
me

If she had lived, and lived to love me.

Not then this world’s wild joys had been
To me one savage hunting-scene,
My sole delight the headlong race,
And frantic hurry of the chase;
To start, pursue, and bring to bay,
Rush in, drag down and rend my prey,
Then — from the carcass turn away!
Mine ireful mood had sweetness tamed,
And soothed each wound which pride inflamed!

Yes, God and man might now approve me.
If thou hadst lived, and lived to love me.

III

EPITAPH ON BALFOUR OF BURLEY

From Chapter xlv. ‘Gentle reader, I did request of mine honest friend Peter Proudfoot, travelling merchant, known to many of the land for his faithful and just dealings, as well in muslins and cambrics as in small wares, procure me, on his next peregrinations to the vicinage, a copy of the Epitaphion alluded to. And, according to his report, which I see no ground to discredit, it runneth thus:—

HERE lyes one saint to prelates surly,
Being John Balfour, sometime of Burley,
Who, stirred up to vengeance take,
For solemn League and Cov'nant's sake,
Upon the Magus-Moor, in Fife,
Did tak' James Sharpe the apostate's life;
By Dutchman's hands was hacked and shot,
Then drowned in Clyde near this same spot.

THE SEARCH AFTER HAPPINESS

OR, THE QUEST OF SULTAUN SOLIMAUN

The hint of this tale, which was published in 1817, was taken from a novel of Casti, La Camiscia Magica.

O, FOR a glance of that gay Muse's eye
That lightened on Bandello's laughing tale,
And twinkled with a lustre shrewd and sly
When Giam Battista bade her vision hail!—
Yet fear not, ladies, the naïve detail
Given by the natives of that land canorons;
Italian license loves to leap the pale,
We Britons have the fear of shame before us,
And, if not wise in mirth, at least must be decorous.

In the far eastern clime, no great while since,
Lived Sultaun Solimaun, a mighty prince,
Whose eyes, as oft as they performed their round,
Beheld all others fixed upon the ground;
Whose ears received the same unvaried phrase,
'Sultaun! thy vassal hears and he obeys!'
All have their tastes—this may the fancy strike
Of such grave folks as pomp and grandeur like;
For me, I love the honest heart and warm
Of monarch who can amble round his farm,
Or, when the toil of state no more annoys,
In chimney corner seek domestic joys—

I love a prince will bid the bottle pass,
Exchanging with his subjects glance and glass;

In fitting time can, gayest of the gay,
Keep up the jest and mingle in the lay—
Such monarchs best our free-born humors suit,
But despots must be stately, stern, and mute.

This Solimaun Serendib had in sway—
And where's Serendib? may some critic say.—

Good luck, mine honest friend, consult the chart, 30

Scare not my Pegaeus before I start!
If Rennell has it not, you'll find mayhap
The isle laid down in Captain Sindbad's map—

Famed mariner, whose merciless narrations
Drove every friend and kinsman out of patience,

Till, fain to find a guest who thought them shorter,

He deigned to tell them over to a porter—
The last edition see, by Long, and Co.,
Rees, Hurst, and Orme, our fathers in the Row.

Serendib found, deem not my tale a fiction—40

This Sultaun, whether lacking contradiction—

A sort of stimulant which hath its uses
To raise the spirits and reform the juices,
Sovereign specific for all sorts of cures
In my wife's practice and perhaps in yours—

The Sultaun lacking this same wholesome bitter,

Or cordial smooth for prince's palate fitter—
Or if some Mollah had hag-rid his dreams
With Degial, Ginnistan, and such wild themes

Belonging to the Mollah's subtle craft, 50
I wot not—but the Sultaun never laughed,
Scarce ate or drank, and took a melancholy
That scorned all remedy profane or holy;
In his long list of melancholies, mad
Or mazed or dumb, hath Burton none so bad.

Physicians soon arrived, sage, ware, and tried,

As e'er scrawled jargon in a darkened room;

With heedful glance the Sultaun's tongue
they eyed,
Peeped in his bath and God knows where
beside,

And then in solemn accent spoke their
doom, 60

'His majesty is very far from well.'
Then each to work with his specific fell:
The Hakim Ibrahim instant brought
His unguent Mabazzim al Zerdukkaut,
While Roompot, a practitioner more wily,
Relied on his Munaskif al fillfly.
More and yet more in deep array appear,
And some the front assail and some the
rear;

Their remedies to reinforce and vary
Came surgeon eke, and eke apothecary; 70
Till the tired monarch, though of words grown chary,

Yet dropt, to recompense their fruitless
labor,

Some hint about a bowstring or a sabre.
There lacked, I promise you, no longer speeches

To rid the palace of those learned leeches.

Then was the council called — by their advice —

They deemed the matter ticklish all and nice,

And sought to shift it off from their own shoulders —

Tartars and couriers in all speed were
sent,

To call a sort of Eastern Parliament 80
Of feudatory chieftains and freshhold-
ers —

Such have the Persians at this very day,
My gallant Malcolm calls them courouttai; —

I'm not prepared to show in this slight
song

That to Serendib the same forms belong —
E'en let the learned go search, and tell me
if I'm wrong.

The Omrahs, each with hand on scimitar, Gave, like Sempronius, still their voice for
war —

'The sabre of the Sultaun in its sheath Too long has slept nor owned the work of
death; 90

Let the Tambourgi bid his signal rattle, Bang the loud gong and raise the shout of
battle !

This dreary cloud that dims our sovereign's
day

Shall from his kindled bosom flit away,
When the bold Lootie wheels his courser
round

And the armed elephant shall shake the
ground.

Each noble pants to own the glorious summons —

And for the charges — Lo ! your faithful Commons ! 95

The Riots who attended in their places —
Serendib language calls a farmer Riot —

Looked ruefully in one another's faces,
From this oration auguring much dis-
quiet,

Double assessment, forage, and free quarters;

And fearing these as Chinamen the Tartars,
Or as the whiskered vermin fear the mousers,

Each fumbled in the pocket of his trousers.

And next came forth the reverend Convocation,

Bald heads, white beards, and many a turban green, 100

Imaum and Mollah there of every station,
Santon, Fakir, and Calendar were seen.

Their votes were various — some advised a mosque

With fitting revenues should be erected,
With seemly gardens and with gay kiosque,
To recreate a band of priests selected;

Others opined that through the realms a dole

Be made to holy men, whose prayers
might profit

The Sultaun's weal in body and in soul.

But their long-headed chief, the Sheik
Ul-Sofit,

More closely touched the point; — 'Thy studious mood,'

Quoth he, 'O Prince ! hath thickened
all thy blood, 110

And dulled thy brain with labor beyond
measure;

Wherefore relax a space and take thy
pleasure,

And toy with beauty or tell o'er thy treasure;

From all the cares of state, my liege, enlarge thee,

And leave the burden to thy faithful clergy.'

se counsels sage availed not a whit,
and so the patient — as is not uncommon

ere grave physicians lose their time and wit —

resolved to take advice of an old woman;

mother she, a dame who once was beauteous, <sup>130</sup>

still was called so by each subject duteous.

whether Fatima was witch in earnest,
or only made believe, I cannot say —

she professed to cure disease the sternest,

by dint of magic amulet or lay;

when all other skill in vain was shown,
deemed it fitting time to use her own.

empathia magica hath wonders done' —

as did old Fatima bespeak her son — works upon the fibres and the pores, <sup>140</sup>

thus insensibly our health restores, it must help us here. — Thou must

endure

ill, my son, or travel for the cure.

rough land and sea, and get where'er you inmost vesture of a happy man, mean his SHIRT, my son; which, taken

warm

fresh from off his back, shall chase
your harm,

every current of your veins rejoice,
and your dull heart leap light as shepherd-boy's.

that was the counsel from his mother came; — <sup>150</sup>

now not if she had some under-game,
doctors have, who bid their patients roam

live abroad when sure to die at home,
if she thought that, somehow or another,

sen-Regent sounded better than Queen-
Mother;

it, says the Chronicle — who will go look
it —

at such was her advice — the Sultaun took it.

are on board — the Sultaun and his
train,

gilded galley prompt to plough the main.

The old Rais was the first who questioned, 'Whither?' <sup>160</sup>

They paused — 'Arabia,' thought the pensive prince,

'Was called The Happy many ages since —
For Mokha, Rais.' — And they came safely thither.

But not in Araby with all her balm,
Nor where Judea weeps beneath her palm,

Not in rich Egypt, not in Nubian waste,
Could there the step of happiness be traced.

One Copt alone professed to have seen her
smile,

When Bruce his goblet filled at infant
Nile:

She blessed the dauntless traveller as he quaffed, <sup>170</sup>

But vanished from him with the ended draught.

'Enough of turbans,' said the weary King,
'These dolimans of ours are not the thing;

Try we the Giaours, these men of coat and cap, I

Incline to think some of them must be happy;

At least, they have as fair a cause as any can,

They drink good wine and keep no Ramazan.

Then northward, ho!' — The vessel cuts
the sea,

And fair Italia lies upon her lee. —

But fair Italia, she who once unfurled <sup>180</sup>
Her eagle-banners o'er a conquered world,

Long from her throne of domination tum-
bled;

Lay by her quondam vassals sorely hum-
bled,

The Pope himself looked pensive, pale, and lean,

And was not half the man he once had
been.

'While these the priest and those the noble
fleeces,

Our poor old boot,' they said, 'is torn to pieces.

Its tops the vengeful claws of Austria feel,
And the Great Devil is rending toe and heel.

If happiness you seek, to tell you truly, <sup>190</sup>
We think she dwells with one Giovanni

Bulli;

A tramontane, a heretic — the buck,

Poffaredio! still has all the luck;

By land or ocean never strikes his flag —
And then — a perfect walking money-bag.'

Let set our prince to seek John Ball's
abode,
But first seek France—it lay upon the
road.

Monsieur Baboon after much late commo-
tion

Was agitated like a setting ocean,
Quite out of sorts and could not tell what ailed him.

Only the glory of his house had faded him,
Besides, some business in his pocket ailing
Gave indication of a recent injury.

One prince, though suspicion of such things
Is needless.

Through a strong indifference and indolence

He was in that moment he was happy
And innocent, seeing that he was none
Of any.

But when he understood it, he was in a Then exclaimed, "You can say news of None."

The Sultan instructed him with a cross question, —

"You can say me might of me and him."

That words sometimes become your horrors—

The queen seemed of difficult digestion,
The past strongest and present and now
no more.

And found he found some-something strange enough.

Watching his rage into as many pictures
as himself could find into their midst —

His horse's head turned both his and his.

And said he was of course to be drawn — because the horseman after a great name, said John — I do not know him — I do not.

He remembered that you were at two,
and his horse was that noble creature —

At the time of the London battle.

It is a long day's journey — a hundred miles.

For the first time and the first time again,
I have seen the day and the day's journey.

Monks' malice could not but be true.

So William and his wife are shown the
road.

John Ball was in his way went a
march.

Rising of noble lords and noble people
His sugar-loaves and miles about the town
And on his journey beat the horse's name.

His wars were ended and the victory won.
But then I was remembering-day with John

John;

And another touch, I was still the warrior
way.

Never to grumble till he came to pay
And then he always found the money much.

The work was done and the pay was made Yes, grumble as he was at some and many.

That when he came to the end of the line
And put the power to back his great
name.

But John and William were not to be drawn.

Such was the sight when William was
drawn.

And you are John, John answered, and he is — I.

I standing there to see the horses run —

So, again, of course — a Frenchman.

"Signify" or means something in my mind.

Remembered my position and entitled to
much.

Sugar and rice a thing, and rice and milk.

The old customer of my great horse-
drawn.

Signify — "We cannot war and taking
me."

Have not to expect payment for my horse in the war again, but will not pay more to see a horse — the horse —

"But" and John, and then the Sultan
said.

I do not know you came to know me
and —

But, say, you had the same your horse
drawn.

John was the first to see a horse and
drawn.

With the abundance of grain at his
head.

He was the first to see the Sultan and
drawn.

He was the first to see the Sultan and
drawn.

He was the first to see the Sultan and
drawn.

rior, I kiss your hands, so fare you well.
 iss and be d——d,' quoth John, 'and go to hell!'

xt door to John there dwelt his sister Peg, ee a wild lass as ever shook a leg

 en the blithe bagpipe blew — but, soberer now, doucely span her flax and milked her cow.

d whereas erst she was a needy slattern,<sup>370</sup>

r now of wealth or cleanliness a pattern,

t once a month her house was partly swept,

d once a week a plenteous board she kept.

d whereas, eke, the vixen used her claws
 And teeth of yore on slender provocation,

now was grown amenable to laws,
 A quiet soul as any in the nation;

a sole remembrance of her warlike joys
 as in old songs she sang to please her boys.

m Bull, whom in their years of early strife<sup>280</sup>

want to lead a cat-and-doggish life,
 w found the woman, as he said, a neighbor,

so looked to the main chance, declined
 no labor,

ed a long grace and spoke a northern jargon,

d was d——d close in making of a bargain.

Sultaun entered, and he made his leg,

d with decorum curtsied sister Peg — loved a book, and knew a thing or two,

d guessed at once with whom she had to do.

bade him 'Sit into the fire,' and took<sup>290</sup>

r dram, her cake, her kebbuck from the nook;

zed him 'about the news from Eastern parts;

d of her absent bairns, puir Highland hearts!

If peace brought down the price of tea and pepper,

And if the nitmugs were grown ony cheaper; —

Were there nae speerings of our Mungo Park —

Ye'll be the gentleman that wants the sark?

If ye wad buy a web o' auld wife's spinning,

I'll warrant ye it's a weel-wearing linen.'

Then up got Peg and round the house 'gan scuttle<sup>300</sup>

In search of goods her customer to nail,
 Until the Sultaun strained his princely throttle,

And holloed, 'Ma'am, that is not what I ail.

Pray, are you happy, ma'am, in this snug glen?'

'Happy?' said Peg; 'What for d' ye want to ken?

Besides, just think upon this by-gone year,
 Grin wadna pay the yoking of the pleugh.'

'What say you to the present?' — 'Meal's sac dear,

To make their brose my bairns have scarce eneugh.'

'The devil take the shirt,' said Solimaun,<sup>310</sup>

'I think my quest will end as it began. —

Farewell, ma'am; nay, no ceremony, I beg' —

'Ye'll no be for the linen then?' said Peg.

Now, for the land of verdant Erin
 The Sultaun's royal bark is steering,

The Emerald Isle where honest Paddy dwells,

The cousin of John Bull, as story tells.
 For a long space had John, with words of thunder,

Hard looks, and harder knocks, kept Paddy under,

Till the poor lad, like boy that's flogged unduly,<sup>320</sup>

Had gotten somewhat restive and unruly.
 Hard was his lot and lodging, you'll allow,

A wigwam that would hardly serve a sow;
 His landlord, and of middle-men two brace,

Had screwed his rent up to the starving-place;

His garment was a top-coat and an old one,
His meal was a potato and a cold one;
But still for fun or frolic and all that,
In the round world was not the match of Pat.

The Sultaun saw him on a holiday, 330
Which is with Paddy still a jolly day:
When mass is ended, and his load of sins
Confessed, and Mother Church hath from her binns

Dealt forth a bonus of imputed merit,
Then is Pat's time for fancy, whim, and spirit!

To jest, to sing, to caper fair and free,
And dance as light as leaf upon the tree.
'By Mahomet,' said Sultaun Solimaun,
'That ragged fellow is our very man!
Rush in and seize him—do not do him hurt,
But, will he nill he, let me have his shirt.' 340

Shilela their plan was wellnigh after balking—

Much less provocation will set it a-walking—

But the odds that foiled Hercules foiled Paddy Whack;

They seized, and they floored, and they stripped him—Alack!

Up-bubboo! Paddy had not—a shirt to his back!

And the king, disappointed, with sorrow and shame

Went back to Serendib as sad as he came.

LINES

WRITTEN FOR MISS SMITH

Miss Smith, afterward Mrs. Bartley, was an actress who greatly pleased Scott, and he wrote these lines for the night of her benefit at the Edinburgh Theatre in 1817.

WHEN the lone pilgrim views afar
The shrine that is his guiding star,
With awe his footsteps print the road
Which the loved saint of yore has trod.
As near he draws and yet more near,
His dim eye sparkles with a tear;
The Gothic fane's unwonted show,
The choral hymn, the tapers' glow,

Oppress his soul; while they delight
And chasten rapture with affright.
No longer dare he think his toil
Can merit aught his patron's smile;
Too light appears the distant way,
The chilly eve, the sultry day—
All these endured no favor claim,
But murmuring forth the sainted name,
He lays his little offering down,
And only deprecates a frown.

We too who ply the Thespian art
Oft feel such bodings of the heart,
And when our utmost powers are strained
Dare hardly hope your favor gained.
She who from sister climes has sought
The ancient land where Wallace fought—
Land long renowned for arms and arts,
And conquering eyes and dauntless hearts—

She, as the flutterings here avow,
Feels all the pilgrim's terrors now;
Yet sure on Caledonian plain
The stranger never sued in vain.
'T is yours the hospitable task
To give the applause she dare not ask;
And they who bid the pilgrim speed,
The pilgrim's blessing be their meed.

MR. KEMBLE'S FAREWELL ADDRESS

ON TAKING LEAVE OF THE EDINBURGH STAGE

Mr. Kemble recited these lines in the dress of Macbeth, which he had just been acting, March 29, 1817.

As the worn war-horse, at the trumpet's sound,
Erects his mane, and neighs, and paws the ground—

Disdains the ease his generous lord assigns,
And longs to rush on the embattled lines,
So I, your plaudits ringing on mine ear,
Can scarce sustain to think our parting near;
To think my scenic hour forever past,
And that those valued plaudits are my last.
Why should we part, while still some powers remain,

That in your service strive not yet in vain?
Cannot high zeal the strength of youth supply,
And sense of duty fire the fading eye;

wrongs of age remain sub-burning glow of gratitude?
 taper, wearing to its close,
 be in titful lustre glows;
 soon the transient gleam is renewed, and will not last;
 tal, and gratitude can wage ed conflict with the frosts of te poor, remembering what I
 sioner on your applause,
 dregs of your endurance dry,
 alms, the praise I once could mering youth around enquires, man who once could please es?'
 munes compassion's doubtful off from the encumbered not be;—and higher duties between the theatre and the Roman in the Capitol,
 my mantle ere I fall:
 f act in public service flown,
 closing scene, must be my
 , adieu! while yet some well-parts
 cient favorite in your hearts, be forgotten, even when better actors, younger men:
 osoms own this kindly debt mbrance, how shall mine fort!—how oft I hitber came hope, how oft returned with nd your circle this weak hand mortal Shakespeare's magic burst of inspiration came, felt, and you have fanned the treasured, while her reign
 e, must live—and all their
 are yours.

O favored Land! renowned for arts and arins,
 For manly talent, and for female charms,
 Could this full bosom prompt the sinking
 line,
 What fervent benedictions now were thine!
 But my last part is played, my knell is
 rung,
 When e'en your praise falls faltering from
 my tongue;
 And all that you can hear, or I can tell,
 Is— Friends and Patrons, hail, and FARE
 YOU WELL.

THE SUN UPON THE WEIRDLAW
HILLAIR—' Rimhin aluin 'stu mo run '

'It was while struggling with such languor,
 on one lovely evening of this autumn [1817],
 that he composed the following beautiful verses. They mark the very spot of their birth, —namely, the then naked height overhanging
 the northern side of the Cauldsields Loch,
 from which Melrose Abbey to the eastward, and the hills of Ettrick and Yarrow to the west, are now visible over a wide range of rich woodland,—all the work of the poet's hand.'
Lockhart's Life, Chapter xxxix.

THE sun upon the Weirdlaw Hill
 In Ettrick's vale is sinking sweet;
 The westland wind is hush and still,
 The lake lies sleeping at my feet.
 Yet not the landscape to mine eye
 Bears those bright hues that once it
 bore,
 Though evening with her richest dye
 Flames o'er the hills of Ettrick's shore.

With listless look along the plain
 I see Tweed's silver current glide,
 And coldly mark the holy fane
 Of Melrose rise in ruined pride.
 The quiet lake, the balmy air,
 The hill, the stream, the tower, the
 tree—
 Are they still such as once they were,
 Or is the dreary change in me?

Alas! the warped and broken board,
 How can it bear the painter's dye?
 The harp of strained and tuneless chord,
 How to the minstrel's skill reply?

To aching eyes each landscape lowers,
To feverish pulse each gale blows chill;
And Araby's or Eden's bowers
Were barren as this moorland hill.

SONG FROM ROB ROY

Published in 1817.

TO THE MEMORY OF EDWARD THE BLACK PRINCE

O FOR the voice of that wild horn,
On Fontarabian echoes borne,
The dying hero's call,
That told imperial Charlemagne,
How Paynim sons of swarthy Spain
Had wrought his champion's fall.

Sad over earth and ocean sounding,
And England's distant cliffs astounding,
Such are the notes should say
How Britain's hope, and France's fear,
Victor of Cressay and Poitier,
In Bourdeaux dying lay.

'Raise my faint head, my squires,' he said,
'And let the casement be displayed,
That I may see once more
The splendor of the setting sun
Gleam on thy mirror'd wave, Garonne,
And Blaye's empurpled shore.'

'Like me, he sinks to Glory's sleep,
His fall the dews of evening steep,
As if in sorrow shed.
So soft shall fall the trickling tear,
When England's maids and matrons hear
Of their Black Edward dead.

'And though my sun of glory set,
Nor France nor England shall forget
The terror of my name;
And oft shall Britain's heroes rise,
New planets in these southern skies,
Through clouds of blood and flame.'

THE MONKS OF BANGOR'S MARCH

AIR — 'Yndaith Mionge'

Written for Mr. George Thomson's Welsh Melodies, in 1817, and provided by Scott with this note. — 'Ethelfrid, or Olfrid, King of Northumberland, having besieged Chester

813, and Brockmuel, a British Prince, adding to relieve it, the religious of the neighing Monastery of Bangor marched in proces-to pray for the success of their country.
But the British being totally defeated, heathen victor put the monks to the sword, destroyed their monastery. The tune to w
these verses are adapted is called the Ma
March, and is supposed to have been pla at their ill-omened procession.'

WHEN the heathen trumpet's clang
Round beleaguered Chester rang,
Veiled nun and friar gray
Marched from Bangor's fair Abbaye;
High their holy anthem sounds,
Cestria's vale the hymn rebounds,
Floating down the sylvan Dee,
O miserere, Domine!

On the long procession goes,
Glory round their crosses glows,
And the Virgin-mother mild
In their peaceful banner smiled;
Who could think such saintly band
Doomed to feel unhallowed hand?
Such was the Divine decree,
O miserere, Domine!

Bands that masses only sung,
Hauds that censers only swung,
Met the northern bow and bill,
Heard the war-cry wild and shrill:
Woe to Brockmael's feeble hand,
Woe to Olfrid's bloody brand,
Woe to Saxon cruelty,
O miserere, Domine!

Weltering amid warriors slain,
Spurned by steeds with bloody mane,
Slaughtered down by heathen blade,
Bangor's peaceful monks are laid:
Word of parting rest unspoke,
Mass unsung and bread unbroke;
For their souls for charity,
Sing, O miserere, Domine!

Bangor! o'er the murder wail!
Long thy ruins told the tale,
Shattered towers and broken arch
Long recalled the woful march:
On thy shrine no tapers burn,
Never shall thy priests return;
The pilgrim sighs and sings for thee,
O miserere, Domine!

DUE TO 'THE APPEAL'

if, a tragedy by John Galt, was in Edinburgh and Mrs. Siddons spoke February 18, 1818.

— or else old Æsop lied —
ed into a fair and blooming mouse upon her marriage-day, spouse and seized upon her my bridegroom lawyer, as you oor me and pounced upon papa.

om Hymen's mystic knot made round my sire's the literal fruits of our dramatic labor ew Jail became our next-door
labor.

as are changed; for in your F's age
were the patrons of the stage;
gh advanced by future fate, a the bench [points to the Pit]
first received their weight.
regal sage 't was ours to see gh unwigged and plead without astounding each poor mimic

awyers comes the law herself;
neighbor, on our right she
is,

her towers and excavates her

s left she agitates the town tempestuous question, Up or la and Charybdis thus stand we,

end and law's uncertainty.

who lives at Rome the Pope flatter,

d lawsuits are no jesting matter.
farewell! We wait with seri-
we

applause or censure gives the r humble efforts may assure ye,

on Court and Counsel, Judge Jury.

MACKRIMMON'S LAMENT

AIR — 'Cha till mi tuille'

This Lament was contributed by Scott to Albyn's Anthology in 1818, with this preface:
"Mackrimmon, hereditary piper to the Laird of Macleod, is said to have composed this Lament when the Clan was about to depart upon a distant and dangerous expedition. The Minstrel was impressed with a belief, which the event verified, that he was to be slain in the approaching feud; and hence the Gaelic words,
"Cha till mi tuille; ged thillis Macleod, cha till Mackrimmon," "I shall never return; although Macleod returns, yet Mackrimmon shall never return!" The piece is but too well known, from its being the strain with which the emigrants from the West Highlands and Isles usually take leave of their native
shore."

MACLEOD's wizard flag from the gray
castle sallies,

The rowers are seated, unmoored are the galleys;

Gleam war-axe and broadsword, clang target and quiver,

As Mackrimmon sings, 'Farewell to Dunvegan forever!

Farewell to each cliff on which breakers
are foaming;

Farewell, each dark glen in which red-deer
are roaming;

Farewell, lonely Skye, to lake, mountain,
and river;

Macleod may return, but Mackrimmon shall never!

'Farewell the bright clouds that on Quil-lan are sleeping;

Farewell the bright eyes in the Dun that are weeping;

To each minstrel delusion, farewell! — and
forever —

Mackrimmon departs, to return to you never!

The Banshee's wild voice sings the death-
dirge before me,

The pall of the dead for a mantle hangs
o'er me;

But my heart shall not flag and my nerves
shall not shiver,

Though devoted I go — to return again
never!

'Too oft shall the notes of Mackrimmon's bewailing
Be heard when the Gael on their exile are sailing;
Dear land ! to the shores whence unwilling we sever
Return — return — return shall we never !
Cha till, cha till, cha till sin tuille,
Cha till, cha till, cha till sin tuille,
Cha till, cha till, cha till sin tuille,
Gea thillis Macleod, cha till Mackrimmon !'

DONALD CAIRD'S COME AGAIN

AIR — " Malcolm Caird's come again. "

This also was contributed to Albyn's Anthology in 1818.

CHORUS

Donald Caird's come again !
Donald Caird's come again !
Tell the news in brugh and glen,
Donald Caird's come again !

DONALD CAIRD can lift and sing,
Blithely dance the Hieland fling.
Drink till the gudeman be blind,
Fleece till the gudewife be kind;
Hoop a leglin, clout a pan,
Or crack a pow wi' ony man;
Tell the news in brugh and glen,
Donald Caird's come again.
Donald Caird's come again !
Donald Caird's come again !
Tell the news in brugh and glen,
Donald Caird's come again.

Donald Caird can wire a maukin,
Kens the wiles o' dun-deer staukin',
Leisters kipper, makes a shift
To shoot a muir-fowl in the drift;
Water-bailiffs, rangers, keepers,
He can wauk when they are sleepers;
Not for bountith or reward
Dare ye mell wi' Donald Caird.
Donald Caird's come again !
Donald Caird's come again !
Gar the bag-pipes hum amain,
Donald Caird's come again.

Donald Caird can drink a gill
Fast as hostler-wife can fill;
Ilka ane that sella gude liquor
Kens how Donald bends a bicker;
When he's fou he's stout and saucy,

Keeps the cantle o' the cawsey;
Hieland chief and Lawland laird
Maun gie room to Donald Caird
Donald Caird's come again !
Donald Caird's come again
Tell the news in brugh and
Donald Caird's come again.

Steek the amrie, lock the kist,
Else some gear may weel be mist
Donald Caird finds orra things
Where Allan Gregor fand the tin
Dunts of kebbuck, tait's o' woo,
Whiles a hen and whiles a sow,
Webs or duds frae hedge or yard
'Ware the wuddie, Donald Caird
Donald Caird's come again !
Donald Caird's come again !
Dinna let the Shirra ken
Donald Caird's come again.

On Donald Caird the doom was Craig to tether, legs to airn;
But Donald Caird wi' mickle star
Caught the gift to cheat the wud
Rings of airn, and bolts of steel,
Fell like ice frae hand and heel !
Watch the sheep in fauld and gle
Donald Caird's come again !
Donald Caird's come again !
Donald Caird's come again !
Dinna let the Justice ken
Donald Caird's come again.

MADGE WILDFIRE'S SON

From The Heart of Mid-Lothian, pt
in 1818.

WHEN the gledd's in the blue clond
The lavrock lies still;
When the hound's in the green-woo
The hind keeps the hill.

'O sleep ye sound, Sir James,' she
'When ye suld rise and ride ?
There's twenty men, wi' bow and b
Are seeking where ye hide.'

I glance like the wildfire thro' court
town;
I'm seen on the causeway — I'm the down;

lightning that flashes so bright and so
free,
reely so blithe or so bonny as me.

did ye wi' the bridal ring — bridal ring — bridal ring?
did ye wi' your wedding ring, ye little cutty quean, O?
it till a sodger, a sodger, a sodger,
it till a sodger, an auld true love o'
mine, O.

even, good fair moon, good even to thee;
see, dear moon, now show to me arm and the features, the speech and degree,
a man that true lover of mine shall
be.

is the bonny butcher lad,
That wears the sleeves of blue;
he sells the flesh on Saturday,
On Friday that he slew.

's a bloodhound ranging Tinwald
Wood,
re's harness glancing sheen;
's a maiden sits on Tinwald brae,
she sings loud between.

my curth on my foot, and my shoe
on my hand,
see like the wildfire through brugh
and through land.

in the bonnie cells of Bedlam,
Ere I was aye and twenty,
had hempen bracelets strong,
and merry whips, ding-dong,
And prayer and fasting plenty.

Madge of the country, I'm Madge of the town,
I'm Madge of the lad I am blithest to own, —

The Lady of Beever in diamonds may
shine,
But has not a heart half so lightsome as
mine.

I am Queen of the Wake, and I'm Lady of May,
And I lead the blithe ring round the May-pole to-day;
The wild-fire that flashes so fair and so
free
Was never so bright, or so bonnie as me.

Our work is over — over now,
The goodman wipes his weary brow,
The last long wain wends slow away,
And we are free to sport and play.

The night comes on when sets the sun,
And labor ends when day is done.
When Autumn's gone, and Winter's come,
We hold our jovial harvest-home.

When the fight of grace is fought, —
When the marriage vest is wrought, —
When Faith has chased cold Doubt away —
And Hope but sickens at delay, —
When Charity, imprisoned here,
Longs for a more expanded sphere;
Doff thy robes of sin and clay;
Christian, rise, and come away.

Cauld is my bed, Lord Archibald,
And sad my sleep of sorrow;
But thine sall be as sad and cauld,
My fause true love! to-morrow.

And weep ye not, my maidens free,
Though death your mistress borrow;
For he for whom I die to-day,
Shall die for me to-morrow.

Proud Maisie is in the wood,
Walking so early;
Sweet Robin sits on the bush,
Singing so rarely.

'Tell me, thou bonny bird,
When shall I marry me?' —

'When six braw gentlemen
Kirkward shall carry ye.'

'Who makes the bridal bed,
Birdie, say truly?'—

'The gray-headed sexton
That doles the grave duly.

'The glow-worm o'er grave and stone
Shall light thee steady.
The owl from the steeple sing,
"Welcome, proud lady."'

THE BATTLE OF SEMPACH

These verses, which appeared in Blackwood for February, 1818, are, says Scott, 'a literal translation of an ancient Swiss ballad upon the Battle of Sempach, fought 9th July, 1386, being the victory by which the Swiss Cantons established their independence; the author, Albert Tebudi, denominated the Souter, from his profession of a shoemaker. He was a citizen of Lucerne, esteemed highly among his countrymen, both for his powers as a Meister-Singer, or minstrel, and his courage as a soldier; so that he might share the praise conferred by Collins on Æschylus, that,—

"Not alone he nursed the poet's flame,
But reached from Virtue's hand the patriot steel."'

'T WAS when among our linden-trees
The bees had housed in swarms—
And gray-haired peasants say that these Betoken foreign arms—

Then looked we down to Willisow,
The land was all in flame;
We knew the Archduke Leopold
With all his army came.

The Austrian nobles made their vow,
So hot their heart and bold,
'On Switzer carles we'll trample now,
And slay both young and old.'

With clarion loud and banner proud,
From Zurich on the lake,
In martial pomp and fair array
Their onward march they make.

'Now list, ye lowland nobles all—
Ye seek the mountain-strand,
Nor wot ye what shall be your lot
In such a dangerous land.

'I rede ye, shrive ye of your sins
Before ye farther go;
A skirmish in Helvetian hills
May send your souls to woe.'

'But where now shall we find a priest
Our shrift that he may hear?'—
'The Switzer priest has ta'en the field,
He deals a penance drear.

'Right heavily upon your head
He'll lay his band of steel,
And with his trusty partisan
Your absolution deal.'

'T was on a Monday morning then,
The corn was steeped in dew,
And merry maids had sickles ta'en,
When the host to Sempach drew.

The stalwart men of fair Lucerne,
Together have they joined;
The pith and core of manhood stern,
Was none cast looks behind.

It was the Lord of Hare-castle,
And to the Duke he said,
'Yon little band of brethren true
Will meet us undismayed.'—

'O Hare-castle, thou heart of hare!'
Fierce Oxenstern replied.—
'Shalt see then how the game will fare,'
The taunted knight replied.

There was lacing then of helmets bright,
And closing ranks amain;
The peaks they hewed from their bootpoints
Might well-nigh load a wain.

And thus they to each other said,
'Yon handful down to hew
Will be no boastful tale to tell,
The peasants are so few.'

The gallant Swiss Confederates there,
They prayed to God aloud,
And he displayed his rainbow fair
Against a swarthy cloud.

Then heart and pulse throbb'd more and more
With courage firm and high,
And down the good Confederates bore
On the Austrian chivalry.

ian Lion 'gan to growl
his mane and tail,
his shaft and crossbow bolt hustling forth like hail.

And halbert mingled there,
there was nothing sweet;
of many a stately tree
felled at their feet. 70

Swiss men-at-arms stood fast,
their spears they laid;
the gallant Winkelreid,
his comrades said —

A virtuous wife at home,
and infant son;
on to my country's care, —
I shall soon be won. 80

They lay their spears right thick
in full firm array,
no charge their order break
like my brethren way.

Against the Austrian band,
his rate career,
his body, breast, and hand,
with each hostile spear.

It splintered on his crest,
felled in his side;
his serried files he pressed — and their ranks and died. 90

His self-devoted deed felled the Lion's mood,
our Forest Cantons freed
at random by his blood.

For his charge had made a lane
his comrades burst,
his sword and axe and partisan,
his stab and thrust. 100

The Lion 'gan to whine
felled ground again,
his Bull he bent his brows,
felled his sides again.

His banner, spear, and shield felled in the flight,
his vaults at Kemp's-field
felled an Austrian knight.

It was the Archduke Leopold,
So lordly would he ride, 110
But he came against the Swiss churls,
And they slew him in his pride.

The heifer said unto the bull,
'And shall I not complain?'
There came a foreign nobleman
To milk me on the plain.

'One thrust of thine outrageous horn
Has galled the knight so sore
That to the churchyard he is borne,
To range our glens no more.' 120

An Austrian noble left the stour,
And fast the flight 'gan take;
And he arrived in luckless hour
At Sempach on the lake.

He and his squire a fisher called —
His name was Hans von Rot —
'For love or meed or charity,
Receive us in thy boat!' 130

Their anxious call the fisher heard,
And, glad the meed to win,
His shallop to the shore he steered
And took the flyers in. 140

And while against the tide and wind
Hans stoutly rowed his way,
The noble to his follower signed
He should the boatman slay.

The fisher's back was to them turned,
The squire his dagger drew,
Hans saw his shadow in the lake,
The boat he overthrew. 150

He whelmed the boat, and as they strove
He stunned them with his oar,
'Now, drunk ye deep, my gentle sirs,
You'll ne'er stab boatman more.' 160

'Two gilded fishes in the lake
This morning have I caught.
Their silver scales may much avail,
Their carrion flesh is sought.' 170

It was a messenger of woe
Has sought the Austrian laud 180
'Ah! gracious lady, and news'
My lord lies on the strand

'At Saragosa, on the battle-field,
His bloody corpse lies there'—
'Ah, generous soul!' the lady cried,
'What tidings of despair!'

Now would you know the minstrel wight
Who sings of strife so stern,
Altho' the hunter in his light,
A burgher of Lucerne.

100

A merry man was he, I wot,
The night he made the lay,
Returning from the bloody spot
Where God had judged the day.

THE NOBLE MORINGER

AN ANCIENT BALLAD

Lockhart, writing at the end of April, 1849, when Scott was recovering from an alarming illness, reports that Scott's words to him

"One day there was," he said, "when I certainly began to have great doubts whether the minstrel was not getting at my mind—and I tell you how I tried to reassure myself on that score. I was quite unfit for anything like original composition, but I thought if I could turn an old German ballad I had been reading into decent rhymes, I might disguise my word apprehensions—and you shall see what came of the experiment." He then desired his daughter Sophia to fetch the MS. of 'The Noble Moringer,' as it had been taken down from his diversion book by her and partly by Mr. Lockhart, during one long and painful day when he lay in bed.

O, say, you hear a knightly tale of old
Rabanus day,
It was the noble Moringer in wellock bed
he lay,
He halsed and blessed his dearest dame
that was as sweet as May,
And said, 'Now lady of my heart, attend
the words I say

'(T is I have send a pilgrimager unto a distant chene,
And I must seek Saint Thomas-lani and leave the land this morn;
How shall thou spend the while in state
when thou art plene the fa
That thou for my return wilt wait seven,
twelvemonth and a day

Then out and spoke that lady bright, sore troubled in her cheer,
'Now tell me true, thou noble knight,
what order takest thou here;
And who shall lead thy vassal band and hold thy lordly sway,
And be thy lady's guardian true when thou art far away?'

Out spoke the noble Moringer, 'Of that have thou no care,
There's many a valiant gentleman of me
holds living fair;
The trustiest shall rule my land, my vas-
sals, and my state,
And be a guardian tried and true to thee,
my lovely mate.

'As Christian-man, I needs must keep the vow which I have plight,
When I am far in foreign land, remember
thy true knight;
And cease, my dearest dame, to grieve, for vain were sorrow now.
But grant thy Moringer his leave, since
God hath heard his vow.'

It was the noble Moringer from bed he made him bound,
And met him there his chamberlain with crown and with gown
He flung the mantle at his back, 'I was furred with miniver,
He dipped his hand in water cold and bathed his forehead fair

'Now hear,' he said, 'Sir Chamberlain, true vassal art thou mine,
And and the trust that I repose in thee
proves worth of mine,
For seven years shall thou rule my towers
and lead my vassal train,
And pledge thee for my lady's faith till I return again.'

The chamberlain was blunt and true, and straight he said,
'Abide, my lord, and rule your own, and take the rest from me
That woman's faith's a brittle trust—
Seven twelvemonths' date: thou
say
'(T pledges me for no lady's faith beyond
the seven: full day

The noble baron turned him round, his heart was full of care,
His gallant esquire stood him nigh, he was Marstetten's heir,
To whom he spoke right anxiously, 'Thou trusty squire to me,
Wilt thou receive this weighty trust when I am o'er the sea ?

'To watch and ward my castle strong, and to protect my land,
And to the hunting or the host to lead my vassal band;
And pledge thee for my lady's faith till
seven long years are gone,
And guard her as Our Lady dear was guarded by Saint John.' 40

Marstetten's heir was kind and true, but fiery, hot, and young,
And readily he answer made with too presumptuous tongue:
'My noble lord, cast care away and on
your journey wend,
And trust this charge to me until your pilgrimage have end.

'Rely upon my plighted faith, which shall be truly tried,
To guard your lands, and ward your towers, and with your vassals ride;
And for your lovely lady's faith, so virtuous and so dear,
I'll gage my head it knows no change, be absent thirty year.'

The noble Moringer took cheer when thus
he heard him speak,
And doubt forsook his troubled brow and sorrow left his cheek; 50
A long adieu he bids to all — hoists top-sails and away,
And wanders in Saint Thomas-land seven twelvemonths and a day.

It was the noble Moringer within an orchard slept,
When on the baron's slumbering sense a boding vision crept;
And whispered in his ear a voice, 'T is time, Sir Knight, to wake,
Thy lady and thy heritage another master take.

'Thy tower another banner knows, thy steeds another rein,
And stoop them to another's will thy gallant vassal train;
And she, the lady of thy love, so faithful
once and fair,
This night within thy fathers' hall she weds Marstetten's heir.' 60

It is the noble Moringer starts up and tears his beard,
'O, would that I had ne'er been born !
what tidings have I heard !
To lose my lordship and my lands the less would be my care,
But, God ! that e'er a squire untrue should wed my lady fair.

'O good Saint Thomas, hear,' he prayed,
'my patron saint art thou,
A traitor robs me of my land even while
I pay my vow !
My wife he brings to infamy that was so pure of name,
And I am far in foreign land and must endure the shame.'

It was the good Saint Thomas then who heard his pilgrim's prayer,
And sent a sleep so deep and dead that it o'erpowered his care; 70
He waked in fair Bohemian land outstretched beside a rill,
High on the right a castle stood, low on the left a mill.

The Moringer he started up as one from spell unbound,
And dizzy with surprise and joy gazed wildly all around;
'I know my fathers' ancient towers, the mill, the stream I know, Now blessed be my patron saint who cheered his pilgrim's woe !'

He leant upon his pilgrim staff and to the mill he drew,
So altered was his goodly form that none
their master knew;
The baron to the miller said, 'Good friend,
for charity,
Tell a poor palmer in your land what tidings may there be ?' 80

The miller answered him again, 'He knew of little news,
Save that the lady of the land did a new bridegroom choose;
Her husband died in distant land, such is the constant word,
His death sits heavy on our souls, he was a worthy lord.

'Of him I held the little mill which wins
me living free,
God rest the baron in his grave, he still was kind to me !
And when Saint Martin's tide comes round
and millers take their toll,
The priest that prays for Moringer shall have both cope and stole.'

It was the noble Moringer to climb the hill began,
And stood before the bolted gate a woe and weary man;
'Now help me, every saint in heaven that can compassion take,
To gain the entrance of my hall this woful match to break.'

His very knock it sounded sad, his call was sad and slow,
For heart and head, and voice and hand,
were heavy all with woe;
And to the warder thus he spoke: 'Friend,
to thy lady say,
A pilgrim from Saint Thomas-land craves harbor for a day.

'I've wandered many a weary step, my strength is well-nigh done,
And if she turn me from her gate I'll see
no morrow's sun;
I pray, for sweet Saint Thomas' sake, a pilgrim's bed and dole,
And for the sake of Moringer's, her once-loved husband's soul.'

It was the stalwart warder then he came his dame before,
'A pilgrim, worn and travel-toiled, stands at the castle-door;
And prays, for sweet Saint Thomas' sake,
for harbor and for dole,
And for the sake of Moringer, thy noble husband's soul.'

The lady's gentle heart was moved: 'Do up
the gate,' she said,
'And bid the wanderer welcome be to banquet and to bed;
And since he names my husband's name,
so that he lists to stay,
These towers shall be his harborage a twelvemonth and a day.'

It was the stalwart warder then undid the portal broad,
It was the noble Moringer that o'er the threshold strode;
'And have thou thanks, kind Heaven,' he said, 'though from a man of sin,
That the true lord stands here once more his castle-gate within.'

Then up the halls paced Moringer, his step was sad and slow;
It sat full heavy on his heart none seemed their lord to know;
He sat him on a lowly bench, oppressed
with woe and wrong,
Short space he sat, but ne'er to him seemed little space so long.

Now spent was day and feasting o'er, and come was evening hour,
The time was nigh when new-made brides
retire to nuptial bower;
'Our castle's wont,' a bridesman said, 'hath been both firm and long
No guest to harbor in our halls till he shall chant a song.'

Then spoke the youthful bridegroom there
as he sat by the bride,
'My merry minstrel folk,' quoth he, 'lay
shalm and harp aside;
Our pilgrim guest must sing a lay, the castle's rule to hold,
And well his guerdon will I pay with garment and with gold.'

'Chill flows the lay of frozen age,' 't was thus the pilgrim sung,
'Nor golden meed nor garment gay unlocks
his heavy tongue;
Once did I sit, thou bridegroom gay, at board as rich as thine,
And by my side as fair a bride with all her charms was mine.

'But time traced furrows on my face and I grew silver-haired,
For locks of brown and cheeks of youth
she left this brow and beard; 130
Once rich, but now a palmer poor, I tread
life's latest stage,
And mingle with your bridal mirth the lay of frozen age.'

It was the noble lady there this woful lay that hears,
And for the aged pilgrim's grief her eye
was dimmed with tears;
She bade her gallant cupbearer a golden beaker take,
And bear it to the palmer poor to quaff it
for her sake.

It was the noble Moringer that dropped amid the wine
A bridal ring of burning gold so costly and so fine:
Now listen, gentles, to my song, it tells you
but the sooth,
'T was with that very ring of gold he pledged his bridal truth. 140

Then to the cupbearer he said, 'Do me
one kindly deed,
And should my better days return, full rich
shall be thy meed;
Bear back the golden cup again to yonder
bride so gay,
And crave her of her courtesy to pledge
the palmer gray.'

The cupbearer was courtly bred nor was the boon denied,
The golden cup he took again and bore it to the bride;
'Lady,' he said, 'your reverend guest sends this, and bids me pray
That, in thy noble courtesy, thou pledge
the palmer gray.'

The ring bath caught the lady's eye, she views it close and near,
Then might you hear her shriek aloud,
'The Moringer is here!' 150
Then might you see her start from seat
while tears in torrents fell,
But whether 't was for joy or woe the ladies best can tell.

But loud she uttered thanks to Heaven and every saintly power
That had returned the Moringer before the midnight hour;
And loud she uttered vow on vow that never was there bride
That had like her preserved her troth or been so sorely tried.

'Yes, here I claim the praise,' she said, 'to constant matrons due,
Who keep the troth that they have plight
so steadfastly and true;
For count the term howe'er you will, so that you count aright,
Seven twelvemonths and a day are out when bells toll twelve to-night.' 160

It was Marstetten then rose up, his falchion
there he drew,
He kneeled before the Moringer and down
his weapon threw;
'My oath and knightly faith are broke,'
these were the words he said,
'Then take, my liege, thy vassal's sword,
and take thy vassal's head.'

The noble Moringer he smiled, and then aloud did say,
'He gathers wisdom that hath roamed
seven twelvemonths and a day;
My daughter now hath fifteen years, fame speaks her sweet and fair.
I give her for the bride you lose and name
her for my heir.

'The young bridegroom hath youthful bride, the old bridegroom the old, Whose faith was kept till term and tide so punctually were told; 170
But blessings on the warder kind that oped
my castle gate,
For had I come at morrow tide I came a day too late.'

EPITAPH ON MRS. ERSKINE

Mrs. Erskine was the wife of Scott's friend,
William Erskine, afterward Lord Kinnedder.
She died in September, 1810, and the epitaph is on the stone over her grave at Saline, in the county of Fife.

PLAIN as her native dignity of mind,
Arise the tomb of her we have resigned;

Untlawed and stainless be the marble scroll,
 Emblem of lovely form and candid soul. —
 But, O, what symbol may avail to tell
 The kindness, wit, and sense we loved so
 well !

What sculpture show the broken ties of life,
 Here buried with the parent, friend, and
 wife !

Or on the tablet stamp each title dear
 By which thine urn, EURHEMIA, claims the tear !

Yet taught by thy meek sufferance to assume

Patience in anguish, hope beyond the tomb,
 Resigned, though sad, this votive verse
 shall flow,

And brief, alas ! as thy brief span below.

SONGS FROM THE BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR

I

'LOOK NOT THOU ON BEAUTY'S CHARM-
 ING'

From Chapter iii. 'The silver tones of Lucy
 Ashton's voice mingled with the accompaniment in an ancient air, to which some one had adapted the following words:—

Look not thou on beauty's charming;
 Sit thou still when kings are arming;
 Taste not when the wine-cup glistens;
 Speak not when the people listens;
 Stop thine ear against the singer;
 From the red gold keep thy finger;
 Vacant heart and hand and eye,
 Easy live and quiet die.

II

'THE MONK MUST ARISE WHEN THE
 MATINS RING'

From Chapter iii. 'And humming his rustic roundelay, the yeoman went on his road, the sound of his rough voice gradually dying away
 as the distance betwixt them increased.'

THE monk must arise when the matins ring,
 The abbot may sleep to their chime;
 But the yeoman must start when the bugles
 sing,

'T is time, my hearts, 't is time.

There's a bucks and rae on Billhope braes,
 There's a herd on Shortwood Shaw;
 But a lily-white doe in the garden goes,
 She's fairly worth them a'.

III

'WHEN THE LAST LAIRD OF RAVENS-
 WOOD TO RAVENSWOOD SHALL RIDE'

From Chapter xviii. 'With a quivering voice, and a cheek pale with apprehension, Caleb faltered out the following lines:—

WHEN the last Laird of Ravenswood to Ravenswood shall ride,
 And woo a dead maiden to be his bride,
 He shall stable his steed in the Kelpie's
 flow,
 And his name shall be lost for evermoe !

SONGS FROM THE LEGEND OF MONTROSE

I

ANCIENT GAELIC MELODY

BIRDS of omen dark and foul,
 Night-crow, raven, bat, and owl,
 Leave the sick man to his dream—
 All night long he heard you scream.
 Haste to cave and ruined tower,
 Ivy tod or dangled bower,
 There to wink and mop, for, hark !
 In the mid air sings the lark.

Hie to moorish gills and rocks,
 Prowling wolf and wily fox, —
 Hie ye fast, nor turn your view,
 Though the lamb bleats to the ewe.
 Couch your trains and speed your flight,
 Safety parts with parting night;
 And on distant echo borne,
 Comes the hunter's early horn.

The moon's wan crescent scarcely gleams,
 Ghost-like she fades in morning beams;
 Hie hence, each peevish imp and fay
 That scare the pilgrim on his way. —
 Quench, kelpy ! quench, in bog and fen,
 Thy torch that cheats benighted men;
 Thy dance is o'er, thy reign is done,
 For Benyiegio hath seen the sun.

that, sinful, dark, and saive mind in sleep, umberer's soul away,

from the brow of day.
blasted visage grim
se, unnerves the limb,
lfrey and begone !
face the godlike sun.

II

ORPHAN MAID

-cloud drifts away,
n-beam wan
he castle gray,
nes Lady Anne.

e oak was set,
feet, were bare;
d not melted yet
r hair.

said, 'by all the ties
mother know,
r knew these joys, —
an's woe.'

n orphan's state
l to bear;
lowed mother's fate,
oth lord and heir.

e rolling year has sped
nn vengeance wild
lan's chief I fled,
whelmed my child.'

he year its course has maid replied;

Saint Bridget's morn
lampaie side.

nt no scaly spoil;
-nigh dead,
eared in want and toil,
n her bread.'

l the lady kissed,
looks you bear;
l her morn be blessed !
low's heir.'

They 've robed that maid, so poor and
pale,
In silk and sandals rare;
And pearls, for drops of frozen hail,
Are glistening in her hair.

VERSES FROM IVANHOE

Published in 1810.

I

THE CRUSADER'S RETURN

From Chapter xvii.

HIGH deeds achieved of knightly fame,
From Palestine the champion came;
The cross upon his shoulders borne,
Battle and blast had dimmed and torn.
Each dint upon his battered shield
Was token of a foughten field;
And thus, beneath his lady's bower,
He sung, as fell the twilight hour:

'Joy to the fair ! — thy knight behold,
Returned from yonder land of gold;
No wealth he brings, nor wealth can
need,

Save his good arms and battle-steed;
His spurs to dash against a foe,
His lance and sword to lay him low;
Such all the trophies of his toil
Such — and the hope of Tekla's smile !

'Joy to the fair ! whose constant knight
Her favor fired to feats of might !
Unnoted shall she not remain

Where meet the bright and noble train;
Minstrel shall sing, and herald tell —
"Mark yonder maid of beauty well,
"T is she for whose bright eyes was won
The listed field at Ascalon !

"Note well her smile ! — it edged the
blade

Which fifty wives to widows made,
When, vain his strength and Mahound's
spell,

Iconium's turban'd Soldan fell.
See'st thou her locks, whose sunny glow
Half shows, half shades, her neck of snow ?
Twines not of them one golden thread,
But for its sake a Paynim bled."

'Joy to the fair! — my name unknown,
Each deed, and all its praise, thine own;
Then, oh! unbar this churlish gate,
The night-dew falls, the hour is late.
Lured to Syria's glowing breath,
I feel the north breeze chill as death;
Let grateful love quell maiden shame,
And grant him bliss who brings thee fame.'

II

THE BAREFOOTED FRIAR

From Chapter xvii.

I'd give thee, good fellow, a twelvemonth or twain
To search Europe through from Byzantium
to Spain;
But ne'er shall you find, should you search
till you tire,
So happy a man as the Barefooted Friar.

Your knight for his lady pricks forth in career,
And is brought home at even-song pricked
through with a spear;
I confess him in haste — for his lady desires
No comfort on earth save the Barefooted
Friar's.

Your monarch! — Pshaw! many a prince has been known
To barter his robes for our cowl and our gown,
But which of us e'er felt the idle desire
To exchange for a crown the gray hood of a friar?

The Friar has walked out, and where'er he has gone
The land and its fatness is marked for his
own;
He can roam where he lists, he can stop
where he tires,
For every man's house is the Barefooted
Friar's.

He's expected at noon, and no wight till he comes
May profane the great chair or the porridge of plums:

For the best of the cheer, and the seat by the fire,
Is the undenied right of the Barefooted
Friar.

He's expected at night, and the pasty's made hot,
They broach the brown ale and they fill the black pot;
And the good-wife would wish the goodman in the mire,
Ere he lacked a soft pillow, the Barefooted
Friar.

Long flourish the sandal, the cord, and the cope,
The dread of the devil and trust of the Pope!
For to gather life's roses, unscathed by the briar,
Is granted alone to the Barefooted Friar.

III

'NORMAN SAW ON ENGLISH OAK'

From Chapter xxvii.

NORMAN saw on English oak,
On English neck a Norman yoke;
Norman spoon in English dish,
And England ruled as Normans wish;
Blithe world in England never will be more,
Till England's rid of all the four.

IV

WAR-SONG

From Chapter xxxi. 'The fire was spreading rapidly through all parts of the castle, when Ulrica, who had first kindled it, appeared on a turret, in the guise of one of the ancient furies, yelling forth a war-song, such as was of yore chanted on the field of battle by the scolds of the yet heathen Saxons. Her long dishevelled gray hair flew back from her uncovered head, the inebriating delight of gratified vengeance contended in her eyes with the fire of insanity, and she brandished the distaff which she held in her hand, as if she had been one of the Fatal Sisters, who spin and abridge the thread of human life. Tradition has preserved some wild strophes of the barbarous hymn which she rildly amid that scene of fire and 1

e bright steel,
e White Dragon !
e torch,
of Hengist !
glimmers not for the carving of
a banquet,
broad, and sharply pointed;
goeth not to the bridal chamber,
and glitters blue with sulphur.
steel, the raven croaks !
torch, Zernebock is yelling !
steel, sons of the Dragon !
a torch, daughter of Hengist !

2 e clouds are low over the thane's
tle;
e screams — he rides on their som.
ot, gray rider of the sable cloud,
uet is prepared !
ens of Valhalla look forth,
of Hengist will send them guests.
ur black tresses, maidens of Val-lla !
e your loud timbrels for joy !
aughty step bends to your halls,
elmed head.

3 s the evening upon the thane's
tle,
t clouds gather round;
l they be red as the blood of the liant !
oyer of forests shall shake his red
at against them;
right consumer of palaces,
ves be his blazing banner,
e, and dusky,
strife of the valiant;
in the clashing swords and broken
cklers;
to lick the hissing blood as it
rsts warm from the wound !

4 perish !
d cleaveth the helmet;
ig armor is pierced by the lance:
ureth the dwelling of princes,

Engines break down the fences of the battle.

All must perish !
The race of Hengist is gone —
The name of Horsa is no more !
Shrink not then from your doom, sons of
the sword !

Let your blades drink blood like wine;
Feast ye in the banquet of slaughter,
By the light of the blazing halls !
Strong be your swords while your blood is
warm,

And spare neither for pity nor fear,
For vengeance hath but an hour;
Strong hate itself shall expire !
I also must perish.

V

REBECCA'S HYMN

From Chapter xxxix.

WHEN Israel of the Lord beloved
Out from the land of bondage came,
Her fathers' God before her moved,
An awful guide in smoke and flame.
By day, along the astonished lauds
The cloudy pillar glided slow;
By night, Arabia's crimsoned sands
Returned the fiery column's glow.

There rose the choral hymn of praise,
And trump and timbrel answered keen,
And Zion's daughters poured their lays,
With priest's and warrior's voice between.

No portents now our foes amaze,
Forsaken Israel wanders lone:
Our fathers would not know Thy ways,
And Thou hast left them to their own.

But present still, though now unseen,
When brightly shines the prosperous
day,

Be thoughts of Thee a cloudy screen
To temper the deceitful ray !
And O, when stoops on Judah's path
In shade and storm the frequent night,
Be Thou, long-suffering, slow to wrath,
A burning and a shining light !

Our harps we left by Babel's streams,
The tyrant's jest, the Gentile's scorn;

No conser round our altar beams,
And mute are timbrel, harp, and horn.
But Thou hast said, The blood of goat,
The flesh of rams I will not prize;
A contrite heart, a humble thought,
Are mine accepted sacrifice.

VI

THE BLACK KNIGHT AND WAMBA

From Chapter xi. 'At the point of their journey at which we take them up, this joyous pair were engaged in singing a virelai, as it was called, in which the clown bore a mellow burthen to the better instructed Knight of the Putterlock. And thus ran the ditty:—

ANNA-MARIE, love, up is the sun,
ANNA-MARIE, love, morn is begun,
Mists are dispersing, love, birds singing
free,
Up in the morning, love, Anna-Marie.

ANNA-MARIE, love, up in the morn,
The hunter is winding blithe sounds on his
horn,
The echo rings merry from rock and from
tree,
'Tis time to arouse thee, love, Anna-Marie.

WAMBA

O Tybalt, love, Tybalt, awake me not yet, Around my soft pillow while softer dreams
flit;
For what are the joys that in waking we
prove,
Compared with these visions, O Tybalt,
my love?
Let the birds to the rise of the mist carol
shrill,
Let the hunter blow out his loud horn on the hill,
Softer sounds, softer pleasures, in slumber
I prove,
But think not I dreamed of thee, Tybalt,
my love.

VII

ANOTHER CAROL BY THE SAME

The Jeaster next struck into another carol, a part of some ditty, to which the Knight, catching up the tune, replied in the like manner.

KNIGHT AND WAMBA

THERE came three merry men from west, and north,
Evermore sing the roundelay;
To win the Widow of Wycombe for
And where was the widow might them nay?

The first was a knight, and from T he came,
Evermore sing the roundelay;
And his fathers, God save us, were great fame,
And where was the widow might
nay?

Of his father the laird, of his un-
squire,
He boasted in rhyme and in
lay;
She bade him go bask by his sea-co-
For she was the widow would s nay.

WAMBA

The next that came forth, swore b and by nails,
Merrily sing the roundelay;
Hur's a gentleman, God wot, an lineage was of Wales,
And where was the widow might
nay?

Sir David ap Morgan ap Griffith ap Ap Tudor Ap Rhice, quoth his
lay;
She said that one widow for so ma-
too few,
And she bade the Welshman w
way.

But then next came a yeoman, a yea-
Kent,
Jollily singing his roundelay;
He spoke to the widow of living and
And where was the widow cou-him nay?

BOTH

So the knight and the squire were b in the mire,
There for to sing the roundelay;
For a yeoman of Kent, with his year-
There ne'er was a widow could s nay.

VIII

FUNERAL HYMN

From Chapter xlii.

DUST unto dust,
To this all must;
The tenant hath resigned
The faded form
To waste and worm —
Corruption claims her kind.

Through paths unknown
Thy soul hath flown
To seek the realms of woe,
Where fiery pain
Shall purge the stain
Of actions done below.

In that sad place,
By Mary's grace,
Brief may thy dwelling be !
Till prayers and alms,
And holy psalms,
Shall set the captive free.

VERSES FROM THE MONASTERY

Published in 1820.

I

ANSWER TO INTRODUCTORY EPISTLE

TAKE thou no scorn,
Of fiction born,
Fair fiction's muse to woo;
Old Homer's theme
Was but a dream,
Himself a fiction too.

II

BORDER SONG

From Chapter xxv.

I

MARCH, march, Ettrick and Teviotdale, Why the deil dinna ye march forward in
order ?
March, march, Eskdale and Liddesdale,

All the Blue Bonnets are bound for the Border.

Many a banner spread,
Flutters above your head,
Many a crest that is famous in story.
Mount and make ready then,
Sons of the mountain glen,
Fight for the Queen and our old Scottish glory.

2

Come from the hills where your hirsels are grazing,
Come from the glen of the buck and the roe;
Come to the crag where the beacon is blaz-
ing,
Come with the buckler, the lance, and
the bow.
Trumpets are sounding,
War-steeds are bounding,
Stand to your arms and march in good
order;
England shall many a day
Tell of the bloody fray,
When the Blue Bonnets came over the Border.

III

SONGS OF THE WHITE LADY OF AVENEL

From Chapter v.

FORDING THE RIVER

I

MERRILY swim we, the moon shines
bright,
Both current and ripple are dancing in
light.
We have roused the night raven, I heard him croak,
As we plashed along beneath the oak
That flings its broad branches so far and so
wide,
Their shadows are dancing in midst of the tide.
'Who wakens my nestlings !' the raven
he said,
'My beak shall ere morn in his blood be
red !

For a blue swollen corpse is a dainty meal,
And I'll have my share with the pike and the eel.'

2

Merrily swim we, the moon shines bright,
There's a golden gleam on the distant height:
There's a silver shower on the alders dank,
And the drooping willows that wave on the bank.

I see the Abbey, both turret and tower,
It is all astir for the vesper hour;
'The Monks for the chapel are leaving each
cell,
But where's Father Philip should toll the bell?

3

Merrily swim we, the moon shines bright,
Downward we drift through shadow and
light.

Under you rock the eddies sleep,
Calm and silent, dark and deep.
The Kelpy has risen from the fathomless pool,

He has lighted his candle of death and of dool:

Look, Father, look, and you'll laugh to see How he gapes and glares with his eyes on thee!

4

Good luck to your fishing, whom watch ye to-night?

A man of mean or a man of might?

Is it layman or priest that must float in your cove,

Or lover who crosses to visit his love?

Hark! heard ye the Kelpy reply as we passed,

'God's blessing on the warder, he locked the bridge fast!

All that come to my cove are sunk,
Priest or layman, lover or monk.'

Landed — landed! the black book hath
won,

Else had you seen Berwick with morning
sun!

Sain ye, and save ye, and blithe mot ye be,
For seldom they land that go swimming with me.

IV

TO THE SUB-PRIOR

From Chapter ix.

Good evening, Sir Priest, and so late as you ride,

With your mule so fair, and your mantle
so wide;

But ride you through valley, or ride you o'er hill,

There is one that has warrant to wait on you still.

Back, back,

The volume black!

I have a warrant to carry it back.

What, ho! Sub-Prior, and came you but
here

To conjure a book from a dead woman's bier?

Sain you, and save you, be wary and
wise,

Ride back with the book, or you'll pay for your prize.

Back, back,

There's death in the track!

In the name of my master, I bid thee bear
back.

'In the name of my Master,' said the astor-ished Monk, 'that name before which all things created tremble, I conjure thee to say what thou art that hauntest me thus?'

The same voice replied, —

That which is neither ill nor well,

That which belongs not to heaven nor to
hell,

A wreath of the mist, a bubble of the stream,

'Twixt a waking thought and a sleeping
dream;

A form that men spy

With the half-shut eye

In the beams of the setting sun, am I.

Vainly, Sir Prior, wouldst thou bar me my right!

Like the star when it shoots, I can dart
through the night;

I can dance on the torrent, and ride on the
air,

And travel the world with the bonny nightmare.

Again, again,
At the crook of the glen,
Where bickers the burnie, I'll meet thee
again.

Men of good are bold as sackless,
Men of rude are wild and reckless.
Lie thou still
In the nook of the hill,
For those be before thee that wish thee ill.

V

HALBERT'S INCANTATION

From Chapter xi.

THRICE to the holly brake —
Thrice to the well:—
I bid thee awake,
White Maid of Avenel!

Noon gleams on the Lake —
Noon glows on the Fell —
Wake thee, O wake,
White Maid of Avenel.

VI

TO HALBERT

From Chapter xii.

THE WHITE MAID OF AVENEL

YOUTH of the dark eye, wherefore didst thou call me?

Wherefore art thou here, if terrors can appall thee?

He that seeks to deal with us must know nor fear, nor failing;

To coward and churl our speech is dark,
our gifts are unavailing.

The breeze that brought me hither now must sweep Egyptian ground,

The fleecy cloud on which I ride for Araby
is bound;

The fleecy cloud is drifting by, the breeze
sighs for my stay,

For I must sail a thousand miles before the close of day.

What I am I must not show, —
What I am thou couldst not know —
Something betwixt heaven and hell —
Something that neither stood nor fell —
Something that through thy wit or will May work thee good — may work thee
ill.

Neither substance quite, nor shadow,
Haunting lonely moor and meadow,
Dancing by the haunted spring,
Riding on the whirlwind's wing;
Aping in fantastic fashion
Every change of human passion,
While o'er our frozen minds they pass,
Like shadows from the mirrored glass.
Wayward, fickle, is our mood,
Hovering betwixt bad and good,
Happier than brief-dated man,
Living twenty times his span;
Far less happy, for we have
Help nor hope beyond the grave!
Man awakes to joy or sorrow;
Ours the sleep that knows no morrow.
This is all that I can show —
This is all that thou may'st know.

Ay! and I taught thee the word and the spell

To waken me here by the Fairies' Well.
But thou hast loved the heron and hawk,
More than to seek my haunted walk;
And thou hast loved the lance and the sword,
More than good text and holy word;
And thou hast loved the deer to track,
More than the lines and the letters black;
And thou art a ranger of moss and wood,
And scornest the nurture of gentle blood.

Thy craven fear my truth accused,
Thine idlehood my trust abused;
He that draws to harbor late,
Must sleep without, or burst the gate
There is a star for thee which burned,
Its influence wanes, its course is turned;
Valor and constancy alone
Can bring thee back the chance that's flown.

Within that awful volume lies
The mystery of mysteries!

Happiest they of human race,
To whom God has granted grace
To read, to fear, to hope, to pray,
To lift the latch, and force the way;
And better had they ne'er been born,
Who read to doubt, or read to scorn.

Many a fathom dark and deep
I have laid the book to sleep;
Ethereal fires around it glowing —
Ethereal music ever flowing —

The sacred pledge of Heaven
All things revere,
Each in his sphere,

Save man for whom 't was given:
Lend thy hand, and thou shalt spy
Things ne'er seen by mortal eye.

Fearest thou to go with me?
Still it is free to thee
A peasant to dwell;
Thou may'st drive the dull steer,
And chase the king's deer,
But never more come near
This haunted well.

Here lies the volume thou hast boldly
sought;
Touch it, and take it, 't will dearly be bought.

Rash thy deed,
Mortal weed
To immortal flames applying;
Rasher trust
Has thing of dust,
On his own weak worth relying:
Strip thee of such fences vain,
Strip, and prove thy luck again.

Mortal warp and mortal woof
Cannot brook this charmed roof;
All that mortal art hath wrought
In our cell returns to nought.
The molten gold returns to clay,
The polished diamond melts away;
All is altered, all is flown,
Nought stands fast but truth alone.

Not for that thy quest give o'er:
Courage! prove thy chance once more.

Alas! alas!
Not ours the grace
These holy characters to trace:
Idle forms of painted air,
Not to us is given to share
The boon bestowed on Adam's race
With patience bide,
Heaven will provide
The fitting time, the fitting guide.

VII

TO THE SAME

From Chapter xvii. 'She spoke, and speech was still song, or rather mass chant; but, as if now more familiar, it occasionally in modulated blank verse, as other times, in the lyrical measure which had used at their former meeting.'

THIS is the day when the fairy kind
Sit weeping alone for their hopeless love
And the wood-maiden sighs to the sigh
wind,
And the mermaiden weeps in her
grot;
For this is a day that the deed
wrought,
In which we have neither part nor share
For the children of clay was salvation
bought,
But not for the forms of sea or air!
And ever the mortal is most forlorn,
Who meeteth our race on the Friday morn.

Daring youth! for thee it is well,
Here calling me in haunted dell,
That thy heart has not quailed,
Nor thy courage failed,
And that thou couldst brook
The angry look
Of Her of Avenel.
Did one limb shiver,
Or an eyelid quiver,
Thou wert lost for ever.
Though I am formed from the blue,
And my blood is of the unfallen dew,

on art framed of mud and dust,
fine to speak, reply I must.

stier wizard far than I o'er the universe his power;
was the eagle in the sky,
rtle in the bower.
iful in shape, yet mightiest still,
dds the heart of man at will,
ll to good, from good to ill,
and castle-tower.

y heart, whose secret cell
I with Mary Avenel !
y pride, why scornful look y's view it will not brook ?
why thou seek'st to rise
the mighty and the wise, — hou spurn'st thy lowly lot, — hy pastimes are forgot, — hou wouldst in bloody strife thy luck or lose thy life ?
y heart, and it shall tell,
y from its secret cell,
r Mary Avenel.
ask me;
bts like these thou canst not task me.
ly see the passing show
can passions' ebb and flow;
ew the pageant's idle glance
tals eye the northern dance, thousand streamers, flashing bright,
it o'er the brow of night,
users mark their changeful gleams,
al no influence from their beams.

mysterious linked, our fated race strange connection with the sons of men.
ar that rose upon the House of Avenel,
Norman Ulric first assumed the
same,
tar, when culminating in its orbit,
rom its spear a drop of diamond
dew,
his bright font received it — and a Spirit

Rose from the fountain, and her date of life
Hath coexistence with the House of Avenel,
And with the star that rules it.

Look on my girdle — on this thread of
gold —
'T is fine as web of lightest gossamer,
And, but there is a spell on 't, would not bind,
Light as they are, the folds of my thin robe.
But when 't was donned, it was a massive
chain,
Such as might bind the champion of the Jews,
Even when his locks were longest — it hath dwindled,
Hath 'minished in its substance and its
strength,
As sunk the greatness of the House of Avenel.
When this frail thread gives way, I to the elements
Resign the principles of life they lent
me.
Ask me no more of this! — the stars forbid it.

Dim burns the once bright star of Avenel,
Dim as the beacon when the morn is nigh,
And the o'er-wearied warder leaves the lighthouse;
There is an influence sorrowful and fearful,
That dogs its downward course. Disastrous passion,
Fierce hate and rivalry, are in the aspect
That lowers upon its fortunes.

Complain not on me, child of clay,
If to thy harm I yield the way.
We, who soar thy sphere above,
Know not aught of hate or love;
As will or wisdom rules thy mood,
My gifts to evil turn or good.
When Fierce Shafton boasteth high,

Let this token meet his eye.
The sun is westering from the dell,
Thy wish is granted — fare thee well !

VIII

TO THE SAME

From Chapter xx.

He, whose heart for vengeance sued,
Must not shrink from shedding blood;
The knot that thou hast tied with word,
Thou must loose by edge of sword.

You have summoned me once, you have summoned me twice,
And without e'er a summons I come to you thrice;
Unasked for, unsued for, you came to my
glen,
Unsued and unasked, I am with you again.

IX

TO MARY AVENEL

From Chapter xxx.

MAIDEN, whose sorrows wail the Living
Dead,
Whose eyes shall commune with the Dead Alive,
Maiden, attend ! Beneath my foot lies
hid
The Word, the Law, the Path which thou dost strive
To find, and canst not find. Could Spirits shed
Tears for their lot, it were my lot to weep,
Showing the road which I shall never
tread,
Though my foot points it. Sleep, eternal sleep,
Dark, long, and cold forgetfulness my lot !
But do not thou at human ills repine;
Secure there lies full guerdon in this spot
For all the woes that wait frail Adam's
line —
Stoop then and make it yours, — I may not make it mine !

X

TO EDWARD GLENDINNING

From Chapter xxxii.

THOU who seek'st my fountain lone,
With thoughts and hopes thou dar'st not
own;
Whose heart within leaped wildly glad,
When most his brow seemed dark and sad;
Hie thee back, thou find'st not here
Corpse or coffin, grave or bier;
The Dead Alive is gone and fled:
Go thou and join the Living Dead !

The Living Dead, whose sober brow
Oft shrouds such thoughts as thou hast
now,
Whose hearts within are seldom cured
Of passions by their vows abjured;
Where, under sad and solemn show,
Vain hopes are nursed, wild wishes glow.
Seek the convent's vaulted room,
Prayer and vigil be thy doom:
Doff the green, and don the grey,
To the cloister hence away !

XI

THE WHITE LADY'S FAREWELL

From Chapter xxxvii.

FARE thee well, thou Holly green !
Thou shalt seldom now be seen,
With all thy glittering garlands bending,
As to greet my slow descending,
Startling the bewildered hind,
Who sees thee wave without a wind.

Farewell, Fountain ! now not long
Shalt thou murmur to my song.
While thy crystal bubbles glancing,
Keep the time in mystic dancing,
Rise and swell, are burst and lost,
Like mortal schemes by fortune crossed.

The knot of fate at length is tied,
The Churl is Lord, the Maid is Bride !
Vainly did my magic sleight
Send the lover from her sight;
Wither bush, and perish well,
Fallen is lofty Avenel !

GOLDTHRED'S SONG

FROM KENILWORTH

Published in 1821.

Chapter ii. 'After some brief interview Goldthred, at the earnest instigation of his host, and the joyous concurrence of the guests, indulged the company with the following morsel of melody:—'

I the birds on bush or tree,
I commend me to the owl,
He may best ensample be
Those the cup that trowl.
In the sun hath left the west,
I see the tree that he loves the
best,
Whoops out his song, and he laughs
at his jest;
Though hours be late, and weather
be foul,
I drink to the health of the bonny,
Bonny owl.

Mark is but a bumpkin fowl,
He sleeps in his nest till morn;
My blessing upon the jolly owl,
It all night blows his horn.
I with your cup till you stagger in speech,
I teach me this catch though you swagger
and screech,
I wink till you wink, my merry men
sch;
Though hours be late, and weather be foul,
I drink to the health of the bonny,
Bonny owl.

VERSES FROM THE PIRATE

Published in 1821.

I

THE SONG OF THE TEMPEST

Chapter vi. 'A Norwegian invocation preserved in the island of Uist, under the name of the Song of the Reim-kennar,
some call it the Song of the Tempest.
The following is a free translation, it being impossible to render literally many of the elliptical and metaphorical terms of expression peculiar to the ancient Northern poetry:—'

I

STERN eagle of the far northwest,
Thou that bearest in thy grasp the thunderbolt,
Thou whose rushing pinions stir ocean to madness,
Thou the destroyer of herds, thou the scat-
terer of navies,
Thou the breaker down of towers,
Amidst the scream of thy rage,
Amidst the rushing of thy onward wings,
Though thy scream be loud as the cry of a perishing nation,
Though the rushing of thy wings be like the roar of ten thousand waves,
Yet hear, in thine ire and thy haste,
Hear thou the voice of the Reim-kennar.

2

Thou hast met the pine-trees of Drontheim,
Their dark-green heads lie prostrate beside their uprooted stems;
Thou hast met the rider of the ocean,
The tall, the strong bark of the fearless rover,
And she has struck to thee the topsail
That she had not veiled to a royal armada;
Thou hast met the tower that bears its crest
among the clouds,
The battled massive tower of the Jarl of former days,
And the cope-stone of the turret
Is lying upon its hospitable hearth;
But thou too shalt stoop, proud compeller
of clouds,
When thou hearest the voice of the Reimkennar.

3

There are verses that can stop the stag in the forest,
Ay, and when the dark-colored dog is opening on his track;
There are verses can make the wild hawk pause on his wing,
Like the falcon that wears the hood and the jesses,
And who knows the shrill whistle of the fowler.
Thou who canst mock at the scream of the drowning mariner,

And the crash of the ravaged forest,
And the groan of the overwhelmed crowds,
When the church hath fallen in the moment of prayer;
There are sounds which thou also must list,
When they are chanted by the voice of the Reim-kennar.

4

Enough of woe hast thou wrought on the ocean,
The widows wring their hands on the beach;
Enough of woe hast thou wrought on the
land,
The husbandman folds his arms in despair;
Cease thou the waving of thy pinions,
Let the ocean repose in her dark strength;
Cease thou the flashing of thine eyes,
Let the thunderbolt sleep in the armory of Odin;
Be thou still at my bidding, viewless racer
of the northwestern heaven, —
Sleep thou at the voice of Norna the Reimkennar.

5

Eagle of the far northwestern waters,
Thou hast heard the voice of the Reim-
kennar,
Thou hast closed thy wide sails at her bidding,
And folded them in peace by thy side.
My blessing be on thy retiring path;
When thou stoapest from thy place on high,
Soft be thy slumbers in the caverns of the unknown ocean,
Rest till destiny shall again awaken thee;
Eagle of the northwest, thou hast heard
the voice of the Reim-kennar.

II

HALCRO'S SONG

From Chapter xii.

FAREWELL to Northmaven,
Grey Hillswicke, farewell !
To the calms of thy haven,
The storms on thy fell —
To each breeze that can vary
The mood of thy main,
And to thee, bonny Mary !
We meet not again !

Farwell the wild ferry,
Which Hacon could brave
When the peaks of the Skerry
Were white in the wave.
There's a maid may look over
These wild waves in vain
For the skiff of her lover —
He comes not again !

The vows thou hast broke,
On the wild currents fling them;
On the quicksand and rock
Let the mermaid sing them:
New sweetness they'll give her
Bewildering strain;
But there's one who will never
Believe them again.

O, were there an island,
Though ever so wild,
Where woman could smile, and
No man be beguiled —
Too tempting a snare
To poor mortals were given;
And the hope would fix there
That should anchor on heaven.

III

SONG OF HAROLD HARFAGER

From Chapter xv.

THE sun is rising dimly red,
The wind is wailing low and dread;
From his cliff the eagle sallies,
Leaves the wolf his darksome valleys;
In the mist the ravens hover,
Peep the wild dogs from the cover,
Screaming, croaking, baying, yelling,
Each in his wild accents telling,
'Soon we feast on dead and dying,
Fair-haired Harold's flag is flying.'

Many a crest in air is streaming,
Many a helmet darkly gleaming,
Many an arm the axe uprears,
Doomed to hew the wood of spears.
All along the crowded ranks,
Horses neigh and armor clanks;
Chiefs are shouting, clarions ringing,
Louder still the bard is singing,
'Gather, footmen; gather, horsemen,
To the field, ye valiant Norsemen !

t ye not for food or slumber,
 r not vantage, count not number;
 r reapers, forward still,
 r the crop on vale or hill,
 k or scattered, stiff or lithe,
 all down before the scythe.
 ard with your sickles bright,
 r the harvest of the fight.
 ard footmen, onward horsemen,
 be charge, ye gallant Norsemen !

al Choosers of the Slaughter,
 you hovers Odin's daughter;
 r the choice she spreads before ye—
 ory, and wealth, and glory;
 ld Valhalla's roaring hail,
 ever-circling mead and ale,
 re for eternity unite joys of wassail and of fight.
 llong forward, foot and horsemen,
 ge and fight, and die like Norsemen !'

IV

OF THE MERMAIDS AND MERMEN

From Chapter xvi.

MERMAID

oms deep beneath the wave,
 ringing beads of glistening pearl,
 ng the achievements brave
 many an old Norwegian earl;
 ling where the tempest's raving
 lls as light upon our ear,
 e sigh of lover, craving
 ty from his lady dear,
 tren of wild Thule, we,
 i the deep caves of the sea,
 e lark springs from the lea,
 er come, to share your glee.

MERMAN

i reigning of the water-horse, at bounded till the waves were foam-
 ing,
 hing the infant tempest's course,
 asing the sea-snake in his roaming;
 i winding charge-notes on the shell,
 hen the huge whale and sword-fish
 duel,
 illing shroudless seamen's knell,
 hen the winds and waves are cruel;
 tren of wild Thule, we

Have ploughed such furrows on the sea,
 As the steer draws on the lea,
 And hither we come to share your glee.

MERMAIDS AND MERMEN

We heard you in our twilight caves,
 A hundred fathom deep below,
 For notes of joy can pierce the waves,
 That drown each sound of war and woe.
 Those who dwell beneath the sea
 Love the sons of Thule well;
 Thus, to aid your mirth, bring we Dance and song and sounding shell.
 Children of dark Thule, know,
 Those who dwell by haaf and voe,
 Where your daring shallops row,
 Come to share the festal show.

V

NORNA'S VERSES

From Chapter xix.

FOR leagues along the watery way,
 Through gulf and stream my course has
 been;
 The billows know my Runic lay,
 And smooth their crests to silent green.

The billows know my Runic lay,
 The gulf grows smooth, the stream is
 still;
 But human hearts, more wild than they,
 Know but the rule of wayward will.

One hour is mine, in all the year,
 To tell my woes, and one alone;
 When gleams this magic lamp, 't is here,
 When dies the mystic light, 't is gone.

Daughters of northern Magnus, hail !
 The lamp is lit, the flame is clear;
 To you I come to tell my tale,
 Awake, arise, my tale to hear !

Dwellers of the mountain, rise,
 Troll'd the powerful, Hains the wise !
 Ye who taught weak woman's tongue
 Words that sway the wise and strong,—
 Ye who taught weak woman's hand
 How to wield the magic wand,
 And wake the gales on Foulah's steep,

On fast wild Sumburgh's waves to sleep !
 Still are ye yet ? Not yours the power
 Ye knew in Odin's mightier hour.
 What are ye now but empty names,
 Powerful Trolld, sagacious Haims,
 That, lightly spoken, and lightly heard,
 Float on the air like thistle's beard ?

'When I awoke, I saw, through the dim light which the upper aperture admitted, the dimly and indistinct form of Trolld the dwarf. . . . He spoke, and his words were of Norse, so old, that few, save my father or I myself, could have comprehended their import.'

A thousand winters dark have flown,
 Since o'er the threshold of my stone
 A votary passed, my power to own.
 Visions hold
 Of the mansion of Trolld,
 Maiden haughty of heart.
 Who hast hither presumed,
 Unbidden, undoomed,
 Thou shalt not depart.
 The power thou dost covet
 O'er tempest and wave,
 Shall be thine, thou proud maiden,
 By brach and by cave. —
 By stack, and by skerry, by noup, and by yue,
 By air, and by wick, and by helyer and
 gio,
 And by every wild shore which the northern winds know,
 And the northern tides lave.
 But though this shall be given thee, thou desperately brave,
 I doom thee that never the gift thou shalt
 have,
 'Till thou reave thy life's giver
 Of the gift which he gave.

'I answered him in nearly the same strain.'

Dark are thy words, and severe,
 Thou dweller in the stone;
 But trembling and fear
 To her are unknown,
 Who hath sought thee here,
 In thy dwelling lone.
 Come what comes soever,
 The worst I can endure;
 Life is but a short fever,
 And Death is the cure.

VI

HALCRO AND NORNA

From Chapter xxi.

CLAUDE HALCRO

MOTHER darksome, Mother dread,
 Dweller on the Fitful-head,
 Thou canst see what deeds are done
 Under the never-setting sun.
 Look through sleet, and look through frost,
 Look to Greenland's caves and coast, —
 By the iceberg is a sail
 Chasing of the swarthy whale;
 Mother doubtful, Mother dread,
 Tell us, has the good ship sped ?

NORNA

The thought of the aged is ever on gear,
 On his fishing, his furrow, his flock, and his steer;
 But thrive may his fishing, flock, furrow,
 and herd,
 While the aged for anguish shall tear his gray beard.

The ship, well-laden as bark need be,
 Lies deep in the furrow of the Iceland sea;
 The breeze from Zetland blows fair and soft,

And gaily the garland is fluttering aloft:
 Seven good fishes have spouted their last,
 And their jaw-bones are hanging to yard
 and mast:

Two are for Lerwick, and two for Kirk-
 wall,

And three for Burgh-Westra, the choicest of all.

CLAUDE HALCRO

Mother doubtful, Mother dread,
 Dweller of the Fitful-head,
 Thou hast conned full many a rhyme,
 That lives upon the surge of time:
 Tell me, shall my lays be sung,
 Like Hacon's of the golden tongue,
 Long after Halcro's dead and gone ?
 Or, shall Hialtland's minstrel own
 One note to rival glorious John ?

NORNA

The infant loves the rattle's noise;
 Age, double childhood, hath its toys;
 But different far the descant rings,

As strikes a different hand the strings.
The eagle mounts the polar sky:
The Imber-geese, unskilled to fly,
Must be content to glide along,
Where seal and sea-dog list his song.

CLAUD HALCRO

Be mine the Imber-geese to play,
And haunt lone cave and silent bay;
The archer's aim so shall I shun;
So shall I 'scape the levelled gun;
Content my verses' tuneless jingle
With Thule's sounding tides to mingle,
While, to the ear of wondering wight,
Upon the distant headland's height,
Softened by murmur of the sea,
The rude sounds seem like harmony!

Mother doubtful, Mother dread,
Dweller of the Fitful-head,
A gallant bark from far abroad,
Saint Magnus bath her in his road,
With guns and firelocks not a few:
A silken and a scarlet crew,
Deep stored with precious merchandise
Of gold, and goods of rare device:
What interest hath our comrade bold
In bark and crew, in goods and gold?

NORNA

Gold is ruddy, fair, and free,
Blood is crimson, and dark to see;
I looked out on Saint Magnus bay,
And I saw a falcon that struck her prey;
A gobbet of flesh in her beak she bore,
And talons and singles are dripping with
gore;
Let him that asks after them look on his
hand,
And if there is blood on 't, he's one of their band.

CLAUD HALCRO

Mother doubtful, Mother dread,
Dweller of the Fitful-head,
Well thou know'st it is thy task
To tell what Beauty will not ask;
Then steep thy words in wine and milk,
And weave a doom of gold and silk;
For we would know, shall Brenda prove
In love, and happy in her love?

NORNA

Untouched by love, the maiden's breast
Is like the snow on Rona's crest,

High seated in the middle sky,
In bright and barren purity;
But by the sunbeam gently kissed,
Scarce by the gazing eye 't is missed,
Ere, down the lonely valley stealing,
Fresh grass and growth its course reveal-
ing,
It cheers the flock, revives the flower,
And decks some happy shepherd's bower.

MAGNUS TROIL

Mother, speak, and do not tarry,
Here 's a maiden fain would marry.
Shall she marry, ay or not?
If she marry, what 's her lot?

NORNA

Untouched by love, the maiden's breast
Is like the snow on Rona's crest;
So pure, so free from earthly dye,
It seems, whilst leaning on the sky,
Part of the heaven to which 't is nigh;
But passion, like the wild March rain,
May soil the wreath with many a stain.
We gaze — the lovely vision 's gone:
A torrent fills the bed of stone,
That, hurrying to destruction's shock,
Leaps headlong from the lofty rock.

VII

THE FISHERMEN'S SONG

From Chapter xxii. 'While they were yet within hearing of the shore, they chanted an ancient Norse ditty, appropriate to the occasion, of which Claud Halcro had executed the following literal translation:—

FAREWELL, merry maidens, to song and to laugh,
For the brave lads of Westra are bound to the Haaf;
And we must have labor, and hunger, and
pain,
Ere we dance with the maids of Dunross-ness again.

For now, in our trim boats of Norway deal,
We must dance on the waves, with the
porpoise and seal;
The breeze it shall pipe, so it pipe not too
high,
And the gull be our songstresses whene'er
she flits by.

Sing on, my brave bird, while we follow,
 Like thee,
 By bank, shoal, and quicksand, the swarms
 Of the sea;
 And when twenty-score fishes are straining
 Our line,
 Sing louder, brave bird, for their spoils
 Shall be thine.

We'll sing while we bait, and we'll sing
 When we haul,
 For the deeps of the Haul have enough
 For us all;
 There is tuck for the gentle, and skate for
 The carps,
 And there's wealth for bold Magnus, the Man of the east.

Huzza! my brave comrades, give way for
 The Haul,
 We shall never come back to the dance
 And the laugh;
 For life without mirth is a lamp without oil;
 Then, mirth and long life to the bold Magnus! Huzza!

VIII

CLEVELAND'S SONGS

Love wakes and weeps
 While Beauty sleeps.
 O, for Music's softest numbers,
 In promise & theme
 For Beauty's dreams,
 Soft as the pillow of her slumbers!

Through groves of palm
 Night gales of harm,
 Fire-larks in the air are whistling;
 While through the gloom
 Comes soft perfume,
 The distant voice of flowers receding.

O wake and live!
 No dream can give
 A sound and sense, as thou exalting;
 No longer sleep
 From slumber deep
 And not for love that love is telling.

Farewell! Farewell! the voice you hear
 Has set its rest and home with you, —

Its next must join the seaward cheer,
 And shout among the shouting crew.

The accents which I scarce could form
 Beneath your frown's controlling check
 Must give the word, above the storm,
 To cut the mast and clear the wreck.

The timid eye I dared not raise, —
 The hand, that shook when pressed to
 thine,
 Must point the guns upon the chase —
 Must bid the deadly cutlass shine.

To all I love, or hope, or fear, —
 Honor or own, a long adieu!
 To all that life has soft and dear,
 Farewell! save memory of you!

IX

MALCRO'S VERSES

From Chapter XIII.

And you shall deal the funeral dule;
 Ay, deal it, mother mine.
 To weary body and to heavy soul,
 The white bread and the wine.

And you shall deal my horses of pride;
 Ay, deal them, mother mine;
 And you shall deal my lands so wide,
 And deal my castle mine;

But deal not vengeance for the deed,
 And deal not for the crime;
 The body to its place, and the soul to Heaven's grace,
 And the rest in God's own time.

Saint Magnus cursed thee, that martyr of treason;

Saint Dennis smote thee, with rhyme and
 with reason;

By the mass of Saint Martin, the knight of Saint Mary,

Be thou gone, or my sword shall be worse than mine;

Let God, the Father and Father thee;

Let God, the Father and Father thee;
 Let God, the Father and Father thee;

irth, let the swart mine hold thee;
 xie, seek thy ring;
 xie, seek thy spring;
 iddle earth thou 'st been
 f sorrow, shame, and sin,
 te the bread of toil and strife,
 'ee'd the lot which men call life;
 to thy stone ! for thy coffin is scant
 of thee,
 orm, thy play-fellow, wails for the want of thee:
 houseless ghost ! let the earth hide
 thee,
 ichael shall blow the blast, see that there thou bide thee !
 m, fly hence ! take the Cross for a token,
 pass till Hallowmass ! — my spell is spoken.

re corpse-light
 es bright,
 by day or night,
 by light or dark,
 e shall corpse lie stiff and stark.

eful maiden ne'er should rise,
 he first beam tinge the skies;
 fringed eyelids still should close,
 he sun has kissed the rose;
 en's foot we should not view,
 red with tiny print on dew,
 he opening flowerets spread et meet for beauty's tread.

X

NORNA'S INCANTATIONS

From Chapter xxv.

ION, farned for warlike toil,
 u silent, Ribolt Troil ?
 nd dust, and pebbly stones,
 ving bare thy giant bones.
 red touch the wild bear's skin
 abered on, while life was in ?
 an now, or babe, may come
 st the covering from thy tomb.

not wrathful, Chief, nor blight
 yes or ears with sound or sight !

I come not with unhallowed tread,
 To wake the slumbers of the dead,
 Or lay thy giant relics bare;
 But what I seek thou well canst spare.
 Be it to my hand allowed
 To shear a merk's weight from thy shroud;
 Yet leave thee sheeted lead enough
 To shield thy bones from weather rough.

See, I draw my magic knife:
 Never while thou wert in life
 Laidst thou still for sloth or fear,
 When point and edge were glittering near:
 See, the cements now I sever:
 Waken now, or sleep for ever !
 Thou wilt not wake: the deed is done !
 The prize I sought is fairly won.

Thanks, Ribolt, thanks, — for this the
 sea
 Shall smooth its ruffled crest for thee,
 And while afar its billows foam,
 Subside to peace near Ribolt's tomb.
 Thanks, Ribolt, thanks — for this the might
 Of wild winds raging at their height,
 When to thy place of slumber nigh,
 Shall soften to a lullaby.

She, the dame of doubt and dread,
 Norna of the Fitful-head,
 Mighty in her own despite,
 Miserable in her might;
 In despair and frenzy great,
 In her greatness desolate;
 Wisest, wickedest who lives,
 Well can keep the word she gives.

XI

THE SAME, AT THE MEETING WITH MINNA

From Chapter xxviii.

THOU so needful, yet so dread,
 With cloudy crest, and wing of red;
 Thou, without whose genial breath
 The North would sleep the sleep of death;
 Who deign'st to warm the cottage hearth,
 Yet hurls proud palaces to earth;
 Brightest, keenest of the Powers,
 Which form and rule this world of ours.
 With my rhyme of Runic, I
 Thank thee for thy agency.

XII

FOOT'S ADVERTISEMENT

In Chapter xxxii.

Join the snake deceives,
 r them with leaves.
 leaves, 't is true,
 es are none, or few;
 r and tails of woo',
 and wadmaal blue;
 any of foreign knacks
 an woo' or flax.
 abinas lads appear,
 Lambmas sisters here,
 spares not cost or care,
 ry gentle pair.

K FOREST'S MOUN-
AINS DUN

After a week's shooting and cott had been engaged with st's mountains dun

 ar the sportsman's gun,
 ath-frequenting brood
 noonday solitude;
 and trenched mound
 yore sleep lone and sound, ere gray-haired shepherds
 ries love to dwell.

streams of Tweed
 imic fly to land,
 ik the salmon springs,
 atles through the rings;
 r see him try,
 am the current high,
 e and cautious hand
 sted strength to land.

; the midnight tide
 m the boat to guide;
 zling blaze to rear,
 nge the barbed spear;
 l scur, emerging bright,
 sam their ruddy light,
 nk our band appears
 d with fiery spears.

'T is blithe at eve to tell the tale
 How we succeed and how we fail,
 Whether at Alwyn's lordly meal,
 Or lowlier board of Ashestiel;
 While the gay tapers cheerly shine,
 Bickers the fire and flows the wine —
 Days free from thought and nights from
 care,
 My blessing on the Forest fair.

THE MAID OF ISLA

AIR — 'The Maid of Isla'

Written for Mr. George Thomson's Scottish Melodies, and published in 1822.

O MAID of Isla, from the cliff
 That looks on troubled wave and sky,
 Dost thou not see yon little skiff
 Contend with ocean gallantly?
 Now beating 'gainst the breeze and surge,
 And steeped her leeward deck in foam,
 Why does she war unequal urge? —
 O Isla's maid, she seeks her home.

O Isla's maid, yon sea-bird mark,
 Her white wing gleams through mist
 and spray
 Against the storm-cloud lowering dark,
 As to the rock she wheels away; —
 Where clouds are dark and billows rave,
 Why to the shelter should she come
 Of cliff, exposed to wind and wave? —
 O maid of Isla, 't is her home!

As breeze and tide to yonder skiff,
 Thou'rt adverse to the suit I bring,
 And cold as is yon wintry cliff
 Where seabirds close their wearied wing.
 Yet cold as rock, unkind as wave,
 Still, Isla's maid, to thee I come;
 For in thy love or in his grave
 Must Allan Vourich find his home.

FAREWELL TO THE MUSE

Also published in Scottish Melodies in 1822.

ENCHANTRESS, farewell, who so oft has de-cayed me
 At the close of the evening through woodlands to roam,

Where the forester stood with wonder exploring
Explore the wild scenes he was quitting for home.
Farewell, and take with thee thy numbers wild speaking
The language attenuate of rapture and
we
O! mine but some lover whose heart-strings are breaking
The pang that I feel at our parting can know!

Last joy thou couldst double, and when there came sorrow
Or pale disappointment to darken my
way,
What voice was like thine, that could sing
of to-morrow
Till forget in the strain was the grief of to-day
But when friends drop around us in life's weary wailing,
The grief, Queen of Numbers, thou canst
not assuage,
For the gradual estrangement of those yet remaining,
The language of pain and the chillness of
age.

'T was thou that once taught me in accents
bemoaning
To sing how a warrior lay stretched on
the plain,
And a number hung o'er him with aid unavailing,
And held to his lips the cold goblet in vain;
As vain the enchantments, O Queen of wild Numbers,
To a bard when the reign of his fancy is
o'er,
And the quick pulse of feeling in apathy
slumbers—
Farewell, then, Enchantress;—I meet thee no more.

NIGEL'S INITIATION AT WHITE- THROATS

From Chapter xvii. of The Fortunes of Nigel,
published in 1822.

Your suppliant, by name
Nigel, Grahame,

In fear of mishap
From a shoulder-crag;
And dreading a blow
From the maw of law,
That are sharper than brass;
His freedom to sue
And rescue by you;
Through weapon and wit,
From warrant and writ,
From bailiff's hand,
From tipstaff's wand
Is come hither to White-throat.

By spigot and barrel,
By billow and buff;
Thou art sworn to the quarrel
Of the blades of the Buff
For White-throat and his mates
To be champion or martyr,
And to fight for its games
Like a Knight of the Garter.

From the touch of the tip,
From the blight of the warrant,
From the waterman who ship
On the Harmer Reek's errand,
From the bailiff's crump speech
That makes man a thrall,
I charm thee from each,
And I charm thee from all
Thy freedom's complete
As a blade of the Buff
To be cheated and cheat,
To be ruffed and to cuff;
To stride, swear, and swagger,
To drink till you stagger,
To stare and to stab.
And to brandish your dagger
In the cause of your drab;
To walk wool-wad in winter,
Drunk brandy, and smoke,
And go brezo in summer
For want of a cloak;
To eke out your living
By the wag of your elbow,
By fulham and gourd
And by haring o' bilboe;
To live by your shifts,
And to swear by your honor
Are the freedom and gift
Of which I am the donor.

LE, NOW THE KING'S COME

SING NEW WORDS TO AN AULD
SPRING

A imitation of an old Jacobite ditty was on the appearance, in the Frith of , of the fleet which conveyed his Majesty George the Fourth to Scotland, in August, and was published as a broadside. The will recall the enthusiasm of Scott over royal visit as set forth graphically by part in Chapter lvi. of the Life.

PART FIRST

Now has flown frae mouth to mouth,
North for ance has bawged the South;
Nail a Scotsman's die o' drouth,
Carle, now the King's come!

CHORUS

Carle, now the King's come!
Carle, now the King's come!
Thou shalt dance, and I will sing,
Carle, now the King's come!

England held him lang and fast;
Ireland had a joyfu' cast;
Scotland's turn is come at last:
Carle, now the King's come:

Reekie, in her rokelay gray,
Ght never to have seen the day;
Been a weary time away—
But, Carle, now the King's come!

Skirling frae the Castle-hill,
Carline's voice is grown sae shrill,
Hear her at the Canon-mill:
Carle, now the King's come!

Bairns!' she cries, 'baith grit and sma',
Ask ye for the weapon-shaw!
By me, and we'll bang them a'—
Carle, now the King's come!

From Newbattle's ancient spires, Lothian, with your knights and
squires,
Watch the mettle of your sires:
Carle, now the King's come!

Ye welcome hame, my Montagu!
In your hand the young Buccleuch;

I'm missing some that I may rue:
Carle, now the King's come;

'Come, Haddington, the kind and gay,
You've graced my causeway mony a
day;

I'll weep the cause if you should stay:
Carle, now the King's come!

'Come, premier Duke, and carry down
Frae yonder craig his ancient croun;
It's had a lang sleep and a soun':
But, Carle, now the King's come!

'Come, Athole, from the hill and wood,
Bring down your clansmen like a cloud;
Come, Morton, show the Douglas' blood:
Carle, now the King's come!

'Come, Tweeddale, true as sword to sheath;
Come, Hopetoun, feared on fields of death;
Come, Clerk, and give your bugle breath;
Carle, now the King's come!

'Come, Wemyss, who modest merit aids;
Come, Rosebery, from Dalmeny shades;
Breadalbane, bring your belted plaids;
Carle, now the King's come!

'Come, stately Niddrie, auld and true,
Girt with the sword that Minden knew;
We have o'er few such lairds as you:
Carle, now the King's come!

'King Arthur's grown a common crier,
He's heard in Fife and far Cantire:
"Fie, lads, behold my crest of fire!"
Carle, now the King's come!

'Saint Abb roars out, "I see him pass, Between Tautallon and the Bass!"
Calton, get out your keeking-glass,
Carle, now the King's come!

The Carline stopped; and, sure I am,
For very glee had ta'en a dram,
But Oman helped her to a dram.
Cogie, now the King's come!

CHORUS

Cogie, now the King's come!
Cogie, now the King's come!
I'se be fou', and ye's be toom,
Cogie, now the King's come!

PART SECOND

A Hawick gill of mountain dew
Heised up Auld Reekie's heart, I trow,
It minded her of Waterloo:

Carle, now the King's come !

Again I heard her summons swell,
For, sic a dirdum and a yell,
It drowned Saint Giles's jowing bell:

Carle, now the King's come !

'My trusty Provost, tried and tight,
Stand forward for the Good Town's right,
There's waur than you been made a knight:

Carle, now the King's come !

'My reverend Clergy, look ye say
The best of thanksgivings ye ha'e,
And warstle for a sunny day —

Carle, now the King's come !

'My Doctors, look that you agree,
Cure a' the town without a fee;
My Lawyers, dinna pike a plea:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Come forth each sturdy Burgher's bairn,
That dints on wood or clanks on airn,
That fires the o'en, or winds the pirn —

Carle, now the King's come !

'Come forward with the Blanket Blue,
Your sires were loyal men and true,
As Scotland's foemen oft might rue:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Scots downa loup, and rin and rave,
We're steady folks and something grave,
We'll keep the causeway firm and brave:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Sir Thomas, thunder from your rock,
Till Pentland dinnales wi' the shock,
And lace wi' fire my smood o' smoke:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Melville, bring out your hands of blue,
A' Loudon lads, baith stout and true,
With Elcho, Hope, and Cockburn, too:

Carle, now the King's come !

'And you, who on yon bluidy braes
Compelled the vanquished Despot's praise,
Rank out, rank out, my gallant Greys:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Cock of the North, my Huntly bra',
Where are you with the Forty-twa?
Ah ! waes my heart that ye're awa':

Carle, now the King's come !

'But yonder come my canty Celts,
With durk and pistols at their belts,
Thank God, we've still some plaids and kilts:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Lord, how the pibrochs groan and yell !
Macdonell's ta'en the field himsell,
Macleod comes branking o'er the fell:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Bend up your bow each Archer spark,
For you're to guard him light and dark;
Faith, lads, for aince ye've hit the mark:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Young Errol, take the sword of state,
The Sceptre, Pane-Morarchate;
Knight Mareschal, see ye clear the gate:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Kind cummer, Leith, ye've been un-
set,
But dinna be upon the fret:

Ye'se hae the handsel of him yet,

Carle, now the King's come !

'My daughters, come with een sae blue,
Your garlands weave, your blossoms strew;
He ne'er saw fairer flowers than you:

Carle, now the King's come !

'What shall we do for the propine:
We used to offer something fine,
But ne'er a grout's in pouch of mine:

Carle, now the King's come !

'Deil care — for that I'se never start,
We'll welcome him with Highland heart;
Whate'er we have he's get a part:

Carle, now the King's come !

'I'll show him mason-work this day:
Nane of your bricks of Babel clay,
But towers shall stand till Time's away:

Carle, now the King's come !

'I'll show him wit, I'll show him lair,
And gallant lads and lasses fair,
And what wad kind heart wish for mair?

Carle, now the King's come !

Step out, Sir John, of projects rife,
Come win the thanks of an auld wife,
and bring him health and length of life:
Carle, now the King's come !'

THE BANNATYNE CLUB

This club of bibliophiles was founded by Sir Walter, who was its first president and wrote these verses for the first anniversary dinner, March, 1823.

ASSIST me, ye friends of Old Books and Old Wine,
To sing in the praises of sage Bannat-
tyne,
Who left such a treasure of old Scottish lore
As enables each age to print one volume
more.

One volume more, my friends, one
volume more,

We'll ransack old Banny for one volume more.

And first, Allan Ramsay, was eager to glean
From Bannatyne's Hortus his bright Ever-
green;
Two light little volumes—intended for four—

Will leave us the task to print one volume
more.

One volume more, etc.

His ways were not ours, for he cared not a pin

How much he left out or how much he put
in;

The truth of the reading he thought was a
bore,

So this accurate age calls for one volume
more.

One volume more, etc.

Correct and sagacious, then came my Lord
Hailes,

And weighed every letter in critical scales.
But left out some brief words which the prudish abhor,

And castrated Banny in one volume more.

One volume more, my friends, one
volume more;

We'll restore Banny's manhood in one
volume more.

John Pinkerton next, and I'm truly concerned

I can't call that worthy so candid as learned;

He railed at the plaid and blasphemed the
claymore,

And set Scots by the ears in his one volume
more.

One volume more, my friends, one
volume more,

Celt and Goth shall be pleased with
one volume more.

As bitter as gall and as sharp as a razor,
And feeding on herbs as a Nebuchadnezzar;
His diet too acid, his temper too sour,
Little Ritson came out with his two volumes
more.

But one volume, my friends, one volume more,

We'll dine on roast-beef and print one
volume more.

The stout Gothic yaditor, next on the roll,
With his beard like a brush and as black
as a coal;

And honest Greysteel that was true to the core,

Lent their hearts and their hands each to
one volume more.

One volume more, etc.

Since by these single champions what wonders were done,

What may not be achieved by our Thirty and One ?

Law, Gospel, and Commerce, we count in our corps,

And the Trade and the Press join for one
volume more

(One volume more, etc.)

Ancient libels and contraband books, I assure ye,

We'll print as secure from Exchequer or Jury:

Then hear your Committee and let them
count o'er

The Chiefs they intend in their three volumes more

Three volumes more, etc.

They'll produce you King Jamie, the sapient and Sext.

And the Rob of Dumblane and her Bishops come next;

Some copies, miscellaneous they'll add to your store,
 Manifold, most, yours to print four volumes
 more.
 Some volumes more, my friends, four volumes more,
 They draw your subscriptions for four volumes more.

CIVILIZATION

From Chapter IV of Quentin Durward, published in 1826.

Ah! I thought this the hour to sigh
 The sun has left the sea,
 The evening breeze just from the tower
 The evening breeze to see the sea.
 The back his eye who dwelled all day
 The back his eye who dwelled all day
 The back his eye who dwelled all day
 The back his eye who dwelled all day

Ah! I thought this the hour to sigh
 The sun has left the sea,
 The evening breeze just from the tower
 The evening breeze to see the sea.
 The back his eye who dwelled all day
 The back his eye who dwelled all day
 The back his eye who dwelled all day
 The back his eye who dwelled all day

THE BATTLE OF BLOIS

A poem written by the author in 1826.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

I've seen the day they would been saved
 Wi' the Tolbooth or wi' the Guard,
 Or maybe wud hae some regard
 For Jamie Laing —
 The Water-hole was right weel wared
 On sic a gang.

But whar's the gude Tolbooth gane now?
 Whar's the auld Claught, wi' red and blue?
 Whar's Jamie Laing? and whar's John
 Doe?
 And whar's the Weigh-house?
 Deil has't I see but what is new,
 Except the Playhouse!

Yourselfs are changed frae head to heel,
 There's some that gar the causeway reel
 With clanking hafe and rattling wheel,
 And horses carterie,
 Wha'd father's dandered hame as woe
 Wi' lass and master.

Myself being in the public line,
 I look for death I feared my crime,
 What would I do to find grace and
 And all things done
 But had a war gauge then a time
 It would be done

Myself being in the public line,
 I look for death I feared my crime,
 What would I do to find grace and
 And all things done
 But had a war gauge then a time
 It would be done

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

The battle of Blois was fought on the 12th of July 1428. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French. The English were defeated by the French.

patience I'll nae langer worry,
But be sae crouse
peak a word for aye Will Murray
That keeps this house.

are auld-fashioned things in truth,
ye've seen wonders mair uncouth;
actors shouldna suffer drouth
Or want of dramock,
ough they speak but wi' their mouth,
Not with their stamock.

ye take care of a' folk's pantry;
surely to hae stooden sentry
r this big house — that's far frae rent-
free —

For a lone sister,
aims as gude 's to be a ventri—
How'st ca'd — loquister.

I, sirs, gude'en, and have a care
bairns mak fun o' Meg nae mair;
gin they do, she tells you fair
And without failzie,
ure as ever ye sit there,
She'll tell the Bailie.

EPILOGUE

When Scott was collecting his stray poems in definitive edition, he wrote thus to Cone, October 22, 1824: 'I recovered the s with some difficulty. I believe it was spoken, but written for some play, afters withdrawn, in which Mrs. H. Siddons
o have spoken it in the character of Queen
' —

sages — for authority, pray, look en's morals or the copy-book —
sages to disparage woman's power, beauty is a fair but fading flower; —
not tell — I've small philosophy —
if it fades it does not surely die, like the violet, when decayed in bloom,
ives through many a year in rich perfume.
ness our theme to-night; two ages gone, bird wanes fast, since Mary filled the
throne.
f was her bloom with scarce one sunny
day
at Pinkie's field and fatal Fotherin-
gay:

But when, while Scottish hearts and blood
you boast,
Shall sympathy with Mary's woes be
lost?

O'er Mary's memory the learned quarrel,
By Mary's grave the poet plants his laurel,
Time's echo, old tradition, makes her
name

The constant burden of his faltering
themo;

In each old hall his gray-haired heralds
tell

Of Mary's picture and of Mary's cell,
And show — my fingers tingle at the thought —

The loads of tapestry which that poor queen wrought.

In vain did fate bestow a double dower
Of every ill that waits on rank and power,
Of every ill on beauty that attends —

False ministers, false lovers, and false friends.

Spite of three wedlocks so completely
curst,

They rose in ill from bad to worse and worst,

In spite of errors — I dare not say more,
For Duncan Targe lays hand on his clay-
more.

In spite of all, however humors vary,
There is a talisman in that word Mary,
That unto Scottish bosoms all and some
Is found the genuine open sesame!

In history, ballad, poetry, or novel,
It charms alike the castle and the hovel,
Even you — forgive me — who, demure and
shy,

Gorge not each bait nor stir at every fly,
Must rise to this, else in her ancient reign
The Rose of Scotland has survived in vain.

VERSES FROM REDGAUNTLET

Published in 1824.

I

A CATCH OF COWLEY'S ALTERED

From Letter x.

For all our men were very very merry,
And all our men were drinking:
There were two men of mine,
Three men of thine,

And three that belonged to old Sir Thom
o' Lyne.
As they went to the ferry, they were very
very merry,
And all our men were drinking.

Jack looked at the sun, and cried, Fire,
fire, fire !
Tom stabled his keffel in Birkendale mire;
Jem started a calf, and hallooed for a stag;
Will mounted a gate-post instead of his nag:
For all our men were very very merry,
And all our men were drinking;
There were two men of mine,
Three of thine,
And three that belonged to old Sir Thom
o' Lyne.
As they went to the ferry, they were very
very merry,
For all our men were drinking.

II

'AS LORDS THEIR LABORERS' HIRE DE-LAY'

From Chapter ix.

As lords their laborers' hire delay,
Fate quits our toil with hopes to come,
Which, if far short of present pay,
Still owns a debt and names a sum.

Quit not the pledge, frail sufferer, then,
Although a distant date be given;
Despair is treason towards man,
And blasphemy to Heaven.

LINES

ADDRESSED TO MONSIEUR ALEXANDRE,
THE CELEBRATED VENTRILOQUIST

This M. Alexandre is better known now as
M. Alexandre Vattemaire, who initiated a system of international literary exchanges.

'When Monsieur Alexandre, the celebrated ventriloquist, was in Scotland, in 1824, he paid a visit to Abbotsford, where he entertained his distinguished host, and the other visitors, with his unrivalled imitations. Next morning, when he was about to depart, Sir Walter felt a good deal embarrassed, as to the sort of acknowledgment he should offer; but at length, resolving that it would probably be most agreeable to the young foreigner to be paid in professional coin, if in any, he stepped aside for a few minutes, and, on returning, presented him with this epigram. The reader need hardly be reminded, that Sir Walter Scott held the office of Sheriff of the county of Selkirk.' — Scotch Newspaper, 1830.

Of yore, in old England, it was not thought good
To carry two visages under one hood;
What should folk say to you? who have faces such plenty,
'That from under one hood, you last night
showed us twenty !
Stand forth, arch-deceiver, and tell us in
truth,
Are you handsome or ugly, in age or in youth?
Man, woman, or child — a dog or a mouse?
Or are you, at once, each live thing in the house?
Each live thing, did I ask? each dead implement, too,
A work-shop in your person, — saw, chisel,
and screw !
Above all, are you one individual? I know
You must be at least Alexandre and Co.
But I think you're a troop, an assemblage,
a mob,
And that I, as the Sheriff, should take up
the job;
And instead of rehearsing your wonders in
verse,
Must read you the Riot-Act, and bid you disperse.

TO J. G. LOCKHART, ESQ.

ON THE COMPOSITION OF MAIDA'S EPI-TAPH

In October, 1824, died Maida, the most celebrated of all Sir Walter's faithful dogs and companions, and his master had inscribed upon his monument the following epitaph: —

'Maida marmoreâ dormis sub imagine Maida
Ad januam domini: at tibi terra levis.'

'Thun Englished,' says Sir Walter in a letter to his son Charles, 'by an eminent hand: —

'Beneath the sculptured form which late you wore,
Sleep soundly, Maida, at your master's door.'

'The monument here mentioned,' says Lockhart, was a leaping-on-stone to which the skill of Scott's master-mason had given the shape of Maida recumbent. It had stood by the gate of Abbotsford a year or more before the dog died. The Latin was Lockhart's, the English, Sir Walter's, but James Ballantyne, who was an over zealous admirer of his great author, saw the inscription, and when he went back to Edinburgh printed in a newspaper with pride, the Latin verses as Sir Walter's. It happened that Lockhart's inscription had a false quantity januam, but Ballantyne not only did not discover this; his memory played him false, and in repeating the inscription he put jaces for dormis. At once the newspaper paragraphist raised a laugh over 'Sir Walter's false quantities.' Scott, in his generous nature, refused to shield himself behind Lockhart, and much pother was made over the matter. The verses which follow savor, as Lockhart says, of Scott's 'recent overhauling of Swift and Sheridan's doggrel epistles.'

DEAR JOHN, — I some time ago wrote to inform his

Fat worship of jaces, misprinted for dormis;

But that several Southrons assured me the januam

Was a twitch to both ears of Ass Priscian's cranium.

You perhaps may observe that one Lionel Berguer,

In defence of our blunder appears a stout arguer.

But at length I have settled, I hope, all these clatters,

By a roul in the papers, fine place for such matters.

I have therefore to make it for once my command, sir,

That my gudeson shall leave the whole thing in my hand, sir,

And by no means accomplish what James says you threaten, —

Some banter in Blackwood to claim your dog-Latin.

I have various reasons of weight, on my word, sir,

For pronouncing a step of this sort were absurd, sir.

Firstly, erudite sir, 't was against your advising

I adopted the lines this monstrosity lies in;
For you modestly hinted my English translation

Would become better far such a dignified station.

Second, how, in God's name, would my bacon be saved

By not having writ what I clearly engraved?

On the contrary, I, on the whole, think it better

To be whipped as the thief, than his lousy resetter.

Thirdly, don't you perceive that I don't care a boddle

Although fifty false metres were flung at my noddle,

For my back is as broad and as hard as Benlomon's,

And I treat as I please both the Greeks and the Romans;

Whereas the said heathens might rather look serious

At a kick on their drum from the scribe of Valerius.

And, fourthly and lastly, it is my good pleasure

To remain the sole source of that murderous measure.

So, stet pro ratione voluntas, — be tractile,

Invade not, I say, my own dear little dactyl;

If you do, you'll occasion a breach in our intercourse.

To-morrow will see me in town for the winter-course,

But not at your door, at the usual hour, sir,

My own pye-house daughter's good prog to devour, sir.

Ergo, peace! — on your duty your squeamishness throtile,

And we'll soothe Priscian's spleen with a canny third bottle.

A fig for all dactyls, a fig for all spondees,

A fig for all dunces and Dominic Grundys;

A fig for dry thrapples, south, north, east, and west, sir,

Speats and raxes ere five for a famishing guest, sir;

And as Fatsman and I have some topics for haver, he'll

Be invited, I hope, to meet me and Dame Peveril,

Upon whom, to say nothing of Oury and Anne, you a Dog shall be deemed if you fasten your Janua.

SONGS FROM THE BETROTHED

Published in 1825.

I

'SOLDIER, WAKE!'

From Chapter xix.

SOLDIER, wake ! the day is peeping,
Honor ne'er was won in sleeping;
Never when the sunbeams still
Lay unreflected on the hill:
'T is when they are glinted back
From axe and armour, spear and jack,
That they promise future story
Many a page of deathless glory.
Shields that are the foeman's terror,
Ever are the morning's mirror.

Arm and up ! the morning beam
Hath called the rustic to his team,
Hath called the falc'ner to the lake,
Hath called the huntsman to the brake;
The early student ponders o'er
His dusty tomes of ancient lore.
Soldier, wake ! thy harvest, fame;
Thy study, conquest; war, thy game.
Shield, that would be foeman's terror,
Still should gleam the morning's mirror.

Poor hire repays the rustic's pain;
More paltry still the sportsman's gain:
Vainest of all, the student's theme
Ends in some metaphysic dream:
Yet each is up, and each has toiled,
Since first the peep of dawn has smiled:
And each is engerer in his aim
Than he who bartereth life for fame.
Up, up, and arm thee, son of terror !
Be thy bright shield the morning's mirror.

II

WOMAN'S FAITH

From Chapter xi.

WOMAN's faith, and woman's trust:
Write the characters in dust,
Stamp them on the running stream,
Print them on the moon's pale beam,
And each evanescent letter
Shall be clearer, firmer, better,

And more permanent, I ween,
Than the things those letters mean.

I have strained the spider's thread
'Gainst the promise of a maid;
I have weighed a grain of sand
'Gainst her plight of heart and hand;
I told my true love of the token,
How her faith proved light, and her word
was broken:
Again her word and truth she plight,
And I believed them again ere night.

III

'I ASKED OF MY HARP'

From Chapter xxxi. 'A lay, of which we can offer only a few fragments, literally translated from the ancient language in which they were chanted, premising that they are in that excursive symbolical style of poetry, which Taliessin, Llewarch Hen, and other bards, had derived perhaps from the time of the Druids.'

I ASKED of my harp, 'Who hath injured thy chords ?'
And she replied, 'The crooked finger, which
I mocked in my tune.'
A blade of silver may be bended — a blade
of steel abideth:
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance en-
dureth.

The sweet taste of mead passeth from the lips,
But they are long corroded by the juice of wormwood;
The lamb is brought to the shambles, but the wolf rangeth the mountain;
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance en-
dureth.

I asked the red-hot iron, when it glim-mered on the anvil,
'Wherefore glowest thou longer than the fire-brand ?'
'I was born in the dark mine, and the brand in the pleasant greenwood.'
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance en-
dureth.

I asked the green oak of the assembly,
wherefore its boughs were dry and seared like the horns of the stag ?

And it showed me that a small worm had gnawed its roots.
The boy who remembered the scourge, un-did the wicket of the castle at midnight.
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance en-
dureth.
Lightning destroyeth temples, though their spires pierce the clouds;
Storms destroy armadas, though their sails
intercept the gale.
He that is in his glory falleth, and that by a contemptible enemy.
Kindness fadeth away, but vengeance en-
dureth.

IV

'WIDOWED WIFE AND WEDDED MAID'

From the last Chapter.

WIDOWED wife and wedded maid,
Retrothed, betrayer, and betrayed,
All is done that has been said;
Vanda's wrong hath been y-wroken:
Take her pardon by this token.

VERSES FROM THE TALISMAN

Published in 1825.

I

'DARK AHRIMAN, WHOM IRAK STILL'

From Chapter iii.

DARK Ahriman, whom Irak still Holds origin of woe and ill!
When, bending at thy shrine,
We view the world with troubled eye,
Where see we, 'neath the extended sky,
An empire matching thine!

If the Benigner Power can yield
A fountain in the desert field,
Where weary pilgrims drink;
Thine are the waves that lash the rock,
Thine the tornado's deadly shock,
Where countless navies sink!

Or if He bid the soil dispense
Balsams to cheer the sinking sense,
How few can they deliver

From lingering pains, or pang intense,
Red Fever, spotted Pestilence,
The arrows of thy quiver!

Chief in Man's bosom sits thy sway,
And frequent, while in words we pray
Before another throne,
Whate'er of specious form be there,
The secret meaning of the prayer
Is, Ahriman, thine own.

Say, hast thou feeling, sense, and form,
Thunder thy voice, thy garments storm,
As Eastern Magi say;
With sentient soul of hate and wrath,
And wings to sweep thy deadly path,
And fangs to tear thy prey?

Or art thou mixed in Nature's source,
An ever-operating force,
Converting good to ill;
An evil principle innate,
Contending with our better fate,
And oh! victorious still?

Howe'er it be, dispute is vain.
On all without thou hold'st thy reign,
Nor less on all within;
Each mortal passion's fierce career,
Love, hate, ambition, joy, and fear,
Thou goadest into sin.

Whene'er a sunny gleam appears,
To brighten up our vale of tears,
Thou art not distant far;
Mid such brief solace of our lives,
Thou whett'st our very banquet-knives
To tools of death and war.

Thus, from the moment of our birth,
Long as we linger on the earth,
Thou rul'st the fate of men;
Thine are the pangs of life's last hour,
And — who dare answer? — is thy power,
Dark Spirit! ended THEN?

II

'WHAT BRAVE CHIEF SHALL HEAD THE FORCES'

From Chapter xi. 'A bearing was at length procured for the poet preferred, who sung, in high German, stanzas which may be thus translated:—

What brave chief shall head the forces,
Where the red-cross legions gather?
Best of horsemen, best of horses,
Highest head and fairest feather.

Ask not Austria why, 'midst princes,
Still her banner rises highest;
Ask as well the strong-wing'd eagle
Why to heaven he soars the highest.

III

THE BLOODY VEST

From Chapter xvi. 'The song of Blondel was, of course, in the Norman language; but the verses which follow express its meaning and its manner.'

'T was near the fair city of Benevent,
When the sun was setting on bough and bent,

And knights were preparing in bower and tent,

On the eve of the Baptist's tournament;
When to Lincoln green a stripling gent,
Well seeming a page by a princess sent,
Wandered the camp, and, still as he went,
Inquired for the Englishman, Thomas à Keut.

Far hath he fared, and farther must fare,
Till he finds his pavilion nor stately nor rare, —

Little save iron and steel was there:
And, as lacking the coin to pay armorer's cure,

With his snowy arms to the shoulders bare,

The good knight with hammer and file did repair

The mail that to-morrow must see him wear,

For the honor of Saint John and his lady fair.

'Thus speaks my lady,' the page said he,

And the knight bent lowly both head and knee.

'She is Benevent's Princess so high in degree,

And thou art as lowly as knight may well be —

He that would climb so lofty a tree,

Or spring such a gulf as divides her from thee,
Must dare some high deed, by which all men may see
His ambition is backed by his lie chivalrie.

'Therefore thus speaks my lady,' the fair page he said,
And the knight lowly louted with hand and with head:

'Fling aside the good armor in which thou art clad,

And don thou this weed of her night-gear instead,

For a hauberk of steel, a kirtle of thread:
And charge thus attired, in the tournament dread,

And fight, as thy wont is, where most blood is shed,

And bring honor away, or remain with the dead.'

Untroubled in his look, and untroubled in his breast,

The knight the weed hath taken, and reverently hath kissed:

'Now blessed be the moment, the messenger be blest!

Much honored do I hold me in my lady's high behest;

And say unto my lady, in this dear night-weed dressed,

To the best armed champion I will not veil my crest:

But if I live and bear me well, 't is her turn to take the test.'

Here, gentles, ends the foremost fyre of the Lay of the Bloody Vest.

FYTTE SECOND

The Baptist's fair murrów beheld gallant feats:

There was winning of honor, and losing of seats:

There was bewing with falchions, and splintering of staves,

The victors won glory, the vanquished won graves.

Oh, many a knight there fought bravely and well,

Yet one was accounted his peers to excel,
And 't was he whose rose-armor on lady and breast

Secured the weed of a damsel when bound for her rest.

There were some dealt him wounds, that were bloody and sore,
But others respected his plight, and fore-
bore.

'It is some oath of honor,' they said, 'and I trow,

'T were unknightly to slay him achieving his vow.

Then the Prince, for his sake, bade the tournament cease,

He flung down his warder, the trumpets
sung peace;

And the judges declare, and competitors
yield,

That the Knight of the Night-gear was first in the field.

The feast it was nigh, and the mass it was nigher,

When before the fair Princess low louted a
squire,

And delivered a garment unseemly to view,
With sword-cut and spear-thrust, all hacked
and pierced through;

All rent and all tattered, all clotted with
blood,

With foam of the horses, with dust, and
with mud;

Not the point of that lady's small finger, I
ween,

Could have rested on spot was unsullied
and clean.

'This token my master, Sir Thomas à
Kent,

Restores to the Princess of fair Benevent:
He that climbs the tall tree has won right to the fruit,

He that leaps the wide gulf should prevail

in his suit;
Through life's utmost peril the prize I have

won,
And now must the faith of my mistress be

shown;
For she who prompts knights on such danger to run,

Must avouch his true service in front of the sun.

'I restore,' says my master, 'the garment
I've worn,

And I claim of the Princess to don it in
turn,

For its stains and its rents she should prize
it the more,

Since by shame 't is unsullied, though crimsoned with gore.'

Then deep blushed the Princess, yet kissed
she and pressed

The blood-spotted robes to her lips and her breast.

'Go tell my true knight, church and chamber shall show

If I value the blood on this garment or no.'

And when it was time for the nobles to

go,
In solemn procession to minster and
mass,

The first walked the Princess in purple and
pall,

But the blood-beameared night-robe she wore over all;

And eke, in the hall, where they all sat at
dine,

When she knelt to her father and proffered
the wine,

Over all her rich robes and state jewels she wore

That wimple unseemly bedabbled with gore.

Then lords whispered ladies, as well you may think,

And ladies replied, with nod, titter, and wink:

And the Prince, who in anger and shame had looked down,

Turned at length to his daughter, and spoke with a frown:

'Now since thou hast published thy folly
and guilt,

E'en atone with thy hand for the blood
thou hast spilt;

Yet sore for your boldness you both will repent,

When you wander as exiles from fair Benevent.'

Then out spoke stout Thomas, in hall
where he stood,

Exhausted and feeble, but dauntless of
mood;

'The blood that I lost for this daughter of
thine,

I poured forth as freely as flask gives its
wine:

And if for my sake she brooks penance and
blame,

Do not doubt I will save her from suffering and shame;

And light will she reck of thy princedom
and rent,
When I hail her, in England, the Countess of Kent.'

VERSES FROM WOODSTOCK

Published in 1838.

I

'BY PATHLESS MARCH, BY GREENWOOD
TREE'

From Chapter xiv

By pathless march, by greenwood tree,
It is thy weird to follow me:
To follow me through the ghastly moon-
light,
To follow me through the shadows of night,
To follow me, comrade, still art thou bound:
I conjure thee by the unstanched wound,
I conjure thee by the last words I spoke,
When the body slept and the spirit awoke,
In the very last pangs of the deadly stroke!

II

GLEE FOR KING CHARLES

From Chapter xii

Bring the bowl which you boast,
Fill it up to the brim;
T is to him we love most,
And to all who love him.
Brave gallants, stand up,
And against ye, base carles!
Were there death in the cup,
Here's a health to King Charles!

Though he wanders through dangers,
Unaided, unknown,
Dependent on strangers,
Estranged from his own;
Though 't is under our breath
Amidst torments and perils,
Here's to honor and faith,
And a health to King Charles!

Let such honors abound
As the time can afford
The knee on the ground,
And the hand on the sword;

But the time shall come round
When, 'mid Lords, Dukes, and Earls,
The loud trumpet shall sound,
Here's a health to King Charles!

III

'AN HOUR WITH THEE'

From Chapter xvi

An hour with thee! When earliest day
Dapples with gold the eastern gray,
Oh, what can frame my mind to bear
The toil and turmoil, care and care,
New griefs, which coming hours unfold,
And sad remembrance of the old?

One hour with thee!

One hour with thee! When burning June
Waves his red flag at pitch of noon;
What shall repay the faithful swain
His labor on the sultry plain;
And more than cave or sheltering bough,
Cool feverish blood, and throbbing brow?

One hour with thee!

One hour with thee! When sun is set,
Oh! what can teach me to forget
The thankless labors of the day;
The hopes, the wishes, flung away;
The increasing wants and lessening gains,
The master's pride who scores my pains?

One hour with thee!

IV

'SON OF A WITCH'

From Chapter xiii

Son of a witch,
Mayst thou die in a ditch,
With the butchers who back thy quarrels;
And rot above ground,
While the world shall resound
A welcome to Royal King Charles.

LINES TO SIR CUTHBERT SHARP

Lockhart, in Chapter lxxv of the Life, writes: Sir Cuthbert Sharp, who had been particularly kind and attentive to Scott when at Sandhurst, happened, in visiting to him at ster of business, to say he hoped he had often his friends in that quarter. Sir answer to Sir Cuthbert (October, 1827) been introduced to him by his old and ed, Mr. Surtees of Mainsforth) begins thee! No! my worthy fere!

plithe mirth and gallant cheer!
boner stretch me on my bier!
Forget thee? No.

the universal shout
panny Sunderland 'spoke out:
which knaves affect to doubt:
Forget thee? No.

you? No: though nowaday ard your knowing people say,
e the debt you cannot pay,
and it far the thriftiest way'—
But I?—O no.

your kindness found for all room,
though large, seemed still a small
room,
my Surtees in a hall-room:
Forget you? No.

your sprightly dampty-diddles,
uty tripping to the fiddles,
my lovely friends the Liddells:
Forget you? No.

VERSES FROM CHRONICLES OF THE CANONGATE

Published in 1827.

I

OLD SONG

The Highland Widow. Chapter II.

'm come to the Low Country,
a ock, conversation,
ut a penny in my pouch
buy a meal for me.
the president of my clan,
ng, long may I require,
Destined was the wretched maid.
I I should be was under.

II

THE LAY OF POOR LOUISE

From Chapter x. of The Fair Maid of Perth.

Ah, poor Louise! the livelong day
She roams from cot to castle gay;
And still her voice and viol say,
Ah, maids, beware the woodland way,
Think on Louise.

Ah, poor Louise! The sun was high,
It smirched her cheek, it dimmed her eye,
The woodland walk was cool and nigh,
Where birds with chiming streamlets vie
To cheer Louise.

Ah, poor Louise! The savage bear
Made ne'er that lovely grove his lair;
The wolves molest not paths so fair—
But better far had such been there
For poor Louise.

Ah, poor Louise! In woody wold
She met a huntsman fair and bold;
His baldrick was of silk and gold,
And many a witching tale he told
To poor Louise.

Ah, poor Louise! Small cause to pine
Hadst thou for treasures of the mine;
For peace of mind, that gift divine,
And spotless innocence were thine,
Ah, poor Louise!

Ah, poor Louise! Thy treasure's left!
I know not if by lines or theft,
Or part by violence, part by gift;
But misery is all that's left
To poor Louise.

Let poor Louise where e'er she roam!
She will not bring your beauty home,
Or turn the gay with wailing tone—
For Heaven has grace, and earth a grace,
For poor Louise.

III

DEATH SONG

From Chapter xii. — Her last moment when she was going the breath was hurried from the bosom of the dear Alice's bosom, which

In forest the shade of the summer is dim
 In forest and around the slopes of the mountain
 In forest and around the slopes of the mountain
 In forest and around the slopes of the mountain
 In forest and around the slopes of the mountain

Wherever I wander, still and lone
 Wherever I wander, still and lone
 Wherever I wander, still and lone
 Wherever I wander, still and lone
 Wherever I wander, still and lone

There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height

There among the dead uprolling
 There among the dead uprolling
 There among the dead uprolling
 There among the dead uprolling
 There among the dead uprolling

When the sun has set and gone
 When the sun has set and gone
 When the sun has set and gone
 When the sun has set and gone
 When the sun has set and gone

There strange creatures still awake
 There strange creatures still awake
 There strange creatures still awake
 There strange creatures still awake
 There strange creatures still awake

THE SONG OF THE SONGS

From Chapter I. The words are a translation of the original text. The words are a translation of the original text.
 The words are a translation of the original text.
 The words are a translation of the original text.

Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are

Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are

Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are
 Yes, the words are

I have it, and that is all
 I have it, and that is all
 I have it, and that is all
 I have it, and that is all
 I have it, and that is all

THE SONG OF THE SONGS

These words, written in 1887, were published in The Song of the Songs. The words are a translation of the original text.
 The words are a translation of the original text.

There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height

There strange creatures still awake
 There strange creatures still awake
 There strange creatures still awake
 There strange creatures still awake
 There strange creatures still awake

There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height

There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height

There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height
 There upon the mountain's height

The noble hound — he dies, he dies;
 Death, death has glazed his fixed eyes;
 Stiff on the bloody heath he lies
 Without a groan or quiver.

Now day may break and bugle sound,
 And whoop and hollow ring around,
 And o'er his couch the stag may bound,
 But Keeldar sleeps forever.

Dilated nostrils, staring eyes,
 Mark the poor palfrey's mute surprise;
 He knows not that his comrade dies,

Nor what is death — but still
 His aspect hath expression drear
 Of grief and wonder mixed with fear,
 Like startled children when they hear
 Some mystic tale of ill.

But he that bent the fatal bow
 Can well the sum of evil know,
 And o'er his favorite bending low
 In speechless grief recline;
 Can think he hears the senseless clay
 In unreproachful accents say,
 'The hand that took my life away,
 Dear master, was it thine ?

And if it be, the shaft be blessed
 Which sure some erring aim addressed,
 Since in your service prized, caressed,
 I in your service die;
 And you may have a fleetier hound
 To match the dun-deer's merry bound,
 But by your couch will ne'er be found
 So true a guard as I.'

And to his last stout Percy rued
 The fatal chance, for when he stood
 'Gainst fearful odds in deadly feud
 And fell amid the fray,
 E'en with his dying voice he cried,
 'Had Keeldar but been at my side,
 Your trencherous ambush had been spied —
 I had not died to-day !'

Remembrance of the erring bow
 Long since had joined the tides which
 flow,
 Conveying human bliss and woe
 Down dark oblivion's river;
 But Art can Time's stern doom arrest
 And snatch his spoil from Lethe's breast,
 And, in her Cooper's colors drest,
 The scene shall live forever.

THE SECRET TRIBUNAL

From Anne of Geierstein, published in 1829.

From Chapter xx. 'Philipson could perceive that the lights proceeded from many torches, borne by men muffled in black cloaks, like mourners at a funeral, or the Black Friars of Saint Francis's Order, wearing their cowls drawn over their heads, so as to conceal their features. They appeared anxiously engaged in measuring off a portion of the apartment; and, while occupied in that employment, they sung, in the ancient German language, rhymes more rude than Philipson could well understand, but which may be imitated thus : —

MEASURERS of good and evil,
 Bring the square, the line, the level, —
 Rear the altar, dig the trench,
 Blood both stone and ditch shall drench.
 Cubits six, from end to end,
 Must the fatal bench extend;
 Cubits six, from side to side,
 Judge and culprit must divide.
 On the east the Court assembles,
 On the west the Accused trembles:
 Answer, brethren, all and one,
 Is the ritual rightly done ?

On life and soul, on blood and bone,
 One for all, and all for one,
 We warrant this is rightly done.

How wears the night ? Doth morning
 shine
 In early radiance on the Rhine ?
 What music floats upon his tide ?
 Do birds the tardy morning chide ?
 Brethren, look out from hill and height,
 And answer true, how wears the night ?

The night is old; on Rhine's broad breast
 Glance drowsy stars which long to rest.
 No beams are twinkling in the east.
 There is a voice upon the flood,
 The stern still call of blood for blood;
 'Tis time we listen the behest.

Up, then, up ! When day's at rest,
 'Tis time that such as we are watchers;

Bliss to judgment, brethren, rise!
Vigilant be not sleepy eyes,
His and eight are watchers.

THE FORAY

Inscribed in Thomson's Sacred Collection, 1830 and set to music by John Whitfield,
the first time.

But lo! at our doors on the board has been spread,
And the last book of war in our gables is
sent,

O! up, ye brave husband! bold sword
and bow,
Stand ye ready to dash and there's a word
to be won.

But you that in battle were wont to
fight,
But a space must be done as they grow
from the world.

And now in darkness through temple
and gate,
The place of the sword and the love of the gates.

But such a journeying, the soul must
And the soul that had been
in the world.

There is a word, my master! for the warrior's hand.

And a word that shall be
in the world.

The word is this, my master! I have
in the world.

There is a word in the world, and
in the world.

And the word is this, my master! I have
in the world.

And the word is this, my master! I have
in the world.

And the word is this, my master! I have
in the world.

And the word is this, my master! I have
in the world.

And the word is this, my master! I have
in the world.

And the word is this, my master! I have
in the world.

INSCRIPTION

FOR THE MONUMENT OF THE REV.
GEORGE SCOTT

George Scott was the son of Hugh Scott of Harden. He died at Kentisbeare, in Devonshire, where he was rector of the church, in 1830. The verses are on his tomb.

To youth, to age, alike, this tablet pale
Tells the brief moral of its tragic tale.
Art thou a parent? Reverence this bier,
The parents' fondest hopes lie buried here.
Art thou a youth, prepared on life to start,
With opening talents and a generous heart,
Fair hopes and flattering prospects all thine
own?

Lo! here their end — a monumental stone.
But let unheeding time each sorrow
thought.

Heaven covered its champion ere the fight was fought.

SONGS FROM THE BOOK OF PSALMS

Scott's song, The Lord is Jehovah, though not published till 1830 was described, and apparently written in 1817, and the song of David, The Lord is Jehovah, was written in 1817.
It was also used in the song and service and service of the Lord.

THE SUN FROM THE LAKE

The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low.

The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low.

The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low,
The sun from the lake is low.

And to the thicket wanders slow
The hind beside the hart.
The woodlark at his partner's side
Twitters his closing song —
All meet whom day and care divide,
But Leonard tarries long.

II

'WE LOVE THE SHRILL TRUMPET'

We love the shrill trumpet, we love the drum's rattle,
They call us to sport, and they call us to battle;
And old Scotland shall laugh at the threats
of a stranger,
While our comrades in pastime are comrades in danger.

If there's mirth in our house, 'tis our neighbor that shares it —
If peril approach, 'tis our neighbor that dares it;
And when we lead off to the pipe and the tabor,
The fair hand we press is the hand of a neighbor.

Then close your ranks, comrades, the bands
that combine them,
Faith, friendship, and brotherhood, joined to entwine them;
And we'll laugh at the threats of each insolent stranger,
While our comrades in sport are our comrades in danger.

III

'ADMIRE NOT THAT I GAINED THE PRIZE'

ADMIRE not that I gained the prize
From all the village crew;
How could I fail with hand or eyes
When heart and faith were true?

And when in floods of rosy wine
My comrades drowned their cares,
I thought but that thy heart was mine,
My own leapt light as theirs.

My brief delay then do not blame,
Nor deem your swain untrue;

My form but lingered at the game,
My soul was still with you.

IV

'WHEN THE TEMPEST'

WHEN the tempest's at the loudest
On its gale the eagle rides;
When the ocean rolls the proudest
Through the foam the sea-bird glides —
All the rage of wind and sea
Is subdued by constancy.

Gnawing want and sickness pining,
All the ills that men endure,
Each their various pangs combining,
Constancy can find a cure —
Pain and Fear and Poverty
Are subdued by constancy.

Bar me from each wonted pleasure,
Make me abject, mean, and poor,
Heap on insults without measure,
Chain me to a dungeon floor —
I'll be happy, rich, and free,
If endowed with constancy.

V

BONNY DUNDEE

AIR — 'The Bonnets of Bonny Dundee'

To the Lords of Convention 't was Claver'se who spoke,
'Ere the King's crown shall fall there are crowns to be broke;
So let each Cavalier who loves honor and
me,
Come follow the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, come fill up my
can,
Come saddle your horses and call up
your men;
Come open the West Port and let me
gang free,
And it's room for the bonnets of Bonny
Dundee!

Dundee he is mounted, he rides up the street,
The bells are rung backward, the drums
they are beat;

But the Provost, dounce man, said, 'Just e'en let him be;
The Gude Town is weel quit of that Deil of Dundee.'
Come fill up my cup, etc.

As he rode down the sanctified bends of the flow,
Ilk carline was flyting and shaking her
pou;
But the young plants of grace they looked contin and dee.
Thinking, luck to thy bonnet, thou Bonny
Dundee!
Come fill up my cup, etc.

With nose-feathered Whigs the Grassmarket was examined
As if half the West had set tryst to be hanged;
There was spite in each look, there was lust in each e'e,
As they watched for the bonnets of Bonny
Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, etc.

These coveys of Kilmarnock had spite and had spurs,
And long-hafted gullies to kill Cavaliers,
But they shrunk to close-heads and the
onsure way was free,
At the loss of the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, etc.

He spurred to the foot of the proud Castle-
rock,
And with the gay Gordon he gallantly
spoke,
'Let Mons Meg and her murrows speak
two words or three,
For the loss of the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.'
Come fill up my cup, etc.

The Gordon demands of him which way he goes—
'Where'er shall direct me the shade of Montrose'
Your Grace in short space shall hear tidings
of me,
Or this box lies the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, etc.

'There are hills beyond Pentland and lands
beyond Forth,
If there's lords in the Lowlands, there's chiefs in the North;
There are wild Duniewassals three thousand times three,
Will cry hough! for the bonnet of Bonny
Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, etc.

'There's brass on the target of barkwood ball-hide:
There's steel in the scabbard that dangles
beside:
The brass shall be burnished, the steel
shall flash free,
At a loss of the bonnet of Bonny Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, etc.

'Away to the hills, to the caves, to the rocks—
Ere I own an usurper, I'll couch with the fox,
And tremble, false Whigs, in the midst of
your glee,
You have not seen the last of my bonnet and me.'
Come fill up my cup, etc.

He waved his proud hand and the trumpets were blown,
The kettle-drums clashed, and the horsemen rode on,
Till on Raveston's cliffs and on Cleburn-
ton's lee
Died away the wild war-notes of Bonny
Dundee.
Come fill up my cup, come fill up my cup,
Come saddle the horses and call up
the men;
Come open your gates and let me go
free,
For it's up with the bonnets of Bonny
Dundee!

57

'WHEN FRIENDS ARE MET'

When friends are met o'er merry cheer
And lovely eyes are laughing near,
And in the goblet's bosom clear
The cares of day are drowned,

glasses are made and bumpers quaffed,
 And Wit shoots his roving shaft,
 With his jovial laugh has laughed,
 'Tis our banquet crowned,
     Ah! gay,
 'Tis our banquet crowned.

glees are sung and catches trolled,
 Abfulness grows bright and bold,
 Duty is no longer cold,
 Age no longer dull;
 Whims are brief and cocks do crow
 As it is time to go,
 For to part we do not know,
 'Tis our feast at full,
     Ah! gay,
 'Tis our feast at full.

'HITHER WE COME'

g from the drama of Auchindrane; or
Shire Tragedy, published in 1830.

HER we come,
 Slaves to the drum,
 Longer we list to its rattle;
 On to the wars,
 Their slashes and scars,
 Rich, and the storm, and the battle.

Some are some of us maimed,
 Some that are lamed,
 One of old aches are complaining;
 We'll take up the tools
 As we flung by like fools,
 Don Spaniard to go a-campaigning.

Hathorn doth vow
 Turn to the plough,
 Cease to his anvil and hammer;
 Weaver shall find room
 In wight-wapping loom,
 Our clerk shall teach writing and Grammar.

DEATH OF DON PEDRO

part included this ballad in his Ancient Ballads, published in 1823, and credits itation to Sir Walter. He reminds the that it was quoted more than once by as in his Don Quixote.

HENRY and King Pedro clasping,
 Hold in straining arms each other;
 Tugging hard and closely grasping,
 Brother proves his strength with brother.

Harmless pastime, sport fraternal,
 Blends not thus their limbs in strife;
 Either aims, with rage infernal,
 Naked dagger, sharpened knife.

Close Don Henry grapples Pedro,
 Pedro holds Don Henry strait;
 Breathing, this, triumphant fury,
 That, despair and mortal hate.

Sole spectator of the struggle,
 Stands Don Henry's page afar,
 In the chase, who bore his bugle,
 And who bore his sword in war.

Down they go in deadly wrestle,
 Down upon the earth they go,
 Fierce King Pedro has the vantage,
 Stout Don Henry falls below.

Marking then the fatal crisis,
 Up the page of Henry ran,
 By the waist he caught Don Pedro,
 Aiding thus the fallen man.

'King to place, or to depose him,
 Dwelleth not in my desire.
 But the duty which he owes him,
 To his master pays the squire.'

Now Don Henry has the upmost,
 Now King Pedro lies beneath,
 In his heart his brother's poniard,
 Instant finds its bloody sheath.

Thus with mortal gasp and quiver,
 While the blood in bubbles welled,
 Fled the fiercest soul that ever
 In a Christian bosom dwelled.

LINES ON FORTUNE

'Another object of this journey was to consult, on the advice of Dr. Ebenezer Clarkson, a skilful mechanist, by name Fortune, about a contrivance for the support of the lame limb, which had of late given him much pain, as well as inconvenience. Mr. Fortune produced a clever piece of handiwork, and Sir Walter felt at first great relief from the use of it: inasmuch that his spirits rose to quite the old pitch, and his letter to me upon the occasion overflows with merry applications of sundry maxims and verses about Fortune. "Fortes Fortuna adiuvat" — he says — "never more sing I!" Lockhart, Chapter lxxix. The first stanza is an old Elizabethan song. The second, Scott's palinode, appears to be his last effort in verse. The incident was in February, 1831.

FORTUNE, my Foe, why dost thou frown on me?
And will my Fortune never better be?

Wilt thou, I say, forever breed my
pain?
And wilt thou ne'er return my joys
again?

No — let my ditty be henceforth —

Fortune, my friend, how well thou favor-est me!

A kinder Fortune man did never see!
Thou propp'st my thigh, thou ridd'st my knee of pain,

I'll walk, I'll mount — I'll be a man
again. —

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

JUVENILE LINES

RELATION FROM VIRGIL

graphy tells us that his translations from Horace and Virgil were by Dr. Adam. One of these written in a weak boyish crawl, and marks still visible, had been preserved by his mother; it was in a cover, inscribed by the young Waller's first lines, 1782.<sup>60</sup> — of Scott, Chapter iii.

Etna thunders nigh,
 Itchy whirlwinds to the sky
 Of smoke, which still as they as-huge balls of fire are tossed, tars, and in the smoke are lost mount, with vast convulsions

ks, which instantly are turned solid to the stony core,
be liquid as the huge mass flows,
is with greater weight recoils undergoing from the bottom beds.

THE INDEX-ATOM

Introduction in the last ha
signed off with a "Thank you" spread up a thousand streets which each appeared to have a woman up in a two stage of an opera house with the efficient and powerful and joyful faces of the Lachlan Hughes of the last 10 years.

1. The first part of the document is a letter from the President of the United States to the Congress, dated January 1, 1801. It is a formal address, and it begins with the words "I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th inst."

— James Institution, Brooklyn, N.Y.

and the other two are the same as the first.

188 1848 1849 1850 1851

These items as well as the manuscript, were found wrapped in a paper with the name of Dr. Adams. - Waterbury, July 1841.
- Lockhart, Chapter III

Through evening clouds, they settling o'er
 And luminous time, over the display
 That great content of passion;
 Then let the silent world, sleep, call'd night,
 When life's a stupor'd, motionless space,
 To him his language came

We often praise the evening chime,
And think us gay and bold;
But midnight strikes upon our bed,
When danger flows around with fold.

11. MESSAGES FROM THE MOVIES

[illegible]

It was at 8 o'clock, and my line was waiting for the first chance of the morning to start land work. It was a very good day for the weather and the water was calm.
I was very happy to be out in the boat. I was both happy and sad to be out.

glads the heart and elevates the fancy: —
 is the poor residuum of the cup, and dull and tasteless, only soiling its base dregs the vessel that contains it.
Old Play.

I love Justice well — as well as you do — since the good dame's blind, she shall excuse me,
 and reason fitting, I prove dumb; —
 death I utter now shall be no means to away from me my breath in future.
Old Play.

well, at worst, 't is neither theft nor coinage.
 ing I knew all that you charge me with.
 tho' the tomb hath borne a second birth
 even the wealth to one that knew not on 't,
 for exchange was never robbery,
 as pure bounty —
Old Play.

ebbs from such old age, unmarked and silent,
 slow neap-tide leaves you stranded galley.
 he rocked merrily at the least impulse wind or wave could give; but now her keel
 ling on the sand, her mast has ta'en gle with the sky from which it shifts not.
 wave receding shakes her less and less,
 edded on the strand, she shall remain
 as motionless.
Old Play.

hile the Goose, of whom the fable told,
 bent brooded o'er her eggs of gold,
 hand outstretched impatient to destroy,
 on her secret nest the cruel Boy,
 a gripe rapacious changed her splendid dream
 ings vain fluttering and for dying scream.
The Loves of the Sea-Weeds.

hose go see who will — I like it not — ay he was a slave to rank and pomp, if the nothings he is now divorced from a hard doom of stern necessity;
 it sad to mark his altered brow,
 a Vanity adjusts her flimsy veil
 he deep wrinkles of repentant Anguish.
Old Play.

THE, you say, flies from us — She but circles,
 he fleet sea-bird round the fowler's skiff,
 in the mist one moment, and the next
 ing the white sail with her whiter wing,
 to court the aim. — Experience watches,
 as her on the wheel. —
Old Play.

From The Black Dwarf

Nearest rock upon the loneliest heath
 in its barrenness some touch of spring;

And, in the April dew or beam of May,
 Its moss and lichen freshen and revive;
 And thus the heart, most seared to human
 pleasure,
 Melts at the tear, joys in the smile of woman.
Beaumont.

'T WAS time and griefs
 That framed him thus: Time, with his fairer
 hand,
 Offering the fortunes of his former days,
 The former man may make him — Bring us to
 him,
 And chance it as it may.
Old Play.

From Old Mortality

AROUSE thee, youth! — it is no common call. — God's Church is leagu'd — haste to man the
 wall;
 Haste where the Red-cross banners wave on
 high
 Signals of honored death or victory.
James Duff.

My hounds may a' rin masterless,
 My hawks may fly frae tree to tree,
 My lord may grip my vassal lands,
 For there again manna I never he!
Old Ballad.

SOUND, sound the clarion, fill the life!
 To all the sensual world proclaim,
 One crowded hour of glorious life
 Is worth an age without a name.
Anonymous.

From Rob Roy

In the wide pile, by others heeded not,
 Here was one sacred solitary spot,
 Whose gloomy aisles and bending shelves contain
 For moral hunger food, and cures for moral pain.
Anonymous.

DIRE was his thought who first in poison steeped
 The weapon formed for slaughter — direr his,
 And worthier of damnation, who instilled
 The mortal venom in the social cup.
 To fill the veins with death instead of life.
Anonymous.

LOOK round thee, young Astolpho: Here's the place
 Which men — for being poor — are sent to starve in —
 Rude remedy, I trow, for sore disease.
 Within these walls, stifled by damp and stench,
 Doth Hope's fair torch expire; and at the snuff.
 Ere yet 't is quite extinct, rude, wild, and way-
 ward,

The desperate revivings of wild despair,
Kindling their half-dead crimson light to deeds
That the poor captives would have died ere perished.

Till bondage stank his soul to his condition.
The Prison, Act I, Scene 5.

FAR as the eye could reach no tree was seen,
Earth clad in snow, covered the living green;
No birds, except a flock of passage, flew;
No bee was heard to hum, no dove to coo,
No stream, as amber smooth, as amber clear,
Were seen to glide, or heard to warble here.
Peregrine of Flanders.

'Woe to the vanquished!' was stern Boerne's
word.

When sunk proud Rome beneath the Gallic
sword—

'Woe to the vanquished!' when his massive blade

Drove down the scale against her massive spear.

And on the field of fougner battle still

Who leaves no dust save the victor's will.

The Grail.

AND to be safe restored ere evening set,
To find there a vengeance in an injured heart
And power to wreak it in an armed hand,
Your hand shall avenge for't.

Old Play.

FAREWELL to the land where the clouds love to
rest.

Like the slaved of the dead, on the mountain's cold breast.

To the carmen's rear where the eagles rook,
And the lake her lone bosom expands to the sky.

From The Heart of Malakian

To man, in this his trial state,

The providence is given.

When lost by tales of human fate.

To another fast in Heaven.

Walter Hyman.

LAW, take thy victim!—May she find the mercy
In yon mild heaven which this hard world denies her!

AND Need and Misery, Vice and Danger, bind
In aid alliance each degraded mind.

I RESPECT you—
These tears beseech you, and these chaste hands woo you.

That never yet were heaved but to things holy—
Things like yourself—You are a God above

Be as a God then, full of saving mercy!

The Slave's Prayer.

HAPPY thou art! thou happy be,
Nor sorry to my lot.
Thy larger scope I envy thee.
And ponderest not.

Lady C—— C——

From The Birds of Languemere

THE leaved in hall was black and dead.

No heard was light a better vision.

Not merry had our welcome led.

'Here's merry cheer, quoth the Host of Limes.

Old Ballad.

Adapted from The Host of Limes.

As to the Autumn brown's bagle-wound

Various and vague the dry leaves dance their
round:

Or from the garner-dark, on other barns,

The chaff flies down from the winnowed
corn.

So vague, so gossamer, as the breath of beava,
From their fixed aim are mortal mortals driven.

Anonymous.

HERE is a father now,

Will track his daughter for a husband's venture.

Make her the step-mother to some nation's lord

(or fling her o'er the board, to the fishes.

To appease the sea at highest.

Anonymous.

SEE, stay at home and take an old man's counsel:
Seek not to hawk you for a stranger's wealth:
Our own line make a warmer than their tin.
Domestic fire is wholesome, though 'tis homeless.

And foreign dancing prisoners, though useful,
The Prisoner's Complaint.

TRUE LOVE, as thou be true.

Thou hast one little part to play.

For fortune, fashion, fancy, and then

Mans strive for many a day.

I've heard by many a friend's tale.

Far better by this heart of mine.

What time and change of fancy avail.

A true love-heart to nature.

Anonymous.

WELL, now I have Dame Fortune by the forelock.

And if she 'scapes my grasp the fault is mine:

He that hath trafficked with stern adversity

Best knows to shape his course to fortune's breath.

Old Play.

From The Letters of M. de La Fayette

DARK as their journey leaved the ebony day,
Wild were the hills and doubtful green the vale.

more gloomy, and more doubtful on which received them from the

The Travellers, a Romance.

castle, Baldwin? Melancholy
 r sable banner from the donjon,
 the foam of the whole surge beneath.
 abitant, to see this gloom face of nature, and to hear the sound of wave and sea-bird's in the hut that poorest peasant to give him temporary shelter.
Browne.

he entry, then, these stairs — but er after?

's sure to perish on the land
 the nicety of card and compass,
 he open sea without a pilot.
Tragedy of Brenneval.

From Ivanhoe

r journey lies through dell and plithe fawn trips by its timid mother, broad oak with intercepting boughs
 he sun-beam in the greensward

y! for lovely paths are these hen the glad sun is on his throne;
 at and less safe when Cynthia's

ful glimmer lights the dreary forest.
Eitrick Forest.

tmn nights were long and drear,
 rest walks were dark and dim,
 rly on the pilgrim's ear
 at to steal the hermit's hymn!

borrows Music's tone,
 sic took Devotion's wing,
 the bird that bails the sun,
 ar to heaven, and soaring sing.
Hermit of Saint Clement's Well.

hottest horse will oft be cool,
 e dullest will show fire;
 riar will often play the fool,
 e fool will play the friar.
Old Song.

ring race, severed from other men,
 their intercourse with human arts;
 he wooda, the deserts, which they acquainted with their secret trea-

red herbs and flowers and blossoms reamed-of powers when gathered sta.
The Jew.

APPROACH the chamber, look upon his bed.
 His is the passing of no peaceful ghost,
 Which, as the lark arises to the sky,
 Mid morning's sweetest breeze and softest dew,
 Is winged to heaven by good men's sighs and tears!

Anselm parts otherwise.

Old Play.

TRUST me, each state must have its policies:
 Kingdoms have edicts, cities have their charters;
 Even the wild outlaw in his forest-walk
 Keeps yet some touch of civil discipline.
 For not since Adam wore his verdant apron
 Hath man with man in social union dwelt,
 But laws were made to draw that union closer.
Old Play.

AROUSE the tiger of Hyrcanian deserts,
 Scrive with the half-starved lion for his prey;
 Lesser the risk than rouse the slumbering fire
 Of wild Fanaticism.

Anonymous.

SAY not my art is fraud — all live by seeming.
 The beggar begs with it, and the gay courtier
 Gains land and title, rank and rule, by seeming;
 The clergy scorns it not, and the bold soldier
 Will eke with it his service. — All admit it,
 All practise it; and he who is content
 With shewing what he is shall have small credit

In church or camp or state. — So wags the world.
Old Play.

STERN was the law which bade its votaries leave
 At human woes with human hearts to grieve;
 Stern was the law which at the winning wile
 Of frank and harmless mirth forbade to smile;
 But sterner still when high the iron-rod
 Of tyrant power ahe shook, and called that power of God.

The Middle Ages.

From The Monastery

O AY! the Monks, the Monks, they did the mischief!

Theirs all the grossness, all the superstition
 Of a most gross and superstitious age. —
 May HE be praised that sent the healthful tempest,

And scattered all these pestilential vapors;
 But that we owed them all to yonder Harlot
 Throned on the seven hills with her cup of gold,
 I will as soon believe, with kind Sir Roger,
 That old Moll White took wing with cat and broomstick,
 And raised the last night's thunder.

Old Play.

IN yon lone vale his early youth was bred.
 Not solitary then — the bugle-horn
 Of fell Alecto often waked its windings,
 From where the brook joins the majestic river

In the wild southern bog, the earthen's haunt,
 Where mosses form its nest and forth it scatters
and Play

A THUNDER ye city, a priest! — lazar chaplains they
 How shall they gather in the straggling throng?
 Dumb folk, which back out — how shall they respond
 For the long vagrants to the Master's fold?
 First to look to take the blessing, first,
 And shall the weak and handless Philistines dress,
 Then on the same wreath twine with the world
 The Andersens

16. Reynolds

56 57 58

2000

1923

61443

Which wise men scorn and fools accept in payment.

Magnolia Ledy.

Und Fing

247

1872.

1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. 101. 102. 103. 104. 105. 106. 107. 108. 109. 110. 111. 112. 113. 114. 115. 116. 117. 118. 119. 120. 121. 122. 123. 124. 125. 126. 127. 128. 129. 130. 131. 132. 133. 134. 135. 136. 137. 138. 139. 140. 141. 142. 143. 144. 145. 146. 147. 148. 149. 150. 151. 152. 153. 154. 155. 156. 157. 158. 159. 160. 161. 162. 163. 164. 165. 166. 167. 168. 169. 170. 171. 172. 173. 174. 175. 176. 177. 178. 179. 180. 181. 182. 183. 184. 185. 186. 187. 188. 189. 190. 191. 192. 193. 194. 195. 196. 197. 198. 199. 200. 201. 202. 203. 204. 205. 206. 207. 208. 209. 210. 211. 212. 213. 214. 215. 216. 217. 218. 219. 220. 221. 222. 223. 224. 225. 226. 227. 228. 229. 230. 231. 232. 233. 234. 235. 236. 237. 238. 239. 240. 241. 242. 243. 244. 245. 246. 247. 248. 249. 250. 251. 252. 253. 254. 255. 256. 257. 258. 259. 260. 261. 262. 263. 264. 265. 266. 267. 268. 269. 270. 271. 272. 273. 274. 275. 276. 277. 278. 279. 280. 281. 282. 283. 284. 285. 286. 287. 288. 289. 290. 291. 292. 293. 294. 295. 296. 297. 298. 299. 300. 301. 302. 303. 304. 305. 306. 307. 308. 309. 310. 311. 312. 313. 314. 315. 316. 317. 318. 319. 320. 321. 322. 323. 324. 325. 326. 327. 328. 329. 330. 331. 332. 333. 334. 335. 336. 337. 338. 339. 340. 341. 342. 343. 344. 345. 346. 347. 348. 349. 350. 351. 352. 353. 354. 355. 356. 357. 358. 359. 360. 361. 362. 363. 364. 365. 366. 367. 368. 369. 370. 371. 372. 373. 374. 375. 376. 377. 378. 379. 380. 381. 382. 383. 384. 385. 386. 387. 388. 389. 390. 391. 392. 393. 394. 395. 396. 397. 398. 399. 400. 401. 402. 403. 404. 405. 406. 407. 408. 409. 410. 411. 412. 413. 414. 415. 416. 417. 418. 419. 420. 421. 422. 423. 424. 425. 426. 427. 428. 429. 430. 431. 432. 433. 434. 435. 436. 437. 438. 439. 440. 441. 442. 443. 444. 445. 446. 447. 448. 449. 450. 451. 452. 453. 454. 455. 456. 457. 458. 459. 460. 461. 462. 463. 464. 465. 466. 467. 468. 469. 470. 471. 472. 473. 474. 475. 476. 477. 478. 479. 480. 481. 482. 483. 484. 485. 486. 487. 488. 489. 490. 491. 492. 493. 494. 495. 496. 497. 498. 499. 500. 501. 502. 503. 504. 505. 506. 507. 508. 509. 510. 511. 512. 513. 514. 515. 516. 517. 518. 519. 520. 521. 522. 523. 524. 525. 526. 527. 528. 529. 530. 531. 532. 533. 534. 535. 536. 537. 538. 539. 540. 541. 542. 543. 544. 545. 546. 547. 548. 549. 550. 551. 552. 553. 554. 555. 556. 557. 558. 559. 560. 561. 562. 563. 564. 565. 566. 567. 568. 569. 570. 571. 572. 573. 574. 575. 576. 577. 578. 579. 580. 581. 582. 583. 584. 585. 586. 587. 588. 589. 590. 591. 592. 593. 594. 595. 596. 597. 598. 599. 600. 601. 602. 603. 604. 605. 606. 607. 608. 609. 610. 611. 612. 613. 614. 615. 616. 617. 618. 619. 620. 621. 622. 623. 624. 625. 626. 627. 628. 629. 630. 631. 632. 633. 634. 635. 636. 637. 638. 639. 640. 641. 642. 643. 644. 645. 646. 647. 648. 649. 650. 651. 652. 653. 654. 655. 656. 657. 658. 659. 660. 661. 662. 663. 664. 665. 666. 667. 668. 669. 670. 671. 672. 673. 674. 675. 676. 677. 678. 679. 680. 681. 682. 683. 684. 685. 686. 687. 688. 689. 690. 691. 692. 693. 694. 695. 696. 697. 698. 699. 700. 701. 702. 703. 704. 705. 706. 707. 708. 709. 710. 711. 712. 713. 714. 715. 716. 717. 718. 719. 720. 721. 722. 723. 724. 725. 726. 727. 728. 729. 730. 731. 732. 733. 734. 735. 736. 737. 738. 739. 740. 741. 742. 743. 744. 745. 746. 747. 748. 749. 750. 751. 752. 753. 754. 755. 756. 757. 758. 759. 760. 761. 762. 763. 764. 765. 766. 767. 768. 769. 770. 771. 772. 773. 774. 775. 776. 777. 778. 779. 780. 781. 782. 783. 784. 785. 786. 787. 788. 789. 790. 791. 792. 793. 794. 795. 796. 797. 798. 799. 800. 801. 802. 803. 804. 805. 806. 807. 808. 809. 810. 811. 812. 813. 814. 815. 816. 817. 818. 819. 820. 821. 822. 823. 824. 825. 826. 827. 828. 829. 830. 831. 832. 833. 834. 835. 836. 837. 838. 839. 840. 84

25

۱۴۲۲

جواب: "میں نے کھانا"

ool I knew him — a sharp-witted youth, thoughtful, and reserved amongst his mates,
g the hours of sport and food to labor,
g his body to inform his mind.

Old Play.

a my faith this gear is all entangled,
the yarn-clew of the drowy knitter,
d by the frolic kitten through the cabin
he good dame sits nodding o'er the fire —
t, attend; 't will crave some skill to bear it.

Old Play.

t texts will do it — Church artillery need soon by real ordnance,
mons are but vain opposed to cannon.
a your crosier, melt your church plate
own,
starved soldier banquet in your halls, aff your long-saved hog'sheads. — Turn hem out
rimed with your good cheer, to guard our wall.
ey will venture for 't.

Old Play.

From The Abbot

In the wild storm man hews his mast down, and the merchant
to the billows wares he once deemed precious:
ce and peer, mid popular contentions,
f their favorites.

Old Play.

ast each secret of the household, Francis.
be sworn thou hast been in the but-
try,
g thy curious humor in fat ale,
the butler's tattle — ay, or chatting be glib waiting-woman o'er her comfits — bear the key to such domestic mystery.

Old Play.

sacred tapers' lights are gone,
moss has clad the altar stone,
holy image is o'erthrown,
a bell has ceased to toll.
long ribbed aisles are burst and shrunk,
holy shrines to ruin sunk,
sted is the pious monk,
d's blessing on his soul!

Rediviva.

ath its May, and all is mirthful then:
ode are vocal and the flowers all odor;
y blast has mirth in 't, and the maidens, sile they don their cloaks to skreen their sirtles,
at the rain that wets them.

Old Play.

NAY, hear me, brother — I am elder, wiser,
And holier than thou; and age and wisdom
And holiness have peremptory claims,
And will be listened to.

Old Play.

Nor the wild billow, when it breaks its barrier —
Not the wild wind, escaping from its cavern —
Not the wild fiend, that mingles both together
And pours their rage upon the ripening harvest,
Can match the wild freaks of this mirthful meeting —

Comic, yet fearful — droll, and yet destructive.
The Conspiracy.

YOUTH! thou wear'st to manhood now;
Darker lip and darker brow,
Statelier step, more pensive mien,
In thy face and gait are seen:
Thou must now brook midnight watches,
Take thy food and sport by snatches!
For the gambol and the jest
Thou wert wont to love the best,
Graver follies must thou follow.
But as senseless, false, and hollow.

Life, a Poem.

It is and is not — 't is the thing I sought for,
Have kneeled for, prayed for, risked my fame
and life for,
And yet it is not — no more than the shadow
Upon the hard, cold, flat, and polished mirror,
Is the warm, graceful, rounded, living substance
Which it presents in form and lineament.

Old Play.

Give me a morsel on the greensward rather.
Coarse as you will the cooking — let the fresh
spring
Bubble beside my napkin — and the free birds, Twittering and chirping, hop from bough to
bough,
To claim the crumbs I leave for perquisites —
Your prison-feasts I like not.

The Woodman, a Drama.

'T is a weary life this — Vaults overhead, and grates and bars around
me.
And my sad hours spent with as sad companions,
Whose thoughts are brooding o'er their own
mischances,
Far, far too deeply to take part in mine.

The Woodman.

AND when Love's torch hath set the heart in
flame,
Comes Seigneur Reason, with his saws and cautions,
Giving such aid as the old gray-beard Sexton,
Who from the church-vault drags his crazy engine,
To ply its dribbling ineffectual streamlet
Against a conflagration.

Old Play.

Thou, who thine eyes looked on thy childhood,
And watched with trembling hope thy dawn of manhood,
Thou now, with those same eyeballs, dimmed with age,
Thou dimmer yet with care, sees thy dishonor.

Old Play.

In some breast passion lies concealed and silent,
Like war-powder in a marble vault,
Until occasion, like the instant, lights it.
Then come at once the lightning and the thunder.

And distant echoes tell that all is rent asunder.

Old Play.

DEATH: HASTEN! — No, alas! he's ever with us,
But shakes the heart as in all our wrings.
He looks within our cup while we're in leath;
He's in our soul, mocks our medicines,
We cannot walk, or sit, or sleep, or grieve,
But Death is by to seize us when he lists.

The Spanish Father.

ST. PETER. — Come you here with meek and lowly,
Ladder of life, and other moonshine tools —
Woe, messenger, how sayst thou of the old Darius.

Master the waiting-woman, by the pale face show, that I see rather play the Gryphon,
Gambler and sorcerer, than a friend or wife,
And guard the hidden treasure of her youth.

The Spanish Father.

It is a time of laughter, not of revel.

When churchmen turn to masquers.

The Spanish Father.

ST. PETER. — My ancient crown in these wild times,
He took you out — the gambler's traitor,
Wholen-faced and set his benighted
Woe down to many a woe.

The Spanish Father.

From Minicoria.

YOU were two masters? — Here a youth will try it.

Would you were that, to save the devil his name;
For once more in your hand a young man,
And when he's dead, to bury him in silence.

Old Play.

He was a man

Correct in the world as you are in company.
To speak of you, to be your friend,
To be your enemy, to be your foe,
To be your master, and to be your slave,
To be your king, and to be your queen.

The Spanish Father.

He was a man

Who, when he was a youth, was a man of letters.

Knows all their secret shams and their old Whom from shams and whose from old
He shines like any rainbow — and, perhaps,
His colors are as transient.

Old Play.

THIS is rare news thou tell'st me, my good
law.

There are two bulls fierce battling in the grass
For one fair heifer — if she were free,
The tale will be more fearful, and the sort
Which have small interest in their wanderings,
May pasture them in peace.

Old Play.

WELL, then, our course is chosen; speed to sail.

Heave off the lead and mark the windings well
Look to the helm, good master, mark the Marks this stern coast, and rocks where aren't.

Who, like ambition, leads men to their ruin.

The Spanish Father.

Now God be good to me in this wild wilderness!
All hope a human aid, not behind me,
Oh, who would be a woman's life and soul,
A sleeping, dreaming, foolish, loving woman,
She hath said measure still scarce she needs sincerest.

And all her boundless only make regrets.

The Spanish Father.

HARK! the bells summon and the bugle calls,
But the fairest answer not the tale
Of women and a soldier through the world,
But the fairest answer not a secret tale,
What you were there, proud prince, which is the quest.

Of course, masters, but that better sense
That for the glow-worm took the star-stream,
And merit's modest blush for partly sense.

The Spanish Father.

WHAT, man, no or lack a thought when the old
man

stands at home, how can heaves overpower —
Yes, for not so, for I have a thought
To which man's mind, once I have thought
Of once ought to stand at — I have thought,
Would have the word strike with me, perhaps at.

The Spanish Father.

Now fare thee well, my master: I too serve the passion with hard work, even at the evening.

And let me back across the passion then
And different course.

The Spanish Father.

Now all on deeper rock — no course, no
course,
You are a man, a man, a man, a man, a man,
a man.

the linstock, gunner; let thy cannon
be a peal as if a Paynim foe watched in turbaned ranks to storm the aparts.
have pageants too; but that craves wit,
is a rough-hewn soldier.

The Virgin-Queen, a Tragi-Comedy.

But sovereigns err like private men,
Whose hand has sometimes laid the sword
dry upon a worthless shoulder,
Better had been branded by the hang-
man.
an? Kings do their best, — and they did we answer for the intent, and not the event.

Old Play.

Ands the victim — there the proud beyger,
be hind pulled down by strangling dogs is hunter's feet, who courteous proffers high dame, the Dian of the chase, he looks for guerdon, his sharp blade
the sobbing throat.

The Woodman.

As the eastern steep the sun is beaming,
Fleets flies with her deceitful shadows;
Prevails o'er falsehood.

Old Play.

From The Pirate

alone the scene — the man, Anselmo.
finds sympathies in these wild wastes ghly tumbling seas, which fairer views other waves deny him.

Ancient Drama.

No work by halves, yon raving ocean;
Those she strangles, her wild womb
The mariners whom she hath dealt on Death at once and sepulchre.

Old Play.

gentle trader and a prudent —
Autolyceus, to blear your eye lips of worldly gauds and gamesome-ness,
ons all his glittering merchandise
plesome doctrine suited to the use, sauced goose with sage and rosemary.

Old Play.

ALL your ancient customs descended usages I'll change.
not eat, nor drink, nor speak, nor move,
sok, or walk, as ye were wont to do;
tr marriage-beds shall know mutation;
e shall have the stock, the groom the
all;
ld practice will I turn and change,
it reformation — marry, will I!

'Tis Even that we're at Odds.

WE'LL keep our customs — what is law itself

But old established custom? What religion —
I mean, with one half of the men that use it —
Save the good use and wont that carries them
To worship how and where their fathers worshipped?

All things resolve in custom — we 'll keep ours.
Old Play.

I DO love these ancient ruins!

We never tread upon them but we set
Our foot upon some reverend history,
And questionless, here in this open court —
Which now lies naked to the injuries
Of stormy weather — some men lie interred, Loved the Church so well and gave so largely to it,

They thought it should have canopied their bones

Till doomsday; — but all things have their end —

Churches and cities, which have diseases like to men,

Must have like death which we have.

Duchess of Malfy.

SEE yonder woman, whom our swains revere
And dread in secret, while they take her counsel

When sweetheart shall be kind, or when cross
dame shall die;

Where lurks the thief who stole the silver
tankard,

And how the pestilent murrain may be cured; —
This sage adviser's mad, stark mad, my friend;

Yet in her madness hath the art and cunning
To wring fools' secrets from their inmost bosoms,

And pay inquirers with the coin they gave her.

Old Play.

WHAT ho, my jovial mates! come on! we'll frolic it

Like fairies frisking in the merry moonshine,
Seen by the curial friar, who, from some christening

Or some blithe bridal, hies belated cell-ward —
He starts, and changes his bold bottle swagger

To churchman's pace professional, — and, ran-sacking

His trencherous memory for some holy hymn,
Finds but the roundel of the midnight catch.

Old Play.

I STRIVE like to the vessel in the tide-way,
Which, lacking favoring breeze, hath not the
power

To stem the powerful current. — Even so,
Resolving daily to forsake my vices,

Habit, strong circumstance, renewed tempta-
tion,

Sweep me to sea again. — O heavenly breath,
Fill thou my sails, and aid the feeble vessel,

Which ne'er can reach the blessed port without thee!

'Tis Odds when Evens meet.

Thanks to love, my friend, has power o'er
 And in the chain, which like the falconer's
 One being from heaven the highest soaring
 So, when fabled Pegasus duff'd his wing
 It was Miranda plucked it from his shoulder.

END POET.

Hark to the insult loud, the bitter sneer,
 The scornful look, the sneering smile,
 The look of scorn, the sneering smile,
 The look of scorn, the sneering smile,
 The look of scorn, the sneering smile,
 The look of scorn, the sneering smile,

THE SPOILS, A ROMANCE.

O'er the mountains and under the waves,
 O'er the mountains and under the waves,
 O'er the mountains and under the waves,
 O'er the mountains and under the waves,
 O'er the mountains and under the waves,
 O'er the mountains and under the waves,

OLD SONG.

THE ADVENTURES OF J. VALENTINE

A Tale of the Adventures of J. Valentine,
 A Tale of the Adventures of J. Valentine,
 A Tale of the Adventures of J. Valentine,
 A Tale of the Adventures of J. Valentine,
 A Tale of the Adventures of J. Valentine,
 A Tale of the Adventures of J. Valentine,

THE ADVENTURES.

Thus, at the close of the day,
 Thus, at the close of the day,
 Thus, at the close of the day,
 Thus, at the close of the day,
 Thus, at the close of the day,
 Thus, at the close of the day,

THE OLD SONG.

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

THE OLD SONG.

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

Prattling fools and wise men listening,
 Bullies among brave men justling,
 Beggars amongst nobles bustling;
 Low-breathed talkers, minion lispers,
 Cutting honest throats by whispers;
 Wherefore come ye not to court?
 Skelton swears 't is glorious sport.

Skelton Skeltonized.

O, I do know him — 't is the moody leech
 Which our court wits will wet their lips withal,
 When they would sauce their bonied conversa-
 tion

With somewhat sharper flavor. — Marry, sir,
 That virtue is welling left him — all the more
 That was so sharp and poignant is squeezed
 out.

While the poor wind, although as sour as ever,
 Must needs even the duff'd wings of our graces,
 For two-legged things are weary of it.

THE ADVENTURES, A ROMANCE.

Thus, at the close of the day,
 Thus, at the close of the day,

Thus, at the close of the day,
 Thus, at the close of the day,

Thus, at the close of the day,
 Thus, at the close of the day,

Thus, at the close of the day,
 Thus, at the close of the day,

THE ADVENTURES.

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

THE ADVENTURES.

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

THE ADVENTURES.

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

As, in the distance, the hills
 As, in the distance, the hills

rest to rear the crest, and aim the spur,
 me their note like full-plumed Chantier.

The Bear Garden.

proud salmon gorge the feathered hook, rike, and then you have him. — He will face;
 t your line that it shall whistle from you wenty yards or so, yet you shall have im —
 you must have patience — the stout rock
 in his trust bath edges something sharp;
 a deep pool bath oze and sludge enough your fishing — 'less you are more careful.

Albion, or the Double Kings.

ay — give way — I must and will have
 justice,
 I me not of privilege and place;
 I am injured, there I'll sue redress.
 it, every one who bars my access;
 heart to feel the injury,
 to right myself, and, by my honor,
 and shall grasp what gray-beard Law denies me.

The Chamberlain.

ither, young one — Mark me! Thou art sw
 men o' the sword, that live by reputa-
 on an by constant income — Single-suited e, I grant you; yet each single suit us, on the rough guess, a thousand followers —
 ry be men who, hazarding their all,
 apparel, necessary income,
 man body, and immortal soul,
 re very deed but hazard nothing —
 dy is that ALL bound in reversion;
 to the broker, income to the usurer, —
 dy to disease, and soul to the foul fiend;
 ighs to see Soldadoes and fooladoes tter than himself his game on earth.

The Mohocks.

r. What! dazzled by a flash of Cupid's error,
 hich the boy, as mortal urchins wont,
 lack the sunbeam in the eye of passen-
 ers —
 ighs to see them stumble!
 her. Mother! no —
 lightning-flash which dazzled me,
 ver shall these eyes see true again.
 and Pudding, an Old English Comedy.

good light, a wench of matchless mettle!
 re a leaguer-las to love a soldier,
 his wounds, and kiss his bloody brow,
 g a roundel as she helped to arm him,
 the rough foeman's drums were beat
 high seemed to bear the burden.

Old Play.

CREDIT me, friend, it hath been ever thus
 Since the ark rested on Mount Ararat.
 False man hath sworn, and woman hath believed —
 Repented and reproached, and then believed
 once more.

The New World.

ROVE not from pole to pole — the man lives
 here
 Whose razor's only equalled by his beer;
 And whore, in either sense, the cockney-put
 May if he pleases, get confounded cut.
 On the Sign of an Alehouse kept by a Barber.

CHANCE will not do the work — Chance sends the breeze;
 But if the pilot slumber at the helm,
 The very wind that wafts us towards the port
 May dash us on the shelves. — The steersman's part is vigilance,
 Blow it or rough or smooth.

Old Play.

THIS is the time — Heaven's maiden-sentinel
 Hath quitted her high watch — the lesser spangles
 Are paling one by one; give me the ladder
 And the short lever — bid Anthony
 Keep with his carabina the wicket-gate;
 And do thou bare thy knife and follow me,
 For we will in and do it — darkness like this
 Is dawning of our fortunes.

Old Play.

DEATH finds us mid our playthings — snatches
 us,
 As a cross nurse might do a wayward child,
 From all our toys and baubles. His rough call
 Unlooses all our favorite ties on earth;
 And well if they are such as may be answered
 In yonder world, where all is judged of truly.

Old Play.

GIVE us good voyage, gentle stream — we stun
 not
 Thy sober ear with sounds of revelry,
 Wake not the slumbering echoes of thy banks
 With voice of flute and horn — we do but seek
 On the broad pathway of thy swelling bosom
 To glide in silent safety.

The Double Bridal.

THIS way lie safety and a sure retreat;
 Yonder lie danger, shame, and punishment.
 Most welcome danger then — nay, let me say,
 Though spoke with swelling heart — welcome
 e'en shame;
 And welcome punishment — for, call me guilty,
 I do but pay the tax that's due to justice;
 And call me guiltless, then that punishment
 Is shame to those alone who do indict it.

The Tribunal.

How fares the man on whom good men would
 look
 With eyes where scorn and censure
 d.

...the ...
...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

...the ...

applaud us when we eat the eaters, laughs when keen folks cheat the sneers.

The Sea Voyage.

CONTENTIONS fierce,
dire, spring from no petty cause.
Albion.

amongst them like a new-raised spirit,
dreadful judgments that impend,
strath to come.

The Reformer.

or safety took the dreadful leap;
a voice of Heaven seemed calling on vancement, or for lucre's sake — rolio.

The Dream.

ing was there there — the gilded wassail-health — the dancer's step chord responsive — the gay game-

spoon! flung his heap of gold,
d alike when it increased or less:
hath court-air to teach us patience
olmen preach in vain.

Why come ye not to Court?

nd I tight and trim,
eye, though little of limb;
enieth the word I have spoken,
dm and me shall lances be broken.

Lay of the Little John de Saintre.

From Quentin Durward

show Cupid blind — hath Hymen

ht warped by those spectacles mts, guardians, and advisers lend ey look through them on lands and ons,

gold, and all such rich donations,
ir value ten times magnified? —
will brook a question.

The Miseries of Enforced Marriage.

cturer so skilled in policy disparagement to Satan's cunning — ght read a lesson to the devil,
he old seducer new temptations.

Old Play.

o yet, fair France — thou favored nature — thou art still before me;

o whom their labor is a sport,
grateful soil returns its tribute;
rnt daughters, with their laughing

And glossy raven-locks. But, favored France,
Thou hast had many a tale of woe to tell,
In ancient times as now.

Anonymous.

He was a son of Egypt, as he told me,
And one descended from those dread magicians
Who waged rash war, when Israel dwelt in Goshen,

With Israel and her Prophet — matching rod
With his the son of Levi's — and encounter-

ing

Jehovah's miracles with incantations,
Till upon Egypt came the Avenging Angel.
And those proud sages wept for their first-born,

As wept the unlettered peasant.

Anonymous.

RESPECT or none, Sir Knight, I am your captive;
Deal with me what your nobleness suggests Thinking the chance of war may one day place
you

Where I must now be reckoned — i' the roll
Of melancholy prisoners.

Anonymous.

No human quality is so well wove
In warp and woof but there's some flaw in it;
I've known a brave man fly a shepherd's cur,
A wise man so demean him drivelling idioy
Had wellnigh been ashamed on't. For your crafty,

Your worldly-wise man, he, above the rest,
Weaves his own snares so fine he's often caught in them.

Old Play.

WHEN Princes meet, astrologers may mark it
An ominous conjunction, full of boding,
Like that of Mars with Saturn.

Old Play.

THY time is not yet out — the devil thou servest
Has not as yet deserted thee. He aids
The friends who drudge for him, as the blind
man

Was aided by the guide, who lent his shoulder
O'er rough and smooth, until he reached the brink

Of the fell precipice — then hurled him downward.

Old Play.

OUR counsels waver like the unsteady bark,
That reels amid the strife of meeting currents.

Old Play.

HOLD fast thy truth, young soldier. — Gentle
maiden,

Keep you your promise plight — leave ago its subtleties,

And gray-haired policy its maze of falsehood;
But be you candid as the morning sky.

Ere the high sun sucks vapors up to stain it.

The Trial.

From Saint Roman's Well

QUIS novus hic hospes?
Ubi opus Virgilium.

ON 'S-MAID! — The Gen'man in the front parlor!
Bunt's free Translation of the Æneid.

THERE must be government in all society —
Even have their Queen, and stag herds have their leader;
Rome had her Comula, Athens had her Archons,
And we, sir, have our Managing Committee.
The Album of Saint Roman's.

COME, let me have thy counsel, for I need it;
Thou art of those, who better help their friends
With sage advice, than assure with gold.
Or brawlers with their swords — I'll trust to
these.
For I ask only from thee words, not deeds.
The Devil hath met his Match.

NEAREST of blood should still be next in love;
And when I see these happy children playing,
While William gathers flowers for Ellen's ringlets
And Ellen dreams then for William's angle,
I cannot but think that in advancing life
Contentment, kindness, interest, or suspicion
Will no divide that unity so sacred,
Which Nature bound at birth.
Anonymous.

Oh! you would be a vestal maid, I warrant.
The gods of Heaven — Come — we may shake your purpose
For here I bring in hand a jolly suitor
Hath ta'en degrees in the seven sciences
That ladies love best — He is young and noble, Handsome and valiant, gay and rich, and liberal.
The Nun.

It comes — it wrings me in my parting hour,
The long-lid crime — the well-disguised guilt,
Bring me some holy priest to lay the spectre!
Old Play.

Sedet post equitem atra cura —
STILL though the headlong cavalier,
O'er rough and smooth, in wild career,
Seems racing with the wind;
His sad companion — ghastly pale,
And darksome as a widow's veil,
CARE — keeps her seat behind
Horace.

WHAT cheated ghost is wandering through the storm?
For never did a maid of middle earth
Choose such a time or spot to vent her sorrows.
Old Play.

HERE come we to our close — for that which follows
Is but the tale of dull, unvaried misery.

Steep crags and bounding fens may meet the pencil
Like sudden heaps, dark plots, and strange adventures;
But who would paint the dull and fog-wyrt
moor
In its long tract of sterile desolation?
Old Play.

From The Beveridge

Is Mador's tent the chosen scene,
With rapid changes hurried far,
Each hill and dale the note resounds,
But when returns the note of war?
Thou, born of stern Neocoma,
Dull Peace! the valley yields to thee,
And owns thy melancholy sway.
W. L. P. M.

O, SADLY shines the morning sun
On leaguered castle wall
When bastion, tower, and battlement
Seem adding to their fall.
Old Ballad.

NOW, all ye ladies of fair Scotland,
And ladies of England that happy would
prove,
Marry never for houses, nor marry for land,
Nor marry for nothing but only love.
Fanny's Quarrel.

Too much rest is rest,
There's ever cheer in changing;
We tire by too much trust,
So we'll be up and ranging.
Old Song.

RISE out the merry halls, the bride approaches.
The blush upon her cheek has shamed the morning.
For that is dawning palely. Grant, good axes,
These clouds betoken naught of evil omens!
Old Play.

Julia. Gentle air,
You are our captive — but we'll use you so.
That you shall think your prison joys may match
Whate'er your liberty hath known of ple-
sure.
Roderick. No, fairest, we have trifled here too long:
And, lingering to see your roses blossom,
I've let my laurels wither.
Old Play.

From The Talisman

THIS is the Prince of Leeches; fever, plague, Cold rheum, and hot podagra, do but look on
him,
And quit their grasp upon the tortured sinew.
Anonymous.

hing is certain in our Northern land,
that birth or valor, wealth or wit,
such precedence to their possessor,
that follows on such eminence smokes the lyme-hound on the roebuck's trace,
pull them down each one.

Sir David Lindsay.

OT talk of Gayety and Innocence !
moment when the fatal fruit was eaten,
parted ne'er to meet again ; and Malice
ver since been playmate to light Gayety the first moment when the smiling infant
oys the flower or butterfly he toys with,
last chuckle of the dying miser,
on his death-bed laughs his last to hear ealthy neighbor has become a bankrupt.

Old Play.

'tis not her sense — for sure, in that
There 's nothing more than common ;
and all her wit is only chat,
Like any other woman.

Song.

every hair upon his head a life,
every life were to be supplanted
mbers equal to those hairs quadrupled, fter life should out like waning stars
the daybreak — or as festive lamps,
have lent lustre to the midnight revel,
after each are quenched when guests
depart.

Old Play.

we then sheath our still victorious sword ;
back our forward step, which ever trode
oemen's necks the onward path of glory ;
up the mail, which with a solemn vow d's own house we hung upon our shoulders ;
vow, as unaccomplished as the promise
a village nurses make to still their children,
after think no more of ?

The Crusade, a Tragedy.

beauty leads the lion in her toils,
are her charms he dare not raise his mane,
as expand the terror of his fangs ;
est Alcides made his club a distaff,
pun to please fair Omphale.

Anonymous.

these wild scenes Enchantment waves her
hand,
ange the face of the mysterious land ;
he bewildering scenes around us seem ain productions of a feverish dream.

Astolpho, a Romance.

A GRAIN of dust
our cup, will make our sense reject iously the draught which we did thirst for ;
red nail, placed near the faithful compass,

Will away it from the truth and wreck the argosy.

Even this small cause of anger and disgust
Will break the bonds of amity 'mongst princes
And wreck their noblest purposes.

The Crusade.

THE tears I shed must ever fall !
I weep not for an absent swain,
For time may happier hours recall,
And parted lovers meet again.

I weep not for the silent dead,
Their pains are past, their sorrows o'er.
And those that loved their steps must tread,
When death shall join to part no more.

But worse than absence, worse than death,
She wept her lover's sullied fame,
And, fired with all the pride of birth,
She wept a soldier's injured name.

Ballad.

From Woodstock

COME forth, old man — thy daughter's side
Is now the fitting place for thee :
When Time hath quelled the oak's bold pride,
The youthful tendril yet may hide
The ruins of the parent tree.

Now, ye wild blades, that make loose inns your stage,

To vapor forth the acts of this sad ago,
Stout Edgehill fight, the Newberries and the West,

And northern clashes, where you still fought
best ;

Your strange escapes, your dangers void of
fear,

When bullets flew between the head and ear,
Whether you fought by Damme or the Spirit,
Of you I speak.

Legend of Captain Jones.

YON path of greensward
Winds round by sparry grot and gay pavilion ;
There is no flint to gall thy tender foot,
There's ready shelter from each breeze or
shower. —

But Duty guides not that way — see her stand,
With wand entwined with amaranth, near yon cliffs.

Oft where she leads thy blood must mark thy footsteps,

Oft where she leads thy head must bear the storm,

And thy shrank form endure heat, cold, and hunger ;

But she will guide thee up to noble heights,
Which he who gains seems native of the sky,
While earthly things lie stretched beneath his feet,

Diminished, shrank, and valueless —

Anonymous.

My tongue pads slowly under this new language,
And starts and stumbles at these uncouth phrases.

They may be great in worth and weight, but hang

Upon the native glibness of my language
Like Saul's plate-armor on the shepherd boy,
Encumbering and not arming him.

J. B.

HERE we have one head
Upon two bodies — your two-headed bullock
Is but an ass to such a prodigy.
These two have but one meaning, thought, and counsel;

And when the single noddle has spoke out,
The four legs scrape assent to it.

Old Play.

DREDS are done on earth
Which have their punishment ere the earth closes

Upon the perpetrators. Be it the working
Of the remorse-stirred fancy, or the vision,
Distinct and real, of unearthly being,
All ages witness that beside the couch
Of the fell homicide oft stalks the ghost
Of him he slew, and shows the shadow wound.

Old Play.

WE do that in our zeal
Our calmer moments are afraid to answer.
Anonymous.

THE deadliest snakes are those which, twined
'mongst flowers,

Blend their bright coloring with the varied blossoms.

Their fierce eyes glittering like the spangled dew-drop;

In all so like what nature has most harmless,
That sportive innocence, which dreads no danger.

Is poisoned unawares.

Old Play.

From Chronicles of the Canongate

WERE ever such two loving friends! —
How could they disagree?

O, THUS it was: he loved him dear,
And thought but to requite him;
And, having no friend left but he,
He did resolve to fight him.

Duke upon Duke.

THERE are times
When Fancy plays her gambols, in despite
Even of our watchful senses, when in sooth
Substance seems shadow, shadow substance seems.

When the broad, palpable, and marked partition

'T wix that which is and is not, seems dissolved,
As if the mental eye gained power to gaze

Beyond the limits of the existing world.
Such hours of shadowy dreams I better love
Than all the gross realities of life.

Anonymous.

From The Fair Maid of Perth

THE ashes here of murdered kings
Beneath my footsteps sleep;
And yonder lies the scene of death
Where Mary learned to weep.
Captain Marjoribanks

'BEHOLD the Tiber!' the vain Roman cried,
Viewing the ample Tay from Baigie's side.
But where's the Scot that would the vaunt re-
pay,

And hail the puny Tiber for the Tay.

Anonymous.

FAIR is the damsel, passing fair —
Sunny at distance gleams her smile!
Approach — the cloud of woful care
Hangs trembling in her eye the while.
Lucinda, a Ballad.

O FOR a draught of power to steep
The soul of agony in sleep!

Bertha.

Lo! where he lies embalmed in gore,
His wound to Heaven cries:
The floodgates of his blood implore
For vengeance from the skies.
Uranus and Psyche.

From Anne of Geerstern

CURSED be the gold and silver which persuade
Weak man to follow far fatiguing trade.
The lily, peace, outshines the silver store,
And life is dearer than the golden ore.
Yet money tempts us o'er the desert brown
To every distant mart and wealthy town.
Hassan, or the Camel-Driver.

I WAS one
Who loved the greenwood bank and lowing herd.
The russet prize, the lowly peasant's life,
Seasoned with sweet content, more than the halls
Where revellers feast to fever-height. Belieft
me,
There ne'er was poison mixed in maple bowl.
Anonymous.

WHEN we two meet, we meet like rushing tor-
rents;
Like warring winds, like flames from various points,
That mate each other's fury — there is naught
Of elemental strife, were winds to guide it,
Can match the wrath of man.
Frenzied.

now not when we sleep nor when we wake,
a distinct and perfect cross our eye,
to the slumberer seem realities;
while they waked, some men have seen such sights

at naught the evidence of sense, oft them well persuaded they were dream-
ing.

Anonymous.

be the adept's doctrines — every element

bled with its separate race of spirits.
ry Sylphs on the blue ether float;
n the earthy cavern skulks the Gnome;
a-green Naiad skims the ocean-billow,
so fierce fire is yet a friendly home peculiar sprite — the Salamander.

Anonymous.

the Rhine, upon the Rhine they cluster,
grapes of juice divine,
make the soldier's jovial courage muster;
blest be the Rhine!

Drinking Song.

me not of it — I could ne'er abide annuity of all that forced civility.
'seat yourself, my lord.' With cringing bains
speech is spoken, and with bended knee
by the smiling courtier. — 'Before you, sir?

'be on the earth, then.' Hang it all!
ide which cloaks itself in such poor fashion
vely fit to swell a beggar's bosom.

Old Play.

TRFUL man he was — the snows of age at they did not chill him. Gayety, a life's closing, touched his teeming brain such wild visions as the setting sun
in front of some hoar glacier, eg the bleak ice with a thousand hues.

Old Play.

is is he who wears the wreath of bays
by Apollo and the Sisters Nine, Jove's dread lightning scathes not. He hath doft
imbrous helm of steel, and flung aside
it more galling diadem of gold;
, with a leafy circlet round his brows,
gna the King of Lovers and of Poets.

WANT you a man
fenced in the world and its affairs?
is for your purpose. — He's a monk.
th forsworn the world and all its work —
sher that he knows it passing well.
all the worst of it, for he's a monk.

Old Play.

TOLL, toll the bell!
Greatness is o'er,
The heart has broke,

To ache no more;
An unsubstantial pageant all —
Drop o'er the scene the funeral pall.
Old Poem.

HERE's a weapon now
Shall shake a conquering general in his tent,
A monarch on his throne, or reach a prelate,
However holy be his offices,
E'en while he serves the altar.

Old Play.

From Count Robert of Paris

Othus. This superb successor
Of the earth's mistress, as thou vainly speakest,
Stands midst these ages as, on the wide ocean,
The last spared fragment of a spacious land,
That in some grand and awful ministration
Of mighty nature has engulfed been,
Doth lift aloft its dark and rocky cliffs
O'er the wild waste around, and sadly frowns
In lonely majesty.

Constantine Paleologus, Scene 1.

HERE, youth, thy foot unbrace,
Here, youth, thy brow unbraide,
Each tribute that may grace
The threshold here be paid.
Walk with the stealthy pace
Which Nature teaches deer,
When, echoing in the chase,
The hunter's horn they hear.

The Court.

THE storm increases — 't is no sunny shower,
Fostered in the moist breast of March or April,
Or such as parched Summer cools his lip with;
Heaven's windows are flung wide; the inmost
deeps

Call in hoarse greeting one upon another;
On comes the flood in all its foaming horrors,
And where 's the dike shall stop it!

The Deluge, a Poem.

VAIN man! thou mayst esteem thy love as fair
As fond hyperboles suffice to raise.
She may be all that 's matchless in her person,
And all-divine in soul to match her body;
But take this from me — thou shalt never call her

Superior to her sex while one survives
And I am her true votary.

Old Play.

THROUGH the vain webs which puzzle sophists'
skill,

Plain sense and honest meaning work their
way;

So sink the varying clouds upon the hill
When the clear dawning brightens into day.
Dr. Watts.

BETWEEN the foaming jaws of the white torrent
The skilful artist draws a sudden mound;

nooth sounds heard in the depth of a forest, during the silence of the night, perceived they still heard the cry of the grey's hounds; and the well-known cheer of the hunter, the sounds of his horse, and the rustling of the branches before the pack, and the sportsmen, are also discriminated; but the phantoms are if ever, visible. Once, as a lighted heard this infernal chase pass by him, sound of the halloo, with which the Huntsman cheered his hounds, he could rain from crying, 'Guck zu Falken' (Good sport to ye, Falkenburgh!). 'Dost thou me good sport?' answered a hoarse 'thou shalt share the game,' and there own at him what seemed to be a huge 'foul carrion. The daring Chasseur lost his best horses soon after, and never recovered the personal effects of this greeting. This tale, though told with variations, is universally believed all over

French had a similar tradition concerning a hunter who infested the forest of bleau. He was sometimes visible, appeared as a huntsman, surrounded by a tall grisly figure. Some account may be found in Sully's Memoirs, who was called Le Grand Veneur. At one chose to hunt so near the palace, that infants, and, if I mistake not, Sully himself, went out into the court, supposing it was the king returning from the chase. The phantom is elsewhere called St. Hubert, superstition seems to have been very general from the following fine poetical Son of this phantom chase, as it was in the wilds of Ross-shire:— of old, the haughty thunes of Ross — simple swain tradition tells — with clans, and ready vassals thronged,

the bounding stag, or guilty wolf,
is heard, at midnight, or at noon,
g faint, but rising still more loud, er, voice of hunters, and of hounds,
m, hoarse whined, blowing far and keen: — is the hubbub multiplies, the gale with wilder shrieks, and fiercer din arant; the broken cry of deer
by throttling dogs; the shouts of men,
is, thick beating on the hollow hill,
the grazing heifer in the vale
the noise, and both the herdsman's ears
th inward dread. Aglaze, he eyes
tain's height, and all the ridges round, me trace of living wight discerns,
ra, o'erawed, and trembling as he stands,
or whom, he owes his idle fear,
, to witch, to fairy, or to fiend,
dara, and no end of wondering finds'
e — reprinted in Scottish Descriptive Poems, 67, 168.

humorous miracle of Father Lesley, a capuchin, related to his being buried in haunted by these unearthly cries of and huntmen. After his sainted relics deposited there, the noise was never heard more. The reader will find this, and other miracles, recorded in the life of Father Bonaventura, which is written in the choicest Italian.

WAR-SONG.

Page 3, line 16. Oh! had they marked the dreary call.

The allusion is to the massacre of the Swiss Guards on the fatal 10th August, 1792. It is painful, but not useless, to remark, that the passive temper with which the Swiss regarded the death of their bravest countrymen, mercenously slaughtered in discharge of their duty, encouraged and authorized the progressive injustice, by which the Alps, once the seat of the most virtuous and free people upon the continent, have, at length, been converted into the citadel of a foreign and military despot. A state degraded is half enslaved. [Written in 1812.]

GLENFINLAS.

Page 11, line 13. How blazed Lord Ronald's beltane-tree.

The fires lighted by the Highlanders, on the first of May, in compliance with a custom derived from the Pagan times, are termed The Beltane-tree. It is a festival celebrated with various superstitious rites, both in the north of Scotland and in Wales.

Page 12, line 26. The seer's prophetic spirit found.

I can only describe the second sight, by adopting Mr. Johnson's definition, who calls it 'an impression, either by the mind upon the eye, or by the eye upon the mind, by which things distant and future are perceived and seen as if they were present.' To which I would only add, that the spectral appearances, thus presented, usually presage misfortune; that the faculty is painful to those who suppose they possess it; and that they usually acquire it while themselves under the pressure of melancholy.

Line 37. Will good Saint Oran's rule prevail?

St. Oran was a friend and follower of St. Columba, and was buried at Icolmkill. His pretensions to be a saint were rather dubious. According to the legend, he consented to be buried alive, in order to propitiate certain demons of the soil, who obstructed the attempts of Columba to build a chapel. Columba caused the body of his friend to be dug up, after three days had elapsed; when Oran, to the horror and scandal of the assistants, declared that there was neither a God, a judgment, nor a future state! He had no time to make further discoveries, for Columba caused the earth once more to be shovelled over him with the utmost despatch. The chapel, however, and the cemetery, was called Being Oran, and, in memory of his rigid celibacy, no female was permitted to pay her devotions or be buried in that place. This is the rule alluded to in the poem.

Page 14, line 218. And three Saint Fillan's powerful prayer.

St. Fillan has given his name to many chap-

at the same time he [Peden] came to Normand's house, in the parish of , in the shire of Ayr, being to preach in his barn. After he came in, he little, leaning upon a chair-back, with covered; when he lifted up his head, "They are in this house that I have word of salvation unto;" he halted a min, saying, "This is strange, that the ill not go out, that we may begin our." Then there was a woman went out, id upon almost all her life, and to her our, for a witch, with many presumpt-the same. It escaped me, in the former s, what John Mairhead (whom I have antioned) told me, that when he came eland to Galloway, he was at family-, and giving some notes upon the Scrip-id, when a very ill-looking man came, down within the door, at the back of an [partition of the cottage]: immedi-ly halted and said, "There is some un-ody just now come into this house. I ain to go out, and not stop my mouth!" een went out, and he insisted [went on], aw him neither come in nor go out.' 18, line 66. By blast of bugle free.

zaromy of Pennyenick, the property of rge Clerk, Bart., is held by a singular the proprietor being bound to sit upon rocky fragment, called the Buckstane, d three blasts of a horn, when the king me to hunt on the Borough Muir, near rgh. Hence, the family have adopted, ' crest, a demi-forester proper, winding with the motto, Free for a Blast.

77. To Auchendinny's hazel glade,
Auchendinny, situated upon the Eske, Pennyenick, when Scott wrote, was the e of H. Mackenzie, author of the Man ng. &c.

78. And Roslin's rocky glen.
rocky glen is less an object of interest s marvellous chapel with an elaborate-sculptured story which to the modern seems singularly unidiomatic in Scot-

79. Dalkeith, which all the virtues love.
Scott's time the place once belonging Earl of Morton, was endeared to him g the residence of the family of Buc-

80. And classic Hawthornden.
hornden, the residence of the poet ond. A house, of more modern date, sed, as it were, by the ruins of the an-istle, and overhangs a tremendous preci-on the banks of the Eske, perforated by : caves, which, in former times, were a to the oppressed patriots of Scotland. Drummond received Ben Jonson, who ed from London, on foot, in order to n.

the whole, tracing the Eske from its till it joins the sea at Musselburgh, no in Scotland can boast such a varied on of the most interesting objects, as well as of the most romantic and beautiful scenery.

Page 26. CADYOW CASTLE.

The ruins of Cadyow, or Cadzow Castle, the ancient baronial residence of the family of Hamilton, are situated upon the precipitous banks of the river Ewan, about two miles above its junction with the Clyde. It was dismantled, in the conclusion of the Civil Wars, during the reign of the unfortunate Mary, to whose cause the house of Hamilton devoted themselves with a generous zeal, which occasioned their temporary obscurity, and, very nearly, their total ruin. The situation of the ruins, embosomed in wood, darkened by ivy and creeping shrubs, and overhanging the brawling torrent, is romantic in the highest degree. In the immediate vicinity of Cadyow is a grove of immense oaks, the remains of the Caledonian Forest, which anciently extended through the south of Scotland, from the eastern to the Atlantic Ocean. Some of these trees measure twenty-five feet, and upwards, in circumference; and the state of decay in which they now appear shows that they have witnessed the rites of the Druids. The whole scenery is included in the magnificent and extensive park of the Duke of Hamilton. There was long preserved in this forest the breed of the Scottish wild cattle, until their ferocity occasioned their being extirpated, about forty years ago. Their appearance was beautiful, being milk-white, with black muzzles, horns, and hoofs. The bulls are described by ancient authors as having white manes; but those of latter days had lost that peculiarity, perhaps by intermixture with the tame breed.

In detailing the death of the Regent Murray, which is made the subject of the ballad, it would be injustice to my reader to use other words than those of Dr. Robertson, whose account of that memorable event forms a beautiful piece of historical painting.

Hamilton of Bothwellhaugh was the person who committed this barbarous action. He had been condemned to death soon after the battle of Langside, as we have already related, and owed his life to the Regent's clemency. But part of his estate had been bestowed upon one of the Regent's favorites [Sir James Bellenden, Lord Justice-Clerk], who seized his house and turned out his wife, naked, in a cold night, into the open fields, where, before next morning, she became furiously mad. This injury made a deeper impression on him than the benefit he had received, and from that moment he vowed to be revenged of the Regent. Party rage strengthened and inflamed his private resentment. His kinsmen, the Hamiltons, applauded the enterprise. The maxims of that age justified the most desperate course he could take to obtain vengeance. He followed the Regent for some time, and watched for an opportunity to strike the blow. He resolved at last to wait till his enemy should arrive at Linlithgow, through which he was to pass in his way from Stirling to Edinburgh. He took his stand in a wooden gallery, which had a window towards the street, spread a feather-bed on the floor to hinder the noise of his feet from being heard; hung up a black cloth behind him, that his shadow might not be observed from without; and, after all this preparation, calmly expected the Regent's approach, who had lodged, during the night, in a house not far distant. Some indiscreet information of the danger which threatened him had been conveyed to the Regent, and he paid so much regard to it that he resolved to return by the same gate through which he had entered, and to fetch a compass round the town. But as the crowd about the gate was great, and he himself unacquainted with fear, he proceeded directly along the street; and the throng of people obliging him to move very slowly, gave the assassin time to take as true an aim, that he shot him, with a single bullet, through the lower part of his belly, and killed the horse of a gentleman who rode on his other side. His followers instantly endeavored to break into the house whence the blow had come, but they found the door strongly barred, and, before it could be forced open, Hamilton had mounted a fleet horse which stood ready for him at a back passage, and was got far beyond their reach. The Regent died the same night (January 23, 1592) of his wound. History of Scotland, book 1.

Bothwellhaugh rode straight to Hamilton, where he was received in triumph, for the action of the banner in Clonsdale, which had been burned by Murray's troops, were yet smoking, and partly preserve the habits of the age, and the memory of the persecution, seemed to his countrymen to unite the dead. After a short abode at Hamilton, this house and domain came into Scotland, and arrived in France, under the patronage of the family of Guise, to whom he was doubtless recommended by having arranged the name of Queen Mary, upon her unfortunate death. De Thou has recorded that an attempt was made to engage him to assassinate Gaspard de Coligny, the famous Admiral of France, and the buckler of the Huguenot cause. But the character of Bothwellhaugh was mistaken, he was a mercenary soldier in deed, and respecting the offer with contempt and indignation. He had no attachments to evil, but Scotland to commit murder in France, he had arranged his own just quarrel, but he would neither for price nor promise assume that of another man. Thuanus, cap. 46.

Line 75. Line 46. First of his troop, the chief rode on.

The head of the family of Hamilton at this period was James Earl of Arran Duke of Chastellarnault in France, and first peer of the Scottish realm. In 1566 he was appointed by Queen Mary her lieutenant-governor in Scotland upon the singular title of her adopted father.

Line 81. Steen Curat repaid with darkness, for.

Lord David Hamilton, second son of the Duke of Chastellarnault, and commander of the Ar-boy of Paisley, acted a distinguished part during the troubles of Queen Mary's reign, and remained unalterably attached to the cause of that unfortunate princess. He led the van of her army at the fatal battle of Langside, and was one of the commanders at the Raid ofirling, which had so nearly given complete success to the queen's faction.

Line 85. Few suns have set since Woodhouselee.

This barony, stretching along the banks of the Esk, near Auchendinny, belonged to Bothwellhaugh, in right of his wife. The ruins of the mansion, from whence she was expelled in the brutal manner which occasioned her death, are still to be seen in a hollow glen beside the river. Popular report tenants them with the restless ghost of the Lady Bothwellhaugh, whom, however, it confounds with Lady Anne Bothwell, whose Lament is so popular. The spectre is so tenacious of her robes, that a part of the stones of the ancient edifice having been employed in building or repairing the present Woodhouselee, she has deemed it a part of her privilege to haunt that house also, and one of very late years, has excited considerable disturbance and terror among the domestics. This is a more remarkable violation of the laws of ghosts, as the present Woodhouselee is situated on the slope of the Pentlands hills, distant at least four miles from her proper abode. She always appears in white, and with her chain of her arms.

Page 28. Line 112. Devotes to the deep his poor sword.

Kerrel informs us, that Bothwellhaugh, being closely pursued, "after that spin and wound had found him, he drew forth his dagger and struck his horse behind, which caused it to rear to keep a very loose stand, and then he, which means he escaped, and got away from all the rest of the horses. Line 112.

Line 120. From the wild furber's chamber side. Murray's death took place shortly after an expedition to the Borders.

Line 121. It is reported that an arrow shot.

With gun cocked. The curtain was shot the Regent was shot is preserved at Glasgow Palace. It is a brass piece of a quelling length very small in the butt and very rather extraordinary appears to have been made or intended in the barrel. It had a mechanism for which a modern firelock has been judiciously substituted.

Line 141. Thus Morton, girt with purple coat.

He was concerned in the murder of Lord Rizzio, and at last victim to that of Mary.

Line 144. The wild Macfarlanes' family clan.

This clan of Lothian Highlanders were attached to the Queen Mary.

Line 146. Glencaine, and also Parkhouse were slain.

The Earl of Glencaine was a steady adherent of the Regent. George Douglas of Parkhouse was a natural brother of the Earl of Argyll, whose horse was killed by the same ball to which Murray fell.

Line 147. And haggard Lindsay's iron eye.
Lord Lindsay, of the Byres, was the most ferocious and brutal of the Regent's faction, and, as such, was employed to extort Mary's signature to the deed of resignation presented to her in Lochleven Castle. He discharged his commission with the most savage rigor; and it is even said that when the weeping captive, in the act of signing, averted her eyes from the fatal deed, he pinched her arm with the grasp of his iron glove.

Line 152. So close the minions crowded nigh.
Not only had the Regent notice of the intended attempt upon his life, but even of the very house from which it was threatened. With that infatuation at which men wonder, after such events have happened, he deemed it would be a sufficient precaution to ride briskly past the dangerous spot. But even this was prevented by the crowd; so that Bothwellhaugh had time to take a deliberate aim. Spottiswoode, p. 233.

Page 29, line 178. Spread to the wind thy bannered tree.

An oak, half-sawn, with the motto through, is an ancient cognizance of the family of Hamilton.

THE REIVER'S WEDDING.

Page 29, line 50. Beneath the trysting tree,
At Linton, in Roxburghshire, there is a circle of stones surrounding a smooth plot of turf, called the tryst, or place of appointment, which tradition avers to have been the rendezvous of the neighboring warriors. The name of the leader was cut in the turf, and the arrangement of the letters announced to his followers the course which he had taken.

CHRISTIE'S WILL.

Page 31, line 2. And sae has he down by the Grey Mare's Tail.

A cataract above Moffat.

Line 13. Bethink how he swore, by the salt and the bread.

He took bread and salt, by this light, that he would never open his lips. — The Honest Whore, Act v. scene ii.

Page 32, line 67. And, hunting over Middleton Moor.

Middleton Moor is about fifteen miles from Edinburgh on the way to the Border.

Line 87. Or that the gipsies glamoured gang.
Besides the prophetic powers ascribed to the gipsies in most European countries, the Scottish peasants believe them possessed of the power of throwing upon bystanders a spell, to fascinate their eyes, and cause them to see the thing that is not. Thus in the old ballad of Johnie Faa, the elopement of the Countess of Cassilis, with a gipsy leader, is imputed to fascination: —

'As sune as they saw her weel-far'd face,
They cast the glamour ower her.'

Line 95. I have tar-barrelled mony a witch.
Human nature shrinks from the brutal scenes produced by the belief in witchcraft. Under the idea that the devil imprinted upon the body of his miserable vassals a mark, which was insensible to pain, persons were employed to run needles into the bodies of the old women who were suspected of witchcraft.

THOMAS THE RHYMER.

Page 33, line 24. All underneath the Eildon Tree.

The Eildon Tree, from beneath the shade of which Thomas the Rhymer delivered his prophecies, now no longer exists; but the spot is marked by a large stone, called Eildon Tree Stone. A neighboring rivulet takes the name of the Bogle Burn (Goblin Brook) from the Rhymer's supernatural visitants.

Line 60. And she pu'd an apple frae a tree.

The traditional commentary upon this ballad informs us, that the apple was the produce of the fatal tree of knowledge, and that the garden was the terrestrial paradise. The repugnance of Thomas to be debarred the use of falsehood, when he might find it convenient, has a comic effect.

Page 34, line 37. Where a king lay stiff beneath his steed.

King Alexander, killed by a fall from his horse, near Kinghorn.

Line 42. My doom is not to die this day.

The uncertainty which long prevailed in Scotland concerning the fate of James IV. is well known.

Line 56. Is by a burn, that's called of bread.

One of Thomas's rhymes, preserved by tradition, runs thus: —

'The burn of breid
Shall run for reid.'

Bannock-burn is the brook here meant. The Scots give the name of bannock to a thick round cake of unleavened bread.

Page 35, line 3. And Ruberslaw showed high Dunyon.

Ruberslaw and Dunyon are two hills near Jedburgh.

Line 5. Then all by bonny Coldingknow.

An ancient tower near Ercildoune, belonging to a family of the name of Home. One of Thomas's prophecies is said to have run thus: —

'Vengeance! Vengeance! when and where?
On the house of Coldingknow, now and evermair!'

The spot is rendered classical by its having given name to the beautiful melody called the 'Broom o' the Cowdenknows.'

Page 36, line 112. As white as snow on Fairnalie.

An ancient seat upon the Tweed, in Selkirkshire. In a popular edition of the first part of 'Thomas the Rhymer,' the Fairy Queen thus addresses him: —

'Gin ye wad meet wi' me again,
Gang to the bonny banks of Fairnalie.'

THE BARD'S INCANTATION.

Page 37, line 21. The Spectre with his Bloody Hand.

The forest of Glenmore is haunted by a spirit called Lhamdearg, or Red-hand.

Line 32. On Bloody Larga and Loncarty.

Where the Norwegian invader of Scotland received two bloody defeats.

THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

Page 46, line 27. He passed where Newark's stately tower.

A massive square tower, now unroofed and ruinous, surrounded by an outward wall, defended by round flanking turrets. It is most beautifully situated, about three miles from Selkirk, upon the banks of the Yarrow, a fierce and precipitous stream, which unites with the Ettrick about a mile beneath the castle. . . .

The castle continued to be an occasional seat of the Buccleuch family for more than a century; and here, it is said, the Duchess of Monmouth and Buccleuch was brought up. See Sketchy's Illustrations of the Lay of the Last Minstrel.

Line 37. The Duchess marked his weary pace.
Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth, representative of the ancient Lords of Buccleuch, and widow of the unfortunate James, Duke of Monmouth, who was beheaded in 1685.

Page 47, line 49. Of good Earl Francis, dead and gone.

Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch, father of the Duchess.

Line 50. And of Earl Walter, rex him; God!
Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, grandfather of the Duchess, and a celebrated warrior.

Line 1. The feast was over in Branksome tower.

In the reign of James I., Sir William Scott of Buccleuch, chief of the clan bearing that name, exchanged, with Sir Thomas Inglis of Manor, the estate of Murdiestoun in Lanarkshire, for one-half of the barony of Branksome, or Brankholm, lying upon the Teviot, about three miles above Hawick. He was probably induced to this transaction from the vicinity of Branksome to the extensive domain which he possessed in Ettrick Forest and in Teviotdale. In the former district he held by occupancy the estate of Buccleuch, and much of the forest land on the river Ettrick. In Teviotdale, he enjoyed the barony of Eckford, by a grant from Robert II. to his ancestor, Walter Scott of Kirkurd, for the apprehending of Gilbert Riddorford, confirmed by Robert III., 3d May, 1424. Tradition imputes the exchange betwixt Scott and Inglis to a conversation, in which the latter, a man, it would appear, of a mild and forbearing nature, complained much of the injuries which he was exposed to from the English Borderers, who frequently plundered his lands of Branksome. Sir William Scott instantly offered him the estate of Murdiestoun, in exchange for that which was subject to such egregious inconvenience. When the bargain was completed, he dryly remarked that the cattle in Cumberland were as good as those of Teviotdale; and proceeded to commence a system of reprisals upon the English, which was regularly pursued by his successors. In the next reign, James II. granted to Sir Walter Scott of Branksome, and to Sir David, his son, the remaining half of the barony of Branksome, to be held in blanché for the payment of a red rose. The cause assigned for the grant is, their brave and faithful exertions in favor of the King against the house of Douglas, with whom James had been recently tugging for the throne of Scotland.

Branksome Castle continued to be the principal seat of the Buccleuch family, while security was any object in their choice of a mansion. It has since been the residence of the Commissioners, or Chamberlains of the family. From the various alterations which the building has undergone, it is not only greatly restricted in its dimensions, but retains little of the castellated form, if we except one square tower of masonry thickness, the only part of the original building which now remains.

Lines 16, 17.

Nine-and-twenty knights of fame

Hung their shields in Branksome Hall.

The ancient Barons of Buccleuch, both from feudal splendor and from their frontier situation, retained in their household, at Branksome, a number of gentlemen of their own name, who held lands from their chief, for the military service of watching and warding his castle.

Line 39. And with Jedwood-axe at saddle-bow.

'Of a truth,' says Froissart, 'the Scottish cannot boast great skill with the bow, but rather bear axes, with which, in time of need, they give heavy strokes.' The Jedwood-axe was a sort of partisan, used by horsemen, as appears from the arms of Jedburgh, which bear a cavalier mounted, and armed with this weapon. It is also called a Jedwood or Jeddart staff.

Page 48, line 50. Threaten Branksome's lordly towers.

Branksome Castle was continually exposed to the attacks of the English, both from its situation and the restless military disposition of its inhabitants, who were seldom on good terms with their neighbors.

Lines 57, 58.

Bards long shall tell

How Lord Walter fell!

Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch succeeded to his grandfather, Sir David, in 1432. He was a brave and powerful baron, and Warden of the West Marches of Scotland. His death was the consequence of a feud betwixt the Scotts and Kerrs, which, in spite of all means used to bring about an agreement, raged for many years upon the Borders.

Line 69. No! vainly to each holy shrine.

Among other expedients resorted to for stanching the feud betwixt the Scotts and the Kerrs, there was a bond executed in 1439, between the heads of each clan, binding them to perform reciprocally the four principal images of Scotland for the benefit of all of those of the opposite name who were in the quarrel. But either it never effect, or else the feud was renewed afterwards.

105. With Carr in arms had stood.

Family of Ker, Kerr, or Carr, was very old on the Border. Cessford Castle, the baronial residence of the family, is near the village of Moss-battle, within three miles of the Cheviot Hills. It has a place of great strength and consequence, now ruinous.

109. Before Lord Cranstoun she should

Cranstouns, Lord Cranstoun, are an Border family, whose chief seat was long in Teviotdale. They were at this feud with the clan of Scott; for it appears the Lady of Buccleuch, in 1557, being Laird of Cranstoun, seeking his life, beless, the same Cranstoun, or perhaps was married to a daughter of the same

113. Of Bethune's line of Picardie.

Bethunes were of French origin, and their name from a small town in

There were several distinguished of the Bethunes in the neighboring of Picardy; they numbered among descendants the celebrated Due de Sully; name was accounted among the most of France. The family of Bethune, or, in Fife, produced three learned and dignitaries; namely, Cardinal Beaton, and successive Archbishops of Glasgow, all of whom lived about the date of the romance. The family was descended Dame Janet Beady Buccleuch, widow of Sir Walter of Branksome. She was a woman of no spirit, as appeared from her riding sad of her son's clan after her husband's. She also possessed the hereditary ability of her family in such a degree, that the notion of the vulgar imputed them to ancestral knowledge. With this was mingled, on the foul accusation of her having killed Queen Mary to the murder of her husband.

115. In Padua, far beyond the sea.

It was long supposed, by the Scottish poets, to be the principal school of necromancy.

120. His form no darkening shadow

Shadow of a necromancer is independent sun. Glycas informs us, that Simon caused his shadow to go before him, people believe it was an attendant Heywood's Hierarchie, p. 475.) The conceit, that when a class of students made a certain progress in their mystic they are obliged to run through a smokeous hall where the devil literally the hindmost in the race, unless he the hall so speedily, that the arch-enemy can only apprehend his shadow. In the latter case, the person of the sage never after throws any shade; and those who have thus lost their shadow always prove the best magicians. [In Chaucer's story of Peter Schlemihl, which appeared not long after the Lay, the shadow is parted with by a sale to the Devil.]

Line 125. The creatureless forms of air.

The Scottish vulgar, without having any very defined notion of their attributes, believe in the existence of an intermediate class of spirits, residing in the air or in the waters; to whose agency they ascribe floods, storms, and all such phenomena as their own philosophy cannot readily explain. They are supposed to interfere in the affairs of mortals, sometimes with a malevolent purpose, and sometimes with milder views.

Page 49, line 157. A fancied moss-trooper.

This was the usual appellation of the marauders upon the Border; a profession diligently pursued by the inhabitants on both sides, and by none more actively and successfully than by Buccleuch's clan. Long after the union of the crowns, the moss-troopers, although sunk in reputation, and no longer enjoying the pretext of national hostility, continued to pursue their calling. [Fuller in his Worthies derives the name from their 'dwelling in the mooses and riding in troops together.']

Line 208. Eralt the Crescents and the Star.

The arms of the Kerra of Cessford were Vert on a chevron, betwixt three unicorns' heads erased argent, three mullets sable; crest, a unicorn's head erased proper. The Scots of Buccleuch bore, Or, on a bend azure; a star of six points betwixt two crescents of the first.

Page 50, line 213. She called to her William of Deloraine.

The lands of Deloraine are joined to those of Buccleuch in Ettrick Forest. They were immemorably possessed by the Buccleuch family, under the strong title of occupancy, although no charter was obtained from the crown until 1545.

Line 219. By wily turns, by desperate bounds.

The kings and heroes of Scotland, as well as the Border-riders, were sometimes obliged to study how to evade the pursuit of bloodhounds. Barbour informs us that Robert Bruce was repeatedly tracked by sleuth-dogs. On one occasion he escaped by wading a bow-shot down a brook, and ascending into a tree by a branch which overhung the water; thus, leaving no trace on land of his footsteps, he baffled the scent.

Line 258. Were 't my neck-verse at Hairibee.

Hairibee was the place of executing the Border marauders at Carlisle. The neck-verse is the beginning of the 51st Psalm, Miserere mei, etc., anciently read by criminals claiming the benefit of clergy.

Line 267. Dimly he viewed the Moat-hill's mound.

This is a round artificial mount near Hawick, which, from its name (Mot, A. S. Conedium, Conventus), was probably anciently used as a place for assembling a national council) of the adjacent tribes. There are many such mounds in Scotland, and they are sometimes, but rarely, of a square form.

Line 287. On Minto-crag the moonbeams glint.

A romantic assemblage of cliffs, which rise suddenly above the vale of Teviot, in the immediate vicinity of the family-seat from which Lord Minto takes his title. A small platform, on a projecting crag, commanding a most beautiful prospect, is termed 'Barnhills' Bed.' This Barnhills is said to have been a robber, or outlaw. There are remains of a strong tower beneath the rocks, where he is supposed to have dwelt, and from which he derived his name.

Line 288. To ascend Riddell's fair domain.

The family of Riddell have been very long in possession of the barony called Riddell, or Rivedale, part of which still bears the latter name. [At a later date, the family of Riddell passed with all their Scottish estates.]

Page 31, line 221. As gaird his eye o'er Hallow.

An ancient seat of the Kears of Cawfield, now demolished. About a quarter of a mile to the northward lay the field of battle between Buccleuch and Angus, which is called to this day the Strath of Field.

Line 284. On Minto's rose and fair Farnet

Minto Abbey. The ancient and beautiful monastery of Minto was founded by King David I. It contained the finest specimens of Scotch architecture and Gothic sculpture which Scotland ever possessed. The ruins of which it is much, though it has retained the weather for a century ago, retains perfect sharpness, as the ruins of most ancient monuments seem to retain as when newly wrought. It was the only one that was a representation of flowers, vegetables, and animals in stone, with accuracy and precision as to details, that on almost distant all senses, when we consider the difficulty of engraving a hard substance in such intricate and accurate construction. This aspect of things was destroyed in St. Mary and the monks were of the Benedictine order. At the time of the Reformation, they shared in the general suppression of a canonical and irregularly thriving upon the House of Monks.

Line 3. He saw a hound in coat mounted.

In a letter to Thomas Scott, Nov. 27, 1811, Scott remarks: "In addition to the obsequies to furnish gratis vesting, it recommending a citizen to assist me by visiting all allusion to personal school is more important to me in the above mentioned letter."

Line 11. Then saw Sir John's banner set.

There is a Southern manuscript, the reputation is credit to Scotland, are small specimens, and the manuscript is written by those of Scotch descent, was many others, which the Southern manuscript is by one person, who is now in the world.

Page 3, line 23. How gillie is shown to the world again.

The Buccleuch family were great benefactors to the Abbey of Melrose. As early as the reign of Robert II., Robert Scott, Baron of Murieston and Rankleburn (now Buccleuch) gave to the monks the lands of Hinksey, in Ettrick Forest, pro salute anime sue.

Line 66. Sax to patter an Ave Mary.

The Borderers were, as may be supposed, very ignorant about religious matters. But we learn from Lesley that, however deficient in real religion, they regularly told their beads, and never with more zeal than when going on a plundering expedition.

Line 79. And beneath their feet were the bones of the dead.

The cloisters were frequently used as places of sepulture. An instance occurs in Dryburgh Abbey where the cloister has an inscription bearing, He pater fratres Archiepiscopus.

Line 88. So had he seen, in fair Castle.

"By my faith," said the Duke of Lancaster to a Portuguese squire, "of all the feasts of arms that the Castellans, and best of my country doth use, the marriage of their dukes best pleaseth me, and gladly I would see it too, as I hear say if they strike one apple without be in well armed, the dart will pierce him through." — "By my faith," said the squire, "we may truly say I have seen many a good strike given with them, which at one time and in death, and was to us great pleasure; for at the said skirmish, Sir John Lancaster of England was mortally wounded in such wise, that the heart pierced all the pieces of his coat of mail, and a mace of steel with spikes and passed through his body, so that he fell down dead." — "Farewell," said he. This mode of fighting with darts was used in the military game called jeu de la mail, which the Normans borrowed from their French invaders.

Page 31, line 205. On gallant Chief of the name.

The famous and desperate battle of Otterburn was fought in 1546. The Lord of Henry Percy called Hotspur and others led a charge. Just these important changes were at the head of a chosen band of troops, and they were great in military name. To see of the conflict and the death of the most important, and the death was the last death witnessed by the death of their father general, the last of Hotspur, who was shot in the action. In the battle of Melrose, the last of the Hotspurs.

Line 11. How gillie is shown to the world again.

William Douglas called the King of Scotland Hotspur, during the reign of David I., and was a distinguished man, who was called the Duke of Hotspur. His title was bestowed on him by the King, and he was a great warrior. The King, however, was killed at the battle of Otterburn, and his death was the last of the Hotspurs. The King, however, was killed at the battle of Otterburn, and his death was the last of the Hotspurs.

Knight of Liddesdale came down upon Ramsay, while he was administering justice at Hawick, seized and carried him off to his remote and inaccessible castle of Hermitage, where he threw his unfortunate prisoner, horse and man, into a dungeon, and left him to perish of hunger. It is said the miserable captive prolonged his existence for several days by the corn which fell from a granary above the vault in which he was confined. So weak was the royal authority, that David, although highly incensed at this atrocious murder, found himself obliged to appoint the Knight of Liddesdale successor to his victim, as Sheriff of Teviotdale. But he was soon after slain, while hunting in Ettrick Forest, by his own godson and chieftain, William, Earl of Douglas, in revenge, according to some authors, of Ramsay's murder; although a popular tradition, preserved in a ballad quoted by Godscroft, and some parts of which are still preserved, ascribes the resentment of the Earl to jealousy. The place where the Knight of Liddesdale was killed is called, from his name, William-Cross, upon the ridge of a hill called William-Hope, betwixt Tweed and Yarrow. His body, according to Godscroft, was carried to Lindean church the first night after his death, and thence to Melrose, where he was interred with great pomp, and where his tomb is still shown.

Line 148. To meet the wondrous Michael Scott.
Sir Michael Scott of Balwearie flourished during the thirteenth century, and was one of the ambassadors sent to bring the Maid of Norway to Scotland upon the death of Alexander III. By a poetical anachronism, he is here placed in a later era. He was a man of much learning, chiefly acquired in foreign countries. He wrote a commentary upon Aristotle, printed at Venice in 1496; and several treatises upon natural philosophy, from which he appears to have been addicted to the abstruse studies of judicial astrology, alchemy, physiognomy, and chiromancy. Hence he passed among his contemporaries for a skilful magician. Dempster informs us, that he remembers to have heard in his youth that the magic books of Michael Scott were still in existence, but could not be opened without danger, on account of the malignant fiends who were thereby invoked. Tradition varies concerning the place of his burial: some contend for Holme Coltrame, in Cumberland, others for Melrose Abbey. But all agree that his books of magic were interred in his grave, or preserved in the convent where he died.

Line 140. That when, in Salamanca's cave.
Spain, from the fables, doubtless, of Arabian learning and superstition, was accounted a favorite residence of magicians. Pope Sylvester, who actually imported from Spain the use of the Arabian numerals, was supposed to have learned there the magic for which he was stigmatized by the ignorance of his age. There were public schools where magic, or rather the sciences supposed to involve its mysteries, were regularly taught, at Toledo, Seville, and Salamanca. In the latter city, they were held in a deep cavern; the mouth of which was walled up by Queen Isabella, wife of King Ferdinand.

Line 142. The bells would ring in Notre Dame.

Michael Scott was chosen, it is said, to go upon an embassy, to obtain from the King of France satisfaction for certain piracies committed by his subjects upon those of Scotland. Instead of preparing a new equipage and splendid retinue, the ambassador retreated to his study, opened his book and evoked a fiend in the shape of a huge black horse, mounted upon his back, and forced him to fly through the air towards France. As they crossed the sea, the devil insidiously asked his rider what it was that the old women of Scotland muttered at bed-time. A less experienced wizard might have answered that it was the Pater Noster, which would have licensed the devil to precipitate him from his back. But Michael sternly replied, 'What is that to thee? Mount, Diabolus, and fly!' When he arrived at Paris, he tied his horse to the gate of the palace, entered, and boldly delivered his message. An ambassador, with so little of the pomp and circumstance of diplomacy, was not received with much respect, and the king was about to return a contemptuous refusal to his demand, when Michael besought him to suspend his resolution till he had seen his horse stamp three times. The first stamp shook every steeple in Paris, and caused all the bells to ring; the second threw down three of the towers of the palace; and the infernal steed had lifted his hoof to give the third stamp, when the king rather chose to dismiss Michael, with the most ample concessions, than to stand to the probable consequences.

Line 145. The words that cleft Eildon Hills in three.

Michael Scott was, once upon a time, much embarrassed by a spirit, for whom he was under the necessity of finding constant employment. He commanded him to build a cauld, or dam-head, across the Tweed at Kelso; it was accomplished in one night, and still does honor to the infernal architect. Michael next ordered that Eildon Hill, which was then a uniform cone, should be divided into three. Another night was sufficient to part its summit into the three picturesque peaks which it now bears. At length the enchanter conquered this indefatigable demon, by employing him in the hopeless and endless task of making ropes out of sea-sand.

Line 186. That lamp shall burn unquenchedly.

Baptista Porta, and other authors who treat of natural magic, talk much of eternal lamps, pretended to have been found burning in ancient sepulchres. One of these perpetual lamps is said to have been discovered in the tomb of Tulliola, the daughter of Cicero. The wick was supposed to be composed of asbestos. Kircher enumerates three different recipes for constructing such lamps, and wisely concludes that the thing is nevertheless impossible.

Page 54, line 245. He thought, as he took it, the dead man frowned.

William of Deloraine might be strengthened in this belief by the well-known story of the Cid Ruy Diaz. When the body of that famous Christian champion was sitting in state by the high altar of the cathedral church of Toledo, where it remained for ten years, a certain malicious Jew attempted to pull him by the beard; but he had no sooner touched the formidable whiskers, than the corpse started up, and half unsheathed his sword. The Israelite fled; and no permanent was the effect of his terror, that he became Christian. Heywood's Hierarchie, p. 480, quoted from Sebastian Cobarruvias's Cronica.

Page 56, line 353. The Baron's dwarf his converse held.

The idea of Lord Cranstoun's Goblin Page is taken from a being called Gilpin Horner, who appeared, and made some stay, at a farmhouse among the Border-mountains. An old man, of the name of Anderson, who was born, and lived all his life, at Tockshaw-hill in Fakedale-muir, said that two men, late in the evening, when it was growing dark, heard a voice, at some distance, saying, 'Tint! tint! tint!' (One of the men, named Moffat, called out, 'What devil has tint you? Come here.' Immediately a creature, of something like a human form, appeared. It was surprisingly little, distorted in features, and misshapen in limbs. As soon as the two men could see it plainly, they ran home in a great fright, imagining they had met with some goblin. By the way Moffat fell, and it ran over him, and was home at the house as soon as either of them, and staid there a long time; but it is not stated how long. It was real flesh and blood, and ate and drank, was fond of cream, and, when it could get at it, would destroy a great deal. It seemed a mischievous creature; and any of the children whom it could master, it would beat and scratch without mercy. It was once abusing a child belonging to the same Moffat, who had been so frightened by its first appearance; and he, in a passion, struck it so violent a blow upon the side of the head, that it tumbled upon the ground; but it was not stunned; for it set up its head directly, and exclaimed, 'Ah hah, Will o' Moffat, you strike sair!' i. e., sorry.) After it had staid there long, one evening, when the women were milking the cows in the loon, it was playing among the children near by them, when suddenly they heard a loud shrill voice cry, three times, 'Gilpin Horner!' It started, and said, 'That is me, I must away,' and instantly disappeared, and was never heard of more. Besides constantly repeating the word tint! tint! Gilpin Horner was often heard to call upon Peter Bertram, or Bertram, as he pronounced the word; and when the shrill voice called Gilpin Horner, he immediately acknowledged it was the summons of the said Peter Bertram, who seems therefore to have been the devil who had tint, or lost, the little imp. As much as has been objected to Gilpin Horner on account of his being supposed rather a device of the author than a popular superstition, I can only say, that no legend which I ever heard seemed to be more universally credited, and that many persons of very good rank and considerable information are well known to repose absolute faith in the tradition.

Line 390. But the Ladye of Branksome gathered a band.

Upon 25th June, 1557, Dame Janet Beatonne, Lady Buccleuch, and a great number of the name of Scott, delinquit (accused) for coming to the kirk of St. Mary of the Lowes, to the number of two hundred persons bodin in feire of weire arrayed in armor, and breaking open the door of the said kirk, in order to apprehend the Laird of Cranstoun for his destruction. On the 30th July, a warrant from the Queen is presented, discharging the justice to proceed against the Lady Buccleuch while new calling. — Abridgment of Books of Adjournal, in Advocates Library. No farther procedure seems to have taken place. It is said, that upon this rising, the kirk of St. Mary was burnt by the Scots.

Page 57, line 35. He marked the crane on the Baron's crest.

The crest of the Cranstouns, in allusion to their name, is a crane dormant, holding a stone in his foot, with an emphatic Border motto, Thou shalt want ere I want.

Page 58, line 90. Like a book-bosomed priest should ride.

At Unthank, two miles N. E. from the church of Ewes, there are the ruins of a chapel for divine service, in time of Popery. There is a tradition, that friars were wont to come from Melrose, or Jedburgh, to baptize and marry in this parish; and from being in use to carry the mass-book in their bosoms, they were called, by the inhabitants, Book-a-bosomes.

Page 58, line 110. All was delusion, naught was truth.

Glamour, in the legends of Scottish superstition, means the magic power of impressing on the eyesight of the spectators, so that the appearance of an object shall be totally different from the reality. The transformation of Michael Scott by the witch of Falseshope, already mentioned, was a genuine operation of glamour. To a similar charm the ballad of Johnny Fa' imputes the fascination of the lovely Countess, who eloped with that gypsy leader.

*'Sae soon as they saw her wad-tar'd face,
They cast the glamour o'er her.'*

Line 155. The running stream dissolved the spell.

It is a firm article of popular faith, that no enchantment can subsist in a living stream. Nay, if you can interpose a brook between you and witches, spectres, or even fiends, you are in perfect safety. Burns's 'imitable Twa o' Shouters' turns entirely upon such a circumstance. The belief seems to be of antiquity. Brans-ton informs us that certain Irish wizards could by spells, convert earthen clods or stones into fat pigs, which they sold in the market, but which always reassumed their proper form when driven by the deceived purchaser across a running stream.

Page 59, line 227. He never counted him a man.

Imitated from Drayton's account of Robin Hood and his followers (Polyolion, Song 26):—

'A hundred valiant men had this brave Robin Hood, Still ready at his call, that bowmen were right good;
All clad in Lincoln green, with cape of red and blue,
His fellow's winded horn not one of them but knew.
When setting to their lips their bugles shrill,
The warbling echoes waked from every dale and hill;
Their bauldrics set with studs athwart their shoulders
cast,

To which under their arms their sheafs were buckled
fast,

A short sword at their belt, a buckler scarce a span,
Who struck below the knee not counted then a man.
All made of Spanish yew, their bows were wondrous
strong,

They not an arrow drew but was a clothyard long.
Of archery they had the very perfect craft,
With broad arrow, or but, or prick, or roving shaft.'

To wound an antagonist in the thigh, or leg,
was reckoned contrary to the law of arms.

Page 60, line 291. And with a charm she stanch'd the blood.

See several charms for this purpose in Reginald Scott's Discovery of Witchcraft, p. 273.

'Tom Potts was but a serving man,
But yet he was a doctor good;
He bound his handkerchief on the wound,
And with some kinds of words he stanch'd the blood.'
Pieces of Ancient Popular Poetry, London, 1791, p. 131.

Line 326. O, 't is the beacon-blaze of war.

The Border beacons, from their number and position, formed a sort of telegraphic communication with Edinburgh. The Act of Parliament, 1455, c. 48, directs that one bale or fagot shall be warning of the approach of the English in any manner; two bales, that they are coming indeed; four bales blazing beside each other, that the enemy are in great force.

Page 61, line 387. On many a cairn's gray pyramid.

The cairns, or piles of loose stones, which crown the summit of most of our Scottish hills, and are found in other remarkable situations, seem usually, though not universally, to have been sepulchral monuments. Six flat stones are commonly found in the centre, forming a cavity of greater or smaller dimensions, in which an urn is often placed. The author is possessed of one, discovered beneath an immense cairn at Roughlee, in Liddesdale. It is of the most barbarous construction; the middle of the substance alone having been subjected to the fire, over which, when hardened, the artist had laid an inner and outer coat of unbaked clay, etched with some very rude ornaments; his skill apparently being inadequate to baking the vase, when completely finished. The contents were bones and ashes, and a quantity of beads made of coal. This seems to have been a barbarous imitation of the Roman fashion of Sepulture.

Page 62, line 20. Fell by the side of great Dundee.

The Viscount of Dundee, slain in the battle of Killiecrankie.

Line 28. For pathless marsh and mountain cell.

The morasses were the usual refuge of the Border herdsmen, on the approach of an English army. Caves, hewed in the most dangerous and inaccessible places, also afforded an occasional retreat. Such caverns may be seen in the precipitous banks of the Teviot at Sunlaw, upon the Ale at Ancrum, upon the Jed at Hundalee, and in many other places upon the Border. The banks of the Esk at Gorton and Hawthornden are hollowed into similar recesses. But even these dreary dens were not always secure places of concealment.

Line 40. Watt Tintinn, from the Liddel-side.

This person was, in my younger days, the theme of many a fireside tale. He was a retainer of the Buccleuch family, and held for his Border service a small tower on the frontiers of Liddesdale. Watt was, by profession, a sutor, but, by inclination and practice, an archer and warrior. Upon one occasion, the Captain of Bewcastle, military governor of that wild district of Cumberland, is said to have made an incursion into Scotland, in which he was defeated and forced to fly. Watt Tintinn pursued him closely through a dangerous morass; the captain, however, gained the firm ground; and seeing Tintinn dismounted, and floundering in the bog, used these words of insult: 'Sutor Watt, ye cannot sew your boots; the heels riap [creek], and the seams rive.' 'If I cannot sew,' retorted Tintinn, discharging a shaft, which nailed the captain's thigh to his saddle, 'if I cannot sew, I can yerk,' i. e. twitch, as shoemakers do in securing the stitches of their work.

Line 51. I think 't will prove a Warden-raid.

An inroad commanded by the warden in person.

Line 60. Of silver brooch and bracelet proud.

As the Borderers were indifferent about the furniture of their habitations, so much exposed to be burned and plundered, they were proportionally anxious to display splendor in decorating and ornamenting their females.

Line 74. Belted Will Howard is marching here.

Lord William Howard, third son of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, succeeded to Naworth Castle, and a large domain annexed to it, in right of his wife Elizabeth, sister of George Lord Dacre, who died without heirs-male, in the 11th of Queen Elizabeth. By a poetical anachronism, he is introduced into the romance a few years earlier than he actually flourished. He was warden of the Western Marches; and, from the rigor with which he repressed the Border excesses, the name of Belted Will Howard is still famous in our traditions. In the castle of Naworth, his apartments, containing a bedroom, atory, and library, are still shown. They impress us with an unpleasant idea of the life of a lord warden of the Marches. Three or four strong doors separating these rooms from the rest of the castle, indicate the apprehensions of treachery from his prison; and the secret winding passages, through which he could privately descend into the guard-room, or even into the dungeons, imply the necessity of no small degree of secret superintendence on the part of the governor. As the ancient books and furniture have remained undisturbed, the venerable appearance of these apartments, and the manner scattered around the chamber, almost lead us to expect the arrival of the warden in person. Newarth Castle is situated near Brampton, in Cumberland. Lord William Howard is ancestor of the Earls of Carlisle.

Line 75. And had Lord Barre, with many a peer.

The well-known name of Barre is derived from the exploits of one of their ancestors at the siege of Acre, or Ptolemais, under Richard Cœur-de-Lion.

Line 76. And all the German hawk-bird-men.

In the wars with Scotland, Henry VIII. and his successors employed numerous bands of mercenary troops. At the battle of Pinky, there were in the English army six hundred hawk-birders on foot, and two hundred on horseback, composed chiefly of foreigners. From the battle-pieces of the ancient Flemish painters, we learn that the Low Country and German soldiers marched to an assault with their right knees bated. And we may also observe, in such pictures, the extravagance to which they carried the fashion of ornamenting their dress with knots of ribbon.

Page 63, line 119. 'Ready, aye ready,' for the field.

Sir John Scott of Thirlestane flourished in the reign of James V., and possessed the estates of Thirlestane, Gumesclench, &c., lying upon the river of Forth, and extending to St. Mary's Loch, at the head of Yarrow. It appears that when James had assembled his nobility, and their feudal followers, at Falk, with the purpose of invading England, and was, as is well known, disappointed by the obstinate refusal of his peers, this baron alone declared himself ready to follow the King wherever he should lead. In memory of his fidelity, James granted to his family a charter of arms, entitling them to bear a border of fleurs-de-luce similar to the treasure in the royal arms, with a bundle of spears for the crest; motto, Ready, aye ready.

Line 120. An aged knight, to danger steel'd.

The family of Harden are descended from a younger son of the Laird of Buccleuch, who flourished before the estate of Murieston was acquired by the marriage of one of those chieftains with the heiress, in 1296. Walter Scott of Harden, who flourished during the reign of Queen Mary, was a renowned Border freebooter. His castle was situated upon the very brink of a dark and precipitous dell, through which a scanty rivulet steals to meet the Borthwick. In the recess of this glen he is said to have kept his apoll, which served for the daily maintenance of his retainers, until the production of a relic of these spurs, in a covered dish, announced to the hungry band that they must wait for a supply of provisions. He was married to Mary Scott, daughter of Philip Scott of Buccleuch, and called in song the Flower of Yarrow. He possessed a very extensive estate, which was divided among his five sons.

Line 145. Scotts of Buccleuch, a sterner race.

In this and the following stanza, an account is given of the mode in which the property in the valley of Esk was transferred from the Beattisons, its ancient possessors, to the name of Scott. It is needless to repeat the circumstances, which are given in the poem generally as they have been preserved by tradition. Lord Maxwell, in the latter part of the sixteenth century, took upon himself the title of Earl of Morton. The descendants of Beattison of Windkerrie, who aided the earl to escape from his disobedient vassals, continued to hold these lands within the memory of man, and were the only Beattisons who had property in the district. The old people give locality to the story by showing the Galliard's Haugh, the place where Buccleuch's men were concealed, &c.

Page 64, line 229. Their gathering word was Bellenden.

Bellenden is situated near the head of Borthwick Water, and being in the centre of the possessions of the Scotts, was frequently used as their place of rendezvous and gathering word.

Page 65, line 365. Bore high a gauntlet on his spear.

A glove upon a lance was the emblem of faith among the ancient Borderers, who were wont, when any one broke his word, to expose this emblem, and proclaim him a faithless villain at the first Border meeting. This ceremony was much dreaded.

Page 66, line 400. That he may suffer march-treason pain.

Several species of offences, peculiar to the Border, constituted what was called march-treason. Among others, was the crime of riding, or causing to ride, against the opposite country during the time of truce.

Line 437. Will cleanse him by oath of march-treason stain.

In dubious cases, the innocence of Border criminals was occasionally referred to their own oath. The form of excusing bills, or indictments, by Border-oath, ran thus: 'You shall swear by heaven above you, hell beneath you, by your part of Paradise, by all that God made in six days and seven nights, and by God himself, you are what out sackless of art, part, way, widd, ridd, konning, having, or recetting of any of the goods and cattels named in this bill. So help you God.'

Line 442. Knighthood he took of Deesie sword.

The dignity of knighthood, according to the original institution, had this peculiarity, that it did not flow from the monarch, but could be id by one who himself possessed it, upon fire who, after due probation, was found ; the honor of chivalry. Latterly, this was confined to generals, who were wont e knights bannerets after or before an ment. Even so late as the reign of Queen th, Essex highly offended his jealous n by the indiscriminate exertion of this a.

143. When English blood swelled Ancram

battle of Ancram Moor, or Penielheuch, ight A. D. 1345. The English, com- by Sir Ralph Evers, and Sir Brian L- ere totally routed, and both their lead- in the action. The Scottish army was ded by Archibald Douglas, Earl of assisted by the Laird of Buccleuch, and e Lesley.

67, line 505. Said the Blanche Lion c'er

k. was the cognizance of the noble house and in all its branches. The crest, or , of a warrior was often used as a nom e. Thus Richard III. acquired his well- epithet, The Boar of York. In the vio- ire on Cardinal Wolsey, written by Roy, re of Buckingham is called the Beauti-, and the Duke of Norfolk, or Earl of the White Lion.

68, line 570. But he, the jovial harper, person here alluded to, is one of our an- rdor minstrels, called Rattling Roaring

This sobriquet was probably derived a bullying disposition; being, it would ch a roaring boy as is frequently men- old plays. While drinking at Newmill, eviot, about five miles above Hawick, hanced to quarrel with one of his own on, who was usually distinguished by the as of Sweet Milk, from a place on Rile so called. They retired to a meadow opposite side of the Teviot, to decide eat with their swords, and Sweet Milk ed on the spot. A thorn-tree marks the 'the murder, which is still called Sweet born. Willie was taken and executed argh, bequeathing his name to the beau- tch air, called 'Rattling Roaring Wil-

374. Of Black Lord Archibald's battle-

most ancient collection of Border regula-

69, line 51. The Bloody Heart blazed in chief of this potent race of heroes, about e of the poem, was Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, a man of great courage vity. The Bloody Heart was the well- cognizance of the House of Douglas, as- from the time of good Lord James, to are Robert Bruce committed his heart, ried to the Holy Land.

34. Where the Seven Spears of Wedder-

Sir David Home, of Wedderburn, who was slain in the fatal battle of Flodden, left seven sons by his wife Isabel. They were called the Seven Spears of Wedderburn.

Line 58. Of Clarence's Plantagenet.

At the battle of Beauge, in France, Thomas, Duke of Clarence, brother to Henry V., was unhorsed by Sir John Swinton of Swinton, who distinguished him by a coronet set with precious stones, which he wore around his helmet. The family of Swinton is one of the most ancient in Scotland, and produced many celebrated warriors.

Line 65. And shouting still, 'A Home! a Home.'

The Earls of Home, as descendants of the Dunbars, ancient Earls of March, carried a lion rampant, argent; but, as a difference, changed the color of the shield from gules to vert, in allusion to Greenlaw, their ancient possession. The slogan, or war-cry, of this powerful family, was, 'A Home! a Home!' It was anciently placed in an escrol above the crest. The helmet is armed with a lion's head erased gules, with a cap of state gules, turned up ermine. The Hepburns, a powerful family in East Lothian, were usually in close alliance with the Homes. The chief of this clan was Hepburn, Lord of Hailes, a family which terminated in the too famous Earl of Bothwell.

Line 110. Pursued the football play.

The football was anciently a very favorite sport all through Scotland, but especially upon the Borders. Sir John Carmichael of Carni- chael, Warden of the Middle Marches, was killed in 1600 by a band of the Armstrongs, re- turning from a football match. Sir Robert Carey, in his Memoirs, mentions a great meet- ing, appointed by the Scotch riders to be held at Kelso for the purpose of playing at football, but which terminated in an incursion upon England.

Page 70, line 122. Twixt truce and war, such sudden change.

Notwithstanding the constant wars upon the Borders, and the occasional cruelties which marked the mutual incursions, the inhabitants on either side do not appear to have regarded each other with that violent and personal animosity, which might have been expected. On the con- trary, like the outposts of hostile armies, they often carried on something resembling friendly intercourse, even in the middle of hostilities; and it is evident, from various ordinances against trade and intermarriages, between Eng- lish and Scottish Borderers, that the govern- ments of both countries were jealous of their cherishing too intimate a connection.

The Border meetings of truce which, although places of merchandise and merriment, often witnessed the most bloody scenes, may serve to illustrate the description in the text. They are vividly portrayed in the old ballad of the Reid- squair. Both parties came armed to a meeting of the warlike, yet they intermixed fearlessly and peaceably with each other in mutual sports and familiar intercourse, until a casual fray arose:—

John Grahame, second son of Malice, Earl of Monteith, commonly surnamed John with the Bright Sword, upon some displeasures risen against him at court, retired with many of his clan and kindred into the English Borders, in the reign of King Henry the Fourth, where they seated themselves; and many of their posterity have continued there ever since. Mr. Sandford, speaking of them, says (which indeed was applicable to most of the Borderers on both sides): 'They were all stark moss-troopers, and arrant thieves: Both to England and Scotland outlawed: yet sometimes connived at, because they gave intelligence forth of Scotland, and would raise 400 horse at any time upon a raid of the English into Scotland. A saying is recorded of a mother to her son (which is now become proverbial), Ride, Rowley, hough's i' the pot: that is, the last piece of beef was in the pot, and therefore it was high time for him to go and fetch more.' History of Cumberland, introd.

The residence of the Græines being chiefly in the Debatable Land, so called because it was claimed by both kingdoms, their depredations extended both to England and Scotland with impunity: for as both wardens accounted them the proper subjects of their own prince, neither inclined to demand reparation for their excesses from the opposite officers, which would have been an acknowledgment of his jurisdiction over them.

Page 77, line 229. The gentle Surrey loved his lyre.

The gullant and unfortunate Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, was unquestionably the most accomplished cavalier of his time; and his sonnets display beauties which would do honor to a more polished age. He was beheaded on Tower-hill in 1546; a victim to the mean jealousy of Henry VIII., who could not bear so brilliant a character near his throne.

The song of the supposed bard is founded on an incident said to have happened to the Earl in his travels. Cornelius Agrippa, the celebrated alchemist, showed him, in a looking-glass, the lovely Geraldine, to whose service he had devoted his pen and his sword. The vision represented her as indisposed, and reclining upon a couch, reading her lover's verses by the light of a waxen taper.

Page 78, line 312. Where erst Saint Clair's held princely sway.

The St. Clairs are of Norman extraction, being descended from William de St. Clair, second son of Walderne Comte de St. Clair, and Margaret, daughter to Richard, Duke of Normandy. He was called, for his fair deportment, the Seemly St. Clair; and, settling in Scotland during the reign of Malcolm Canmore, obtained large grants of land in Mid-Lothian.

Line 314. Still nods their palace to its fall.

The Castle of Kirkwall was built by the St. Clairs while Earls of Orkney. It was dismantled by the Earl of Caithness about 1615, having been garrisoned against the government by Robert Stewart, natural son to the Earl of Orkney.

Line 329. Their barks the dragons of the wave.

The chief of the Vikingr or Scandinavian pirates assumed the title of Sækonungs, or Sea-kings. Ships, in the inflated language of the Skalds, are often termed the serpents of the ocean.

Line 336. Of that Sea-snake, tremendous curled.

The jormungandr, or Snake of the Ocean, whose folds surround the earth, is one of the wildest fictions of the Edda. It was very nearly caught by the god Thor, who went to fish for it with a hook baited with a bull's head. In the battle betwixt the evil demons and the divinities of Odin, which is to precede the Ragnarock, or Twilight of the Gods, this Snake is to act a conspicuous part.

Line 338. Of those dread Maids whose hideous yell.

These were the Valkyries, or Selectors of the Slain, despatched by Odin from Valhalla, to choose those who were to die, and to distribute the contest. They are well known to the English reader as Gray's Fatal Sisters.

Line 340. Of chiefs who, guided through the gloom.

The Northern warriors were usually entombed with their arms and their other treasures. Thus Angantyr, before commencing the duel in which he was slain, stipulated that if he fell, his sword Tyring should be buried with him. His daughter, Hervor, afterwards took it from his tomb. The dialogue which passed betwixt her and Angantyr's spirit on this occasion has been often translated. The whole history may be found in the Hervarar-Saga. Indeed, the ghosts of the Northern warriors were not wont tamely to suffer their tombs to be plundered; and hence the mortal heroes had an additional temptation to attempt such adventures; for they held nothing more worthy of their valor than to encounter supernatural beings.

Line 355. That mourns the lovely Rosabelle.

This was a family name in the house of St. Clair. Henry St. Clair, the second of the line, married Rosabelle, fourth daughter of the Earl of Strathern.

Line 358. Rest thee in Castle Ravenshouch.

A large and strong castle, situated betwixt Kirkcaldy and Dysart, on a steep crag, washed by the Frith of Forth. It was conferred on Sir William St. Clair, as a slight compensation for the earldom of Orkney, by a charter of King James III., dated in 1471.

Page 79, line 455. Who spoke the spectre-hound in Mun.

The ancient castle of Peel-town in the Isle of Man is surrounded by four churches, now ruinous. They say that an apparition, called, in the Manxish language, the Mauhe Doog, in the shape of a large black spaniel, with curled shaggy hair, was used to haunt Peel-castle; and has been frequently seen in every room, but particularly in the guard-chamber, where, as soon as candles were lighted, it came and lay down before the fire, in presence of all the soldiers, who, at length, by being so much accustomed to the sight of it, lost great part of a future subsistence, I was then in the beginning of my attempt; I have overtaken me; and want, a terrible evil, through the change of as wholly disabled me.'

*Ytene's oaks — beneath whose shade,
Forest in Hampshire, anciently so*

Of Ascarpart, and Begis bold.

or Ascarbart, was a giant who figured in the History of Bevis of Hampton, by as conquered. The images of the to be seen on either side of an old Hampton.)

Partenopex's mystic love.
published in 1808 a poem entitled de Blois.)

Day set on Norham's castled steep.
ous castle of Norham (anciently unford) is situated on the southern

Tweed, about six miles above Berghere that river is still the boundary gland and Scotland. The extent of as well as its historical importance, have been a place of magnificence, strength. Edward I. resided there a created empire of the dispute con- Scottish succession. It was re- taken and retaken during the wars igland and Scotland; and, indeed, happened in which it had not a prin-

Norham Castle is situated on a which overhangs the river. The ages which the castle had sustained frequent repairs necessary. In 1164 lost rebuilt by Hugh Pudsey, Durham, who added a huge keep or withstanding which, King Henry took the castle from the bishop, ted the keeping of it to William de fter this period it seems to have r garrisoned by the king, and con- royal fortress. The Greys of Chill- stle were frequently the castellans of the garrison. Yet, as the castle d in the patrimony of Saint Cuth- erty was in the see of Durham till ation.

of the castle consist of a large shat- with many vaults, and fragments lices, enclosed within an outward t circuit.

The battled towers, the donjon keep.
haps unnecessary to remind my t donjon, in its proper signification, strongest part of a feudal castle; a tower, with walls of tremendous ituated in the centre of the other rom which, however, it was usually Here, in case of the outward de- g gained, the garrison retreated to last stand. The donjon contained ll, and principal rooms of state for mions, and also the prison of the rom which last circumstance we de- dern and restricted use of the word

Page 92, line 29. O'er Horncliff-hill, a plump of spears.

This word properly applies to a flight of water-fowl; but is applied, by analogy, to a body of horse.

'There is a knight of the North Country

Which leads a lusty plump of spears.'
Flodden Field.

Line 79. In mail and plate of Milan steel.

The artists of Milan were famous in the middle ages for their skill in armory, as appears from the following passage, in which Froissart gives an account of the preparations made by Henry, Earl of Hereford, afterwards Henry IV., and Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marischal, for their proposed combat in the lists at Coventry: 'These two lords made ample provision of all things necessary for the combat; and the Earl of Derby sent off messengers to Lombardy, to have armor from Sir Galeas, Duke of Milan. The duke complied with joy, and gave the knight, called Sir Francis, who had brought the message, the choice of all his armor for the Earl of Derby. When he had selected what he wished for in plated and mail armor, the Lord of Milan, out of his abundant love for the earl, ordered four of the best armorers in Milan to accompany the knight to England, that the Earl of Derby might be more completely armed.'

Line 88. Who checks at me, to death is dight.

The crest and motto of Marmion are borrowed from the following story: Sir David de Lindsay, first Earl of Crawford, was, among other gentlemen of quality, attended, during a visit to London, in 1380, by Sir William Dalzell, who was, according to my authority, Bower, not only excelling in wisdom, but also of a lively wit. Chancing to be at the court, he there saw Sir Piers Courtenay, an English knight, famous for skill in tilting, and for the beauty of his person, parading the palace, arrayed in a new mantle, bearing for device an embroidered falcon, with this rhyme, —

'I bear a falcon, fairest of flight,
Whoso pinches at her, his death is dight,
In gnaith.'

The Scottish knight, being a wag, appeared next day in a dress exactly similar to that of Courtenay, but bearing a magpie instead of a falcon, with a motto ingeniously contrived to rhyme to the vaunting inscription of Sir Piers: —

'I bear a pie picking at a peice,
Whoso picks at her, I shall pick at his nose,
In faith.'

This affront could only be expiated by a joust with sharp lances. In the course, Dalzell left his helmet unlaced, so that it gave way at the touch of his antagonist's lance, and he thus avoided the shock of the encounter. This happened twice: in the third encounter, the handsome Courtenay lost two of his front teeth. As the Englishman complained bitterly of Dalzell's was harried by Rowland Foster, the Eng-p-tain of Wark, with his company, to the r of 300 men. They spoiled the poetical

t of 5,000 sheep, 200 milt, 30 horses and ; the whole furniture of his house of s, worth 100 pounds Scots, and everything at was portable. 'This spoil was com-t the 16th day of May, 1570 (and the said
ehard was threescore and fourteen years
e, and grown blind), in time of peace;
ne of that country lippeden [expected]
thing.'

e 95, line 309. And given them light to in hoods.

line contains a phrase by which the Bor-ocularly intimated the burning of a

When the Maxwells, in 1685, burned rle of Lockwood, they said they did so e the Lady Johnstone 'light to set her

Nor was the phrase inapplicable; for, tter to which I have mislaid the refer-the Earl of Northumberland writes to ag and council, that he dressed himself, light, at Warwick, by the blaze of the oring villages burned by the Scottish
ders.

342. The priest of Shoreswood — he could churchman seems to have been akin to the vicar of St. Thomas of Exeter, a among the Cornish insurgents in 1549.

man,' says Holinshed, 'had many good in him. He was of no great stature, but t, and mightily compact: he was a very restler; shot well, both in the long-bow, so in the cross-bow; he handled his hand-
d pece very well; he was a very good an, and a hardie, and such a one as ot give his head for the poling, or his for the washing. He was a companion exercise of activitie, and of a courte-d gentle behaviour. He descended of a honest parentage, being borne at Penein Cornwall; and yet, in this rebellion, b-captain, and a principal doer.' This of clerical talents had the misfortune to ged upon the steeple of his own church.

96, line 407. Saint Rosalie retired to at Rosalie was of Palermo, and born of a oble family, and, when very young, abso much the vanities of this world, and d the converse of mankind, resolving to te herself wholly to God Almighty, that f divine inspiration, forsook her father's and never was more heard of, till her vas found in that cleft of a rock, on that inaccessible mountain, where now the is built; and they affirm she was carried re by the hands of angels; for that place

t formerly so accessible (as now it is) in ys of the Saint; and even now it is a ad, and steepy, and breakneck way. In ightful place, this holy woman lived a many years feeding only on what she growing on that barren mountain, and ag into a narrow and dreadful cleft in a rock, which was always dropping wet, and was her place of retirement, as well as prayer;

having worn out even the rock with her knees,
in a certain place, which is now opened on purpose to show it to those who come here.' — Voyage to Sicily and Malba, by Mr. John Dryden (son to the poet).

Line 454. This Palmer to the castle-hall.

A Palmer, opposed to a Pilgrim, was one who made it his sole business to visit different holy shrines, travelling incessantly, and subsisting by charity; whereas the Pilgrim retired to his usual home and occupations, when he had paid his devotions at the particular spot which was the object of his pilgrimage.

Page 97, line 506. Where good Saint Rule his holy lay.

St. Regulus (Scottice, St. Rule); a monk of Patrae, in Achaia, warned by a vision, is said, A. D. 370, to have sailed westward, until he landed at St. Andrew's, in Scotland, where he founded a chapel and tower. The latter is still standing; and, though we may doubt the precise date of its foundation, is certainly one of the most ancient edifices in Scotland. A cave, nearly fronting the ruinous castle of the Archbishops of St. Andrew's, bears the name of this religious person. It is difficult of access, and the rock in which it is hewed is washed by the German ocean. It is nearly round, about ten feet in diameter, and the same in height. On one side is a sort of stone altar; on the other an aperture into an inner den, where the miserable ascetic, who inhabited this dwelling, probably slept. At full tide, egress and regress is hardly practicable.

Line 509. *Thence to Saint Fillan's blessed
well.*

St. Fillan was a Scottish saint of some reputation. . . . There are in Perthshire several wells and springs dedicated to St. Fillan, which are still places of pilgrimage and offerings, even among the Protestants. They are held powerful in cases of madness; and, in some of very late occurrence, lunatics have been left all night bound to the holy stone, in confidence that the saint would cure and unloose them before morning. [See also note to page 14,
line 218].

Line 1. The scenes are desert now and bare.

Ettrick Forest, now a range of mountainous sheep-walks, was anciently reserved for the pleasure of the royal chase. Since it was dis-parked, the wood has been, by degrees, almost totally destroyed, although, wherever protected from the sheep, copses soon arise without any planting. When the king hunted there, he often summoned the array of the country to meet and assist his sport. Thus, in 1528, James V. made proclamation to all lords, barons, gentlemen, landwardmen, and freeholders, that they should compare at Edinburgh, with a month's victuals, to pass with the king where he pleased, to danton the thieves of Tiviotdale, Annandale, Liddisdale, and other parts of that country; and also warned all gentlemen that had good dogs, to bring them, that he might about in the said country as he pleased: The Duke, the Earl of Argyll, the Earl of Huntley, the Earl of Athole, and so all the rest of the gentlemen of the Highland, did, and brought their hounds with them in like manner, to hunt with the king, as he pleased.

The second day of June the king passed out of Edinburgh to the hunting, with many of the nobles and gentlemen of Scotland with him, to the number of twelve thousand men; and then went to Moggitland, and bounded and hawked all the country and bounds; that is to say, Craigmart, Pappert-bur, St. Mary-laws, Carlavirick, Chapel, Ewindsore, and Longhope. I heard say, he slew, in these bounds, eighteen score of harts. (Pitcott's History of Scotland, folio ed. p. 143.)

These huntings had, of course, a military character, and attendance upon them was a part of the duty of a vassal. The act for abolishing ward or military tenures in Scotland enumerates the services of hunting, hosting, watching, and warding, as those which were in future to be illegal.

Line 32. Then oft from Newark's risen tower.

The tale of the Outlaw Murray, who held out Newark Castle and Ettrick Forest against the king, may be found in the Border Minstrelsy, vol. 1. In the Macfarlane MS., among other causes of James the Fifth's charter to the burgh, is mentioned that the citizens assisted him to suppress this dangerous outlaw. (See also note to page 46, line 27.)

Page 98, line 73. Thy bowers, untenanted Bow-land.

A seat of the Duke of Buccleuch on the Yarrow, in Ettrick Forest.

Line 115. I called his ramparts holy ground.
There is, on a high mountainous ridge above the town of Ashestiel, a fosse called Wallace's Trench.

Page 99, line 147. By lone Saint Mary's silent lake.

This beautiful sheet of water forms the reservoir from which the Yarrow takes its source. It is connected with a smaller lake, called the Loch of the Lowes, and surrounded by mountains. In the winter it is still frequented by flocks of wild swans; hence my friend Mr. Widdoworth's lines:—

The swans on sweet Saint Mary's lake
What double, swan and shadow.

Near the lower extremity of the lake are the ruins of Dryhope Tower, the birthplace of Mary, daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope, and bearing the traditional name of the Flower of Dryhope. She was married to Walter Scott of Dryhope, who was less renowned for his depredations than his bride for her beauty. Her reputation was, in latter days, with the name conferred on Miss Mary Lillias Scott, daughter of the elder branch of the Harden family.

Line 120. Hath laid Our Lady's chapel low.
The chapel of Saint Mary of the Lowes (de la Haie) is situated on the eastern side of the lake, to which it gives name. It was injured by the clan of Scott, in a feud with the Craigmartons, but continued to be a place of worship during the seventeenth century. The vestiges of the building can now scarcely be traced; but the burial-ground is still used as a cemetery. A funeral, in a spot so very retired, has an uncommonly striking effect. The vestiges of the chaplain's house are yet visible. Being in a high situation, it commanded a full view of the lake, with the opposite mountain of Bourhope, belonging, with the lake itself, to Lord Napier. On the left hand is the tower of Dryhope, mentioned in the preceding note.

Line 202. To sit upon the Wizard's grave.

At one corner of the burial-ground of the demolished chapel, but without its precincts, is a small mound, called Binsay's corse, where tradition deposits the remains of a necromantic priest, the former tenant of the chaplainry.

Line 239. Like that which frowns round dark Loch-skene.

A mountain lake of considerable size, at the head of the Moffat-water. The character of the scenery is uncommonly savage, and the eagle, or Scottish eagle, has for many ages built its nest yearly upon an islet in the lake. Loch-skene discharges itself into a brook, which, after a short and precipitate course, falls from a cataract of immense height and gloomy grandeur, called, from its appearance, the 'Gray Mare's Tail.' The 'Giant's Grave,' afterwards mentioned, is a sort of trench which bears that name, a little way from the foot of the cataract. It has the appearance of a battery, designed to command the pass.

Page 100, line 264. Marriott, thy harp, on his string.

[Mr. Marriott himself was the author of several ballads which may be found in Scott's collection, The Border Minstrelsy.]

Line 9. Where, from high Whitby's cloistered pile.

The Abbey of Whitby, on the coast of Yorkshire, was founded A. D. 657, in consequence of a vow of Oswy, King of Northumberland. It contained both monks and nuns of the Benedictine order; but, contrary to what was usual in such establishments, the abbess was superior to the abbot. The monastery was afterwards ruined by the Danes, and rebuilt by William Percy, in the reign of the Conqueror.

Line 10. Bound to Saint Cuthbert's Holy Isle.
[See note to page 94, line 264.]

Page 102, lines 233, 234.

How to their house three barons bold
Must menial service do.

The popular account of this curious service, which was probably considerably exaggerated, is thus given in A True Account, printed and circulated at Whitby: 'In the fifth year of the reign of Henry II., after the conquest of England by William, Duke of Normandy, the Lord of Uglebarnby, then called William de Bruce, the Lord of Smeaton, called Ralph de Percy, with a gentleman and freeholder called Allatoun, did, on the 16th of October, 1159, appoint to hunt the wild boar, in a certain wood, place, belonging to the Abbot of Whitby; the name was Eskdale-side; and its name was Sedman. Then, these gentlemen being met, with their hounds staves, in the place before mentioned, having found a great wild boar, the which was well near about the chapel and of Eskdale-side, where was a monk, who was an hermit. The boar, being pursued, and dead-run, took in the door, there laid him down, and died. The hermit shut the bounds of the chapel, and kept himself within at prayers, the bounds standing without. The gentlemen, in the meantime, being put behind their game, the cry of their hounds, and so came to the hermitage, calling on the hermit, who came forth; and within the door the boar lying dead: for which the hermit, in a very great fury, because the gentlemen were put from their game, did most violently and cruelly run at the hermit with their hounds, whereby he soon after died. These gentlemen perceiving and knowing that the hermit was in peril of death, took sanctuary at the hermitage; but at that time the abbot being in great favor with the king, removed them from the sanctuary; whereby they came in breach of the law, and not to be privileged, but to have the severity of the law, which was put upon them for death. But the hermit being a devout man, and at the point of death, he desired the abbot, and desired him to send for the gentlemen who had wounded him. The abbot, the gentlemen came; and the hermit, being very sick and weak, said unto them, "I would to die of those wounds you have given me." The abbot answered, "They shall as for the same." But the hermit answered, "Not so, for I will freely forgive them, if they will be content to be enjoined as I shall lay on them for the safety of their souls." The gentlemen being moved, he made him save their lives. Then said the hermit: "You and yours shall hold your lands as the Abbot of Whitby, and his successors, in the same manner: That, upon Ascension-day, the day of you, shall come to the wood of heads, which is in Eskdale-side, the day at sun-rising, and there shall the abbot blow his horn, to the intent that you know where to find him; and he shall send you, William de Bruce, ten stakes, and eleven stowers, and eleven yethers, to be put on, or some for you, with a knife of silver price; and you, Ralph de Percy, shall buy one of each sort, to be put on in the winter; and you, Allatoun, shall take one of each sort, to be put on as aforesaid; and to be put on your backs, and carried to the town of Whitby, and to be there before nine of the same day before mentioned. At the hour of nine of the clock, if it be full sea, the service shall cease; and, if low water, if you shall set your stakes to the brim, each stake one yard from the other, and so yether them on each side with your yethers; and so stake on each side with your stowers, that they may stand three tides, without removing by the force thereof. Each of you shall do, make, and execute the said service, at that very hour, every year, except it be full sea at that hour; but when it shall so fall out, this service shall cease. You shall faithfully do this, in remembrance that you did most cruelly slay me; and that you may the better call to God for mercy, repent unfeignedly of your sins, and do good works. The officer of Eskdale-side shall blow Out on you! Out on you! Out on you! for this heinous crime. If you or your successors shall refuse this service, so long as it shall not be full sea at the aforesaid hour, you or yours shall forfeit your lands to the Abbot of Whitby, or his successors. This I intreat, and earnestly beg, that you may have lives and goods preserved for this service; and I request of you to promise, by your parts in Heaven, that it shall be done by you and your successors, as is aforesaid requested; and I will confirm it by the faith of an honest man." — Then the hermit said: "My soul longeth for the Lord; and I do as freely forgive these men my death, as Christ forgave the thieves on the cross." And, in the presence of the abbot and the rest, he said moreover these words: "In manus tuas, Domine, commendo spiritum meum, a vinculis enim mortis redemisti me, Domine veritatis. Amen." So he yielded up the ghost the eighth day of December, anno Domini 1159, whose soul God have mercy upon. Amen.

Line 244. The lovely Edelfled.

She was the daughter of King Oswy, who, in gratitude to Heaven for the great victory which he won in 655, against Penda, the pagan King of Mercia, dedicated Edelfleda, then but a year old, to the service of God, in the monastery of Whitby, of which Saint Hilda was then abbess. She afterwards adorned the place of her education with great magnificence.

Line 245. And how, of thousand snakes, each one.

These two miracles are much insisted upon by all ancient writers, who have occasion to mention either Whitby or St. Hilda. The reliques of the snakes which infested the precincts of the convent, and were, at the abbess's prayer, not only beheaded, but petrified, are still found about the rocks, and are termed by Protestant fossilists Ammanites.

The other miracle is thus mentioned by Camden: "It is also ascribed to the power of her sanctity, that these wild geese, which, in the winter, fly in great flocks to the lakes and rivers unfrozen in the southern parts, to the great amazement of every one, fall down suddenly upon the ground, when they are in their flight over certain neighboring fields hereabouts: a relation I should not have made, if I had not received it from several credible men. But those who are less inclined to heed superstition, attribute it to some occult quality in the ground, and to somewhat of antipathy between it and the geese, such as they say is between wolves and scylla-roots. For that such hidden tendencies and aversions, as we call sympathies and antipathies, are implanted in many things by provident nature for the preservation of them, is a thing so evident that everybody grants it.

Line 286. His body's resting-place, of old.

St. Cuthbert was, in the choice of his sepulchre, one of the most mutable and unreasonable saints in the Calendar. He died A. D. 688, in a hermitage upon the Farne Islands, having resigned the bishopric of Lindisfarne, or Holy Island, about two years before. His body was brought to Lindisfarne, where it remained until a descent of the Danes, about 793, when the monastery was nearly destroyed. The monks fled to Scotland, with what they deemed their chief treasure, the relics of St. Cuthbert. The saint was, however, a most capricious fellow-traveller; which was the more intolerable, as, like Sinbad's Old Man of the Sea, he journeyed upon the shoulders of his companions. They paraded him through Scotland for several years, and came as far west as Whithorn, in Galloway, whence they attempted to sail for Ireland, but were driven back by tempests. He at length made a halt at Norham; from thence he went to Melrose, where he remained stationary for a short time, and then caused himself to be launched upon the Tweed in a stone coffin, which landed him at Tilmouth, in Northumberland. This boat is finely shaped, ten feet long, three feet and a half in diameter, and only four inches thick; so that, with very little assistance, it might certainly have swam. It still lies, or at least did so a few years ago, in two pieces, beside the ruined chapel of Tilmouth. From Tilmouth, Cuthbert wandered into Yorkshire; and at length made a long stay at Chester-le-Street, to which the bishop's see was transferred. At length, the Danes continuing to infest the country, the monks removed to Ripon for a season; and it was in returning from thence to Chester-le-Street, that, passing through a forest called Dunholme, the saint and his carriage became immovable at a place named Wardlaw, or Wardilaw. Here the saint chose his place of residence; and all who have seen Durham must admit that, if difficult in his choice, he evinced taste in at length fixing it. [The editor of a later edition notes that in 1827 the discovery of the remains was made under a blue stone in the middle of the shrine of St. Cuthbert at the eastern extremity of the choir of Durham Cathedral. The bones were restored to the grave in a new coffin, and the various insignia of gold and silver were deposited in the library of the Dean and chapter.]

Page 103, line 287. Even Scotland's dauntless king and heir.

Every one has heard that when David I., with his son Henry, invaded Northumberland in 1136, the English host marched against them under the holy banner of St. Cuthbert; to the efficacy of which was imputed the great victory which they obtained in the bloody battle of Northallerton, or Coton-moor.

Line 293. 'Twas he, to vindicate his reign.

Cuthbert, we have seen, had no great reason to spare the Danes, when opportunity offered. Accordingly, I find in Simeon of Durham, that the saint appeared in a vision to Alfred, when lurking in the marshes of Glastonbury, and promised him assistance and victory over his heathen enemies: a consolation which, as was reasonable, Alfred, after the victory of Ashdown, rewarded by a royal offering at the shrine of the saint. As to William the Conqueror, the terror spread before his army, when he marched to punish the revolt of the Northumbrians, in 1066, had forced the monks to fly once more to Holy Island with the body of the saint. It was, however, replaced before William left the North; and, to balance accounts, the Conqueror having intimated an indiscreet curiosity to view the saint's body he was, while in the act of commanding the same to be opened, seized with heat and sickness, accompanied with such a panic terror that, notwithstanding there was a sumptuous dinner prepared for him, he fled without eating a morsel (which the monkish historian seems to have thought no small part both of the miracle and the penance), and never drew his bridle till he got to the river Tees.

Line 300. Saint Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame.

Although we do not learn that Cuthbert was, during his life, such an artificer as Dunstan, his brother in sanctity, yet since his death he has acquired the reputation of forging those Entochi which are found among the rocks of Holy Island, and pass there by the name of St. Cuthbert's Beads. While at this task, he is supposed to sit during the night upon a certain rock, and use another as his anvil.

Line 316. Old Colwulf built it, for his fast.

Colwulf, or Colwulf, King of Northumberland, flourished in the eighth century. He was a man of some learning; for the Venerable Bede dedicates to him his Ecclesiastical History. He abdicated the throne about 738, and retired to Holy Island, where he died in the odor of sanctity. Saint as Colwulf was, however, I fear the foundation of the penance-vault does not correspond with his character: for it is recorded among his memorabilia, that, finding the air of the island raw and cold, he indulged the monks, whose rule had hitherto confined them to milk or water, with the comfortable privilege of using wine or ale. If any rigid antiquary insists on this objection, he is welcome to suppose the penance-vault was intended, by the founder, for the more general purposes of a cellar. These penitential vaults were the Grissel-gewölbe of German convents. In the earlier and more rigid times of monastic discipline, they were sometimes used as a cemetery for the lay benefactors of the convent whose unsanctified corpses were then seldom permitted to pollute the choir. They also served as places of meeting for the chapter, when of uncommon severity were to be put in their most frequent use, as in the name, was as places for performing 'undergoing punishment.'

line 371. Is Tynemouth's haughty

It was an ancient priory at Tynemouth. Its ruins are situated on a point; and, doubtless, many a vow to the shrine by the distressed mariner towards the iron-bound coast-berland in stormy weather. It was a nunnery; for Virca, Abbess of, presented St. Cuthbert (yet alive) winding-sheet, in emulation of a saint called Tuda, who had sent him a letter, as in the case of Whitby, and of the introduction of nuns at Tynemouth in the reign of Henry VIII., is an attestation. Indeed, St. Cuthbert was permitted such an establishment; for, finding his accepting the mortuary mentioned, and his carrying on a maintenance with the Abbess of Coldwell certainly hated the whole female crew, of a slippery trick played in Irish princess, he, after death, ere penances on such as presumed within a certain distance of his line 468. Alive within the tomb.

It is known that the religious who broke off chastity were subjected to the same as the Roman vestals in a similar all niche, sufficient to enclose their made in the massive wall of the slender pittance of food and water in it, and the awful words, Tude were the signal for incurring the death is not likely that, in latter times, punishment was often resorted to; but, ruins of the abbey of Coldwellham, years ago discovered the remains of a skeleton, which, from the shape of the skeleton of the figure, seemed to be of a murdered nun.

line 81. Or of the Red-Cross hero

y Smith).

Who snatched on Alexandria's

at Abercromby).

When she, the bold Enchantress,

hallie.)

line 178. And still I thought that

ter.

to page 14, line 1. These lines in relation to Canto Third connect the night with his ballad 'The Eve of

lines 216, 217.

loom discording neighbors sought

with equity unbought.

In writing the poem, it seems proper to at these lines have been unconsciously borrowed from a passage in Dryden's beautiful epistle to John Driden of Chesterton.

Line 218. To him the venerable priest.

[Mr. John Martin, minister of Merton, the parish containing Smailholm Tower.]

Line 33. The village inn seemed large, though rude.

The accommodations of a Scottish hostelry, or inn, in the sixteenth century, may be collected from Dunbar's admirable tale of The Friars of Berwick. Simon Lawder, 'the gay outlier,' seems to have lived very comfortably; and his wife decorated her person with a scarlet kirtle, and a belt of silk and silver, and rings upon her fingers; and feasted her paramour with rabbits, capons, partridges, and Bourdeaux wine. At least, if the Scottish inns were not good, it was not for want of encouragement from the Legislature; who, so early as the reign of James I., not only enacted that in all boroughs and fairs there be hostellaries, having stables and chambers, and provision for man and horse, but by another statute, ordained that no man, travelling on horse or foot, should presume to lodge anywhere except in these hostellaries; and that no person, save innkeepers, should receive such travellers, under the penalty of forty shillings, for exercising such hospitality.

Page 111, line 211. Seemed in mine ear a death peal rung.

Among other omens to which faithful credit is given among the Scottish peasantry, is what is called the 'dead-bell,' explained by my friend James Hogg to be that tinkling in the ear which the country people regard as the secret intelligence of some friend's decease.

Page 112, line 355. The founder of the Goblin-Hall.

A vaulted hall under the ancient castle of Gifford, or Yester (for it bears either name indifferently), the construction of which has, from a very remote period, been ascribed to magic.

Page 113, line 354. There floated Haco's banner trim.

In 1263, Haco, King of Norway, came into the Firth of Clyde with a powerful armament, and made a descent at Largs, in Ayrshire. Here he was encountered and defeated, on the 2d October, by Alexander III. He retreated to Orkney, where he died soon after this disgrace to his arms. There are still existing, near the place of battle, many barrows, some of which, having been opened, were found, as usual, to contain bones and urns.

Line 362. But, in his wizard habit strange.

Magicians, as is well known, were very curious in the choice and form of their vestments. Their caps are oval, or like pyramids, with lap-pets on each side, and fur within. Their gowns are long, and furred with fox-skins, under which they have a linen garment reaching to the knee. Their girdles are three inches broad, and have many cabalistical names, with crosses, trines, and circles inscribed on them. Their shoes should be of new russet leather, with a cross cut upon them. Their knives are dagger-decorated with entablatures bearing anchors. All the stones of this front are cut into diamond facets, the angular projections of which have an uncommonly rich appearance. The inside of this part of the building appears to have contained a gallery of great length, and uncommon elegance. Access was given to it by a magnificent staircase, now quite destroyed.

Page 120, line 232. The darkness of thy Massy More.

The Castle of Crichtoun has a dungeon vault, called the Massy More. The epithet, which is not uncommonly applied to the prisons of other old castles in Scotland, is of Saracenic origin. It occurs twice in the Epistola Itineraria of Tollerius, 'carcer subterraneus, sive, ut Mauri appellant, Mazmorra.' The same word applies to the dungeons of the ancient Moorish castles in Spain, and serves to show from what nation the Gothic style of castle-building was originally derived.

Line 248. Earl Adam Hepburn, — he who died. He was the second Earl of Bothwell and fell in the field of Flodden, where, according to an ancient English poet, he distinguished himself by a furious attempt to retrieve the day.

Lines 254, 255.

*Before the name
Of hated Bothwell stained their fame.*

Adam was grandfather to James, Earl of Bothwell, too well known in the history of Queen Mary.

Line 278. For that a messenger from heaven. This story is told by Pittscottie with characteristic simplicity: 'The king, seeing that France could get no support of him for that time, made a proclamation, full hastily, through all the realm of Scotland, both east and west, south and north, as well in the Isles as in the firm land, to all manner of man betwixt sixty and sixteen years, that they should be ready, within twenty days, to pass with him, with forty days victual, and to meet at the Burrow-muir of Edinburgh, and there to pass forward where he pleased. His proclamations were hastily obeyed, contrary the Council of Scotland's will; but every man loved his prince so well, that they would on no ways disobey him; but every man caused make his proclamation so hastily, conform to the charge of the king's proclamation.'

'The king came to Lithgow, where he happened to be for the time at the council, very sad and dolorous, making his devotion to God, to send him good chance and fortune in his voyage. In this mean time, there came a man clad in a blue gown in at the kirk-door, and belted about him in a roll of linen cloth; a pair of brookings on his feet, to the great of his legs; with all other hose and clothes conform thereto; but he had nothing on his head, but ayde red yellow hair behind, and on his huffs, which was down to his shoulders; but his forehead was bald and bare. He seemed to be a man of two-and-fifty years, with a great pike-staff in his hand, and came first forward among the lords, crying and speiring for the king, saying, he desired to speak with him. While, at the last, he came where the king was sitting in the desk at his prayers; but when he saw the king, he made him little reverence or salutation, but leaned down gruffing on the desk before him, and said to him in this manner, as after follows: 'Sir king, my mother hath sent me to you, desiring you not to pass, at this time, where thou art purposed; for if thou does, thou wilt not fare well in thy journey, nor none that passeth with thee. Further, she bade thee well with no woman, nor use their counsel, nor let them touch thy body, nor thou theirs; for, if thou do it, thou wilt be confounded and brought to shame.'

'By this man had spoken thir words unto the king's grace, the evening song was near done, and the king paused on thir words, studying to give him an answer; but, in the mean time, before the king's eyes, and in the presence of all the lords that were about him for the time, this man vanished away, and could no ways be seen nor comprehended, but vanished away as he had been a blink of the sun, or a whip of the whirlwind, and could no more be seen. I heard say, Sir David Lindsay, Lyon-herald, and John Inglis the marshal, who were, at that time, young men, and special servants to the king's grace, were standing presently beside the king, who thought to have laid hands on this man, that they might have spied further tidings at him. But all for naught; they could not touch him; for he vanished away betwixt them, and was no more seen.'

Line 287. Lithgow is excellent.

The situation of Linlithgow Palace is eminently beautiful. It stands on a promontory of some elevation, which advances almost into the midst of the lake. The form is that of a square court, composed of buildings of four stories high, with towers at the angles. The fronts within the square, and the windows, are highly ornamented, and the size of the rooms, as well as the width and character of the staircases, are upon a magnificent scale. One banquet-room is ninety-four feet long, thirty feet wide, and thirty-three feet high, with a gallery for music. The king's wardrobe, or dressing-room, looking to the west, projects over the walls, so as to have a delicious prospect on three sides, and is one of the most enviable boudoirs we have ever seen.

Line 291. The wild huck bells from ferny brake.

I am glad of an opportunity to describe the cry of the deer by another word than braying, although the latter has been sanctified by the use of the Scottish metrical translation of the Psalms. Bell seems to be an abbreviation of bellows. This sylvan sound conveyed great delight to our ancestors, chiefly, I suppose, from association. A gentle knight in the reign of Henry VIII., Sir Thomas Wortley, built Wantley Lodge, in Wanciffe Forest, for the pleasure (as an ancient inscription testifies) of 'listening to the hart's bell.'

Line 298. June saw his father's overthrow.

The rebellion against James III. was signalized by the cruel circumstance of his son's pre-transactions of great or petty import among whomsoever taking place, it can that a present of wine was a universal indispensable preliminary. It was Sir John Falstaff alone that such an airy preface was necessary, however good and acceptable on the part of Mr. for Sir Ralph Sadler, while on an embassy to Scotland in 1538-40, mentions, with irony, 'the same night came Rotheman so called to me again, and brought from the King, both white and red,' 29, line 247. The pressure of his iron readers need to be reminded of this the weight of which James added coarseness every year that he lived. Pitcairns his belief that James was not the battle of Flodden, because the King had this token of the iron belt to any Scottishman. The person and character of James are delineated according to historians. His romantic disposition, his high relish for gayety and approach, was, at the same time, tinged with hasty devotion. The propensities formed a strange contrast. He was ring his fits of devotion, to assume the conformity to the rules, of the order of monks; and when he had thus done penance some time in Stirling, to plunge again into tide of pleasure. Probably, too, with all inconsistency, he sometimes laughed at periphrastic observances to which he at once subjected himself.

100. O'er James's heart the courtiers seen already noticed that King James's niece with Lady Heron of Ford did not meet until he marched into England. Critics impute to the king's infatuation the delays which led to the fatal defeat at Flodden. The author of The Genealogy of the Family endeavors, with laudable anxiety, to clear the Lady Ford from this scandal: it came and went, however, between the King and Surrey, is certain. Heron had been, in 1511, in some sort accessory to the slaughter of Sir Robert Kerr of Warden of the Middle Marches. It committed by his brother the bastard, Lord Stirling, three Borderers. Little Heron of Ford were delivered up by James, and were imprisoned in the castle of Fastcastle, where the former died, the pretence of Lady Ford's negotiation with James was the liberty of her husband.

20. For the fair Queen of France. The Queen of France wrote a love-letter to the King of Scotland, calling him her wing him that she had suffered much in France for the defending of his. She believed surely that he would use her again with some of his kindly in her necessity; that is to say, that he use her an army, and come three foot of ground on English ground, for her sake. To that effect she sent him a ring off her finger, with fourteen thousand French crowns to pay his expenses.' — Pitcairns, p. 110.

Page 130. LOCHINVAR.

This ballad is in a very slight degree founded on a ballad called 'Katharine Lanfarie.'

Line 32. Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its tide.

[An editor of Scott reminds the reader of the detailed picture of some of the extraordinary phenomena of the spring-tides in the Solway Firth which Scott drew in Redgauntlet.]

Page 131, line 399. Of Archibald Bell-the-Cat.

Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, a man remarkable for strength of body and mind, acquired the popular name of Bell-the-Cat upon the following remarkable occasion: James the Third, of whom Pitcairns complains that he delighted more in music and 'politics of building,' than in hunting, hawking, and other noble exercises, was so ill advised as to make favorites of his architects and musicians, whom the same historian irreverently terms masons and fiddlers. His nobility, who did not sympathize in the king's respect for the fine arts, were extremely incensed at the honors conferred on those persons, particularly on Cochran, a mason, who had been created Earl of Mar; and seizing the opportunity, when, in 1482, the king had convoked the whole army of the country to march against the English, they held a midnight council in the church of Lauder, for the purpose of forcibly removing these minions from the king's person. When all had agreed on the propriety of this measure, Lord Gray told the assembly the apologus of the Mice, who had formed a resolution that it would be highly advantageous to their community to tie a bell round the cat's neck, that they might hear her approach at a distance; but which public measure unfortunately miscarried, from no mouse being willing to undertake the task of fastening the bell. 'I understand the moral,' said Angus, 'and, that what we propose may not lack execution, I will bell the cat.'

Line 413. And chafed his royal lord.

Angus was an old man when the war against England was resolved upon. He earnestly spoke against that measure from its commencement, and, on the eve of the battle of Flodden, remonstrated so freely upon the impolicy of fighting, that the king said to him, with scorn and indignation, 'if he was afraid, he might go home.' The earl burst into tears at this insupportable insult, and retired accordingly, leaving his sons, George, Master of Angus, and Sir William of Glenbervie, to command his followers. They were both slain in the battle, with two hundred gentlemen of the name of Douglas. The aged earl, broken-hearted at the calamities of his house and his country, retired into a religious house, where he died about a year after the field of Flodden.

Line 429. Then rest you in Tantallon hold.

The ruins of Tantallon Castle occupy a high each projecting into the German Ocean, about two miles east of North Berwick. The building is not seen till a close approach, as there is rising ground betwixt it and the land. The circuit is of large extent, fenced upon three sides by the precipices which overhangs the sea, and on the fourth by a double ditch and very strong outworks. Tantallon was a principal castle of the Douglas family, and when the Earl of Angus was banished, in 1527, it continued to hold out against James V. The king was forced to raise the siege, and only afterwards obtained possession of Tantallon by treaty with the governor, Simon Panungo. When the Earl of Angus returned from banishment, upon the death of James, he again obtained possession of Tantallon, and it actually afforded refuge to an English ambassador, under circumstances similar to those described in the text. This was no other than the celebrated Sir Ralph Sadler, who resided there for some time under Angus's protection, after the failure of his negotiation for matching the infant Mary with Edward VI.

Line 42. He wears their motto on his blade.

A very ancient sword, in possession of Lord Douglas, bears, among a great deal of flourishing, two hands pointing to a heart, which is placed betwixt them, and the date 1321, being the year in which Bruce charged the Good Lord Douglas to carry his heart to the Holy Land. This curious and valuable relic was lost during the Civil War of 1745-46, being carried away from Douglas Castle by some of those in arms for Prince Charles. But great interest having been made by the Duke of Douglas among the chief partisans of the Stuart, it was at length restored. It resembles a Highland claymore, of the usual size, is of an excellent temper, and admirably pointed.

Page 132, line 501. Lords, to the dance, — a hall! a hall!

The ancient cry to make room for a dance, or pageant.

Page 133, line 587. And had made league with Martin Stuart.

A German general who commanded the auxiliaries sent by the Duchess of Burgundy with Lambert Simnel. He was defeated and killed at Stokefield. His name is preserved by that of the field of battle, which is called, after him, Stuart-moor.

Page 134, line 700. Dun-Edin's Cross, a pillared stone.

The Cross of Edinburgh was an ancient and curious structure. The lower part was an octagonal tower, sixteen feet in diameter, and about fifteen feet high. At each angle there was a pillar, and between them an arch, of the Grecian shape. Above these was a projecting battlement, with a turret at each corner, and medallions, of rude but curious workmanship, between them. Above this rose the proper Cross, a column of one stone, upwards of twenty feet high, surmounted with an unicorn. This pillar is preserved at the House of Drum, near Edinburgh. The Magistrates of Edinburgh, in 1796, with consent of the Lords of Session pro potestate, destroyed this curious monument, under a wanton pretext that it encumbered the street. [Since the above was written the shaft of the old Cross has been set up within the railings of St. Giles's Church, very near its original site. — W. J. K.] From the tower of the Cross, so long as it remained, the heralds published the acts of Parliament and its site, marked by radii, diverging from a stone centre, in the High Street, is still the place where proclamations are made.

Line 735. This awful custom is named.

This supernatural citation is mentioned by all our Scottish historians. It was, probably, like the apparition at Linlithgow, an attempt, by those averse to the war, to impose upon the superstitious temper of James IV.

Page 135, line 838. Before a venerable pile.

The convent alluded to is a foundation of Cistercian nuns near North Berwick, of which there are still some remains. It was founded by Duncan, Earl of Fife, in 1216.

Page 136, line 914. Drove the monks forth of Coventry.

This relates to the catastrophe of a real Robert de Marston, in the reign of King Stephen, whom William of Newbury describes with some attributes of my fictitious hero. 'Homo bellissimus, ferocia et astucia fore nullo suo tempore impar.' This baron, having expelled the monks from the church of Coventry, was not long of experiencing the divine judgment, as the same monks, no doubt, termed his disaster. Having waged a feudal war with the Earl of Chester, Marston's horse fell, as he charged in the van of his troop, against a body of the earl's followers: the rider's thigh being broken by the fall, his head was cut off by a common foot-soldier, ere he could receive any succor.

Page 137, line 6. Even, heathen yet, the savage Dance.

The lol of the heathen Dances (a word still applied to Christmas in Scotland) was solemnized with great festivity. The humor of the Dances at table displayed itself in pelting each other with bones; and Torfæus tells a long and curious story, in the history of Hrolfe Kraka, of one Hattus, an inmate of the Court of Denmark, who was so generally assailed with these missiles that he constructed, out of the bones with which he was overwhelmed, a very respectable entrenchment against those who continued the rally. The dances of the Northern warriors round the great fires of pine-trees are commemorated by Olaf Magnus, who says they danced with such fury, holding each other by the hands, that if the grasp of any failed he was pitched into the fire with the velocity of a sling. The sufferer on such occasions was instantly plucked out, and obliged to quaff off a certain measure of ale, as a penalty for 'spoiling the king's fire.'

Page 138, line 74. Who lists may in their swarming see.

It seems certain that the Mummings of Eng-and who (in Northumberland at least) used to pass about in disguise to the neighboring houses, carrying the then useless ploughshare; and the wizards of Scotland, not yet in total disuse, present, in some indistinct degree, a shadow of the old mysteries, which were the origin of the English drama. In Scotland (me ipso teste), we were wont, during my boyhood, to take the characters of the apostles, at least of Peter, Paul, and Judas Iscariot, which last carried the flag, in which the dolt of our neighbor's plumage was deposited. One played a Champion, and recited some traditional rhymes; another

'Alexander, king of Macedon,
Who conquered all the world but Scotland alone;
When he came to Scotland his courage grew cold,
To see a little nation courageous and bold.'

these, and many such verses, were repeated, at by rote, and unconnectedly. There was so occasionally, I believe, a Saint George. In all there was a confused resemblance of the ancient mysteries, in which the characters of rapture, the Nine Worthies, and other popular personages were usually exhibited.

Line 15, 196.

Where my great-grand sire came of old
With amber beard and flaxen hair.

Mr. Scott of Harden, my kind and affectionate friend, and distant relation, has the original of a poetical invitation, addressed from his grandfather to my relative, from which a few lines in the text are imitated. They are dated, in the epistle in the text, from Mertoun-house, the seat of the Harden family.

'With amber beard, and flaxen hair,
And reverend apostolic air,
Free of anxiety and care,
Come hither, Christmas-day, and dine;
We'll mix sobriety with wine,
And easy mirth with thoughts divine.
We Christians think it holiday.
On it no sin to feast or play;
Others, in spite, may fast and pray.
No superstition in the use
Our ancestors made of a goose;
Why may not we, as well as they,
Be innocently blithe that day,
On goose or pie, on wine or ale,
And scorn enthusiastic zeal?
Pray come, and welcome, or plague rott
Your friend and landlord, Walter Scott.'

Page 139, line 160. The Highlander, whose of claymore.

The Duncie skir', or Men of Peace, of the Scottish Highlanders, rather resemble the Scandinavian Duergar than the English Fairies. Notwithstanding their name, they are, if not absolutely malevolent, at least peevish, discontented, and apt to do mischief on slight provocation. The belief of their existence is deeply pressed on the Highlanders, who think they are particularly offended with mortals who talk of them, who wear their favorite color green, or in any respect interfere with their affairs. This is particularly to be avoided on Friday, when, whether as dedicated to Venus, with whom, in Germany, this subterraneous people are held nearly connected, or for a more solemn reason, they are more active, and possessed of greater power.

Line 169. Beneath the towers of Franchémont.

The journal of the friend to whom the Fourth Canto of the Poem is inscribed, furnished me with the following account of a striking superstition:—

'Passed the pretty little village of Franchémont (near Spaw), with the romantic ruins of the old castle of the Counts of that name. The road leads through many delightful vales, on a rising ground; at the extremity of one of them stands the ancient castle, now the subject of many superstitious legends. It is firmly believed by the neighboring peasantry, that the last Baron of Franchémont deposited, in one of the vaults of the castle, a ponderous chest, containing an immense treasure in gold and silver, which, by some magic spell, was intrusted to the care of the Devil, who is constantly found sitting on the chest in the shape of a huntsman. Any one adventurous enough to touch the chest is instantly seized with the palsy. Upon one occasion a priest of noted piety was brought to the vault: he used all the arts of exorcism to persuade his infernal majesty to vacate his seat, but in vain; the huntsman remained immovable. At last, moved by the earnestness of the priest, he told him that he would agree to resign the chest if the exorcisor would sign his name with blood. But the priest understood his meaning and refused, as by that act he would have delivered over his soul to the Devil. Yet if anybody can discover the mystic words used by the person who deposited the treasure, and pronounce them, the fiend must instantly decamp. I had many stories of a similar nature from a peasant, who had himself seen the Devil, in the shape of a great cat.'

Line 207. My song the messenger from heaven.

[See page 130, line 278, and the note thereto.]

Page 142, line 280. *The rest were all in Twisel
glen.*

Where James encamped before taking post on Flodden.

Page 143, line 327. A bishop by the altar stood,

The well-known Gawain Douglas, Bishop of Dunkeld, son of Archibald Bell-the-cat, Earl of Angus. He was author of a Scottish metrical version of the Æneid, and of many other poetical pieces of great merit. He had not at this period attained the mitre.

Line 341. Upon the huge and sweeping brand.

Angus had strength and personal activity corresponding to his courage. Spens of Kilsindie, a favorite of James IV., having spoken of him lightly, the earl met him while hawking, and compelling him to single combat, at one blow cut asunder his thigh-bone and killed him on the spot. But ere he could obtain James's pardon for this slaughter, Angus was obliged to yield his castle of Hermitage, in exchange for that of Bothwell, which was some diminution to the family greatness. The sword with which he struck so remarkable a blow was presented by his descendant, James, Earl of Morton, afterwards Regent of Scotland, to Lord Lindsey of the Wyre, when he defied Bothwell to single combat on Carberry-hill.

Page 144, line 431. *Fierce he broke forth, —
'And direct thou then?'*

This exhibition of violence in the potent Earl of Angus is not without its examples in the real history of the house of Douglas, whose chiefs possessed the ferocity with the heroic virtues of a savage state. The most curious instance occurred in the case of Mucklehan, tutor of Bomby, who, having refused to acknowledge the preeminence claimed by Douglas over the gentlemen and barons of Galloway, was seized and imprisoned by the earl, in his castle of the Throves, on the borders of Kirkcubright-shire. Sir Patrick Gray, commander of King James the Second's guard, was uncle to the tutor of Bomby, and obtained from the king 'a sweet letter of supplication,' praying the earl to deliver his prisoner into Gray's hand. When Sir Patrick arrived at the castle, he was received with all the honor due to a favorite servant of the king's household, but while he was at dinner, the earl, who suspected his errand, caused his prisoner to be led forth and beheaded. After dinner, Sir Patrick presented the king's letter to the earl, who received it with great affectation of reverence; and took him by the hand, and led him forth to the green, where the gentleman was lying dead, and showed him the manner, and said, "Sir Patrick, you are come a little too late, yonder is your sister's son lying, but he wants the head, take his body, and do with it what you will." Sir Patrick answered again with a sore heart, and said, "My lord, if ye have taken from him his head, disengage upon the body as ye please," and with that called for his horse, and leaped thereon; and when he was on horseback, he said to the earl on this manner: "My lord, if I live, you shall be rewarded for your labors, that you have used at this time, according to your deservits." At this saying the earl was highly offended, and cried for horse. Sir Patrick, seeing the earl's fury, spurred his horse, but he was chased near Edinburgh ere they left him: and had it not been his head horse was so tried and good, he had been taken." Pitcott's History.

Line 437. Did ever knight so foul a deed?

Last the reader should partake of the Earl's astonishment, and consider the crime as inconsistent with the manners of the period. I have to remind him of the numerous forgeries (partly executed by a female assistant devised by Robert of Artois, to forward his suit against the Countess Matilda; which, being detected, occasioned his flight into England, and proved the remote cause of Edward the Third's memorable wars in France. John Harding, also, was expressly hired by Edward IV. to forge such documents as might appear to establish the claim of fouls asserted over Scotland by the English monarchs.

Page 145, line 500. The earl did much the Master pray,

His eldest son, the Master of Angus.

Line 530. Where Leavel's convent stood the march.

This was a Cistercian house of religion, now almost entirely demolished. It is situated near Coldstream, almost opposite to Cornhill, and consequently very near to Flodden Field.

Line 573. The Till by Twisel Bridge.

On the evening previous to the memorable battle of Flodden, Surrey's head-quarters were at Burnmore-wood, and King James held an inaccessible position on the ridge of Flodden-hill, one of the last and lowest eminences detached from the ridge of Cheviot. The Till, a deep and slow river, winded between the armies. On the morning of the 9th September, 1545, Surrey marched in a northwesterly direction, and crossed the Till, with his van and artillery, at Twisel-bridge, nigh where that river joins the Tweed, his rear-guard column passing about a mile higher, by a ford. This movement had the double effect of placing his army between King James and his supplies from Scotland, and of striking the Scottish monarch with surprise, as he seems to have relied on the depth of the river in his front. But as the passage, both over the bridge and through the ford, was difficult and slow, it seems possible that the English might have been attacked to great advantage, while struggling with these natural obstacles.

Page 146, line 681. Hence might they see the full array.

The reader cannot here expect a full account of the Battle of Flodden; but, so far as is necessary to understand the romance, I beg to remind him, that, when the English army, by their skillful countermarch, were fairly placed between King James and his own country, the Scottish monarch resolved to fight; and, setting fire to his tents, descended from the ridge of Flodden to secure the neighboring eminence of Brankstone, on which that village is built. Thus the two armies met, almost without seeing each other, when, according to the old poem of 'Flodden Field' —

'The English line stretched east and west,

And southward were their faces set,

The Scottish northward proudly prest,

And manfully their foes they met.'

The English army advanced in four divisions. On the right, when first engaged, were the sons of Earl Surrey, namely, Thomas Howard, the Admiral of England, and Sir Edmund, the Knight Marshal of the army. Their divisions were separated from each other; but, at the request of Sir Edmund, his brother's battalions were drawn very near to his own. The centre was commanded by Surrey in person; the left wing by Sir Edward Stanley, with the men of Lancashire, and of the palatinate of Chester. Lord Daeres, with a large body of horse, formed a reserve. When the smoke, which the wind had driven between the armies, was somewhat dispersed, they perceived the Scots, who had moved down the hill in a singular order

, and in deep silence. The Earls of and of Home commanded their left and charged Sir Edmund Howard with pessa, as entirely to defeat his part of the right wing. Sir Edmund's banner ran down, and he himself escaped with to his brother's division. The Ad- ever, stood firm; and Dacre advanced support with the reserve of cavalry, between the interval of the divisions led by the brothers Howard, appears kept the victors in effectual check. men, chiefly Borderers, began to pil- baggage of both armies; and their branded, by the Scottish historians, dligence or treachery. On the other antly, on whom they bestow many na, is said, by the English historians, left the field after the first charge. le the Admiral, whose flank these ght to have attacked, availed himself nactivity, and pushed forward against arge division of the Scottish army in , headed by the Earls of Crawford trose, both of whom were slain, and es routed. On the left, the success of ish was yet more decisive; for the right wing, consisting of undisciplined lers, commanded by Lennox and Ar- unable to sustain the charge of Sir Stanley, and especially the severe ex- of the Lancashire archers. The king ry, who commanded the respective of their armies, were meanwhile en- close and dubious conflict. James, ed by the flower of his kingdom, and t of the galling discharge of arrows, also by his reserve under Bothwell, with such fury, that the standard of as in danger. At that critical mo- mley, who had routed the left wing otish, pursued his career of victory, ed on the right flank, and in the rear 's division, which, throwing itself into disputed the battle till night came on. en drew back his forces: for the Scot- re not having been broken, and their ; being victorious, he yet doubted the the field. The Scottish army, how- t their loss, and abandoned the field in disorder, before dawn. They lost, from eight to ten thousand men; but ded the very prime of their nobility, and even clergy. Scarcely a family of ; but has an ancestor killed at Flod- l there is no province in Scotland, even ly, where the battle is mentioned with- nation of terror and sorrow. The Eng- also a great number of men, perhaps as third of the vanquished, but they inferior note. — See the only distinct the field of Flodden in Pinkerton's Book xi., all former accounts being unders and inconsistency. ot from which Clara views the battle supposed to have been on a hillock ling the rear of the English right wing, which was defeated, and in which conflict Mar- mion is supposed to have fallen.

Page 147, line 717. With Brian Tunstall, stainless knight.

Sir Brian Tunstall, called, in the romantic language of the time, Tunstall the Undeiled, was one of the few Englishmen of rank slain at Flodden. He figures in the ancient English poem, to which I may safely refer my reader; as an edition, with full explanatory notes, has been published by my friend Mr. Henry Weber. Tunstall perhaps derived his epithet of unde- filed from his white armor and banner, the latter bearing a white cock about to crow, as well as from his unstained loyalty and knightly faith.

Page 150, line 1081. And fell on Flodden plain.

There can be no doubt that King James fell in the battle of Flodden. He was killed, says the curious French Gazette, within a lance's length of the Earl of Surrey; and the same account adds, that none of his division were made prisoners, though many were killed, — a circum- stance that testifies the desperation of their re- sistance. The Scottish historians record many of the idle reports which passed among the vul- gar of their day. Home was accused, by the popular voice, not only of failing to support the king but even of having carried him out of the field, and murdered him. Other reports gave a still more romantic turn to the king's fate, and averred that James, weary of great- ness after the carnage among his nobles, had gone on a pilgrimage, to merit absolution for the death of his father and the breach of his oath of anity to Henry. Stowe has recorded a degrading story of the disgrace with which the remains of the unfortunate monarch were treated in his time. An unhewn column marks the spot where James fell, still called the King's Stone.

Line 1095. 'T was levelled when fanatic Brook.

This storm of Lichfield Cathedral, which had been garrisoned on the part of the king, took place in the great civil war. Lord Brook, who, with Sir John Gill, commanded the assailants, was shot with a musket-ball through the visor of his helmet. The royalists remarked that he was killed by a shot fired from Saint Chad's Cathedral, and upon Saint Chad's Day, and re- ceived his death-wound in the very eye with which he had said he hoped to see the ruin of all the cathedrals in England. The magnifi- cent church in question suffered cruelly upon this and other occasions: the principal spire being ruined by the fire of the besiegers.

THE LADY OF THE LAKE.

Page 157, line 53. Sought the wild heaths of Cam-Var.

Ca-Va, as the name is pronounced, or more properly Caigh-mor, is a mountain to the north- east of the village of Callander, in Menteith, deriving its name, which signifies the great den, or cavern, from a sort of retreat among the rocks on the south side, said, by tradition, to have been the abode of a giant. In latter times it was the refuge of robbers and banditti, who have been only extirpated within these forty or fifty years. Strictly speaking, this stronghold is not a cave, as the name would imply, but a sort of small enclosure, or recess, surrounded with large rocks and open above head.

Line 120. Two dogs of black Saint Hubert's breed.

Scott quotes Tuberville here: 'The hounds which we call St. Hubert's hounds are commonly all blacke, yet notwithstanding, the race is so mingled at these days, that we find them of all colours. These are the hounds which the abbots of St. Hubert have always kept some of their race or kind, in honour or remembrance of the saint, which was a hunter with St. Eustace. Whereupon we may conceive that by the grace of (God) all good huntamen shall follow them into paradise.'

Line 137. For the death-wound, and death-halloo.

When the stag turned to bay, the ancient hunter had the perilous task of going in upon, and killing, or disabling, the desperate animal. At certain times of the year this was held particularly dangerous, a wound received from a stag's horn being then deemed poisonous, and more dangerous than one from the tusks of a boar, as the old rhyme testifies:—

'If thou be hurt with hart, it brings thee to thy bier,
But barter's hand will boar's hurt heal, therefore thou need'st not fear.'

At all times, however, the task was dangerous, and to be adventured upon wisely and warily, either by getting behind the stag while he was gazing on the hounds, or by watching an opportunity to gallop roundly in upon him and kill him with the sword.

Page 159, line 254. And now, to issue from the glen.

'Until the present road was made through the romantic pass which I have presumptuously attempted to describe in the preceding stanzas, there was no mode of issuing out of the defile called the Trouach, excepting by a sort of ladder, composed of the branches and roots of trees.

Line 313. To meet with Highland plunderers here.

The clans who inhabited the romantic regions in the neighborhood of Loch Katrine were, even until a late period, much addicted to predatory excursions upon their Lowland neighbors.

Page 161, line 439. A gray-haired sire, whose eye intent.

If force of evidence could authorize us to believe facts inconsistent with the general laws of nature, enough might be produced in favor of the existence of the second-sight. It is called in Gaelic Taiskatarough, from Taisk, an unreal or shadowy appearance; and those possessed of the faculty are called Taiskathra, which may be aptly translated visionaries. Martin, a steady believer in the second-sight, gives the following account of it:—

'The second-sight is a singular faculty of seeing an otherwise invisible object without any previous means used by the person that sees for that end: the vision makes such a first impression upon the seers, that they neither see nor think of anything else, except the vision, as long as it continues; and then they appear passive or jovial, according to the object that was represented to them.

At the sight of a vision, the eyelids of the person are erected, and the eyes continue staring until the object vanish. This is obvious to others who are by when the persons happen to see a vision, and occurred more than once to my own observation, and to others that were with me.

'If a woman is seen standing at a man's left hand, it is a presage that she will be his wife, whether they be married to others, or unmarried at the time of the apparition.

'To see a spark of fire fall upon one's arm or breast is a forerunner of a dead child to be seen in the arms of those persons; of which there are several fresh instances.

'To see a seat empty at the time of one's sitting in it is a presage of that person's death soon after.'—Martin's Description of the Western Islands, 1716, 8vo, p. 300 et seq.

To these particulars innumerable examples might be added, all attested by grave and credible authors. But, in despite of evidence which neither Bacon, Boyle, nor Johnson was able to resist, the Taisk, with all its visionary properties, seems to be now universally abandoned to the use of poetry. The exquisitely beautiful poem of Lochiel will at once occur to the recollection of every reader.

Line 304. Here for retreat in dangerous hour.

The Celtic chieftains, whose lives were continually exposed to peril, had usually, in the most retired spot of their domains, some place of retreat for the hour of necessity, which, as circumstances would admit, was a tower, a cavern, or a rustic hut, in a strong and secluded situation. One of these last gave refuge to the unfortunate Charles Edward, in his perilous wanderings after the battle of Culloden.

Page 162, line 573. Of Ferragus or Ascarbat.

These two sons of Anak flourished in romantic fable. The first is well known to the admirers of Ariosto by the name of Ferrau. He was an antagonist of Orlando, and was at length slain by him in single combat. . . . Ascarbat, or Ascarbat, makes a very material figure in the History of Bevis of Hampton, by whom he was conquered. His effigies may be seen guarding one side of the gate at Southampton, while the other is occupied by Bevis himself.

Line 585. Though all unasked his birth and name.

The Highlanders, who carried hospitality to a punctilious excess, are said to have considered it as childish to ask a stranger his name or lineage before he had taken refreshment. Feeds were so frequent among them, that a contrary rule would in many cases have produced the discovery of some circumstance which might have excluded the guest from the benefit of the assistance he stood in need of.

Page 164, line 7. Morn's genial influence roused a minstrel gray.

Highland chieftains, to a late period, retained in their service the bard, as a family officer.

Page 165, line 100. Pour forth the glory of the Graine.

The ancient and powerful family of Graham (which, for metrical reasons, is here spelled after the Scottish pronunciation) held extensive possessions in the counties of Dumbarton and Stirling. Few families can boast of more historical renown, having claim to three of the most remarkable characters in the Scottish annals. Sir John the Graine, the faithful and undaunted partaker of the labors and patriotic warfare of Wallace, fell in the unfortunate field of Falkirk, in 1298. The celebrated Marquis of Montrose, in whom De Retz saw realized his abstract idea of the heroes of antiquity, was the second of these worthies. And, notwithstanding the severity of his temper, and the rigor with which he executed the oppressive mandates of the princes whom he served, I do not hesitate to name as the third, John Graine, of Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee, whose heroic death, in the arms of victory, may be allowed to cancel the memory of his cruelty to the nonconformists, during the reigns of Charles II. and James II.

Line 131. This harp, which erst Saint Modan swayed.

I am not prepared to show that St. Modan was a performer on the harp. It was, however, no unsuitably accomplishment; for St. Dunstan certainly did play upon that instrument, which retaining, as was natural, a portion of the sanctity attached to its master's character, announced future events by its spontaneous sound.

Line 142. Ere Douglasses, to ruin driven.

The downfall of the Douglasses of the house of Angus, during the reign of James V., is the event alluded to in the text. The Earl of Angus, it will be remembered, had married the queen-dowager, and availed himself of the right which he thus acquired, as well as of his extensive power, to retain the king in a sort of tutelage, which approached very near to captivity. Several open attempts were made to rescue James from this thralldom, with which he was well known to be deeply disgusted; but the valor of the Douglasses, and their allies, gave them the victory in every conflict. At length, the king, while residing at Falkland, contrived to escape by night out of his own court and palace, and rode full speed to Stirling Castle, where the governor, who was of the opposite faction, joyfully received him.

Page 166, line 221. In Holy-Rood a knight he slew.

This was by no means an uncommon occurrence in the Court of Scotland; nay, the presence of the sovereign himself scarcely restrained the ferocious and inveterate feuds which were the perpetual source of bloodshed among the Scottish nobility.

Line 223. The Douglas, like a stricken deer.

The exiled state of this powerful race is not exaggerated in this and subsequent passages. The hatred of James against the race of Douglas was so inveterate, that numerous as their allies were, and disregarded as the regal authority had usually been in similar cases, their nearest friends, even in the most remote part of Scotland, durst not entertain them, unless under the strictest and closest disguise.

Page 167, line 260. A votaress in Maronnan's cell.

The parish of Kilmarnock, at the eastern extremity of Loch Lomond, derives its name from a cell, or chapel, dedicated to Saint Maronock, or Marnock, or Maronnan, about whose sanctity very little is now remembered.

Line 270. But wild as Bracklin's thundering wave.

This beautiful cascade is on the Keltie, a mile from Callander. The height of the fall is about fifty feet.

Line 306. For Tine-man forged by fairy-love.

Archibald, the third Earl of Douglas, was so unfortunate in all his enterprises, that he acquired the epithet of 'tine-man,' because he tined, or lost, his followers in every battle which he fought. He was vanquished, as every reader must remember, in the bloody battle of Homildon-hill, near Wooler, where he himself lost an eye, and was made prisoner by Hotspur. He was no less unfortunate when allied with Percy, being wounded and taken at the battle of Shrewsbury. He was so unsuccessful in an attempt to besiege Roxburgh Castle, that it was called the 'Foul Raid,' or disgraceful expedition. His ill fortune left him indeed at the battle of Beaugé, in France; but it was only to return with double emphasis at the subsequent action of Verneuil, the last and most unlucky of his encounters, in which he fell, with the flower of the Scottish chivalry, then serving as auxiliaries in France, and about two thousand common soldiers, A. D. 1424.

Line 309. Did, self-unsheathed, foreshow.

The ancient warriors, whose hope and confidence rested chiefly in their blades, were accustomed to deduce omens from them, especially from such as were supposed to have been fabricated by enchanted skill, of which we have various instances in the romances and legends of the time.

Lord Lovat is said, by the author of the Letters from Scotland, to have affirmed that a number of swords that hung in the hall of the mansion-house, leaped of themselves out of the scabbard at the instant he was born.

Page 168, line 363. Those thrilling sounds, that call the night.

The connoisseurs in pipe-music affect to discover in a well-composed pibroch the imitative sounds of march, conflict, flight, pursuit, and all the current of a heady fight.

the Fiery Cross often made its circuit; and upon one occasion it passed through the whole district of Breadalbane, a tract of thirty-two miles, in three hours. The late Alexander Stewart, Esq., of Invernahyle, described to me his having sent round the Fiery Cross through the district of Appine, during the same commotion. The coast was threatened by a descent from two English frigates, and the flower of the young men were with the army of Prince Charles Edward, then in England; yet the summons was so effectual that even old age and childhood obeyed it; and a force was collected in a few hours so numerous and so enthusiastic that all attempt at the intended diversion upon the country of the absent warriors was in prudence abandoned as desperate.

Page 172, line 71. That monk, of savage form and face.

The state of religion in the middle ages afforded considerable facilities for those whose mode of life excluded them from regular worship, to secure, nevertheless, the ghostly assistance of confessors, perfectly willing to adapt the nature of their doctrine to the necessities and peculiar circumstances of their flock. Robin Hood, it is well known, had his celebrated domestic chaplain Friar Tuck.

Line 91. Of Brian's birth strange tales were told.

[Scott says that the legend which follows is not of his invention, and goes on to show that it is taken with slight variation from 'the geographical collections made by the Laird of Macfarlane.']

Line 114. No hunter's hand her snood untied.
The snood, or riband, with which a Scottish lass braided her hair, had an emblematical signification, and applied to her maiden character. It was exchanged for the curch, toy, or cuif, when she passed, by marriage, into the matron state. But if the damsel was so unfortunate as to lose pretensions to the name of maiden without gaining a right to that of matron, she was neither permitted to use the snood, nor advanced to the graver dignity of the curch.

Line 119. The desert gave him visions wild.

In adopting the legend concerning the birth of the Founder of the Church of Kilmalie, the author has endeavored to trace the effects which such a belief was likely to produce in a barbarous age on the person to whom it related. It seems likely that he must have become a fanatic or an impostor, or that mixture of both which forms a more frequent character than either of them, as existing separately. It was a natural attribute of such a character as the supposed hermit, that he should credit the numerous superstitions with which the minds of ordinary Highlanders are almost always imbued. A few of these are slightly alluded to in this stanza. The River Demon, or River-horse, for it is that form which he commonly assumes, is the Kelpy of the Lowlands, an evil and malicious spirit, delighting to forebode and to witness calamity. He frequents most Highland lakes and rivers; and one of his most memorable exploits was performed upon the banks of Loch Vennachar, in the very district which forms the scene of our action; it consisted in the destruction of a funeral procession with all its attendants. The 'noontide hag,' called in Gaelic Glas-lich, a tall, emaciated, gigantic female figure, is supposed in particular to haunt the district of Knoidart. A goblin dressed in antique armor, and having one hand covered with blood, called from that circumstance Lhamderry, or Red-hand, is a tenant of the forests of Glenmore and Rothiemureus.

Page 175, line 168. The fatal Ben-Shie's wailing scream.

Most great families in the Highlands were supposed to have a tutelary, or rather a domestic, spirit, attached to them, who took an interest in their prosperity, and intimidated, by its wailings, any approaching disaster. That of Grant of Grant was called Moy Moulloch, and appeared in the form of a girl, who had her arm covered with hair. Grant of Rothiemureus had an attendant called Bodach-an-dun, or the Ghost of the Hill; and many other examples might be mentioned. The Ben-Shie implies the female fairy whose lamentations were often supposed to precede the death of a chieftain of particular families. When she is visible, it is in the form of an old woman, with a blue mantle and streaming hair. A superstition of the same kind is, I believe, universally received by the inferior ranks of the native Irish.

Line 169. Sounds, too, had come in midnight blast.

A presage of the kind alluded to in the text is still believed to announce death to the ancient Highland family of M'Lean of Lochbuy. The spirit of an ancestor slain in battle is heard to gallop along a stony bank, and then to ride thrice around the family residence, ringing his fairy bridle, and thus intimating the approaching calamity.

Line 191. Whose parents in Inch-Caillich came.

The Isle of Nuns, or of Old Women, is a most beautiful island at the lower extremity of Loch Lomond. The church belonging to the former nunnery was long used as the place of worship for the parish of Buchanan, but scarce any vestiges of it now remain. The burial-ground continues to be used, and contains the family places of sepulture of several neighboring clans.

Page 176, line 300. Speed, Malise, speed! the dun deer's hide.

The present brigue of the Highlanders is made of half-dried leather, with holes to admit and let out the water; for walking the moors dry-shod is a matter altogether out of question. The ancient buskin was still ruder, being made of undressed deer's hide, with the hair outwards, — a circumstance which procured the Highlanders the well-known epithet of Red-shanks.

Page 177, line 369. The dismal coronach resound.

The second of the following has been submitted to the committee on the subject of the proposed amendment to the constitution of the State, and the committee have the honor to report that they have considered the same and have concluded to recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report
that they have considered the proposed amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report

that they have considered the proposed
amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to
recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report
that they have considered the proposed
amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to
recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report

that they have considered the proposed
amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to
recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report
that they have considered the proposed
amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to
recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report
that they have considered the proposed
amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to
recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report
that they have considered the proposed
amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to
recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report

that they have considered the proposed
amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to
recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report

that they have considered the proposed
amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to
recommend its adoption.

The committee have also the honor to report

that they have considered the proposed
amendment to the constitution of the State
which relates to the subject of the election of judges, and have concluded to
recommend its adoption.

tion, green is held in Scotland to be unlucky to particular tribes and counties. The Caithness men, who hold this belief, allege as a reason that their bands wore that color when they were cut off at the battle of Flodden; and for the same reason they avoid crossing the Ord on a Monday, being the day of the week on which their ill-omened array set forth. Green is also disliked by those of the name of Ogilvy; but more especially it is held fatal to the whole clan of Grahame. It is remembered of an aged gentleman of that name that when his horse fell in a fox-chase, he accounted for it at once by observing that the whipcord attached to his lash was of this unlucky color.

Line 304. For thou wert christened man.

The Elves were supposed greatly to envy the privileges acquired by Christian initiation, and they gave to those mortals who had fallen into their power a certain precedence, founded upon this advantageous distinction.

Page 185, line 354. To the joyless Elfin bower.

The subjects of Fairy-land were recruited from the regions of humanity by a sort of crimping system, which extended to adults as well as to infants.

Page 189, line 304. It was a stag, a stag of ten.

Having ten branches on his antlers.

Page 189, line 747. Who ever recked, where, how, or when.

St. John actually used this illustration when engaged in confuting the plea of law proposed for the unfortunate Earl of Strafford: 'It was true, we gave laws to hares and deer, because they are beasts of chase; but it was never accounted either cruelty or foul play to knock foxes or wolves on the head as they can be found, because they are beasts of prey. In a word, the law and humanity were alike: the one being more fallacious, and the other more barbarous, than in any age had been vented in such an authority.' — Clarendon's History of the Rebellion.

Line 762. The hardened flesh of mountain deer.

The Scottish Highlanders, in former times, had a concise mode of cooking their venison, or rather of dispensing with cooking it, which appears greatly to have surprised the French whom chance made acquainted with it. The Vidame of Chartres, when a hostage in England, during the reign of Edward VI., was permitted to travel into Scotland, and penetrated as far as the remote Highlands. After a great hunting party, at which a most wonderful quantity of game was destroyed, he saw these Scottish savages devour a part of their venison raw, without any further preparation than compressing it between two batons of wood, so as to force out the blood, and render it extremely hard. This they reckoned a great delicacy; and when the Vidame partook of it, his compliance with their taste rendered him extremely popular.

Page 191, line 124. While Albany with feeble hand.

There is scarcely a more disorderly period of Scottish history than that which succeeded the battle of Flodden, and occupied the minority of James V. Feuds of ancient standing broke out like old wounds, and every quarrel among the independent nobility, which occurred daily, and almost hourly, gave rise to fresh bloodshed.

Line 164. The Gael, of plain and river heir.

So far indeed was a Craigh, or foray, from being held disgraceful, that a young chief was always expected to show his talents for command so soon as he assumed it, by leading his clan on a successful enterprise of this nature, either against a neighboring sept, for which constant feuds usually furnished an apology, or against the Sassenach, Saxons, or Lowlanders, for which no apology was necessary. The Gael, great traditional historians, never forgot that the Lowlands had, at some remote period, been the property of their Celtic forefathers, which furnished an ample vindication of all the ravages that they could make on the unfortunate districts which lay within their reach.

Page 192, lines 270, 271.

I only meant

To show the reed on which you leant.

This incident, like some other passages in the poem, illustrative of the character of the ancient Gael, is not imaginary, but borrowed from fact. The Highlanders, with the inconsistency of most nations in the same state, were alternately capable of great exertions of generosity and of cruel revenge and perfidy. Early in the last century, John Gunn, a noted Highland robber, infested Inverness-shire, and levied black-mail up to the walls of the provincial capital. Agarrison was then maintained in the castle of that town, and their pay (country banks being unknown) was usually transmitted in specie under the guard of a small escort. It chanced that the officer who commanded this little party was unexpectedly obliged to halt, about thirty miles from Inverness, at a miserable inn. About night-fall, a stranger in the Highland dress, and of very prepossessing appearance, entered the same house. Separate accommodation being impossible, the Englishman offered the newly arrived guest a part of his supper, which was accepted with reluctance. By the conversation he found his new acquaintance knew well all the passes of the country, which induced him eagerly to request his company on the ensuing morning. He neither disguised his business and charge, nor his apprehensions of that celebrated free-booter, John Gunn. The Highlander hesitated a moment, and then frankly consented to be his guide. Forth they set in the morning; and in travelling through a solitary and dreary glen, the discourse again turned on John Gunn. 'Would you like to see him?' said the guide; and without waiting an answer to this alarming question he whistled, and the English officer, with his small party, were surrounded by a body of Highlanders, whose numbers put resistance out of question, and who were all well armed. 'Stranger,' resumed the guide, 'I am that very John Gunn by whom you feared to be intercepted, and not without cause; for I came to the inn last night with the express purpose of learning your route, that I and my followers might overtake you on your charge by the road. But I am incapable of betraying the trust you reposed in me, and having convinced you that you were in my power, I can only dismiss you unharmed and unmolested. He then gave the officer directions for his journey, and disappeared with his party as suddenly as they had presented themselves.

Page 100, line 289. Which, daughter of three mighty lakes.

The torrent which discharges itself from Loch Venachter, the broadest and eastmost of the three lakes which form the scenery adjoining to the Trossachs sweeps through a flat and extensive moor, called Lochachale. Upon a small eminence called the Don of Lochachale, and indeed on the plain itself, are some intrenchments which have been thought Roman.

Line 41. See, here all venturous I stand.

The duellists of former times did not always stand upon those punctilios respecting equality of arms, which are now judged essential to fair combat. It is true, that in formal combats in the lists, the parties were, by the judges of the field, put as nearly as possible in the same circumstances. But in private duel it was often otherwise. In that desperate combat which was fought between Lucius, a minion of Henry III. of France, and Antraquet, with two seconds on each side, from which only two persons escaped alive, Lucius complained that his antagonist had over him the advantage of a pinard, which he used in parrying, while his left hand, which he was forced to employ for the same purpose, was cruelly mangled. When he charged Antraquet with this odds, 'Thou hast done wrong,' answered he, 'to forget thy dagger at home. We are here to fight, and not to settle punctilios of arms.' In a similar duel, however, a younger brother of the house of Aubange, in Angoulême, behaved more generously on the like occasion, and at once threw away his dagger when his enemy challenged it as an undue advantage. But at this time hardly anything can be conceived more horribly brutal and savage than the mode in which private quarrels were conducted in France. Those who were most jealous of the point of honor, and acquired the title of Ruffians, did not scruple to take every advantage of strength, numbers, surprise, and arms, to accomplish their revenge.

Page 104, line 240. That on the field his target he threw.

A round target of light-wood, covered with strong leather and studded with brass or iron, was a necessary part of a Highlander's equipment. In charging regular troops they received the thrust of the bayonet in this buckler, twisted it aside, and used the broadsword against the encumbered soldier. In the civil war of 1745 most of the front rank of the clans were thus armed; and Captain Grose (Military Antiquities, vol. i. p. 164) informs us that in 1747 the privates of the 42d regiment, then in Flanders, were for the most part permitted to carry carrots. A person thus armed had a considerable advantage in private fray.

Line 304. Fitz-James's hand was swift and shrewd.

The use of defensive armour, and particularly of the buckler or target, was general in James Elizabeth's time, although that of the rapier seems to have been occasionally practiced much earlier. Rowland Yorke Esq. was once betrayed the fort of Zapphen to the Spaniards, for which good service he was afterwards rewarded by them, is said to have been the first who brought the rapier-fight into general use.

Page 106, line 551. And thou, O sail and jester, moun!

An eminence on the northeast of the Castle, where state criminals were executed, was often polluted with noble blood. This 'sailing-hill,' as it was sometimes termed, bears commonly the less terrible name of Harby-backet, from its having been the scene of a country amusement alluded to by Sir David Lindsay, who says of the justices in which the young king was engaged

'Some harled him to the Harby-backet.'

which consisted in sliding, in some sort of sheet, it may be supposed, from top to bottom of a smooth bank.

Page 106, line 564. The lawyers hold their sports to-day.

Every burgh of Scotland of the least note, but more especially the considerable towns, had their solemn play, or festival, when feats of archery were exhibited, and prizes distributed to those who excelled in wrestling, hurling the bar, and the other gymnastic exercises of the period. Stirling, a usual place of royal residence, was not likely to be deficient in pomp upon such occasions, especially since James V. was very partial to them. His ready participation in these popular amusements was one cause of his acquiring the title of the King of the Commons, or Rex Pictorum, as Lesley has latinized it. The usual prize to the best shooter was a silver arrow.

Page 106, line 614. Bold Robin Hood and a his band.

The exhibition of this renowned outlaw and his band was a favorite frolic at such festivals as we are describing. This sporting, in which kings did not disdain to be actors, was prohibited in Scotland upon the Reformation, by a statute of the 6th parliament of Queen Mary, c. 61, A. D. 1555, which ordered, under heavy penalties, that 'na manner of person be chosen Robert Hude, nor Little John, Abbot of Co-reason, Queen of May, nor otherwise.' But in 1561 the 'rascal multitude,' says John Knox, 'were stirred up to make a Robin Hude, whilk enormity was of many years left and damned by statute and act of Parliament; yet would they not be forbidden.' Accordingly they raised a very serious tumult, and at length made prisoners the magistrates who endeavored to suppress it, and would not release them till they extorted a formal promise that no one should be punished for his share of the disturbance. It would seem, from the complaints of the General Assembly of the Kirk, that these profane festivities were continued down to 1592 (Book of the Universal Kirk, p. 414).

Line 631. The monarch gave the arrow bright.

The Douglas of the poem is an imaginary person, a supposed uncle of the Earl of Angus. But the king's behavior during an unexpected interview with the Laird of Kilspindie, one of the banished Douglasses, under circumstances similar to those in the text, is imitated from a real story told by Home of Godscroft.

Line 641. To Douglas gave a golden ring.

The usual prize of a wrestling was a ram and a ring, but the animal would have embarrassed my story.

Page 199, line 887. Where stout Earl William was of old.

Stabbed by James II. in Stirling Castle.

Line 47. Adventurers they, from far who roved.

The Scottish armies consisted chiefly of the nobility and barons, with their vassals, who held lands under them for military service by themselves and their tenants. The patriarchal influence exercised by the heads of clans in the Highlands and Borders was of a different nature, and sometimes at variance with feudal principles. It flowed from the Patria Potestas, exercised by the chieftain as representing the original father of the whole name, and was often obeyed in contradiction to the feudal superior. James V. seems first to have introduced, in addition to the militia furnished from these sources, the service of a small number of mercenaries, who formed a body-guard, called the Foot-Band.

Page 200, line 131. The leader of a juggler band.

The jongleurs, or jugglers, as we learn from the elaborate work of the late Mr. Strutt, on the sports and pastimes of the people of England, used to call in the aid of various assistants, to render these performances as captivating as possible. The glee-maiden was a necessary attendant. Her duty was tumbling and dancing; and therefore the Anglo-Saxon version of St. Mark's Gospel states Herodias to have vaulted or tumbled before King Herod. In Scotland, these poor creatures seem, even at a late period, to have been handwomen to their masters.

Page 203, line 348. Strike it! — and then, — for well thou canst.

There are several instances, at least in tradition, of persons so much attached to particular tunes as to require to hear them on their death-bed. Such an anecdote is mentioned by the late Mr. Riddel of Glenriddel, in his collection of Border tunes, respecting an air called the Danelling of the Burns, for which a certain Gallovidian laird is said to have evinced this strong mark of partiality. It is popularly told of a famous freebooter, that he composed the tune known by the name of Macpherson's Rant while under sentence of death, and played it at the gallows-tree. Some spirited words have been adapted to it by Burns. A similar story is recounted of a Welsh bard, who composed and played on his death-bed the air called Duffydd Garregg Wen.

Canto xv. Battle of Bea' l an Duine.

A skirmish actually took place at a pass thus called in the Trossachs, and closed with the remarkable incident mentioned in the text. It was greatly posterior in date to the reign of James V.

Page 204, line 452. As their Tinchel cove the game.

"A circle of sportsmen, who, by surrounding a great space, and gradually narrowing, brought immense quantities of deer together, which usually made desperate efforts to break through the Tinchel."

Page 207, line 740. And Snowdon's Knight is Scotland's King.

This discovery will probably remind the reader of the beautiful Arabian tale of Il Bon-docuni. Yet the incident is not borrowed from that elegant story, but from Scottish tradition. James V., of whom we are treating, was a monarch whose good and benevolent intentions often rendered his romantic freaks venial, if not respectable, since, from his anxious attention to the interests of the lower and most oppressed class of his subjects, he was, as we have seen, popularly termed the King of the Commons. For the purpose of seeing that justice was regularly administered, and frequently from the less justifiable motive of gallantry, he used to traverse the vicinages of his several palaces in various disguises. The two excellent comic songs entitled The Gaberlunzie Man and We'll gie nae mair a roving are said to have been founded upon the success of his amorous adventures when travelling in the disguise of a beggar. The latter is perhaps the best comic ballad in any language.

Line 789. Of yore the name of Snowdon claims.

William of Worcester, who wrote about the middle of the fifteenth century, calls Stirling Castle Snowdon. Sir David Lindsay bestows the same epithet upon it in his Complaint of the Papingo: —

'Adieu, fair Snowdon, with thy towers high,
Thy chapel-royal, park, and table round,
May, June, and July, would I dwell in thee,
Were I a man, to hear the bird's sound,
Whilk doth agane thy royal rock rebound.'

Mr. Chalmers, in his late excellent edition of Sir David Lindsay's works, has refuted the chimerical derivation of Snowdon from sne-ding, or cutting. It was probably derived from the romantic legend which connected Stirling with King Arthur, to which the mention of the Round Table gives countenance. The ring within which jousts were formerly practised, in the castle park, is still called the Round Table. Snowdon is the official title of one of the Scottish heralds, whose epithets seem in all countries to have been fantastically adopted from ancient history or romance. It appears that the real name by which James was actually distinguished in his private excursions was the Good- man of Ballenquick, derived from a steep pass leading up to the Castle of Stirling, so called.

THE VISION OF DON RODERICK.

Page 211, line 35. And Cattreath's glens with voice of triumph rung.

This locality may startle those readers who do not recollect that much of the ancient poetry preserved in Wales refers less to the history of the Principality to which that name is now limited, than to events which happened in the northwest of England, and southwest of Scotland, where the Britons for a long time made a stand against the Saxons. The battle of Cattreath, lamented by the celebrated Aneurin, is supposed, by the learned Dr. Leyden, to have been fought on the skirts of Etrick Forest. It is known to the English reader by the paraphrase of Gray, beginning, —

'Had I but the torrent's might,
With headlong rage and wild affright,' etc.

But it is not so generally known that the champions, mourned in this beautiful dirge, were the British inhabitants of Edinburgh, who were cut off by the Saxons of Deiria, or Northumberland, about the latter part of the sixth century.

Line 67. Or round the marge of Minchmore's haunted spring.

A belief in the existence and nocturnal revels of the fairies still lingers among the vulgar in Selkirkshire. A copious fountain upon the ridge of Minchmore, called the Cheesewell, is supposed to be sacred to these fanciful spirits, and it was customary to propitiate them by throwing in something upon passing it. A pin was the usual oblation; and the ceremony is still sometimes practised, though rather in jest than earnest.

Page 212, line 76. In verse spontaneous chants some favored name.

The flexibility of the Italian and Spanish languages, and perhaps the liveliness of their genius, renders these countries distinguished for the talent of improvisations, which is found even among the lowest of the people. It is mentioned by Baretti and other travellers.

Line 79. Or whether, kindling at the deeds of Grème.

Over a name sacred for ages to heroic verse, a poet may be allowed to exercise some power. I have used the freedom, here and elsewhere, to alter the orthography of the name of my gallant countryman, in order to apprise the Southern reader of its legitimate sound; — Grahame being, on the other side of the Tweed, usually pronounced as a dissyllable.

Page 213, line 31. What! will Don Roderick here till morning stay.

Almost all the Spanish historians, as well as the voice of tradition, ascribe the invasion of the Moors to the forcible violation committed by Roderick upon Florinda, called by the Moors, Cala or Cava. She was the daughter of Count Julian, one of the Gothic monarch's principal lieutenants, who, when the crime was perpetrated, was engaged in the defence of Ceuta against the Moors. In his indignation at the ingratitude of his sovereign, and the dishonor of his daughter, Count Julian forgot the duties of a Christian and a patriot, and, forming an alliance with Musa, then the Caliph's lieutenant in Africa, he countenanced the invasion of Spain by a body of Saracens and Africans, commanded by the celebrated Tarik; the issue of which was the defeat and death of Roderick, and the occupation of almost the whole peninsula by the Moors.

Line 59. 'Thus royal Witiza was slain,' he said.

The predecessor of Roderick upon the Spanish throne, and slain by his connivance, as is affirmed by Rodriguez of Toledo, the father of Spanish history.

Page 215, line 168. The Teebir war-cry and the Lelie's yell.

The Teebir (derived from the words Alla acbar, God is most mighty) was the original war-cry of the Saracens. It is celebrated by Hughes in the Siege of Damascus: —

'We heard the Teebir: so these Arabs call
Their shout of onset, when, with loud appeal,
They challenge Heaven, as if demanding conquest.'

The Lelie, well known to the Christians during the crusades, is the shout of Alla illa Alla, the Mahometan confession of faith. It is twice used in poetry by my friend Mr. W. Stewart Rose, in the romance of Partenoper, and in the Crusade of Saint Lewis.

Line 181. By Heaven, the Moors prevail! the Christians yield!

Count Julian, the father of the injured Florinda, with the connivance and assistance of Oppas, Archbishop of Toledo, invited, in 711, the Saracens into Spain. A considerable army arrived under the command of Tarik, or Tard, who bequeathed the well-known name of Gibraltar (Gibei al Tarik, or the mountain of Tarik) to the place of his landing. He was joined by Count Julian, ravaged Andalusia, and took Seville. In 714, they returned with a still greater force, and Roderick marched into Andalusia at the head of a great army, to give them battle.

Orelia, the courser of Don Roderick, was celebrated for her speed and form. She is mentioned repeatedly in Spanish romance, and also by Cervantes.

Page 214, line 293. When for the light bolero ready stand.

The bolero is a very light and active dance, much practised by the Spaniards, in which castanets are always used. Mozo and muchacha is equivalent to our phrase of lad and lass.

Page 219, line 382. While trumpets rang, and heralds cried 'Castile!'

The heralds, at the coronation of a Spanish monarch, proclaim his name three times, and repeat three times the word Castilla, Castilian, Castilla: which, with all other ceremonies, was carefully copied in the mock inauguration of Joseph Bonaparte.

Barnard Balil, the ancestor of the short and unfortunate dynasty of that name, which succeeded to the Scottish throne under the patronage of Edward I. and Edward III. Balil's Tower, afterwards mentioned in the poem, is a round tower of great size, situated at the western extremity of the building. It bears marks of great antiquity, and was remarkable for the curious construction of its vaulted roof, which has been lately greatly injured by the operations of some persons, to whom the tower has been leased for the purpose of making patent shot. The prospect from the top of Balil's Tower commands a rich and magnificent view of the wooded valley of the Tees.

Page 32, line 36. The morion's plumes his strange hide.

The use of complete suits of armor was fallen into disuse during the Civil War, though they were still worn by leaders of rank and importance. 'In the reign of King James I.,' says our military antiquary, 'no great alterations were made in the article of defensive armor, except that the buff-coat, or jerkin, which was originally worn under the cuirass, now became frequently a substitute for it, it having been found that a good buff leather would of itself resist the stroke of a sword; this, however, only occasionally took place among the light-armed cavalry and infantry, complete suits of armor being still used among the heavy horse. Buff-coats continued to be worn by the city trained-bands till within the memory of persons now living, so that defensive armor may, in some measure, be said to have terminated in the same materials with which it began, that is, the skins of animals, or leather.'—Grose's Military Antiquities, Lond. 1801, 4to, vol. ii. p. 324.

Line 141. On his dark face a scorching cline.

In this character I have attempted to sketch one of those West Indian adventurers, who, during the course of the seventeenth century, were popularly known by the name of Buccaneers. The successes of the English in the predatory incursions upon Spanish America during the reign of Elizabeth had never been forgotten; and, from that period downward, the exploits of Drake and Raleigh were imitated, upon a smaller scale indeed, but with equally desperate valor, by small bands of pirates, gathered from all nations, but chiefly French and English. The engrossing policy of the Spaniards tended greatly to increase the number of these free-booters, from whom their commerce and colonies suffered, in the issue, dreadful calamity.

Page 233, line 223. *Would'at hear the tale?
—On Marston heath.*

The well-known and desperate battle of Long-Marston Moor, which terminated so unfortunately for the cause of Charles, commenced under very different auspices. Prince Rupert had marched with an army of twenty thousand men for the relief of York, then besieged by Sir Thomas Fairfax, at the head of the Parliamentary army, and the Earl of Leven, with the Scottish auxiliary forces, by this he so completely succeeded, that he compelled the besiegers to retreat to Marston Moor, a large open plain, about eight miles distant from the city. Thither they were followed by the Prince, who had now added to his army the garrison of York, probably not less than ten thousand men strong, met the gallant Marquis then Earl of Newcastle.

Lord Clarendon informs us that the King, previous to receiving the true account of the battle, had been informed, by an express from Oxford, that Prince Rupert had not only relieved York, but totally defeated the Span with many particulars to confirm it, all which was so much belied there, that they had made public fires of joy for the victory.

Page 236, line 431. Monckton and Mitton told the news.

Monckton and Mitton are villages near the river Ouse, and not very distant from the field of battle. The particulars of the action were violently disputed at the time.

Line 443. Stout Cromwell has redeemed the day.

Cromwell, with his regiment of cuirassiers, had a principal share in turning the fate of the day at Marston Moor; which was equally matter of triumph to the Independents, and of grief and heart-burning to the Presbyterians and to the Scottish.

Line 461. Of Percy Rede the tragic song.

In a poem, entitled The Lay of the Reed-leaf Minstrel, Newcastle, 1802, this tale, with many others peculiar to the valley of the Reed is commemorated: 'The particulars of the traditional story of Percy Reed of Troughend, and the Halls of Girsfield, the author had from a descendant of the family of Reed. From his account, it appears that Percival Reed, Esquire, a keeper of Reed-leaf, was betrayed by the Halls, hence denominated the false-hearted Hall, to a band of moss-troopers of the name of Crosier, who slew him at Batinghope, near the source of the Reed.

The Halls were, after the murder of Percy Reed, held in such universal abhorrence and contempt by the inhabitants of Reed-leaf, for their cowardly and treacherous behavior, that they were obliged to leave the country. In another passage we are informed that the ghost of the injured Murderer is supposed to haunt the banks of a brook called the Fringle. These Redes of Troughend were a very ancient family, as may be conjectured from their deriving their surname from the river on which they had their mansion. An epitaph on one of their tombs affirms that the family held their lands of Troughend, which are situated on the Reed, nearly opposite to Otterburn, for the incredible space of nine hundred years.

Line 466. And near the spot that gave me name.

Risingham, upon the river Reed, near the beautiful hamlet of Woodburn, is an ancient Roman station, formerly called Habitancum. Camden says, that in his time the popular ac-

mount bore that it had been the abode of a deity, or giant, called Magon; and appeals, in support of this tradition, as well as to the etymology of Risingham, or Reisenham, which signifies, in German, the habitation of the giants, to two Roman altars taken out of the river, inscribed DEO MORGONTI CADENORUM. About half a mile distant from Risingham, upon an eminence covered with scattered birch-trees and fragments of rock, there is cut upon a large rock, in alto-relievo, a remarkable figure, called Robin of Risingham, or Robin of Redesdale. It presents a hunter, with his bow raised in one hand, and in the other what seems to be a hare. There is a quiver at the back of the figure, and he is dressed in a long coat or kirtle, coming down to the knees, and meeting close, with a girdle bound round him. Dr. Horsley, who saw all monuments of antiquity with Roman eyes, inclines to think this figure a Roman archer; and certainly the bow is rather of the ancient size than of that which was so formidable in the hand of the English archers of the middle ages. But the rudeness of the whole figure prevents our founding strongly upon mere inaccuracy of proportion. The popular tradition is, that it represents a giant, whose brother resided at Woodburn, and he himself at Risingham. It adds, that they subsisted by hunting, and that one of them, finding the game became too scarce to support them, poisoned his companion, in whose memory the monument was engraved.

Line 491. The statutes of the Buccaneers.

The 'statutes of the Buccaneers' were, in reality, more equitable than could have been expected from the state of society under which they had been formed. They chiefly related, as may readily be conjectured, to the distribution and the inheritance of their plunder.

When the expedition was completed, the fund of prize-money acquired was thrown together, each party taking his oath that he had retained or concealed no part of the common stock. If any one transgressed in this important particular, the punishment was, his being set ashore on some desert key or island, to shift for himself as he could. The owners of the vessel had then their share assigned for the expenses of the outfit. These were generally old pirates, settled at Tobago, Jamaica, St. Domingo, or some other French or English settlement. The surgeon's and carpenter's salaries, with the price of provisions and ammunition, were also defrayed. Then followed the compensation due to the maimed and wounded, rated according to the damage they had sustained; as six hundred pieces of eight, or six slaves, for the loss of an arm or leg, and so in proportion. The remainder of the booty was divided into as many shares as there were Buccaneers. The commander could only lay claim to a single share, as the rest; but they complimented him with two or three, in proportion as he had acquitted himself to their satisfaction.

Page 239, line 22. Down his deep woods the courses of Tees.

The view from Barnard Castle commands the rich and magnificent valley of Tees. Immediately adjacent to the river, the banks are very thickly wooded; at a little distance they are more open and cultivated; but, being interspersed with hedgerows, and with isolated trees of great size and age, they still retain the richness of woodland scenery. The river itself flows in a deep trench of solid rock, chiefly limestone and marble.

Page 240, line 80. And Egliston's gray ruins passed.

The ruins of this abbey, or priory, are beautifully situated upon the angle formed by a little dell called Thorngill at its junction with the Tees. Egliston was dedicated to St. Mary and St. John the Baptist, and is supposed to have been founded by Ralph de Multon about the end of Henry the Second's reign.

Line 98. Raised by that Legion long renowned.

Close behind the George Inn at Greta Bridge, there is a well-preserved Roman encampment, surrounded with a triple ditch, lying between the river Greta and a brook called the Tutta. The four entrances are easily to be discerned. Very many Roman altars and monuments have been found in the vicinity.

Line 108. Awake when Rokely's turrets high.

This ancient manor long gave name to a family by whom it is said to have been possessed from the Conquest downward, and who are at different times distinguished in history. It was the Baron of Rokely who finally defeated the insurrection of the Earl of Northumberland, tempore Hen. IV. The Rokely, or Rokesby family, continued to be distinguished until the great Civil War, when, having embraced the cause of Charles I., they suffered severely by fines and confiscations.

Page 241, line 145. A stern and lone yet lovely road.

What follows is an attempt to describe the romantic glen, or rather ravine, through which the Greta finds a passage between Rokely and Mortham; the former situated upon the left bank of Greta, the latter on the right bank, about half a mile nearer to its junction with the Tees. The river runs with very great rapidity over a bed of solid rock, broken by many shelving descents, down which the stream dashes with great noise and impetuosity.

Page 242, line 251. How whistle rush bids tempests roar.

That this is a general superstition, is well known to all who have been on shipboard, or who have conversed with seamen.

Line 253. Of Erick's cap and Elmo's light.

This Ericus, King of Sweden, in his time was held second to none in the magical art; and he was so familiar with the evil spirits, which he exceedingly adored, that which way soever he turned his cap, the wind would presently blow that way. From this occasion he was called Windy Cap; and many men believed that Regnerus, King of Denmark, by the conduct of this Ericus, who was his nephew, did happily extend his piracy into the most remote parts of the earth, and conquered many countries and fenced cities by his cunning, and at last was his condutor; that by the consent of the nobles, he should be chosen King of Sweden, which continued a long time with him very happily, until he died of old age.'—Olaus Magnus, p. 45.

Line 263. The Demon Frigate braves the gale.

This is an allusion to a well-known nautical superstition concerning a fantastic vessel, called by sailors the 'Flying Dutchman,' and supposed to be seen about the latitude of the Cape of Good Hope. She is distinguished from earthly vessels by bearing a press of sail when all others are unable, from stress of weather, to show an inch of canvas. The cause of her wandering is not altogether certain; but the general account is, that she was originally a vessel loaded with great wealth, on board of which some horrid act of murder and piracy had been committed; that the plague broke out among the wicked crew who had perpetrated the crime, and that they sailed in vain from port to port, offering, as the price of shelter, the whole of their ill-gotten wealth; that they were excluded from every harbor, for fear of the contagion which was devouring them; and that, as a punishment of their crimes, the apparition of the ship still continues to haunt those seas in which the catastrophe took place, and is considered by the mariners as the worst of all possible omens.

Line 268. Hence, by some desert isle or key.

What contributed much to the security of the Buccaneers about the Windward Islands was the great number of little islets, called in that country keys. These are small sandy patches, appearing just above the surface of the ocean, covered only with a few bushes and weeds, but sometimes affording springs of water, and, in general, much frequented by turtle. Such little uninhabited spots afforded the pirates good harbors, either for refitting or for the purpose of ambush; they were occasionally the hiding-place of their treasure, and often afforded a shelter to themselves.

Page 243, line 353. Before the gate of Mortham stood.

The castle of Mortham, which Leland terms 'Mr. Rokesby's Place, in ripa citer, scant a quarter of a mile from Greta Bridge, and not a quarter of a mile beneath into Tees,' is a picturesque tower, surrounded by buildings of different ages, now converted into a farmhouse and offices. The situation of Mortham is eminently beautiful, occupying a high bank, at the bottom of which the Greta winds out of the dark, narrow, and romantic dell, which the text has attempted to describe, and flows onward through a more open valley to meet the Tees about a quarter of a mile from the castle.

Line 424. There dig and tomb your precious heap.

If time did not permit the Buccaneers to lavish away their plunder in their usual debaucheries, they were wont to hide it, with many superstitious solemnities, in the desert islands and keys which they frequented, where much treasure, whose lawless possessor perished without reclaiming it, is still to be concealed. They killed a Negro, and buried him with the treasure, thinking that his spirit would haunt the territory and terrify away all intruders. I cannot ascribe to them that of mariners, any other authority on which this is ascribed to them than that of mariners, which is, however, amply sufficient for the purposes of poetry.

Page 244, line 444. And force him add a spell.

All who are conversant with the administration of criminal justice must remember occasions in which malefactors appear conducted themselves with a species of evasion, either by making unnecessary concessions respecting their guilt, or by sudden voluntary allusions to circumstances which it could not fail to be exposed. A notable instance occurred in the celebrated case of Eugene Aram. It happened to the prisoner, while conversing with a professional assistant, to be accused of an atrocious crime, for the purpose of rendering him professional assistance, to hear the prisoner, after the most solemn and reiterated protestations of his guiltless, suddenly, and, as it were, tacitly, in the course of his communication, make such an admission as was altogether compatible with innocence.

Page 246, line 632. Of Brackenbury's tower.

This tower is situated near the north extremity of the wall which encloses the Castle, and is traditionally said to be the prison.

Line 633. Right heavy shall his ransom.

After the battle of Marston Moor, the Newcastle retired beyond sea in disguise many of his followers laid down their arms, made the best composition they could with the Committees of Parliament. Fines were imposed upon them in proportion to their estates, degrees of delinquency, and these fines were bestowed upon such persons as had a well of the Commons. In some circumstances it happened that the oppressed cavaliers fain to form family alliances with some of the triumphant party.

Page 247, line 27. Now covering withered leaves.

The patience, abstinence, and ingenuity of the North American Indians, in their pursuit of plunder or vengeance, is a distinguished feature in their character; their activity and address which they display in retreat is equally surprising.

Line 33. In Redesdale his youth had

The inhabitants of the valleys of the Reed were, in ancient times, so much addicted to these depredations, that in the incorporated Merchant-adventurers of the castle made a law that none born in the district should be admitted apprentice. The inhabitants are stated to be so generally opine that no faith should be reposed in proceeding from 'such lewde and wicked traitors.' This regulation continued to stand pealed until 1771. A beggar, in an old describes himself as 'born in Rededale, Northumberland, and come of a right-riding

one called the Robsons, good honest men true, saving a little shifting for their living, help them.' — a description which would applied to most Borderers on both sides.

as 35. When Roken-edge and Redswair iswair, famed for a skirmish to which it name, is on the very edge of the Carter-which divides England from Scotland.

Roken is a place upon Reedwater.

as 36. Hiding his face, lest foemen spy.
ter one of the recent battles, in which the rebels were defeated, one of their most e leaders was found in a bog, in which he immersed up to the shoulders, while his was concealed by an impending ledge of Being detected and seized, notwithstanding his precaution, he became solicitous to know his retreat had been discovered. 'I ht,' said the Sutherland Highlander by n he was taken, 'the sparkle of your eye.'

ge 248, line 184. And throatwort with its bell.

e Campanula Latifolia, grand throatwort, sterbury bells, grows in profusion upon the fiful banks of the River Greta, where it es the manors of Brignall and Scargill, t three miles above Greta Bridge. [The r instinctively recalls Mr. Morritt's ac-of Scott's notebook with memoranda jotown for the local color of this poem.] ge 249, line 274. Of my marauding on the
is.

e troops of the king, when they first took eld, were as well disciplined as could be ted from circumstances. But as the cir-stances of Charles became less favorable, his funds for regularly paying his forces
aned, habits of military license prevailed
g them in greater excess. Lacy the player, served his master during the Civil War,
ght out after the Restoration a piece
The Old Troop, in which he seems to have demorated some real incidents which oc-ed in his military career. The names of officers of the Troop sufficiently express habits. We have Fleas-fant Plunder-er-General, Captain Perret-farru, and ter-Master Burudrop. The officers of the p are in league with these worthies, and re at their plundering the country for a ble share in the booty. All this was untedly drawn from the life, which Lacy had portunity to study.

ge 256, line 339. And Brynall's woods Scargill's wane.

e banks of the Greta, below Rutherford ge, abound in seams of grayish slate, which brought in some places to a very great r under ground, thus forming artificial me, which, when the seam has been exhausted, are gradually hidden by the underwood which grows in profusion upon the romantic banks of the river. In times of public confusion, they might be well adapted to the purposes of banditti.

Page 252, line 304. When Spain waged warfare with our land.

There was a short war with Spain in 1659-60, which will be found to agree pretty well with the chronology of the poem. But probably Bertram held an opinion very common among the maritime heroes of the age, that 'there was no peace beyond the Line.' The Spanish privateers were constantly employed in aggressions upon the trade and settlements of the English and French; and, by their own averties, gave room for the system of buccannery,
at first adopted in self defense and retaliation, and afterwards persevered in from habit and thirst of plunder.

Line 371. And once amid our comrade's strife.

The laws of the Buccaneers, and their successors the Pirates, however severe and equitable, were, like other laws, often set aside by the stronger party. Their quarrels about the division of the spoil fill their history, and they as frequently arose out of mere frolic, or the tyrannical humor of their chiefs.

Page 254, line 697. And adieu for evermore.

The last verse of this song is taken from the fragment of an old Scottish ballad which seems to express the fortunes of some follower of the Stuart family.

Line 735. Who at Here-cross an Stannmore meets Alien-a-Dale!

This is a fragment of an old cross, with its pediment, surrounded by an intrenchment, upon the very summit of the waste ridge of Stan-more, near a small house of entertainment called the Spittal. The situation of the cross, and the pains taken to defend it, seem to indicate that it was intended for a landmark of importance.

Line 756. Speak, Hardin! hast thou lodged our deer?

The duty of the ranger, or prickler, was first to lodge, or hurler the deer; i. e., to discover his retreat, and then to make his report to his prince, or master.

Page 255, line 1. When Denmark's raven soared on high.

About the year of God 800 the Danes, under their celebrated leaders Ingvar (more properly Agvar) and Hubba, — sons, it is said, of the still more celebrated Regner Lodbrog, — invaded Northumberland, bringing with them the magical standard, so often mentioned in poetry, called Raufen, or Rumfen, from its bearing the figure of a raven. The Danes advanced and extended their incursions, and began to colonize, establishing a kind of capital at York, from which they spread their conquests and incursions in every direction. Stanmore, which divides the mountains of Westmoreland and Cumberland, was probably the boundary of the Danish kingdom in that direction. The district to the west, known in ancient British history by the name of Eborac, had never been upon the site of the present mansion, by which a part of its walls is enclosed. It is surrounded by a profusion of fine wood, and the park in which it stands is adorned by the junction of the Greta and of the Tees.

Page 285, line 225. Naught knowest thou of the Felon Sow.

The ancient minstrels had a comic as well as a serious strain of romance. The comic romance was a sort of parody upon the usual subjects of minstrel poetry. One of the very best of these mock romances, and which has no small portion of comic humor, is the Hunting of the Felon Sow of Rokeby by the Friars of Richmond.

Line 247. The Felen of O'Neale was he.

The Felen, or Ollamlh Re Dan, was the proper bard, or, as the name literally implies, poet. Each chieftain of distinction had one or more in his service, whose office was usually hereditary.

Line 258. Ah, Clondeboy! thy friendly floor.

Clondeboy is a district of Ulster, formerly possessed by the sept of the O'Neales, and Slieve Donard a romantic mountain in the same province. The clan was ruined after Tyrone's great rebellion, and their places of abode laid desolate. The ancient Irish, wild and uncultivated in other respects, did not yield even to their descendants in practising the most free and extended hospitality.

Page 286, line 326. On Marwood-chase and Toller Hill.

Marwood-chase is the old park extending along the Durham side of the Tees, attached to Barnard Castle. Toller Hill is an eminence on the Yorkshire side of the river, commanding a superb view of the ruins.

Page 287, line 411. The ancient English minstrel's dress.

Among the entertainments presented to Elizabeth at Kenilworth Castle was the introduction of a person designed to represent a travelling minstrel, who entertained her with a solemn story out of the Acts of King Arthur.

Page 287, line 884. A horseman armed at headlong speed, etc.

This, and what follows, is taken from a real achievement of Major Robert Philipson, called from his desperate and adventurous courage, Robin the Devil.

THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMALN.

Page 288, line 2. That may match with the Baron of Triermaln?

Triermaln was a fief of the Barony of Gilsland, in Cumberland: it was possessed by a Saxon family at the time of the Conquest, but, after the death of Gilmore, Lord of Tryermaine and Tollerossack, Hubert Vaux gave Tryermaine and Tollerossack to his second son, Ranulph Vaux; which Ranulph afterwards became heir to his elder brother Robert, the founder of Lanercost, who died without issue. Ranulph, being Lord of all Gilsland, gave Gilmore's lands to his younger son, named Roland, and let the Barony descend to his eldest son Robert, son of Ranulph. Roland had issue

Alexander, and he, Randolph, after whom succeeded Robert, and they were named Rolands successively, that were lords thereof, until the reign of Edward the Fourth. Burn's Antiquities of Westmoreland and Cumberland, vol. ii. p. 482.

Page 289, line 91. And his who sleeps at Dunmailraie.

This is one of the grand passes from Cumberland into Westmoreland. It takes its name from a cairn, or pile of stones, erected, it is said, to the memory of Dunmail, the last King of Cumberland.

Page 290, line 114. He passed Red Penrith's Table Round.

A circular intrenchment, about half a mile from Penrith, is thus popularly termed. The circle within the ditch is about one hundred and sixty paces in circumference, with openings, or approaches, directly opposite to each other. As the ditch is on the inner side, it could not be intended for the purpose of defence, and it has reasonably been conjectured, that the enclosure was designed for the solemn exercise of feats of chivalry, and the embankment around for the convenience of the spectators.

Line 116. Left Mayburgh's mound and stones of power.

Higher up the river Eamont than Arthur's Round Table, is a prodigious enclosure of great antiquity, formed by a collection of stones upon the top of a gently sloping hill, called Mayburgh. In the plain which it encloses there stands erect an unwholen stone of twelve feet in height. Two similar mounds are said to have been destroyed during the memory of man. The whole appears to be a monument of Druidical times.

Line 162. The surface of that subtle tarn.

The small lake called Sealestern lies so deeply embosomed in the recesses of the large mountain called Saddelback, more poetically Glaramara, is of such great depth, and so completely hidden from the sun, that its beams never reach it, and that the reflection of the stars may be seen at mid-day.

Page 291, line 292. On Caliburn's rearsless brand.

This was the name of King Arthur's well-known sword, sometimes also called Excalibur.

Page 292, line 321. The terrors of Tintagel's aspect.

Tintagel Castle, in Cornwall, is reported to have been the birthplace of King Arthur.

Page 293, line 175. Scattering a shower of sleep-dew.

The author has an indistinct recollection of an adventure, somewhat similar to that which is here ascribed to King Arthur, having been told one of the ancient Kings of Denmark. The horn in which the barrow liquor was presented to that monarch is said still to be preserved in the Royal Museum at Copenhagen.

Line 184. The monarch, leanthless and amazed, etc.

We now gained a view of the Vale of St. John's, a very narrow dell, hemmed in by mountains, through which a small brook makes many meanderings, washing little enclosures of grass-ground, which stretch up the rising of the hills. In the widest part of the dale you are struck with the appearance of an ancient ruined castle, which seems to stand upon the summit of a little mount, the mountains around forming an amphitheatre. This massive bulwark shows a front of various towers, and makes an awful, rude, and Gothic appearance, with its lofty turrets and ragged battlements; we traced the galleries, the bending arches, the buttresses. The greatest antiquity stands characterized in its architecture; the inhabitants near it assert it is an antediluvian structure.

'The traveller's curiosity is roused, and he prepares to make a nearer approach, when that curiosity is put upon the rack by his being assured that if he advances, certain genii who govern the place, by virtue of their supernatural art and necromancy, will strip it of all its beauties, and by enchantment transform the magic walls. The vale seems adapted for the habitation of such beings; its gloomy recesses and retirements look like haunts of evil spirits. There was no delusion in the report; we were soon convinced of its truth; for this piece of antiquity, so venerable and noble in its aspect, as we draw near, changed its figure, and proved no other than a shaken massive pile of rocks, which stand in the midst of this little vale, disunited from the adjoining mountains, and have so much the real form and resemblance of a castle, that they bear the name of the Castle Rocks of St. John.'—Hutchinson's Excursion to the Lakes, p. 121.

Line 198. Twelve bloody fields with glory fought.

Arthur is said to have defeated the Saxons in twelve pitched battles, and to have achieved the other feats alluded to in the text.

Page 296, line 359. Sir Caradoc to fight that prize.

See the comic tale of The Boy and the Mantle, in the third volume of Perry's Reliques of Ancient Poetry, from the Breton or Norman original of which Aristo is supposed to have taken his Tale of the Enchanted Cup.

Page 300, line 600. Whose logic is from 'Single-Speech.'

See Parliamentary Logic, etc., by the Right Honorable William Gerard Hamilton (1808), commonly called 'Single-Speech Hamilton.'

THE LORD OF THE ISLES.

Page 314, line 47. Thy rugged halls, Artornish, rung.

The ruins of the castle of Artornish are situated upon a promontory on the Morven, or mainland side of the Sound of Mull, a name given to the deep arm of the sea which divides that island from the continent. The situation is wild and romantic in the highest degree, having on the one hand a high and precipitous chain of rocks overhanging the sea, and on the other the narrow entrance to the beautiful salt-water lake, called Loch Alline, which is in many places finely fringed with copsewood. The ruins of Artornish are not now very considerable, and consist chiefly of the remains of an old keep, or tower, with fragments of outward defences. But in former days it was a place of great consequence, being one of the principal strongholds which the Lords of the Isles, during the period of their stormy independence, possessed upon the mainland of Argyshire.

Line 76. Rude Heiskar's seal through surges dark.

The seal displays a taste for music, which could scarcely be expected from his habits and local predilections. They will long follow a boat in which any musical instrument is played, and even a tune simply whistled has attractions for them. The Dean of the Isles says of Heiskar, a small uninhabited rock, about twelve (Scottish) miles from the Isle of Uist, that an infinite slaughter of seals takes place there.

Page 315, line 177. O'erlooked, dark Mull, thy mighty Sound.

The Sound of Mull, which divides that island from the continent of Scotland, is one of the most striking scenes which the Hebrides afford to the traveller. Sailing from Oban to Arisa, or Tobermory, through a narrow channel, yet deep enough to bear vessels of the largest burden, he has on his left the bold and mountainous shores of Mull; on the right those of that district of Argyshire called Morven or Morvern, successively indented by deep salt-water lochs, running up many miles inland. To the south-eastward arise a prodigious range of mountains, among which Cruachan-Ben is preëminent. And to the northeast is the no less huge and picturesque range of the Ardnamurchan hills. Many ruinous castles, situated generally upon cliffs overhanging the ocean, add interest to the scene. Still passing on to the northward, Artornish and Arisa become visible upon the opposite shores; and, lastly, Mingarry, and other ruins of less distinguished note. In fine weather, a grander and more impressive scene, both from its natural beauties, and associations with ancient history and tradition, can hardly be imagined. When the weather is rough, the passage is both difficult and dangerous, from the narrowness of the channel, and in part from the number of inland lakes, out of which sail forth a number of conflicting and thwarting tides, making the navigation perilous to open boats. The sudden flaws and gusts of wind which issue without a moment's warning from the mountain glens, are equally formidable. So that in unsettled weather, a stranger, if so much accustomed to the sea, may sometimes add to the other sublime sensations excited by the scene, that feeling of dignity which arises from a sense of danger.

Line 181. Round twice a hundred islands rolled.

The number of the western Isles of Scotland exceeds two hundred, of which St. Kilda is the most northerly, anciently called Hirtli, or Hirt, probably from 'earth,' being in fact the whole globe to its inhabitants. Ray, which now be longs almost entirely to Walter Campbell, Esq., of Shawfield, is by far the most fertile of the Hebrides, and has been greatly improved under the spirited and sagacious management of the present proprietor. This was in ancient times the principal abode of the Lords of the Isles, being, if not the largest, the most important island of their archipelago.

Line 188. From where Mingarry sternly placed.

The castle of Mingarry is situated on the sea-coast of the district of Ardnamurchan. The ruins, which are tolerably entire, are surrounded by a very high wall, forming a kind of polygon, for the purpose of adapting itself to the projecting angles of a precipice overhanging the sea, on which the castle stands. It was anciently the residence of the MacIans, a clan of MacDonalds, descended from Ian, or John, a grandson of Angus Og, Lord of the Isles.

Page 316, line 197. The heir of mighty Somerled?

Somerled was thane of Argyre and Lord of the Isles, about the middle of the twelfth century. He seems to have exercised his authority in both capacities, independent of the crown of Scotland, against which he often stood in hostility. He made various incursions upon the western lowlands during the reign of Malcolm IV., and seems to have made peace with him upon the terms of an independent prince, about the year 1157. In 1164 he resumed the war against Malcolm, and invaded Scotland with a large but probably a tumultuary army, collected in the Isles, in the mainland of Argyre, and in the neighboring provinces of Ireland. He was defeated and slain in an engagement with a very inferior force, near Renfrew.

Line 200. Lord of the Isles, whose lofty name.

The representative of this independent principality—for such it seems to have been, though acknowledging occasionally the preëminence of the Scottish crown—was, at the period of the poem, Angus, called Angus Og; but the name has been, euphonia gratia, exchanged for that of Ronald, which frequently occurs in the genealogy. Angus was a protector of Robert Bruce, whom he received in his castle of Dunaverty, during the time of his greatest distress.

Line 267. A daughter of the House of Lorn.

The House of Lorn was, like the Lord of the Isles, descended from a son of Somerled, slain at Renfrew, in 1164. This son obtained the succession of his mainland territories, comprehending the greater part of the three districts of Lorn, in Argyre, and of course might rather be considered as petty prince than feudal barons. They assumed the patronymic appellation of MacDougal, by which they are distinguished in the history of the middle ages. The Lord of Lorn, who flourished during the wars of Bruce, was Allaster (or Alexander) MacDougal called Allaster of Argyre. He had married the third daughter of John, called the Red Comyn, who was slain by Bruce in the Dominican church at Dumfries, and hence he was a mortal enemy of that prince, and more than once reduced him to great straits during the early and distressed period of his reign, as we shall have repeated occasion to notice. Bruce, when he began to obtain an ascendancy in Scotland, took the first opportunity in his power to requite these injuries. He marched into Argyre to lay waste the country. John of Lorn, son of the chieftain, was posted with his followers in the formidable pass between Dalnally and Bannaw. It is a narrow path along the verge of the huge and precipitous mountain, called Cruncheon-Ben, and guarded on the other side by a precipice overhanging Loch Awe. The pass seems to the eye of a soldier as strong, as it is wild and romantic to that of an ordinary traveller. But the skill of Bruce had anticipated this difficulty. While his main body, engaged in a skirmish with the men of Lorn, detained their attention to the front of their position, James of Douglas, with Sir Alexander Fraser, Sir William Wiseman, and Sir Andrew Grey, ascended the mountain with a select body of archery, and obtained possession of the heights which commanded the pass. A volley of arrows descending upon them directly warned the Argyre men of their perilous situation, and their resistance, which had hitherto been bold and manly, was changed into a precipitate flight. The deep and rapid river of Awe was then (we learn the fact from Barbour with some surprise) crossed by a bridge. This bridge the mountaineers attempted to demolish, but Bruce's followers were too close upon their rear; they were, therefore, without refuge and defence, and were dispersed with great slaughter. John of Lorn, suspicious of the event, had early betaken himself to the galleys which he had upon the lake; but the feelings which Barbour assigns to him, while witnessing the rout and slaughter of his followers, exculpate him from the charge of cowardice.

Page 318, line 451. The mimic fires of ocean glow.

The phenomenon called by sailors Sea-fire is one of the most beautiful and interesting which is witnessed in the Hebrides. At times the ocean appears entirely illuminated around the vessel, and a long train of luminous conceptions are perpetually bursting upon the sides of the vessel, or pursuing her wake through the darkness.

Page 319, line 499. Sought the dark fortress by a stair.

The fortress of a Hebridean chief was almost always on the sea-shore, for the facility of communication which the ocean afforded. Nothing can be more wild than the situations which they chose, and the devices by which the architects endeavored to defend them. Narrow stairs and arched vaults were the usual mode of access; and the drawbridge appears at Dunstaffnage, and elsewhere, to have fallen from the gate of the building to the top of such a staircase; so that any one advancing with hostile purpose, found himself in a state of exposed and precarious elevation, with a gulf between him and the object of his attack.

Page 321, line 37. And that keen knight, De Argentine.

Sir Egidius, or Giles de Argentine, was one of the most accomplished knights of the period. He had served in the wars of Henry of Luxemburg with such high reputation that he was, in popular estimation, the third worthy of the age. Those to whom fame assigned precedence over him were, Henry of Luxemburg himself, and Robert Bruce. Argentine had warred in Palestine, encountered thrice with the Saracens, and had slain two antagonists in each engagement: an easy matter, he said, for one Christian knight to slay two Pagan dogs. His death corresponded with his high character. With Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, he was appointed to attend immediately upon the person of Edward II. at Bannockburn. When the day was utterly lost they forced the king from the field. De Argentine saw the king safe from immediate danger, and then took his leave of him, 'God be with you, sir,' he said, 'it is not my wont to fly.' So saying, he turned his horse, cried his war-cry, plunged into the midst of the combatants, and was slain.

Line 54. 'Fill me the mighty cup,' he said.

A Hebridean drinking-cup, of the most ancient and curious workmanship, has been long preserved in the castle of Dunvegan, in Skye, the romantic seat of MacLeod of MacLeod, the chieftain of that ancient and powerful clan. This very curious piece of antiquity is nine inches and three quarters in inside depth, and ten and a half in height on the outside, the extreme measure over the lips being four inches and a half. The cup is divided into two parts by a wrought ledge, beautifully ornamented, about three fourths of an inch in breadth. Beneath this ledge the shape of the cup is rounded off, and terminates in a flat circle, like that of a teacup; four short feet support the whole. Above the projecting ledge the shape of the cup is nearly square, projecting outward at the brim. The cup is made of wood, oak to all appearance, but most curiously wrought and embossed with silver work, which projects from the vessel. There are a number of regular projecting sockets, which appear to have been set with stones; two or three of them still hold pieces of coral, the rest are empty. At the four corners of the projecting ledge, or cornice, are four sockets, much larger, probably for pebbles or precious stones. The workmanship of the silver is extremely elegant, and appears to have been highly gilded. The ledge brim and legs of the cup are of silver.

Page 322, line 150. With Carrick's outlawed Chief.

It must be remembered by all who have read Scottish history, that after he had slain Comyn at Dumfries, and asserted his right to the Scottish crown, Robert Bruce was reduced to the greatest extremity by the English and their adherents. He was crowned at Scone by the general consent of the Scottish barons, but his authority endured but a short time. According to the phrase said to have been used by his wife, he was for that year 'a summer king, but not a winter one.'

Line 180. Whence the brooch of burning gold

Robert Bruce, after his defeat at Methven, being hard pressed by the English, endeavored, with the dispirited remnant of his followers, to escape from Breadalbane and the mountains of Perthshire into the Argyllshire Highlands. But he was encountered and repulsed, after a very severe engagement, by the Lord of Lorn. Bruce's personal strength and courage were never displayed to greater advantage than in this conflict. There is a tradition in the family of the MacDonnells of Lorn, that their chieftain engaged in personal battle with Bruce himself, while the latter was employed in protecting the retreat of his men; that MacDonnell was struck down by the king, whose strength of body was equal to his vigor of mind, and would have been slain on the spot, had not two of Lorn's vassals, a father and son, whom tradition terms MacKeech, rescued him, by seizing the mantle of the monarch, and dragging him from above his adversary. Bruce rid himself of these foes by two blows of his redoubtable battle-axe, but was so closely pressed by the other followers of Lorn, that he was forced to abandon the mantle, and brooch which fastened it, clasped in the dying grasp of the MacKeechs. A studded brooch, said to have been that which King Robert lost upon this occasion, was long preserved in the family of MacDonnell, and was lost in a fire which consumed their temporary residence.

Page 323, line 212. Vain was then the Douglas brand.

The gallant Sir James, called the Good Lord Douglas, the most faithful and valiant of Bruce's adherents, was wounded at the battle of Bannockburn. Sir Nigel, or Neil Campbell, was also in that unfortunate skirmish. He married Marjorie, sister to Robert Bruce, and was among his most faithful followers.

Line 214. Vain Kirkpatrick's bloody deed.

The proximate cause of Bruce's asserting his right to the crown of Scotland was the death of John, called the Red Comyn. (See canto i. st. 27.) The causes of this act of violence, equally extraordinary from the high rank both of the perpetrator and sufferer, and from the place where the slaughter was committed, are variously related by the Scottish and English historians, and cannot now be ascertained. The fact that they met at the high altar of the Minorites, or Greyfriars Church in Dumfries, that their difference broke out into high and insulting language, and that Bruce drew his dagger and stabbed Comyn, is certain. Rushing to the door of the church, Bruce met two powerful barons, Kirkpatrick of Closeburn, and James de Lindsay, who eagerly asked him what tidings? 'Bad tidings,' answered Bruce: 'I doubt I have slain Comyn.' — 'Doubtest thou?' said Kirkpatrick: 'I make sicker' (i. e. sure). With these words, he and Lindsay rushed into

, and despatched the wounded Comyn. patrieks of Closeburn assumed, in this deed, a hand holding a dagger, memorable words, 'I make sickler' re'.

Barendown fled fast away,
ights are enumerated by Barbour
small number of Bruce's adherents,
ed in arms with him after the battle

To praise the hand that pays thy acter of the Highland bards, hown an earlier period of society, seems ve degenerated. The Irish affirm ir kindred tribes severe laws became to restrain their avarice. In the they seem gradually to have sunk apt, as well as the orators, or men with whose office that of family poet united. — 'The orators, in their land Isdane, were in high esteem both ands and the continent; until within ' years, they sat always among the chiefs of families in the steeple, or oir houses and little villages were as well as churches, and they took re doctors of physick. The orators, ruids were extinct, were brought in e the genealogy of families, and to same at every succession of chiefs;

he occasion of marriages and births,
epithalamiums and panegyrics, poet or bard pronounced. The the force of their eloquence, had a ccendant over the greatest men in
; for if any orator did but ask the a, horse, or any other thing belong-greatest man in these islands, it y granted them, sometimes out of id sometimes for fear of being ex-ainst by a satire, which, in those reckoned a great dishonor. But lemen becoming insolent, lost ever the profit and esteem which was lue to their character; for neither yrics nor satires are regarded to have been, and they are now allowed l salary. I must not omit to relate of study, which is very singular:
their doors and windows for a day's ne on their backs, with a stone upon and plads about their heads, and being covered, they pump their rhetorical encomium or panegyrick;
they furnish such a style from this a is understood by very few; and if ase a couple of horses as the reward edication, they think they have done
ter. The poet, or bard, had a title degroom's upper garb, that is, the monet; but now he is satisfied with bridegroom pleases to give him on ions.' — Martin's Western Isles.

Line 459. Was 't not enough to Ro- fr.

aciently customary in the Highlands to bring the bride to the house of the husband. Nay, in some cases the complaisance was stretched so far that she remained there upon trial for a twelvemonth; and the bridegroom, even after this period, retained an option of refusing to fulfil his engagement.

Line 477. Since matchless Wallace first had been.

There is something singularly doubtful about the mode in which Wallace was taken. 'That he was betrayed to the English is indubitable; and popular fame charges Sir John Menteith with the indelible infamy. 'Accursed,' says Arnold Blair, 'be the day of nativity of John de Menteith, and may his name be struck out of the book of life.' But John de Menteith was all along a zealous favorer of the English interest, and was governor of Dunbarton Castle by commission from Edward the First; and therefore, as the accurate Lord Hailes has observed, could not be the friend and confidant of Wallace, as tradition states him to be. The truth seems to be that Menteith, thoroughly engaged in the English interest, pursued Wallace closely, and made him prisoner through the treachery of an attendant, whom Peter Langtoft calls Jack Short.

Line 481. Where's Nigel Bruce? and De la Haye?

When these lines were written, the author was remote from the means of correcting his indistinct recollection concerning the individual fate of Bruce's followers, after the battle of Methven. Hugh de la Haye, and Thomas Somerville of Lintoun and Cowdall, ancestor of Lord Somerville, were both made prisoners at that defeat, but neither was executed.

Sir Nigel Bruce was the younger brother of Robert, to whom he committed the charge of his wife and daughter, Marjorie, and the defence of his strong castle of Kildrummie, near the head of the Don, in Aberdeenshire. Kildrummie long resisted the arms of the Earls of Lancaster and Hereford, until the magazine was treacherously burnt. The garrison was then compelled to surrender at discretion, and Nigel Bruce, a youth remarkable for personal beauty, as well as for gallantry, fell into the hands of the unrelenting Edward. He was tried by a special commission at Berwick, was condemned, and executed.

Christopher Seaton shared the same unfortunate fate. He also was distinguished by personal valor, and signalized himself in the fatal battle of Methven. Robert Bruce adventured his person in that battle like a knight of romance. He dismounted Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, but was in his turn dismounted by Sir Philip Mowbray. In this emergency Seaton came to his aid, and remounted him. Langtoft mentions, that in this battle the Scottish wore white surplises, or shirts, over their armor, that those of rank might not be known. In this manner both Bruce and Seaton escaped. But the latter was afterwards betrayed to the English, through means, according to Barbour, of one MacNab,

'a disciple of Judas,' in whom the unfortunate knight reposed entire confidence. There was some peculiarity respecting his punishment; because, according to Matthew of Westminster, he was considered not as a Scottish subject, but an Englishman. He was therefore taken to Dumfries, where he was tried, condemned, and executed, for the murder of a soldier slain by him. His brother, John de Seton, had the same fate at Newcastle; both were considered as accomplices in the slaughter of Comyn; but in what manner they were particularly accessory to that deed does not appear.

The fate of Sir Simon Fraser, or Friszel, ancestor of the family of Lovat, is dwelt upon at great length, and with savage exultation, by the English historians. This knight, who was renowned for personal gallantry, and high deeds of chivalry, was also made prisoner, after a gallant defence, in the battle of Methven.

Line 431. Was not the life of Athol's shed.

John de Strathbogie, Earl of Athole, had attempted to escape out of the kingdom, but a storm cast him upon the coast, when he was taken, sent to London, and executed, with circumstances of great barbarity, being first half strangled, then let down from the gallows while yet alive, barbarously dismembered, and his body burnt. It may surprise the reader to learn that this was a mitigated punishment; for in respect that his mother was a granddaughter of King John, by his natural son Richard, he was not drawn on a sledge to execution, 'that point was forgiven,' and he made the passage on horseback. Matthew of Westminster tells us that King Edward, then extremely ill, received great ease from the news that his relative was apprehended. 'Quo audito, Rex Anglie, cetera gravissimo morbo tunc laquearet, lenius tamen tunc dolorem.' To this singular expression the text alludes.

Line 434. Be sought but quarter, hang, and slay!

This alludes to a passage in Barbour, singularly expressive of the vindictive spirit of Edward I. The prisoners taken at the castle of Kildrummie had surrendered upon condition that they should be at King Edward's disposal. 'But his will,' says Barbour, 'was always evil toward Scottishmen.' The news of the surrender of Kildrummie arrived when he was in his mortal sickness at Burgh-upon-Sands.

Page 228, line 300. By Woden wuld — my grandame's oath.

The MacLeods, and most other distinguished Hebridean families, were of Scandinavian extraction, and some were late or imperfect converts to Christianity. The family names of Torquil, Thormod, &c. are all Norwegian.

Line 536. While I the blessed cross advance.

Bruce uniformly professed, and probably felt, compunction for having violated the sanctuary of the church by the slaughter of Comyn; and finally, in his last hours, in testimony of his faith, penitence, and zeal, he requested James Lord Douglas to carry his heart to Jerusalem, to be there deposited in the Holy Sepulchre.

Line 539. De Bruce! I rose with purpose dread.

So soon as the notice of Comyn's slaughter reached Rome, Bruce and his adherents were excommunicated. It was published first by the Archbishop of York, and renewed at different times, particularly by Lamberton, Bishop of St. Andrews, in 1308; but it does not appear to have answered the purpose which the English monarch expected. Indeed, for reasons which it may be difficult to trace, the thunders of Rome descended upon the Scottish mountains with less effect than in more fertile countries. Many of the Scottish prelates, Lamberton the primate particularly, declared for Bruce, while he was yet under the ban of the church, although he afterwards again changed sides.

Line 536. A power that will not be repressed.

Bruce, like other heroes, observed omens, and one is recorded by tradition. After he had retreated to one of the miserable places of shelter, in which he could venture to take some repose after his disasters, he lay stretched upon a handful of straw, and abandoned himself to his melancholy meditations. He had now been defeated four times, and was upon the point of resolving to abandon all hopes of further opposition to his fate, and to go to the Holy Land. It chanced his eye, while he was thus pondering, was attracted by the exertions of a spider, who, in order to fix his web, endeavored to swing himself from one beam to another above his head. Involuntarily he became interested in the pertinacity with which the insect renewed his exertions, after failing six times; and it occurred to him that he would decide his own course according to the success or failure of the spider. At the seventh effort the insect gained his object; and Bruce, in like manner, persevered and carried his. Hence it has been held unlucky or ungrateful, or both, in one of the names of Bruce to kill a spider.

Page 329, line 160. 'Alas! dear youth, the unhappy time.'

I have followed the vulgar and inaccurate tradition, that Bruce fought against Wallace and the array of Scotland, at the fatal battle of Falkirk. The story, which seems to have no better authority than that of Blind Harry, bears, that having made much slaughter during the engagement, he sat down to dine with the conquerors without washing the filthy weapons from his hands.

Page 330, line 243. These are the savage wilds that lie.

The extraordinary piece of scenery which I have here attempted to describe is, I think, unparalleled in any part of Scotland, at least in any which I have happened to visit. It lies just upon the frontier of the Laird of MacLeod's country, which is therabouts divided from the estate of Mr. Macdonister of Strath-Ard, called Strathardill by the Dean of the Isles. Scott gives a full account of his visit in his Journal under date of 23 August, 1814. See Lochnart, chap. xxxi.)

the western and eastern Loch of Tarbat. These two salt-water lakes, or bays, encroach so far upon the land, and the extremities come so near to each other, that there is not above a mile of land to divide them.

Line 326. Ben-Ghoil, 'the Mountain of the Wind.'

Loch Ranza is a beautiful bay, on the northern extremity of Arran, opening towards East, Tarbat Loch. Ben-Ghoil, 'the mountain of the winds,' is generally known by its English, and less poetical, name of Gnatfield.

Page 329, line 469. That blast was winded by the king.

The passage in Barbour describing the landing of Bruce, and his being recognized by Douglas and those of his followers who had preceded him, by the sound of his horn, is in the original singularly simple and affecting. — The king arrived in Arran with thirty-three small row-boats. He interrogated a female if there had arrived any warlike men of late in that country. 'Surely, sir,' she replied, 'I can tell you of many who lately came hither, discomfited the English governor, and blockaded his castle of Brodick. They maintain themselves in a wood at no great distance.' The king, truly conceiving that this must be Douglas and his followers, who had lately set forth to try their fortune in Arran, desired the woman to conduct him to the wood. She obeyed.

'The king then blew his horn on high;
And gert his men that were him by,
Hold them still, and all privy;
And syne again his horn blew he,
James of Dowglas heard him blow,
And at the last alone gan know,
And said, "Sweetly you is the king;
I know long while since his blowing."
The third time therewithall he blew,
And then Sir Robert Rood it knew,
And said, "You is the king, but dread,
Go ye forth till him, better speed."
Then went they till the king in bye,
And him inclined courteously,
And blithly welcomed them the king,
And was joyful of their meeting,
And kissed them, and speared syne
How they had fared in hunting?
And they him told all, but leing,
Syne laud they God of their meeting,
Syne with the king till his harbourye
Went both joyfu' and jolly.'

BARBOUR'S BRUCE, Book v. pp. 115, 116.

Page 340, line 325. *Blame ye the Bruce?
— His brother blamed.*

The kind and yet fiery character of Edward Bruce is well painted by Barbour, in the account of his behavior after the battle of Bannockburn. Sir Walter Ross, one of the very few Scottish nobles who fell in that battle, was so dearly beloved by Edward, that he wished the victory had been lost, so Ross had lived.

Page 342, line 682. Thou heard'st a wretched fellow plain.

This incident, which illustrates so happily the chivalrous generosity of Bruce's character, is one of the many simple and natural traits recorded by Barbour. It occurred during the expedition which Bruce made to Ireland, to support the pretensions of his brother Edward to the throne of that kingdom. Bruce was about to retreat, and his host was arrayed for moving.

Page 344, line 129. O'er chasms he passed where fractures wide.

The interior of the Island of Arran abounds with beautiful Highland scenery. The hills being very rocky and precipitous, afford some cataraacts of great height, though of inconsiderable breadth. There is one pass over the river Machrae, renowned for the dilemma of a poor woman, who, being tempted by the narrowness of the ravine to step across, succeeded in making the first movement, but took fright when it became necessary to move the other foot, and remained in a posture equally ludicrous and dangerous, until some chance passenger assisted her to extricate herself. It is said she remained there some hours.

Line 132. *Where Druids erst heard victims
groan.*

The Isle of Arran, like those of Man and Anglesea, abounds with many relics of heathen, and probably Druidical, superstition. There are high erect columns of unhewn stone, circles of rude stones, and cairns, or sepulchral piles, within which are usually found urns enclosing ashes.

Line 143. Old Brodick's Gothic towers were seen.

Brodick or Brathwick Castle, in the Isle of Arran, is an ancient fortress, near an open roadstead called Brodick-Bay, and not far distant from a tolerable harbor, closed in by the Island of Lamlash. This important place had been assailed a short time before Bruce's arrival in the island. James Lord Douglas, who accompanied Bruce to his retreat in Rachine, seems, in the spring of 1306, to have tired of his abode there, and set out accordingly, in the phrase of the times, to see what adventure God would send him. Sir Robert Boyd accompanied him; and his knowledge of the localities of Arran appears to have directed his course thither. They landed in the island privately, and appear to have laid an ambush for Sir John Hastings, the English governor of Brodwick, and surprised a considerable supply of arms and provisions, and nearly took the castle itself. Indeed, that they actually did so, has been generally averred by historians, although it does not appear from the narrative of Barbour. On the contrary, it would seem that they took shelter within a fortification of the ancient inhabitants, a rampart called Tor an Schian. When they were joined by Bruce, it seems probable that they had gained Brodick Castle. At least tradition says, that from the battlements of the tower he saw the supposed signal-fire on Tarnberry-moak.

Page 345, line 171. *A language such unmet
he hears.*

Barbour, with great simplicity, gives an accu-dote, from which it would seem that the vice of profane swearing, afterwards too general among the Scottish nation, was, at this time, confined to military men. As Douglas, after Bruce's return to Scotland, was roving about the mountainous country of Tweeddale, near the water of Line, he chanced to hear some persons in a farmhouse say 'the devil.' Concluding, from this hardy expression, that the house contained war-like guests, he immediately assailed it, and had the good fortune to make prisoners Thomas Randolph, afterwards the famous Earl of Murray, and Alexander Stuart, Lord Bonkle. Both were then in the English interest, and had come into that country with the purpose of driving out Douglas. They afterwards ranked among Bruce's most zealous adherents.

Page 347, line 425. Now ask you whence that wondrous light.

The only tradition now remembered of the landing of Robert the Bruce in Carrick, relates to the fire seen by him from the Isle of Arran. It is still generally reported, and religiously believed by many, that this fire was really the work of supernatural power, unassisted by the hand of any mortal being; and it is said that for several centuries the flame rose yearly on the same hour of the same night of the year on which the king first saw it from the turrets of Brodick Castle; and some go so far as to say that if the exact time were known, it would be still seen. That this superstitious notion is very ancient, is evident from the place where the fire is said to have appeared, being called the Bogles' Brae, beyond the remembrance of man. In support of this curious belief, it is said that the practice of burning heath for the improvement of land was then unknown; that a spunkie [Jack o'lanthorn] could not have been seen across the breadth of the Forth of Clyde, between Ayrshire and Arran; and that the courier of Bruce was his kinsman, and never suspected of treachery. — Letter from Mr. Joseph Train of Newton Stuart.

Page 348, line 471. And from the castle's distant wall.

The castle of Turnberry, on the coast of Ayrshire, was the property of Robert Bruce, in right of his mother. Lord Hailes mentions the following remarkable circumstance concerning the mode in which he became proprietor of it: 'Martha, Countess of Carrick in her own right, the wife of Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, bore him a son, afterwards Robert I. (11 July, 1274). The circumstances of her marriage were singular; happening to meet Robert Bruce in her domains, she became enamored of him, and with some violence led him to her castle of Turnberry. A few days after she married him, without the knowledge of the relations of either party, and without the requisite consent of the king. The king instantly seized her castle and whole estates. She afterwards atoned by a fine for her feudal delinquency. Little did Alexander foresee that, from this union, the restorer of the Scottish monarchy was to arise.' — Annals of Scotland, ii. 180.

Page 351, line 779. The Bruce hath won his father's hall!

I have followed the flattering and pleasing tradition, that the Bruce, after his descent upon the coast of Ayrshire, actually gained possession of his maternal castle. But the tradition is not accurate. The fact is, that he was only strong enough to alarm and drive in the outposts of the English garrison, then commanded, not by Clifford, as assumed in the text, but by Percy. Neither was Clifford slain upon this occasion, though he had several skirmishes with Bruce. He fell afterwards in the battle of Bannockburn. Bruce, after alarming the castle of Turnberry, and surprising some part of the garrison, who were quartered without the walls of the fortress, retreated into the mountainous part of Carrick, and there made himself so strong that the English were obliged to evacuate Turnberry, and at length the castle of Ayr.

Line 788. 'Bring here,' he said, 'the mazars four.'

These mazars were large drinking-cups, or goblets.

Line 815. Arouse old friends and gather new.

As soon as it was known in Kyle, says ancient tradition, that Robert Bruce had landed in Carrick, with the intention of recovering the crown of Scotland, the Laird of Craigie, and forty-eight men in his immediate neighborhood, declared in favor of their legitimate prince.

Line 818. Let Ettrick's archers sharp their darts.

The forest of Selkirk, or Ettrick, at this period, occupied all the district which retains that denomination, and embraced the neighboring dales of Tweeddale, and at least the upper ward of Clydesdale.

Page 352, line 21. When Bruce's banner had victorious flowed.

The first important advantage gained by Bruce, after landing at Turnberry, was over Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, the same by whom he had been defeated near Methven. They met, as has been said, by appointment, at Loudounhill, in the west of Scotland. Pembroke sustained a defeat; and from that time Bruce was at the head of a considerable flying army. Yet he was subsequently obliged to retreat into Aberdeenshire, and was there assailed by Comyn, Earl of Buchan, desirous to avenge the death of his relative, the Red Comyn, and supported by a body of English troops under Philip de Moubray. Bruce was ill at the time of a scrofulous disorder, but took horse to meet his enemies, although obliged to be supported on either side. He was victorious, and it is said that the agitation of his spirits restored his health.

Line 23. When English blood oft deluged Douglasdale.

The 'good Lord James of Douglas,' during these commotions, often took from the English his own castle of Douglas; but being unable to garrison it, contented himself with destroying the fortifications and retiring into the mountains. As a reward to his patriotism, it is said to have been prophesied that how often soever Douglas's castle should be destroyed, it should always again arise more magnificent from its ruins. Upon one of these occasions he used fearful cruelty, causing all the stores of provisions which the English had laid up in his castle, to be heaped together, bursting the wine and beer casks among the wheat and flour, slaughtering the cattle upon the same spot, and upon the top of the whole cutting the throats of the English prisoners. This plebeianry of the good Lord James' is commemorated under the name of the Douglas's Larder.

Line 24. And sleep Edward routed about Saint John.

John de Saint John, with 15,000 horsemen, had advanced to oppose the march of the Scots. By a forced march he endeavored to surprise them; but intelligence of his motions was timely received. The courage of Edward Bruce, approaching to temerity, frequently enabled him to achieve what men of more judicious valor would never have attempted. He ordered the infantry, and the heavier sort of his army, to encrouch themselves in strong narrow ground. He himself, with fifty horsemen well harnessed, issued forth under cover of a thick mist, surprised the English on their march, attacked and dispersed them. — Dunlavin's Annals of Scotland.

Line 5. When Randalph's war-ry swelled the southern gale.

Thomas Randalph, Bruce's sister's son, a renowned Scottish chief, was in the early part of his life not more remarkable for consistency than Bruce himself. He espoused his uncle's party when Bruce first assumed the crown, and was made prisoner at the fatal battle of Methven, in which his relative's hopes appeared to be ruined. Randalph accordingly not only submitted to the English, but took an active part against Bruce; appeared in arms against him; and in the skirmish where he was so closely pursued by the bloodhound it is said his nephew took his standard with his own hand. But Randalph was afterwards made prisoner by Douglas in Tweeddale, and brought before King Robert. Some harsh language was exchanged between the uncle and nephew, and the latter was committed for a time to close custody. Afterwards, however, they were reconciled, and Randalph was created Earl of Moray about 1332. After this period he eminently distinguished himself, first by the surprise of Edinburgh Castle, and afterwards by many similar enterprises, conducted with equal courage and ability.

Line 75. Northward of Tweed, but Stirling's towers

When a long train of success, actively improved by Robert Bruce, had made him master of almost all Scotland, Stirling Castle continued to hold out. The care of the blockade was committed by the king to his brother Edward, who concluded a treaty with Sir Philip Mowbray, the governor, that he should surrender the fortress, if it were not succored by the King of England before St. John the Baptist's day. The consequence was, of course, that each antagonist mustered its strength for the expected battle, and as the space agreed upon reached from Lent to Mohammed, full time was allowed for that purpose.

Line 85. And Comber, but of late outdone.

Edward the First, with the usual policy of a conqueror, employed the Welsh, whom he had subdued, to assist him in his Scottish wars, for which their habits, as mountaineers, particularly fitted them. But this policy was not without its risks. Previous to the battle of Falkirk the Welsh quarrelled with the English men-at-arms, and after bloodshed on both parts, separated themselves from his army, and the feud between them, at so dangerous and critical a juncture, was reconciled with difficulty. Edward II. followed his father's example in this particular, and with no better success. They could not be brought to exert themselves in the cause of their conquerors. But they had an indifference toward for their forbearance. Without arms, and clad only in scanty dresses of linen cloth, they appeared naked in the eyes even of the Scottish peasantry, and after the rout of Bannockburn were massacred by them in great numbers, as they retired in confusion towards their own country.

Line 97. And Connought poured from waste and wood.

There is in the Federer an invitation to Eth O'Connor, chief of the Irish of Connaught, setting forth that the king was about to move against his Scottish rebels, and therefore requesting the attendance of all the force he could muster, either commanded by himself in person, or by some nobleman of his race. These auxiliaries were to be commanded by Richard de Burgh, Earl of Ulster.

Page 354, line 220. Their chief, Fitz-Louis, had the care.

Fitz-Louis, or MacLouis, otherwise called Fullerton, is a family of ancient descent in the Isle of Arran. They are said to be of French origin, as the name intimates. They attached themselves to Bruce upon his first landing; and Fergus MacLouis, or Fullerton, received from the grateful monarch a charter, dated 26th November, in the second year of his reign, 1307, for the lands of Kilnichol, and others.

Line 258. Beneath their chieftains ranked their files.

The men of Argyle, the islanders, and the Highlanders in general, were ranked in the rear. They must have been numerous, for Bruce had reconciled himself with almost all their chieftains, excepting the obnoxious MacDougals of Lorn.

Page 355, line 309. The monarch rode along the van.

The English vanguard, commanded by the Earls of Gloucester and Hereford, came in sight of the Scottish army upon the evening of the 2d of June. Bruce was then riding upon a little palfrey, in front of his foremost line, putting his host in order. It was then that the persional encounter took place betwixt him and Sir Henry de Bohun, a gallant English knight, the issue of which had a great effect upon the spirits of both armies. The Scottish leaders remonstrated with the king upon his temerity. He only answered, 'I have broken my good battle-axe.' The English vanguard retreated after witnessing this single combat. Probably their generals did not think it advisable to hazard an attack while its unfavorable issue remained upon their minds.

Page 357, line 516. Pipe-clang and bugle-sound were tossed.

There is an old tradition, that the well-known Scottish tune of 'Hey, tutti tutti,' was Bruce's march at the battle of Bannockburn. The late Mr. Ritson, no grantor of propositions, doubts whether the Scots had any martial music, quotes Froissart's account of each soldier in the host bearing a little horn, on which, at the onset, they would make such a horrible noise, as if all the devils of hell had been among them. He observes that these horns are the only music mentioned by Barbour, and concludes that it must remain a moot point whether Bruce's army were cheered by the sound even of a solitary bagpipe.

Line 552. See where yon barefoot abbot stands.

Maurice, Abbot of Inchaffray, placing himself on an eminence, celebrated mass in sight of the Scottish army. He then passed along the front barefooted, and bearing a crucifix in his hands, and exhorting the Scots, in few and forcible words, to combat for their rights and their liberty. The Scots knelt down. "They yield," cried Edward; "see, they implore mercy."—"They do," answered Ingelram de Umfraville, "but not ours. On that field they will be victorious, or die."—Annals of Scotland, vol. ii. p. 47.

Line 593. Forth, Marshal, on the peasant for!

The English archers commenced the attack with their usual bravery and dexterity. But against a force, whose importance he had learned by fatal experience, Bruce was provided. A small but select body of cavalry were detached from the right, under command of Sir Robert Keith. They rounded, as I conceive, the marsh called Milntown bog, and, keeping the firm ground, charged the left flank and rear of the English archers. As the bowmen had no spears nor long weapons fit to defend themselves against horse, they were instantly thrown into disorder, and spread through the whole English army a confusion from which they never fairly recovered.

Page 358, line 627. Twelve Scottish lives his baldric bore!

Roger Ascham quotes a similar Scottish proverb, 'whereby they give the whole praise of shooting honestly to Englishmen, saying thus, "that every English archer beareth under his girdle twenty-four Scotches." Indeed, Toxophilus says before, and truly of the Scottish nation, "The Scotches surely be good men of warre in theyre owne feates as can be; but as for shoot-inge, they can neither use it to any profite, nor yet challenge it for any praise."

Line 646. Down! down! in headlong overthrow.

It is generally alleged by historians, that the English men-at-arms fell into the hidden snare which Bruce had prepared for them. Barbour does not mention the circumstance. According to his account, Randolph, seeing the slaughter made by the cavalry on the right wing among the archers, advanced courageously against the main body of the English, and entered into close combat with them. Douglas and Stuart, who commanded the Scottish centre, led their division also to the charge, and the battle becoming general along the whole line, was obstinately maintained on both sides for a long space of time; the Scottish archers doing great execution among the English men-at-arms, after the bowmen of England were dispersed.

Line 656. And steeds that shriek in agony!

I have been told that this line requires an explanatory note; and, indeed, those who witness the silent patience with which horses submit to the most cruel usage, may be permitted to doubt that in moments of sudden and intolerable anguish, they utter a most melancholy cry. Lord Erskine, in a speech made in the House of Lords, upon a bill for enforcing humanity towards animals, noticed this remarkable fact, in language which I will not mutilate by attempting to repeat it. It was my fortune, upon one occasion, to hear a horse, in a moment of agony, utter a thrilling scream, which I still consider the most melancholy sound I ever heard.

Page 359, line 739. Lord of the Isles, my trust in thee.

When the engagement between the main bodies had lasted some time, Bruce made a decisive movement by bringing up the Scottish reserve. It is traditionally said that at this crisis he addressed the Lord of the Isles in a phrase used as a motto by some of his descendants, 'My trust is constant in thee.'

Page 360, line 797. To arms they flew, — axe, club, or spear.

The followers of the Scottish camp observed, from the Gillies' Hill in the rear, the impression produced upon the English army by the bringing up of the Scottish reserve, and, prompted by the enthusiasm of the moment, or the desire of plunder, assumed, in a tumultuary manner, such arms as they found nearest, fastened sheets to tent-poles and lances, and showed themselves like a new army advancing to battle. The unexpected apparition of what seemed a new army completed the confusion which already prevailed among the English, who fled in every direction, and were pursued with immense slaughter. The brook of Bannock, according to Barbour, was so choked with the bodies of men and horses that it might have been passed dry-shod.

Line 808. O, give their hapless prince his due!

Edward II., according to the best authorities, showed, in the fatal field of Bannockburn, personal gallantry not unworthy of his great sire and greater son. He remained on the field till forced away by the Earl of Pembroke, when all was lost. He then rode to the Castle of Stirling, and demanded admittance; but the governor, remonstrating upon the imprudence of shutting himself up in that fortress, which must so soon surrender, he assembled around his person five hundred men-at-arms, and, avoiding the field of battle and the victorious army, fled towards Linlithgow, pursued by Douglas with about sixty horse. They were augmented by Sir Lawrence Abernethy with twenty more, whom Douglas met in the Torwood upon their way to join the English army, and whom he easily persuaded to desert the defeated monarch, and to assist in the pursuit. They hung upon Edward's flight as far as Dunbar, too few in number to assail him with effect, but enough to harass his retreat so constantly, that whoever fell an instant behind, was instantly slain, or made prisoner. Edward's ignominious flight terminated at Dunbar, where the Earl of March, who still professed allegiance to him, received him full gently. From thence, the monarch of so great an empire, and the late commander of so gallant and numerous an army, escaped to Bamberough in a fishing vessel.

THE FIELD OF WATERLOO.

Page 565, line 31. Plies the hooked staff and shortened scythe.

The reaper in Flanders carries in his left hand a stick with an iron hook, with which he collects as much grain as he can cut at one sweep with a short scythe, which he holds in his right hand. They carry on this double process with great spirit and dexterity.

Page 564, line 71. A stranger might reply.

[On the margin of the proof sheets submitted by Ballantyne and preserved by him appeared the following:—

'James. — My objection to this is probably fantastical, and I state it only because, from the first moment to the last, it has always made me boggle. I don't like a stranger — Query, "the questioned," — "the spectator" — "gazer," etc.

'Scott. — Stranger is appropriate — it means stranger to the circumstances.'

Line 113. Her garner-house profound.

'James. — You had changed "garner-house profound," which I think quite admirable, to "garner under ground" which I think quite otherwise. I have presumed not to make the change — must I?

'Scott. — I acquiesce, but with doubts: profound sounds affected.'

Page 565, line 155. Pale Brussels! then what thoughts were thine.

It was affirmed by the prisoners of war that Bonaparte had promised his army, in case of victory, twenty-four hours' plunder of the city of Brussels.

Line 177. 'On! On!' was still his stern exclaim.

The characteristic obstinacy of Napoleon was never more fully displayed than in what we may be permitted to hope will prove the last of his fields. He would listen to no advice, and alas of no obstacles. An eyewitness has given the following account of his demeanor towards the end of the action:—

'It was near seven o'clock; Bonaparte, who till then had remained upon the ridge of the hill whence he could best behold what passed, contemplated with a stern countenance the scene of this horrible slaughter. The more that obstacles seemed to multiply, the more his obstinacy seemed to increase. He became indignant at these unforeseen difficulties; and, far from fearing to push to extremities an army whose confidence in him was boundless, he ceased not to pour down fresh troops, and to give orders to march forward — to charge with the bayonet — to carry by storm. He was repeatedly informed, from different points, that the day went against him, and that the troops seemed to be disordered; to which he only replied, "En-avant! En-avant!"'

Line 187. The fate their leader shunned to share.

It has been reported that Bonaparte charged at the head of his guards, at the last period of this dreadful conflict. This, however, is not accurate. He came down, indeed, to a hollow part of the high-road leading to Charleroi, within less than a quarter of a mile of the farm of La Haye Sainte, one of the points most fiercely disputed. Here he harangued the guards, and informed them that his preceding operations had destroyed the British infantry and cavalry, and that they had only to support the fire of the artillery, which they were to attack with the bayonet. This exhortation was received with shouts of Vive l'Empereur, which were heard over all our line, and led to an idea that Napoleon was charging in person. But the guards were led on by Ney, nor did Bonaparte approach nearer the scene of action than the spot already mentioned, which the rising banks on each side rendered secure from all such balls as did not come in a straight line.

Line 194. England shall tell the fight!

In riding up to a regiment which was hard pressed, the duke called to the men, 'Soldiers, we must never be beat, — what will they say in England?' It is needless to say how this appeal was answered.

Page 566, line 241. As plies the smith his clanging trade.

A private soldier of the 95th regiment compared the sound which took place immediately upon the British cavalry mingling with those of the enemy, to 'a thousand tinkers at work mending pots and kettles.'

Line 255. As their own ocean-rocks hold stance.

[In the marginal notes, John Ballantyne writes: 'I do not know such an English word as stance,' and Scott rejoins, 'Then we'll make it one for the nonce.'

Page 568, line 440. Period of honor as of woe.

[Sir Thomas Picton, Sir William Ponsonby,

and Sir William de Lancey were among the lost. The last-named was married in the preceding April. Colonel Miller, when mortally wounded, desired to see the colors of the regiment once more ere he died. They were waved over his head, and the expiring officer declared himself satisfied. Colonel Cameron, of Fassiefern, so often distinguished in Lord Wellington's despatches from Spain, fell in the action at Quatre Bras (16th June, 1815), while leading the 22d or Gordon Highlanders, to charge a body of cavalry supported by infantry. Colonel Alexander Gordon fell by the side of his chief.]

Line 446. Redoubled Picton's soul of fire.
[James. — From long association, this epithet strikes me as conveying a semi-ludicrous idea.
Scott. — It is here appropriate, and your objection seems merely personal to your own association.]

HAROLD THE DAUNTLESS.

Page 381, line 8. Some reverend room, some prebendary's stall.

[It is possible that in these introductory lines, Scott did have a half sly purpose of throwing readers off the scent as to the authorship of the poem. Nobody would suspect Scott of such dreams, though the sentiment might easily have been attached to Erskine, a son of an Episcopal clergyman, and by his temper and predilections, quite likely to entertain such hopes.]

Line 14. There might I share my Surtees' happier lot.

[Robert Surtees of Mainsforth. A Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and author of The History and Antiquities of the County Palatine of Durham. He was an early and dear friend of Scott's. A club for the publication of documents connected with the history of the English border was formed, named The Surtees Club.]

Page 385, line 27. And such — if fame speak truth — the honored Barrington.

[Shute Barrington, Bishop of Durham, was a friend of Scott's. The lives of Bishops Matthew and Morton are recorded by Surtees in his History of the Bishopric of Durham.]

Page 398, line 380. A tale six cantos long, yet scorned to add a note.

[Scott here gives a sly dig at the Scott, whose name was not attached to Harold the Dauntless, and whose predilection for notes was well known.]

THE NORMAN HORSE-SHOE.

Page 398, line 14. In crimson light on Rymny's stream.

Rymny is a stream which divides the counties of Monmouth and Glamorgan. Caerphili, the scene of the supposed battle, is a vale upon its banks, dignified by the ruins of a very ancient castle.

THE POACHER.

Page 407, line 62. On the bleak coast of frost-barred Labrador.

Such is the law in the New Forest, Hampshire, tending greatly to increase the various settlements of thieves, smugglers, and deer-stealers, who infest it. In the forest courts the presiding judge wears as a badge of office an antique stirrup, said to have been that of William Rufus. See Mr. William Rose's spirited poem, entitled 'The Red King.'

Line 81. Yon cask holds moonlight, run when moon was none.

A cant term for smuggled spirits.

THE BOLD DRAGOON.

Page 408, line 14. And, as the devil leaves a house, they tumbled through the wall.

In their hasty evacuation of Campo Mayor, the French pulled down a part of the rampart, and marched out over the glacis.

LETTER IN VERSE.

Page 412, line 104. But spring, I'm informed, from the Scotts of Scotstarvet.

The Scotts of Scotstarvet, and other families of the name in Fife and elsewhere, claim no kindred with the great clan of the Border, and their armorial bearings are different.

SONG ON THE LIFTING OF THE BANNER OF THE HOUSE OF BUCCLEUCH.

Page 424, line 13. A stripling's weak hand to our revel has borne her.

[This was Scott's eldest son, Walter.]

THE RETURN TO ULSTER.

Page 426, line 20. Like a burst of the sun when the tempest is nigh.

In ancient Irish poetry, the standard of Fion, or Fingal, is called the Sun-burst, an epithet feebly rendered by the Sun-beam of Macpherson.

THE SEARCH AFTER HAPPINESS.

Page 434, line 239. The work too little and the pay too much.

See the True-Born Englishman, by Daniel Defoe.

EPILOGUE TO 'THE APPEAL.'

Page 439, line 10. Since the New Jail became our next-door neighbor.

It is necessary to mention, that the allusions in this piece are all local, and addressed only to the Edinburgh audience. The new prisons of the city, on the Calton Hill, are not far from the theatre.

Line 22. With the tempestuous question, Up or down?

At this time, the public of Edinburgh was much agitated by a lawsuit betwixt the magistrates and many of the inhabitants of the city, concerning a range of new buildings on the western side of the North Bridge, which the latter insisted should be removed as a deformity.

THE BATTLE OF SEMPAICH.

Page 442, line 27. The Switzer priest has ta'en the field.

All the Scotch clergy who were able to hear were brought in and passed war [and the] Myg [and] [and] [and] [and]

This seems to allude to the propensities of the people during the middle ages of wearing tears and the points or peaks turned upwards, and as only that in some cases they were fastened to the ends of the beards with small chains.
When they aligned to fight upon that it would mean that the Austrian pentamen found it necessary to cut off these peaks that they might move with the necessary activity

THE SCOTCH MORRINGER

Page 141. The original of these verses occurs in a collection of German popular songs, entitled Deutsches Volkslieder, Berlin, 1807, published by Meissner, Baumbach and Von der Hagen, both, and more especially the last distinguished for their acquaintance with the most popular poetry and legendary history of Germany.

In the German editor's notice of the ballad
it is stated to have been extracted from a manuscript of Nicolaus Thomann, chaplain to Saint Leonard in Wismar, which bears the date 1500, and the song is stated by the author to have been generally sung in the north bordered at that early period. Thomann, as quoted by the German editor, seems faithfully to have believed the event he narrates. He quotes tombstones and obituaries to prove the existence of the personages of the ballad, and discovers that three actually died, on the 11th
May, 1500, a Lady Von Neuffen, Countess of Marxhausen, who was by birth, of the house of Morringer. This lady he supposes to have been Morringer's daughter, mentioned in the ballad.
He quotes the same authority for the death of Barthold Von Neuffen, in the same year.
The editors, on the whole, seem to embrace the opinion of Professor Smith at Ulm, who, from the language of the ballad, ascribes its date to the 15th century.

CAME, NOW THE KING'S COME

Page 469 line 47. Come, Clerk, and give you light breath.

Mr George Clerk of Penryn, Bart. The Baron of Penryn is bound by his tenure, whenever the king comes to Edinburgh, to receive him at the Harestone, in which the standard of James IV. was erected when his army encamped on the Boringhmann, before his fatal expedition to England, now built into the park-val at the end of Tipperin Lane, near to Boroughmunn, and standing thereon is his stone house or a butt.

Page 470 line 2. Come forward with the Bride's Dowry.

The Blue Blanket is the standard of the incorporated trades of Edinburgh, and is kept by their common "at whose appearance they will observe Marriage." It is said that at only the artificers of Edinburgh are obliged to register to it but all the artificers or craftsmen within Scotland are bound to follow it, and kept under the custody of Edinburgh, as above-
said.

THE BARNATTYNE CLUB.

Page 471. This club was instituted in 1822 for the publication of rare and curious works connected with the history and antiquities of Scotland. It consisted at first of a very few members, gradually extended to one hundred.
They assume the name from George Barnattyne, of whom little is known beyond that prodigious effort which produced his present honour, and is perhaps, one of the most singular instances of its kind which the literature of any country exhibits. His labors as an amanuensis were undertaken during the time of pestilence, in 1566. The dread of infection had induced him to retire into solitude, and under such circumstances he had the energy to form and execute the plan of saving the literature of the whole nation, and undisturbed by the general mourning for the dead, and general fears of the living, to devote himself to the task of collecting and recording the triumphs of human genius in the poetry of his age and country;—thus, amid the wreck of all that was mortal, employing himself in preserving the lays by which immortality is at once given to others, and obtained for the writer himself. He informs us of some of the numerous difficulties he had to contend with in this self-imposed task. The volume containing his labors, deposited in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates at Edinburgh, is no less than eight hundred pages in length, and very neatly and closely written, containing nearly all the ancient poetry of Scotland now known to exist.

TO J. G. LOCKHART, ESQ.

Page 475, line 2. Fat worship.

[So also at foot of the page: *Fatsman, one of the many aliases of Mr. James Ballantyne.
Speats and rares are 'spits and ranges.'*]

IV. GLOSSARY

ey.
 ram vest worn under armor.
 ank.
 tronomical or astrological treatise.
 rman.
 sinatical vestment.
 d coin.
 ight, or heavy musket.
 ovable front of helmet.

t.
 e-fire.
 tified court.
 elt for carrying ammunition.
 ish-dog.
 ind of banner or ensign.
 rtification at castle-gate.
 ored (of horses).
 re-armor.
 cloth cap.
 all overhanging turret.
 t helmet.
 aving a white stripe down the face.
 ttalion, army (not a plural).
 -

one hired to offer prayers for an-able front of helmet.
 e first of May (a Celtic festival).

, heraldic term.

y evil befall; confound.
 of battle-axe or halberd.
 pps armed with the bill.
 leather jug or pitcher.
 n, proclaim.
 bonallex, a god-speed, parting with

s, gold coins with the king's cap
 n them.
 e, prepare, make ready.
 y, prepared.

nber, lodging-place; lady's apart-

le.
 d.
 whound.
 a kind of body armor.
 re.
 er.
 tere-d (the cutting up of a deer).
 nakins.
 a cloth.
 ly.
 times, early.

er.
 of stones.
 on-grane.
 elenances, cap worn by the king-athief herald.

cast, pair (of hawks).
 chanters, the pipes of the bagpipe.
 check at, meditate attack (in falconry).
 cheer, face, countenance.
 claymore, a large sword.
 clerk, scholar.
 clip, clasp, embrace.
 combust, astrological term.
 corbel, bracket.
 coronach, dirge.
 corral, hollow in hillside, resort of game.
 crabs, crab-apples.
 crenell, aperture for shooting arrows through.
 creset, hanging lamp or chandelier.
 culver, small cannon.
 cumber, trouble.
 curch, matron's coif, or head-dress.
 cushat-dove, wood-pigeon.

darkling, in the dark.
 deas, dais, platform.
 deft, skilful.
 demi-volt, movement in horsemanship.
 dern, hid.
 dight, docketed, dressed.
 donjon, main tower or keep of a castle.
 doom, judgment, arbitration.
 double treasure, a kind of border in heraldry.
 drought, could.
 down, hill.
 drie, suffer, endure.

earn (two ears).
 eburnine, made of ivory.
 embossed, foaming at the mouth (hunter's term).
 enterprise, enterprise.
 ensenae, ensign, war-cry.
 erne, eagle.
 even, spotless.

falcon, a kind of small cannon.
 fang, to catch.
 far yaud, the signal made by a shepherd to his dog, when he is to drive away some sheep at a distance.
 fauld, sheep-fold.
 fay, faith.
 ferlic, marvel.
 flemea-firth, asylum for outlaws.
 force, waterfall.
 fosse, ditch, moat.
 fretted, adorned with raised work.
 fro, from.
 frounced, flounced, plaited.

galliard, a lively dance.
 gallowghasses, heavy-armed soldiers (Celtic).
 gar, to make.
 gazehound, a hound that pursues by sight rather than scent.
 ghost, ghostly.
 gipes, doublet or jacket worn under armor.
 glans, broadsword.
 glamour, magical illusion.

gossamer, dancing-girl.
gosslers, slippery stones.
gossing, flattening.
gouged, having the throat cut.
gorget, armor for the throat.
granth, armor.
gramarye, magic.
gracery, great thanks (French, grand merci).
gros, prize.
grapple, grasping, miserly.
graily, horrible, grim.
guarled, edged, trimmed.
gules, red (heraldic).

hackbuter, soldier armed with hackbut or hagbut.
haffets, cheeks.
hag, broken ground in a bog.
hagbut, hackbut, hagbut, arquebus, harguebuss, etc., a heavy musket.
halberd halbert, combined spear and battle-axe.
haul, haul, drag.
hanger, short broadsword.
harrid, plundered, sacked.
hearse, canopy over tomb, or the tomb itself.
heese, hut.
hent, seize.
heriot, tribute due to a lord from a vassal.
heronscheu, young heron.
hight, called, named.
holt, wood, woodland.
hosen, hose (old plural).

idlesse, idleness.
isop, child.
isich, island.

jack, leather jacket, a kind of armor for the body.
jennet, a small Spanish horse.
jerkin, a kind of short coat.

kale, broth.
kek, peep.
kern, light-armed soldier (Celtic).
kell, cell.
kirn, Scottish harvest-home.
kirtle, skirt, gown.
knosp, knob (architectural).

lair, to stick in the mud.
largesse, largess, liberality, gift.
larks, midnight service of the Catholic Church.
lanneygag, a kind of spear.
lanscock, lark.
leaguer, camp.
leash, thong for leading greyhound; also the hounds so led.
leven, lawn, an open space between or among woods.
letern, lightning, thunderbolt.
lincoln green, a cloth worn by huntsmen.
linn, waterfall; pool below fall; precipice.
linstock (linstock), handle for lint, or match used in firing cannon.
lists, enclosures for tournament.
litherlie, mischievous, vicious.

lorn, lost.
lout, rather.
lout, bend, stoop.
lurch, rob.
lurker, a dog that lurks, lurks, or lies in wait for game.
lurdane, blockhead.
lyke-wake, watching of corpse before burial.

make, do.
malison, malediction, curse.
Malmesey, Malmsey wine.
march, border, frontier.
march-treason, offences committed on the Border.
massy, massive.
maye, thrush.
mele, mell, meddle.
merle, blackbird.
mewel, shut up, confined.
meikle, much, great.
minion, favorite.
miniver, a kind of fur.
mirk, dark.
morion, steel cap, helmet.
morrice-pike, long heavy spear.
morris, a kind of dance.
morsing-horns, powder-flasks.
mot (mot), must, might.
muir, moor, heath.

need-fire, beacon-fire.
nease, nose.

oe, island.
O home, alas!
Omrahs, nobles (Turkish).
or, gold (heraldic).
ouches, jewels.

pallious, pavilion.
palmier, pilgrim to Holy Land.
pardoner, seller of priestly indulgences.
partisan, halberd.
peel, Border tower.
pensils, small pennons or streamers.
pentacle, magic diagram.
piperoch, Highland air on bagpipe.
pie, variegated.
pinnet, pinnacle.
placket, stomacher, petticoat, slit in petticoat, etc.
plate-jack, coat-armor.
plump, body of cavalry; group, company.
poke, sack, pocket.
port, martial bagpipe music.
post and pair, an old game at cards.
presence, royal presence-chamber.
pricked, spurred.
pryse, the note blown at the death of the game.
pursuivant, attendant on herald.

quaigh, wooden cup, composed of staves hooped together.
quarry, game (hunter's term).
quatre-feuille, quatrefoil (Gothic ornament).
quit, requite.

cloud.
 g, like breaking cloud.
 ld form).
 of a vessel.
 ds.
 way.
 counsel, advice.
 stroling term.
 chief, O hane a rie, alas for the

's short surplice.
 s in Holy-Rood.
 f land.
 tain-ash.
 mpassion.

or (Canary wine).
 cent.
 avian epic.
 p.
 lute of artillery.
 ortion.
 (linavian minstrel's).
 Jesiaical scarf.
 , injury.
 recipice.
 if loose stones.
 ' wood.

age, uncouth.

ward of castle.
 ' who serves up a feast.
 n, musical instrument.
 pherd's but.
 , shining.
 d.
 re, absolve.
 ent, plaid.
 as, stratagema.
 land battle-cry.
 m's hair-band or fillet.
 -goose, gannet.
 ruth.
 ched, 'done for.'
 ask.
 out, study out.
 title-axe.
 all spring.
 ler.

ue having ten branches on his ant-

m.
 d.
 parting cup.
 istical scarf (sometimes robe).
 ng the stole.
 .ve), stored up.
 e, tumult.
 , race.
 river-valley.
 Highland dance.
 it.
 k, stricken.
 ful.

with, haste.
 syde, long.
 syne, since.

tabard, herald's coat.
 tarn, mountain lake.
 tartan, the full Highland dress, made of the chequered stuff so termed.
 tell, a plait or plaited knot.
 thristle, thrush.
 tide, time.
 tint, lost.
 tire, head-dress.
 tottered, tattered, ragged.
 train, allure, entice.
 treasure, border (heraldic).
 treus, Highland trousers.
 trine, astrological term.
 trow, believe, trust.
 tyke, dog.
 tyne, to lose.

uneath, not easily, with difficulty.
 unspurred, unbarred.
 upsees, Bacchanalian cry or interjection, borrowed from the Dutch.
 urchin, elf.

vail, avail.
 vail, lower, let fall.
 vair, fur of squirrel.
 vantage-corn, advantageous corner.
 vaunt-brace, or warn-brace, armor for the body.
 vaward, van, front.
 vilde, vile.

wan, won (old form).
 Warden-raid, a raid commanded by a Border
 Warden in person.
 warlock, a wizard.
 warped, frozen.
 warrioun, 'note of assault' (Scott).
 wassail, spiced ale; drinking-bout.
 weapon-schar, military array of a county; muster.
 weed, garment.
 weird, fate, doom.
 whenas, when.
 whilere (while-ere), erewhile, a while ago.
 whilom (whilome), formerly.
 whin, gorse, furze.
 whingers, knives, poniards.
 whingard, hunter's knife.
 wight, active, gallant, war-like.
 wildering, bewildering.
 wimple, veil.
 woo-worth, woo be to.
 wonal, dwelt.
 wraith, apparition, spectre.
 wreek, avenge.

yare, ready.
 yate, gate.
 yaud, see far yaud.
 jerk, jerk.
 yode, went (archaic).

100

INDEX OF FIRST LINES

[Including the first Lines of Songs contained in the longer Poems]

- fore — or else old Æsop lied, — 439.
 extraordinary, who by diet, 496.
 dust, 505.
 'wizard far than I, 457.
 man he was — the snows of age, 507.
 ye cry, a priest! — lame shepherds
 ,
 orrow, for your eyes may weep, 508.
 i winters dark have flown, 462.
 it is thine, fair maid, 253.
 outh has wandered o'er, 420.
 t that I gained the prize, 485.
 ty Guy, the hour is nigh, 472.
 the matron well — and laugh not,
 00.
 ouse! the livelong day, 481.
 ! 456.
 ured — the chambers of the mine, 508.
 bereft me the day that you left me,

 cient customs, 499.
 le has no fogot for burning, 254.
 se aisles where once his precepts 405. ith thee! When earliest day, 480.
 ou cold and lowly laid, 205.
 safe restored ere evening set, 494.
 not hear of a mirth befell, 413.
 and Misery, Vice and Danger, bind,

 but once, my son, he says, 23.
 for safety took the dreadful leap, 503.
 though winter will pinch severe, 430.
 Love's torch has set the heart in 7.
 er would you lead me then, 270.
 all deal the funeral dole, 464.
 e, love, up is the sun, 452.
 he chamber, look upon his bed, 495.
 e, youth! — it is no common call, — tiger of Hyrcanian deserts, 495.

 air laborers' hire delay, 474.
 n war-horse, at the trumpet's sound,

 Autumn breeze's bugle-sound, 484.
 art, whose secret cell, 457.
 ye friends of Old Books and Old 1.
 I knew him — a sharp-witted youth,

 sparts — but still its mantle's fold,

Ace Maria! maiden mild! 180.
 Away! our journey lies through dell and dingle, 495.
 Ay! and I taught thee the word and the spell,
 455.
 Ay, Pedro, come you here with mask and lantern, 408.
 Ay, sir — our ancient crown, in these wild times, 498.
 Ay, sir, the clouted shoe hath oftentimes craft
 in 't, 500.
 Ay, this is he who wears the wreath of bays,
 507.

 Beggar! — the only freemen of your Commonwealth, 492.
 'Behold the Tiber!' the vain Roman cried, 506.
 Between the foaming jaws of the white torrent, 507.
 Bid not thy fortune troll upon the wheels, 500.
 Birds of omen dark and foul, 448.
 Bold knights and fair dames, to my harp give an ear, 19.
 Bring the bowl which you boast, 490.
 But follow, follow me, 418.
 By pathless march, by greenwood tree, 480.
 By this good light, a wench of matchless metal, 501.
 By ties mysterious linked, our fated race, 457.

 Canny moment, lucky fit, 424.
 Can she not speak, 502.
 Could is my bed, Lord Archibald, 441.
 Champion, famed for warlike toil, 465.
 Chance will not do the work, 501.
 Ch'm-maid! — 'The Genman in the front parlor, 504.
 Come forth, old man — thy daughter's side, 505.
 Come hither, young one — Mark me! Thou art
 now, 501.
 Come, let me have thy council, for I need it, 504.
 Come, Lucy, while 't is morning hour, 287.
 Complain not on me, child of clay, 457.
 Contentions fierce, 503.
 Credit me, friend, it hath been ever thus, 501.
 Cry the wild war-note, let the champions pass, 508.
 Cursed be the gold and silver which persuade,
 506.

 Daring youth! for thee 't is well, 456.
 Dark Ahiriman, whom Irak still, 477.
 Dark are thy words and severe, 462.

Dark on their journey loosed the gloomy day, 494.

Dark shall be light, 425.

Dear John, — I some time ago wrote to inform you, 475.

Death distant? — No, alas! he's ever with us, 476.

Death finds us mid our play-things — snatches
us, 501.

Deaths are done on earth, 505.

Dew burns the open bright star of Avenel, 457.

Dimes Endless, lament; for the moment is nigh, 399.

Dro was his thought who first in poison steeped, 493.

Donald Caird's come again, 440.

Dust unto dust, 473.

Dwellers of the mountain, rise, 461.

Emblem of England's ancient faith, 417.

Enchantress, farewell, who so oft has decoyed
me, 467.

Fair Brussels, thou art far behind, 503.

Fair is the daisied, passing fair, 506.

Far as the eye could reach no tree was seen, 494.

Far in the bottom of the deep, 410.

Farther well, than Holly green! 458.

Farewell! farewell! the voice you hear, 404.

Farewell, merry maidens, to song and to laugh,
463.

Farewell to Mackenneth, great Earl of the North, 419.

Farewell to Northmaven, 460.

Farewell to the land where the clouds love to rest, 494.

Fathoms deep beneath the wave, 461.

Fearst thou to go with me? 456.

For all our men were very very merry, 473.

For leagues along the wintry way, 461.

Forget thou! No! my worthy foe! 481.

Fortune, my Foe, why dost thou frown on me?
488.

Fortune, you say, flies from us — She but circles
us, 489.

Friedrich leaves the land of France, 35.

From heavy dreams fair Helen rose, 1.

From the brown crest of Newark its summons extending, 424.

From thy Pomeranian throne, 394.

Gentle air, You are our captive, 504.

Give me a mouse on the greenward rather, 497.

Give us good voyage, gentle stream — we staid
not, 501.

Give way — give way — I must and will have
justice, 500.

Gloating with love, on fire for fame, 428.

God protect brave Alexander, 328.

Good even, good fair woman — good even to thee,
442.

Good evening, Sir Priest, and so late as you
ride, 434.

Good old Cheviot's crest below, 23.

Hail to the Chief who in triumph advances!
468.

Hail to thy cold and clouded beam, 229.

Happy thou art! then happy be, 494.

Hark! the bells summon and the hagle call 498.

Hark to the insult loud, the bitter answer, 30.

Harp of the North, farewell! The hills grow
dark, 508.

Harp of the North! that mouldering long has
hung, 506.

Hawk and osprey screamed for joy, 282.

He came amongst them like a new-raised storm, 505.

He came — but valor had so fired his eye, 42.

He is gone on the mountain, 177.

He strikes no coin, 'tis true, but coins new phrases, 496.

He was a fellow in a peasant's garb, 502.

He was a man Versed in the world as pilot in his compass, 498.

He was a son of Egypt, as he told me, 503.

He, whose heart for vengeance sued, 458.

Health to the chieftain from his clansman true!
411.

Hear what Highland Nora said, 427.

Heaven knows its time; the bullet has its billet 508.

Hear lyeth John o' ye Ginnell, 429.

Henry and King Pedro clasping, 487.

Here come we to our close — for that which for
lows, 504.

Here has been such a stormy encounter, 492.

Here is a father now, 494.

Here lies the volume thou hast boldly sought 456.

Here lyes one saint to prelates surly, 431.

Here's a weapon now, 507.

Here stand I tight and trim, 503.

Here stands the victim — there the proud betrayer, 493.

Here we have one head, 506.

Here, youth, thy foot unbrace, 507.

Hie away, hie away, 414.

High deeds achieved of knightly fame, 449.

High feasting was there there — the gilded roofs, 503.

High o'er the eastern steep the sun is beaming, 499.

His talk was of another world — his bodements, 508.

Hither we come, 487.

Hold fast thy truth, young soldier — Gentle
maiden, 505.

How fares the man on whom good men would
look, 501.

I asked of my harp, 'Who hath injured thy chords?' 476.

I beseech you — 434.

I climbed the dark brow of the mighty Hall valley, 8.

I do love these ancient ruins, 429.

I fear the devil worst when given and caught 502.

I glance like the wildfire thro' country and town 440.

I knew Anselmus — He was shrewd and prudent, 422.

I'll give thee, good fellow, a twelvemonth or
twain, 450.
I'll walk on tiptoe; arm my eye with caution,
496.
I'm Madge of the country, I'm Madge of the
town, 441.
I see thee yet, fair France — thou favored land, 503.
I strive like to the vessel in the tide-way, 499.
I was a wild and wayward boy, 267.
I was one, 506.
If you fail honor here, 492.
Ill fares the bark with tackle riven, 383.
In awful ruins Ætna thunders nigh, 491.
In Madge's tent the clarion sounds, 504.
In some breasts passion lies concealed and silent, 498.
In the bonny cells of Bedlam, 441.
In the wide pile, by others headed not, 493.
In the wild storm The seaman heaves his mast
down, 497.
In yon lone vale his early youth was bred, 495.
Indifferent, but indifferent — pahaw! he doth it not, 496.
Is this thy castle, Baldwin? Melancholy, 495.
It chanced that Cupid on a season, 423.
It comes — it wrings me in my parting hour, 504.
It is and is not — 't is the thing I sought for, 497.
It is not texts will do it — Church artillery, 497.
It is the bunny butcher lad, 441.
It is time of danger, not of revel, 498.
It's up Glenbaraban's braes I gaed, 414.
It was a little naughty page, 9.
It was an English ladye bright, 76.
It was Dunois, the young and brave, was bound for Palestine, 423.
Joy to the victors, the sons of old Aspen, 10.
Late, when the autumn evening fell, 414.
Law, take thy victim! — May she find the mercy, 494.
Let the proud salmon gorge the feathered hook,
501.
Let those go see who will — I like it not, 493.
Life elbbs from such old age, unmarked and silent, 493.
Life hath its May, and all is mirthful then, 497.
Life, with you, Glows in the brain and dances
in the arteries, 492.
Lives there a strain whose sounds of mounting
fire, 210.
Look not thou on beauty's charming, 448.
Look on my girle — on this thread of gold, 457.
Look round thee, young Astolpho: Here's the
place, 493.
Lord William was born in gilded bower, 377.
Loud o'er my head though awful thunders roll, 491.
Love wakes and weeps, 494.
Lo! where he lies embalmed in gore, 506.
MacLeod's wizard flag from the gray castle sal-
lows, 429.
Maiden whose sorrows wail the Living Dead, 458.

Many a fathom dark and deep, 456.
Many great ones Would part with half their states, 492.
March, march, Eltrick and Teviotdale, 453.
Marry, come up, sir, with your gentle blood, 502.
Messurers of good and evil, 483.
Menseful maiden ne'er should rise, 465.
Merrily swim we, the moon shines bright, 453.
Merry it is in the good greenwood, 184.
Mid these wild scenes Enchantment waves her
hands, 505.
Mortal warp and mortal woof, 456.
Mother darksome, Mother dread, 462.
Must we then sheath our still victorious sword, 505.
My hawk is tired of perch and hood, 200.
My hounds may a' rin masterless, 493.
My tongue pads slowly under this new language, 506.
My wayward fate I needs must plain, 404.
Nay, dally not with time, the wise man's treasure, 496.
Nay, hear me, brother — I am elder, wiser, 497.
Nay, let me have the friends who eat my victimals, 496.
Nearest of blood should still be next in love, 504.
Necessity — thou best of peace-makers, 502.
Night and morning were at meeting, 421.
No human quality is so well wove, 503.
No, sir, I will not pledge — I'm one of those, 502.
Norman saw on English oak, 450.
Not faster yonder rowers' night, 164.
Not serve two masters? — Here's a youth will
try it, 498.
Not the wild billow, when it breaks its barrier,
497.
November's hail-cloud drifts away, 449.
November's sky is chill and drear, 88.
Now, all ye ladies of fair Scotland, 504.
Now bid the steeple rock — she comes, she comes, 498.
Now, by Our Lady, Sheriff, 't is hard reckoning, 496.
Now choose thee, gallant, betwixt wealth and honor, 496.
Now fare thee well, my master, if true service, 498.
Now God be good to me in this wild pilgrimage, 498.
Now, hoist the anchor, mates — and let the sails,
502.
Now let us sit in conclave. That these weeds,
496.
Now on my faith this gear is all entangled, 497.
Now Scot and English are agreed, 500.
O ay! the Monks, the Monks, they did the mischief! 495.
O, Brigmall hanks are wild and fair, 250.
O, dread was the time, and more dreadful the omen, 490.
O for a draught of power to steep, 500.
O for a glance of that gay Muse's eye, 431.

The parties met. The wily, wordy Greek 508.
 The Pope he was saying the high, high mass, 17.
 The rose is fairest when 't is budding new, 181.
 The sacred tapers' lights are gone, 497.
 The sages — for authority, pray, look, 473.
 The sound of Rokeby's woods I hear, 289.
 The storm increases — 't is no sunny shower, 507.
 The sun is rising dimly red, 469.
 The sun upon the lake is low, 484.
 The sun upon the Weirclaw Hill, 437.
 The tears I shed must ever fall, 505.
 The violet in her greenwood bower, 8.
 The way is long, my children, long and rough — 508.
 The way was long, the wind was cold, 46.
 The Wildgrave winds his bugle-horn, 5.
 The wisest sovereigns err like private men, 490.
 There are times, 506.
 There came three merry men from south, west, and north, 452.
 There is a mood of mind we all have known, 370.
 There is mist on the mountain, and night on the vale, 416.
 There must be government in all society — 504.
 There's a bloodhound raging Tinwald wood, 441.
 There's something in that ancient superstition, 495.
 These be the adept's doctrines — every element, 507.
 These were wild times — the antipodes of ours, 508.
 They bid me sleep, they bid me pray, 187.
 Things needful we have thought on; but the thing, 500.
 This is a gentle trader and a prudent, 490.
 This is a lecturer so skilled in policy, 503.
 This is a love meeting? See the maiden mourns, 502.
 This is he Who rides on the court-gale, 498.
 This is rare news thou tell'st me, my good fellow, 488.
 This is some creature of the elements, 502.
 This is the day when the fairy kind, 456.
 This is the Prince of Leeches; fever, plague, 504.
 This is the time — Heaven's maiden sentinel, 501.
 This is the very barn-yard, 500.
 This, sir, is one among the Seignior, 500.
 This superb successor, 507.
 This wandering race, severed from other men, 495.
 This was the entry, then these stairs — but whither after? 495.
 This way lie safety and a sure retreat, 501.
 Those evening clouds, that setting ray, 491.
 Thou hast each secret of the household, Francis, 497.
 Thou so needful, yet so dread, 465.
 Thou who seek'st my fountain lone, 458.
 Though right be aft put down by strength, 418.
 'Tis to the holly brake, 455.
 Through the vain webs, which puzzle sophists' skill, 507.
 'Tis craven fear my truth accused, 455.
 'Tis hue, dear pledge, is pure and bright, 430.

Thy time is not yet out — the devil thou servest, 503.
 'T is a weary life this — 497.
 'T is not alone the scene — the man, Anselmo, 499.
 'T is not her sense — for sure, in that, 505.
 'T is strange that in the dark sulphureous mine, 508.
 'T is sweet to hear expiring Summer's sigh, 405.
 'T is the black ban-dog of our jail — pray look on him, 502.
 'T is when the wound is stiffening with the cold, 496.
 To horse! to horse! the standard flies, 9.
 To man in this his trial state, 494.
 To the Lords of Convention 't was Claver's who spoke, 485.
 To youth, to age, alike, this tablet pale, 484.
 Toll, toll the bell! 507.
 Too much rest is rust, 504.
 Traquair has ridden up Chapel-hope, 31.
 True-love, as thou be true, 494.
 True Thomas sat on Huntlie bank, 33.
 Trust me, each state must have its policies, 495.
 'T was a Marshal of France, and he fain would honor gain, 408.
 'T was All-souls' eve, and Surrey's heart beat high, 77.
 'T was near the fair city of Benevent, 478.
 'T was time and griefs, 493.
 'T was when among our linden-trees, 442.
 Twist ye, twine ye! even so, 425.
 Upon the Rhine, upon the Rhine they cluster, 507.
 Up rose the sun o'er moor and mead, 482.
 Vain man, thou mayst esteem thy love as fair, 507.
 Viewless Essence, thin and bare, 482.
 Wake, Maid of Lorn! the moments fly, 315.
 Waken, lords and ladies gay, 403.
 Want you a man, 507.
 Wasted, weary, wherefore stay, 425.
 We are bound to drive the bullocks, 418.
 We are not worse at once — the course of evil, 502.
 We do that in our zeal, 506.
 We know not when we sleep nor when we wake, 507.
 We'll keep our customs — what is law itself, 499.
 We love the shrill trumpet, we love the drum's rattle, 485.
 We meet, as men see phantoms in a dream, 502.
 Welcome, grave stranger, to our green retreats, 496.
 Well, then, our course is chosen; spread the sail — 498.
 Well, well, at worst, 't is neither theft nor coinage, 493.
 Were ever such two loving friends? 506.
 Were every hair upon his head a life, 506.
 What brave chief shall head the forces, 478.
 What! dazzled by a flash of Cupid's mirror, 501.

INDEX OF TITLES

[The Titles of Major Works and General Divisions are set in SMALL CAPITALS]

ANNOY, THE, mottoes from, 497.
Admire not that I gained, ' 483.
Albert Græme's Song, 76.
Alexandre, M., the celebrated Ventriloquist, X
 Lines addressed to, 474.
Alice Brand, 184.
Allen-a-Dale, 254.
 An hour with thee, ' 480.
Ancient Gaelic Melody, 448.
 And did ye not hear of a mirth befall, ' 413.
Anne of Geierstein, verses from, 483; mottoes from, 506.
Answer to Introductory Epistle, 433.
Antiquary, The, verses from, 420; mottoes from, 492.
Appeal, The, Epilogue to, 430.
As lords their laborers' hire delay, ' 474.
Avenel, Mary, To, 458.

Ballads:—

Alice Brand, 184.
 'And whither would you lead me then,' 370.
Battle of Sempach, The, 442.
Bothwell Castle, 22.
Cadyow Castle, 26.
Castle of the Seven Shields, The, 388.
Christie's Will, 30.
 Erl-King, The, 8.
 Eve of St. John, The, 14.
 Fire-King, The, 19.
 Frederick and Alice, 25.
 Glenfinlas, 11.
 Gray Brother, The, 17.
 Noble Moringer, The, 444.
 Reiver's Wedding, The, 29.
 Shepherd's Tale, The, 23.
 'The herring loves the merry moon-light,' 429.
 Thomas the Rhymer, 32.
 Wild Huntsman, The, 5.
 William and Helen, 1.

ALLADS FROM THE GERMAN OF BÜRGER, TWO, 1.

annatyne Club, The, 471.
ard's Incantation, The, 37.
arefooted Friar, The, 450.
attle of Beal' an Duine, 203.
attle of Sempach, The, 442.
astrothed, The, songs from, 476; mottoes from, 504.
ack Dwarf, The, mottoes from, 493.
ack Knight and Wamba, The, 452.
loody Vest, The, 478.

Boat Song, 168.
Bald Dragon, The, 408.
Bonny Dundee, 483.
Border Song, 433.
Bothwell Castle, 22.
BRIDAL OF TRIKEMAIN, THE, 283.
Bride of Lammermoor, The, songs from, 448; mottoes from, 494.
Brooch of Lorn, The, 322.
Bryce Snailfoot's Advertisement, 467.
Buocleuch, Duke of, To his Grace the, 411.
BÜRGER, TWO BALLADS FROM THE GERMAN OF, 1.
 'But follow, follow me,' 418.
 'By pathless march, by greenwood tree,' 480.

Cadyow Castle, 26.
 'Canny moment, lucky fit,' 424.
 'Carle, now the king's corpse,' 460.
Castle Dangerous, mottoes from, 304.
Castle of the Seven Shields, The, 388.
Catch of Cowley's altered, A, 473.
Cavalier, The, 288.
Cheviot, 25.
Christie's Will, 30.
Chronicles of the Canon-Gate, verses from, 481; mottoes from, 506.
Cleveland's Songs, 464.
Coronach, 177.
Coronach, Lord Ronald's, 11.
Count Robert of Paris, mottoes from, 507.
County Guy, 472.
Crusader's Return, The, 440.
Cypress Wreath, The, 286.

Dance of Death, The, 421.
 'Dark Ahriman, whom Irak still,' 477.
 'Dark shall be light,' 425.
Dead, Hymn for the, 80.
Death Chant, 481.
Death of Don Pedro, The, 467.
Death of Keeldar, The, 462.
De Wilton's History, 141.
 'Donald Caird's Come Again,' 440.
DON RODRICK, THE VISION OF, 208.
Doom of Devorgoil, Songs from the, 484.
Dying Bard, The, 389.

EARLY BALLADS AND LYRICK, 7.

Edward the Black Prince, To the Memory of, 458.
Epilogue ('The sages—for authority, pray, look'), 473.

340

[illegible][illegible]

Benny Dundee, 463,
Borden Song, 481.
Brooch of Lark, The, 392.
'But follow, follow me,' 117.
'Canny moment, lucky fit,' 324.
Catch of Cowley's catfish, A, 478.
Cavalier, The, 208.
Chevalier's, 104.
Chesland's, 104.
Columbus, 177.
County Day, 172.
Cyprus Wraith, The, 200.
'Dark shall be light,' 435.
'Donald! Cattle's Come Again,' 440.
Drama of Davygrad, the, Songs from, 483.
Farewell, The, 190.
Farewell to Manhattan, 439.
Fisherman's, The, 103.
Fluttrava p. 11.
Flora MacVicar's, 410.
'For a That an a' That,' 410.
'For the Anniversary of the First Club of Boatland,' 101.
(How for King Charles), 400.
(How-Maiden's), 402.
'God protect brave Alexander,' 430.
Goats van Hochelingen, from, 0.
Goldthread's, 469.
Halcyon's, 100.
Harold's, 75.
Harold Hastings's, 459.
Harp, The, 27.
'Hark and away answered for joy,' 393.
Health to Lord Melville, 102.
How away his way,' 114.
'Highland Widow, The,' from, 401.
'Hillies en vrom,' 401.
'Horn of Antipr,' Songs from the 11.
Hunting Song, 441.
'I asked of my bishop,' 470.
'If I leave the back with double eyes,' 303.
'I up-Glennishmore's house I went,' 115.
'Joy to the victors, the sons of old Angus,' 10.
Jenny, 207.
Jenny's, Hochelingen's, 432.
Joy of King Lewis, The, 601.
Joy of the immortal heroism, 207.
Lachlan's, Lady Helen's Song, 401.
'Leads and there are beauty's glorying,' 460.
'Let's Willows was born in golden leaves,' 207.
Lullaby of the infant's hand, 425.
Maggie's, Lullaby, 625.
Master William's, 100.
Mind of Love, The, 601.
Mind of Scotland, The, 400.
Mind of Love, The, 601.
Monarchs and Monks of the 601.
Mother of Pines's Lullaby, The, 625.
Mother's, The, 472.
Nancy's, 100.
'Oe, France's justice never a night,' 100.
'Oe, France's justice never a night,' 100.
'Oe the mother of love and love,' 100.
'Oe may and my love with love sustained'
  and 100.
The Dance, 601.

[illegible]

Benny Dundee, 463,
Borden Song, 481.
Brooch of Lark, The, 393.
'But follow, follow me,' 117.
'Canny moment, lucky fit,' 324.
Catch of Cowley's catfish, A, 478.
Cavalier, The, 208.
Chevaland's, 104.
Chomuch, 177.
County Day, 172.
Cyprus Wraith, The, 200.
'Dark shall be light,' 435.
'Donald! Cattle's Come Again,' 440.
Drama of Davygrad, the, Songs from, 483.
Farewell, The, 190.
Farewell to Mackenzie, 439.
Fisherman's, The, 103.
Flatturens p. 11.
Flora MacVicar's, 410.
'For a That an a' That,' 410.
For the Anniversary of the Pitt Club of Bedford, 101.
Glee for King Charles, 490.
Glen-Maiden's, 402.
'God protect brave Alexander,' 438.
Goats van Hochelingen, from, 0.
Goldthread's, 469.
Halcyon's, 100.
Harold's, 75.
Harold Hastings's, 489.
Harp, The, 227.
'Heck and away amongst her joy,' 393.
Health to Lord Melville, 102.
How away his way,' 114.
Highland Widow, The, from, 481.
Hillies on some,' 461.
Horn of Angus, Songs from the, 11.
Hunting Song, 443.
'I asked of my brood,' 470.
'If I leave the back with double eyes,' 395.
'I up-glanceless-ness leaves I good,' 115.
Joy in the waters, the song of old Angus,
  10.
Lament, 207.
Lament, Hochelungen's, 432.
Law of Ross Lewis, The, 601.
Law of the immortal heroism, 202.
Leithersie, Lady Helen's Song, 400.
Leith and there no beauty's glorying,' 460.
Let's Willows was born in golden leaves,
  207.
Lullaby of Mr. Inland's hand, 425.
Maggie's Lullaby, 626.
Maiden's, William's, 100.
Mind of Love, The, 601.
Mind of Scotland, The, 606.
Mind of Love, The, 602.
Monarchs and Monks of the 601.
Mother of Fergus's Mother, The, 602.
Omen, The, 172.
Omen's, 100.
'Our Father's prayer comes a night,' 113.
'The Father's prayer comes a night and day,' 100.
'The mother of love and love,' 100.
'We may and we have with each another
  at 100.
The Dance, 601.

Benny Dundee, 463,
Borden Song, 481.
Brooch of Lark, The, 393.
'But follow, follow me,' 117.
'Canny moment, lucky fit,' 324.
Catch of Cowley's catfish, A, 478.
Cavalier, The, 208.
Chevaliers, A, 104.
Chowchow, 177.
County Day, 172.
Cyprus Wraith, The, 200.
'Dark shall be light,' 435.
'Donald! Cattle's Come Again,' 440.
Drama of Davygrad, the, Songs from, 483.
Farewell, The, 190.
Farewell to Manhattan, 439.
Fisherman's, The, 103.
Fluttrava p. 11.
Flora MacVicar's, 410.
'For a That an a' That,' 410.
For the Anniversary of the First Club of Boatland, 101.
Glee for King Charles, 490.
Glen-Maiden's, 402.
'God protect brave Alexander,' 438.
Goats van Hochburgum, from, 0.
Goldthread's, 469.
Hague's, 100.
Harold's, 75.
Harold Hastings's, 489.
Harps, The, 27.
'Heck and away summer for joy,' 393.
Health to Lord Melville, 102.
How away his way,' 114.
Highland Widow, The, forms, 401.
Hillies on water,' 401.
Horn of Angus, Songs from the 11.
Hunting Song, 441.
'I asked of my brood,' 470.
'If I leave the back with double eyes,' 395.
'I up-Glennachannan - home I go!' 115.
Joy in the waters, the song of old Angus,
  10.
Lament, 207.
Lament, Hochburgum's, 432.
Law of Ross Lewis, The, 601.
Law of the immortal heroism, 207.
Leithwaite, Lady Helen's Song, 401.
Leith and there are beauty's glorying,' 460.
Let's Willows was born in glenside house, 207.
Lullaby of Mr. Innes's hand, 425.
Maggie's Lullaby, 625.
Maiden's, William's, 100.
Mad of Love, The, 601.
Mad of Scotland, The, 601.
Mad of Love, The, 601.
Macquarie and Macquarie of the 601.
Madness of Fergus's Madman, The, 601.
Madness of the 601.
Madness of Love, 601.
Madness of the 601.
Madness of the 601.
Madness of the 601.
Madness of the 601.

[illegible]

1

2

There is a copy of the ...
... the ...
... the ...

...
...
...
...
...

...
...

Stanford University Libraries

3 6105 012 243 767

823.8
54311

STANFORD UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES
CECIL H. GREEN LIBRARY
STANFORD, CALIFORNIA 94305-60
(415) 723-1493

All books may be recalled after 7 day

DATE DUE

28D APR 24 1996

28D JUN 15 1996

F/S JUN 30 1997

OCT 10 1998

F/S JUN 30 1999

MAR 29 2005

